In 1996, the Catholic population is calculated at about 104,000. Eighty-two diocesan priests, 62 religious priests, 192 sisters and 60 deacons serve the area. By 1996, the diocese had grown to 66 parishes and 24 missions.

Bishop Begley served the diocese until his retirement in 1984. Bishop John F. Donoghue was consecrated and installed as second bishop in 1984, serving until his elevation to archbishop of Atlanta in 1993. Bishop William G. Curlin was installed as third bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte on April 13, 1994.

Four Chancellors Guide Diocese Through First 25 Years

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

FOR NEARLY THREE YEARS, THEN-FATHER JOSEPH SHOWFETY TRIED TO CONVINCE Bishop Vincent Waters that Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville needed to be expanded. It was not easy, but by July 1971 he succeeded. Father Showfety's excitement was rising now, keeping pace with the building fund that was edging its way toward a goal of $200,000.

On the first day in December, he was outside shoveling 15 inches of new-fallen snow when the unforeseen phone call came. Msgr. Michael Begley, bishop elect for the recently designated Diocese of Charlotte, was on the line asking him to become the first chancellor of the diocese. "But I want to build this church in Hendersonville," Father Showfety said. "I know you do," replied Msgr. Begley. "It will be built, but not by you." That task would belong to then-Father William Pharr.

Within a few days, Father Showfety was on his way to Raleigh to begin an extensive briefing by Msgr. Morton, then chancellor of the Raleigh Diocese, initiating the transfers necessary for the start of the new Diocese of Charlotte.

"I was so grateful for Msgr. Morton's assistance since it was all completely new to me," said Msgr. Showfety in a recent interview. He still marvels at the smoothness of the transition, in some ways resembling a surgery which split the assets of the Raleigh Diocese "right down the middle" to give the fledgling Diocese of Charlotte a fair shake.

It was only later that Msgr. Showfety learned of Bishop Waters' satisfaction with their decisions and appointments. "Once the announcement came, Bishop Waters never interfered in any way in the operation of the Charlotte Diocese," he recalls. "He never gave us any advice unless we asked, and kept a hands-off approach, which I admired considering the amount of personal hard work he had done in this area. Bishop Waters was good to us, and fair to us."

With so much organizational work to be done, it might have been easy to settle for a nuts-and-bolts approach to his work, but Msgr. Showfety wanted the tenor of the chancery to be "pastoral in its outlook." Experience had taught him that a good relationship between the bishop's office and the priests of the diocese was important. Despite the challenges that acquiring new property and establishing a diocesan administration presented, assessments to the parishes remained the same.

Initially the chancery consisted of Msgr. Showfety and his secretary, Mrs.

Madelyn Sullivan, and Mrs. Aloha Linhares, the secretary to Bishop Begley. For the first three months they all worked out of the rooms in the rectory of St. Patrick Cathedral. The diocese's first chancellor retains vivid memories of those early days: "Father Richard Allen, then rector at St. Patrick's, did so much to help us get ready for ceremonies, including the repainting of the cathedral."

Msgr. Showfety found his ministry as chancellor "stimulating yet demanding, and difficult but enjoyable." He thanks God that the diocese has grown the way it has, and is confident that "solid foundations have been laid for further growth and development." Believing that one of the greatest challenges facing the diocese today is sufficient vocations to the priesthood, he reminds the congregation at St. Benedict Church in Greensboro where he is currently pastor that "it is the praying church that produces vocations."

Nurturing the vocation of Msgr. Joseph Kerin, who succeeded Msgr. Showfety as chancellor, however, was largely the work of Bishop Waters. "He expressed himself very strongly about the missionary character of North Carolina, calling it the China of North America," recalls Msgr. Kerin, a native of Scarsdale, N.Y., who was ordained for the Diocese of Raleigh in 1957.

When Father Kerin was appointed chancellor of Charlotte in July 1979, he had already been exercising both pastoral and business skills as rector of St. Patrick Cathedral and as vice-chancellor for two years.

What was surprising to him was the changing face of the see city. From a modest southeastern retail town, Charlotte was becoming a financial and corporate center. "Companies were relocating here, and the number of people moving in was unlike anything we had ever anticipated," recalls Msgr. Kerin.

He remembers the chancery of that time as very small and compact. "It was just a handful of people doing very hands-on administration," he says. "Until then we kept things going much in the way of an extended family, but the structures were taking shape rapidly."

During Msgr. Kerin's tenure as chancellor, Jim Kelley joined the staff as director of development. He and Jesuit Father Tom Gaunt, director of the planning office, conducted the first real studies of growth patterns throughout the diocese. The expansion of diocesan departments to meet the needs of a growing Catholic population meant a larger and more professional lay staff.

Also, Rev. Mr. Guy Piche, presently director of properties and the Catholic Conference Center, was appointed the first financial administrator to manage the business affairs of the diocese.

Msgr. Kerin considers the expansion of the diocesan social services, particularly the establishment of an independent office for the resettlement of refugees, to have been one of the most satisfying achievements in the late 1970s and early '80s. During those same years, greater numbers of men and women religious located in the diocese and significantly broadened the scope of ministry, especially among the rural poor.

Although many of the present diocesan structures had not yet been formalized, the direction was clear, and Msgr. Kerin could already see some of the challenges looming on the horizon. "With the diocese growing so rapidly, maintaining the delicate balance between structural efficiency and actual service to the people would require greater effort," he said. "The institution can too easily become an end in itself. The purpose of structures is to enable worthwhile ministry to God's people."

One of his chief joys as chancellor

was the overall vision of the diocese which his work afforded him, but in 1986 Msgr. Kerin asked Bishop John Donoghue, currently Archbishop of Atlanta, to reassign him so that he would not lose touch with the pastoral perspective at the local level. "As chancellor, my purpose was to help the priests in the parishes and I've always enjoyed their tremendous cooperation and support," Msgr. Kerin said.

The first of those priests to be ordained by Bishop Begley for the new Diocese of Charlotte was Father John J. McSweeney, a native of Oneida, N.Y. Having held administrative positions in the diocese since shortly after his ordination, Father McSweeney was prepared for the ministry when appointed chancellor by Bishop Donoghue in October 1986. At the time he was pastor of St. Ann Church in Charlotte and vice-chancellor, as well as director of planning and development and director of vocations.

The tremendous growth in the diocese that marked Msgr. McSweeney's term as chancellor squares well with the ministerial model of gardener that he so enjoys. The image, a favorite of Pope John XXIII, suggests that clergy need not be caretakers of a museum, but rather gardeners who plant and reap. One of his perennial concerns as chancellor was how specific decisions would affect the local parish. "I spent much time convening groups of people, and building motivation," says Msgr. McSweeney, who coordinated 35 major buildings.

During his term as chancellor, Our Lady of the Hills Camp in Henderson County was sold and the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory was built. The Catholic schools in Mecklenburg County were regionalized, and much of the chancellor's time was focused on demographics and consultations about property acquisitions. His concerns ranged from the establishment of the Catholic Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte to help insure future financial resources and stability to the expansion of ministries for the ever-growing Hispanic population.

In view of the extraordinary growth taking place in the diocese, more serious and deliberate attention was focused on the recruitment of personnel from various religious orders. Msgr. McSweeney involved himself in the recruitment of seminarians for the diocese.

Bishop Begley Witnesses Changes During Career

By JOANN KEANE
Associate Editor

IN THE YEARS SINCE HIS ORDINATION IN 1934, RETIRED BISHOP MICHAEL J. BEGLEY HAS SERVED SIX POPES. HE HAS WITNESSED THE CHANGES IN priestly assignments, and laid the groundwork for a new diocese.

During this time, he has seen a nation change. Ten presidents have served the country. He saw the civil rights movement unfold. He has served the people throughout times of uncertainty with warm spiritual direction.

Throughout his service, Bishop Begley retained the warm, humanitarian spirit that still glows today. In virtually every article written about him, the word "amiable" can be found.

In May 1984 the North Carolina Catholic newspaper paid tribute to Bishop Begley with a 24-page special edition. In honor of the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood, the supplement was "but a footnote to the life of this missionary priest of the Diocese of Raleigh, and first ordinary of the Diocese of Charlotte."

Hundreds of pages could be written on Bishop Begley and some things would still be left unsaid.

When then-Msgr. Begley was assigned to St. Ann parish in Charlotte in 1955, he became pastor of the city's second parish. Today, there are a dozen parishes in the Queen City.

Then Father Begley was a priest of the Diocese of Raleigh. This new assignment landed him in the geographical parameters of what would become the Diocese of Charlotte.

Ordained on May 26, 1934 in Springfield, Mass. as a priest for the Diocese of Raleigh, Father Begley's first assignment was at St. Mary's in Wilmington. Over the next three-and-a-half decades, he transferred within the state, serving in pastoral roles at eight parishes. He served the former Nazareth Orphanage in Raleigh and was diocesan director of Catholic Charities.

In 1971, he was transferred to Our Lady of Grace in Greensboro. His assignment was brief. On Nov 30, 1971, Pope Paul VI appointed Msgr. Begley as the first bishop of the new Diocese of Charlotte. He was ordained on Jan. 12, 1972 in St. Patrick Cathedral.

Throughout the years, retired Bishop Begley has been there for those in need. Shortly after his ordination as bishop, he accepted an active role with Appalachian Ministries. Twenty-six counties within the Diocese of Charlotte are considered part of Appalachia. Fifteen years have passed since Bishop Begley led 26 bishops, representing 13 states, in issuing a joint pastoral letter, This Land Is Home To Me. The pastoral attracted national attention for its forthright approach to the problems of the people of that economically depressed region. Today, he enjoys life as a self-proclaimed gentleman of leisure. At 87, Bishop Begley may move a bit slower, but he's sharp as ever, recanting the stories that shaped the Diocese of Charlotte as if the events happened yesterday.

Diocese Blessed With Dedicated Leaders

By MARY COYNE WESSLING
Correspondent

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AS A CATHOLIC DIOCESE IS HARDLY A BLINK OF THE EYE IN A CHURCH HISTORY THAT DATES BACK 2,000 YEARS. But in two-and-a-half decades the Diocese of Charlotte has established itself as a vibrant, growing home for Catholicism.

The successful growth of the diocese is due in large part to the steady, dedicated leadership of its three bishops — Michael J. Begley, John F. Donoghue and William G. Curlin. While their style of leadership varies, these men have much in common when it comes to serving as the spiritual and pastoral leaders of the Diocese of Charlotte. In recent interviews, the bishops reflected on their service to the diocese.

Bishop Begley

Bishop Michael J. Begley, now retired, began his service in 1972 as the first bishop of the diocese. Considered a friend to fellow priests and a dedicated pastor, he was a good choice to lead the newest diocese in the Atlanta Province.

Weeks before his ordination and installation as ordinary, Bishop Begley began setting up diocesan offices and handling the transfer of ownership of property and institutions from the Diocese of Raleigh.

Surrounding himself with 10 priest consultants, Bishop Begley completed the transition with few glitches. But that was just the beginning. In the succeeding 12 years he would be challenged with a growing Catholic population which in turn required establishment of new parishes and expansion of existing parishes, institutions and agencies. How did he manage it all? "I always kept in mind that I needed other good people to help me," he said.

During his tenure, Bishop Begley also established the Catholic diocese as a nurturing place for spiritual growth, a helping hand to the poor and oppressed, a welcoming evangelizer, and a strong partner in ecumenical endeavors and dialogues.

As leader of his priests, Bishop Begley was considered a fair, open man who invited healthy debates. His love for them was readily admitted and observed. "I knew they were good men," he said.

As graciously as he entered, Bishop Michael J. Begley left active duty in 1984.

Bishop Donoghue

Bishop Donoghue came to the Diocese of Charlotte with a wealth of administrative talents and experience gained in the Archdiocese of Washington, D.C. Like his predecessor, Bishop Donoghue faced the challenge of a growing diocese. "It was a good challenge to have," he said, "and one that could be met because people were enthusiastic. Because we were a minority, they tended to stay together better and the Church became much more important to them than it might have been up north."

Bishop Donoghue recalls being impressed with the Catholics he came to serve. "It grew apparent that here in the south, Catholics tend to make the Church an important part of their life. To many it is the center of their life. That's why the Church was and is growing. It makes people feel welcome. The people are understanding, accept the diversity and are so hospitable."

Of course, no amount of Southern hospitality could solve the growing pains he encountered. Like Bishop Begley, Bishop Donoghue surrounded himself with people who knew the diocese. "I know my own strengths and weaknesses. Whatever I can't do, I find talented people who can," he said.

During his tenure, the Diocese of Charlotte continued to grow rapidly. Bishop Donoghue sought to provide the places of worship and institutions that could accommodate his people. (In 1991, he established the diocese's weekly newspaper, The Catholic News & Herald.) He also promoted the growth of ministries which fed people's spiritual needs.

"We opened a number of churches. We tried to provide more for the growing Hispanic and Vietnamese communities that continue to grow. We opened the Catholic (Conference) Center in Hickory which proved a worthwhile endeavor," he said.

Bishop Donoghue credited his predecessor with laying a strong foundation on which to build. He added, "Bishop Begley never interfered with what I was doing. He was, from the very start, very supportive of everything. He never criticized, never told me he disagreed with what I was doing."

And for the 95,000-plus Catholics he guided, Bishop Donoghue left a healthy diocese for Bishop William G. Curlin.

Bishop Curlin

"It is a grace and a blessing to be in an area that is expanding while so many places up north are struggling," said Bishop Curlin. "I find the Catholics here very Church-oriented. We are still a minority, despite our growing numbers. But perhaps it is because we are a minority that we have a reason to be proud and identify closely with the Church. It is a great blessing as a bishop to serve such devoted people."

Thus sums up how the Diocese of Charlotte's third and present bishop views his challenge as leader. "We have strong commitment to shared ministry," he added. "Laity are a vital part of this ministry. They are recognized for their readership roles, as spiritual directors, for conducting education classes and more. There's a rich variety of shared ministry."

Bishop Curlin is equally impressed

Priests Reflect On 25 Years In Charlotte Diocese

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

IN RETROSPECT, FATHER GEORGE KLOSTER STILL SMILES WHEN RECALLING THE SERIES OF EVENTS THAT LED TO THE EPISCOPAL ORDINATION OF BISHOP Michael J. Begley for the newly-formed Diocese of Charlotte. In fact, Father Kloster claims he was only "trying to protect his boss" when Bishop Vincent S. Waters made that fateful telephone call in late 1971.

"It was a week before Thanksgiving when we got a call at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro for then-Monsignor Begley. It was Bishop Waters of the Diocese of Raleigh," recalled Father Kloster, who was serving as associate pastor. "Msgr. Begley was in Spain, and neither the secretary nor I knew if he had permission to leave the diocese. We were very general when Bishop Waters asked about when he would be back."

Pressed to talk to Msgr. Begley, Bishop Waters phoned again and asked where he could reach him. "We went ahead and told the bishop Msgr. Begley was out of the country, hoping we weren't getting him in trouble," Father Kloster said.

When he arrived back in the states a few days later, Msgr. Begley met with Bishop Waters, who told him of plans to split the Raleigh Diocese and form the Diocese of Charlotte. He also posed the question he had waited several days to ask: Would Msgr. Begley serve as the first bishop of the new diocese? The answer was yes, and a new diocese was born Jan. 12, 1972.

Father Kloster, who now serves as pastor of St. Michael Church in Gastonia, says much has changed in the diocese's 25 years of existence. "Everything started out so simple. Our diocesan office was the rectory at St. Patrick Cathedral," he said. "With the diocesan structure's growth, we now have The Catholic Center on Morehead Street."

In the early days, there was also a close relationship between the priests of the Charlotte and Raleigh dioceses, but a natural evolution into two dioceses has taken place, Father Kloster added. "I feel a sense of loss of camaraderie between the priests in the dioceses," he noted.

Like many of his brother priests, Father Joe Kelleher, pastor of Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Lexington, remembers the day Bishop Begley was installed as the diocese's first shepherd. He also treasures an image that remains with him from the following day at the new church office. "There was Bishop Begley in short sleeves, putting his desk together himself," he said. "He was always a humble man, and greatly loved as a priest and bishop."

Although most view the increasing Catholic population in 25 years as a positive trend, Father Kelleher says even more important is the growth in spirituality that began under Bishop Begley and continued under Bishop Donoghue and Bishop Curlin.

Another reason for the spiritual growth, he added, is the priests who serve the diocese. "I told this to Bishop Donoghue when he was here, and I've also shared it with Bishop Curlin, there are very dynamic men in the background working very hard for the Church," Father Kelleher said.

Father Thomas Clements, pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, also remembers Bishop Begley's "great pastoral concern" for all people.

"That showed up in his work with Catholic Social Services and his bringing the Trinitarian Sisters into the diocese," said Father Clements, who was appointed the diocese's first CSS director in 1972.

Bishop Begley's commitment to Appalachian Ministries and to the economic problems of people in the region was shown in his co-authoring of the pastoral letter, "This Land Is Home To Me," Father Clements added.

For Monsignor Richard Allen, pastor of St. Ann Church in Charlotte, the Catholic Church in North Carolina has evolved from a "mission diocese" of unchurched people that greeted his arrival 40 years ago. "There were few Catholics back then, and we were misunderstood to a degree," he said.

Despite growth in recent decades and the formation of the Diocese of Charlotte, Msgr. Allen says he feels the Church has the same mission today: ministering to people who still do not know Christ. "I really believe we are more missionary than we've ever been," he added. "We need to be concerned about the people who haven't experienced the love of Jesus or presence of God in their lives."

When the Diocese of Charlotte was formed and Bishop Begley named its shepherd, there was a "euphoria in Western North Carolina," according to Monsignor Bill Pharr, pastor of St. Vincent De Paul Church in Charlotte.

Over the years, the diocese has seen great progress in lay ministry and collaboration in the sense of teamwork of clergy, laity and religious, he added. "This positive thrust has continued to develop as the diocese has grown under the leadership of Bishop Donoghue and Bishop Curlin," Msgr. Pharr said.

Father Ed Sheridan, pastor of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte, also points to the emergence of lay people in parishes and on parish staffs when discussing changes in the diocese over the past quarter-century.

What began as the diocese with the fewest Catholics in the nation has been transformed by a population explosion, Father Sheridan added. "Even though we are still in the minority, we've come a long way," he said.

Father Sheridan, who served as the diocese's first school superintendent from 1972-76, says the school system has evolved as well. "Catholic Schools are facing different challenges today, but we're in a much better position now than we were back then." Among the tasks currently facing schools is the need to expand at several facilities, he added.

All three shepherds have been instrumental in meeting challenges that come with diocesan growth, Father Sheridan noted. "Bishop Begley founded the planning office, Bishop Donoghue ordered the Synod, and Bishop Curlin continues to build and follow-up on things started," he said.

Like others, Father Francis Cintula, pastor of St. John Baptist De La Salle Church in North Wilkesboro and St. Stephen Mission in Elkin, calls the growth of the diocese since 1972 "phenomenal."

Father Cintula's memories include a keepsake of Bishop Begley being honored after celebrating Confirmation at St. Mary Church in Shelby in 1972. "I have a photo of the bishop with a cake one of the parishioners made that included a miter on top of it," he said.

Father Joe Waters, pastor of Holy Trinity Mission in Taylorsville, has witnessed various changes in the diocese over the years, including continual growth in the migrant population.

"During the 1960s, a Hispanic migration began to North Carolina, principally from Mexico," said Father Waters, who has served in the diocese since its inception and ministered to migrants for many years.

With nearly 30,000 immigrants in the area, the Diocese of Charlotte began its Hispanic ministry in 1972. "Father Alex Ducci directed the Charlotte-based office. Later that summer, Father Joseph McCarthy began working with migrants in the Reidsville area," Father Waters said.

Over the years, doors have been opened to greater migration, which is very evident today, Father Waters added. "Since most immigrants from Mexico and Central America are at least nominally Catholic, it can be said that every parish in the diocese has Hispanic Catholics in their midst," he said.

Msgr. Joseph Showfety and Msgr. Joseph Kerin, former chancellors, have both also served the diocese since 1972. They are featured in a separate story in this issue.

with his priests. "They are very generous in serving the people," he said. "They take on added burdens and do it graciously. I am proud that they are open to team ministry."

Still, their numbers hardly keep pace with the booming Catholic population. That is why Bishop Curlin continually promotes vocations and it seems to be paying off. "Right now we have 23 seminarians and with God's blessings we may have 30 by the spring," he said. "The prospects are good."

Bishop Curlin sees other good prospects for the diocese, including its growing outreach ministries. "This diocese has accomplished marvelous things," he said. "Catholic Social Services does an outstanding job. Outreach to the migrants grows stronger. Even ecumenical outreach is amazingly strong here."

His pastoral leadership led Bishop Curlin to travel some 55,000 miles last year in the diocese and strengthen his bond with the people. "I go out as much as possible to celebrate Mass, have lunch with the school children, or attend special events. I go because I like to be with the people I serve."

Bishop Curlin's philosophy is simple: Serve others. "I remind my priests and others who work for me that it is not the job of the people to support us, it is our ministry to support them."

Above all, Bishop Curlin prays that his work will inspire and encourage people to grow closer to God. "I hope when I retire that someone might look back and say, 'He taught me how to find God in my life.' I am called to build Christ in people."

In putting the last 25 years of leadership in perspective, Bishop Curlin said, "Bishop Begley had the tremendous task of building this diocese from the start. He laid the foundation. Bishop Donoghue added to that by building on Bishop Begley's accomplishments. He brought the rich experience of his years of working in the chancery in Washington and updated this diocese with changes that kept pace with the current times. My task is to build on their work and emphasize the pastoral approach and shared ministry."

He added, "I believe that each pope seemed to fit the time in which he served. I believe we've done the same here. I like to think I'm adding another layer which is fitting of my time in serving this diocese."

It is curious to note that all three men answered a call that they would have gladly passed on to another. But their dedication of service to others and love of God compelled them to accept it. Fortunately for them and for all who have benefited from their leadership, it has been a rewarding experience, a welcomed challenge.

cesse, giving special attention to the needs of ethnic communities in western North Carolina, such as Hispanics, African Americans, Koreans, Hmong and Vietnamese.

One of the challenges facing the diocesan administration, says Msgr. McSweeney, was careful stewardship of time, talent and treasure when considerable sums and efforts were being consolidated to respond to growth in the Catholic population by expanding parishes and ministries of the diocese.

Another growing concern during the late 1980s and early '90s was the ever-decreasing number of religious personnel and the increasing number of lay people employed by the diocese. The time had come to respond more systematically to issues involving the fair and just treatment of lay employees. This meant developing adequate personnel procedures and uniformity in hiring policies and practices.

Today, as rector of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, Msgr. McSweeney's energies seem undiminished. As the diocese celebrates its jubilee, he concentrates on the need to solidly evangelize Catholics who no longer practice their religion, and the need to respond creatively to what he calls "family in-fighting" that pervades the Catholic community in our time.

Father Mauricio West, a native of Columbia, S.C., had already administered in the diocese for 20 years as a religious order priest member when Bishop Curlin appointed him as chancellor in December 1994. Shortly before that time, he was incardinated into the diocese as well.

Having served as a college administrator for 10 years, and for six years as associate pastor of St. Gabriel parish in Charlotte, Father West was "excited about the possibilities and the challenges" this new ministry offered. He has come to understand his role as helping the diocese to identify its values and to assess how accurately diocesan policies, practices and programs reflect those values. "As we step into the community to serve those in need, we must do so with a cohesive message of His word," he says.

Father West does not use exalted terms to describe his work as chancellor, preferring to say that he is regularly in the role of asking hard questions about whether the work of the Church is on the right track at any given time. Grappling with issues in Catholic education, or deciding which parishes need to be expanded, or consulting on ways of exercising responsible stewardship and providing ministries are all duties Father West attends to in his work.

As the diocese continues to grow and develop, so do its formal structures. Father West shares the concerns of his predecessors that organizations and entities are not maintained simply for their own sake. "As the administration becomes more complex, we cannot lose sight of the fact that we are the Church, and we must continually ask what this has to do with building up the Kingdom of God." Just having programs is not enough, says Father West. Rather, the question, "How do they help people and change their lives?" is one he continually asks.

Father West's excitement remains high as the diocese celebrates its 25th anniversary. "We need to find better ways to harness all the talent and energy there is in the diocese," he adds. "How can we better assist pastors and become more valuable resources to them?"

At present, one of the biggest challenges, says Father West, is devoting more time to planning so that less time need be spent reacting to situations that could have been anticipated. "We must act today," he said, "in view of what we want the diocese to look like 10 or 25 years from now."

Catholics Honor Legacy Of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — Jesuit Father Joseph Brown is on a mission. Since 1988, the New Orleans priest has traveled the country encouraging African-American Catholics to reclaim their culture by building memorials to their past.

"We need to stand on the rocks of our history ... the foundation of our Church," said Father Brown during the diocese's 12th annual Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration Jan. 18 at Our Lady of Consolation Church. "As people of faith and culture, we need to see the things that show us what freedom and liberation mean."

While many American cities have memorials to the Holocaust, there are no memorials to slavery, Father Brown said. "There was a group of African-Americans a few years ago who did not want a Smithsonian (Institute) exhibit on slavery," he said. "People need to remember where they come from. We don't know our strengths because we refuse to remember our past."

Nearly 60 people took part in the event sponsored by the African-American Affairs Ministry. For those in attendance, the day was an educational experience. Father Brown's sessions touched not only on Dr. King's legacy, it also focused on African-American culture in the Catholic Church.

"I'm sure most of you have heard Dr. King's famous 'I Have a Dream' speech. That is not all Dr. King was about. He was a preacher and an organizer," Father Brown said. "He was about organizing unions ... and about protesting the war in Vietnam."

In his workshop "To Stand on the Rock: Developing a Culturally Rooted Church Community," Father Brown called for all Catholics to accept leadership roles in the Church.

"Church is supposed to teach us how to live," he said. "If there are lost people, we need to lead them to the Church. It's our right and responsibility as Christians."

Mary Ward, a parishioner at St. Benedict the Moor Church in Winston-Salem, listened intently to Father Brown's message. "We need to communicate the importance of assuming the responsibility of keeping the Church alive and passing our faith on to children," she said.

James Bingley, a parishioner at St. James Church in Concord, said he learns more about his heritage every time he attends a workshop. "I've also come to realize lay people need to be more involved in the Church," he said. "We can't leave it all to our priests."

During his session "Joshua Fit the Battle at Jericho: Anointing the Young for Service," Father Brown stressed the need to encourage black teens to consider vocations. "The answer I hear from them is nobody ever asked us," he said.

The celebration concluded with a Mass celebrated by Bishop William G. Curlin. During his homily, the bishop praised African-Americans for keeping their faith despite the many crosses they have carried. "You have walked a painful journey, yet you keep Christ in your heart. Never forget the journey of tears and sorrow," he said. "Bring that heroic faith to the Church where we can walk with one heart, one mind, and one voice."

Cardinal Reiterates Need To Be 'Unconditionally Pro-Life'

By MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston reasserted Catholics' need to be "unconditionally pro-life" during his homily at the annual "Mass in Thanksgiving for the Gift of Life" celebrated on the eve of the March for Life.

"The pro-life movement is about the sanctity of every human being, at whatever point on the continuum of earthly existence. We must be unconditionally pro-life," Cardinal Law said during the Jan. 21 Mass, which kicked off the National Prayer Vigil for Life.

"The state's compelling interest, we insist, is not a fictitious right to die, but rather in the fundamental, God-given, inalienable right to life," he added at the Mass, celebrated at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

His homily, punctuated more than a dozen times by applause, took note of the dangers to life at different stages.

"After 24 years, and the destruction of 30 million-plus lives through abortion, how can we but cry out that abortion is robbing this nation of its soul?" asked Cardinal Law, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee for Pro-Life Activities.

Commenting on recent Supreme Court oral arguments on physician-assisted suicide, the cardinal said, "The inexorable logic which leads from abortion to euthanasia is at work. Ideas lead to their inevitable conclusions."

"First it is life at its beginning. Then it is life at its end. And finally it will be any life that a committee, an agency, a state decides is not worth living."

Cardinal Law said, "To be here with integrity it is essential that we be unconditionally pro-life. We reject as simply false the notion that one can be personally opposed to abortion but nonetheless supportive of a public policy which provides abortion on demand."

He added, "It cannot be 'I am personally opposed to abortion but.' It must be, 'I am personally opposed to abortion and am, therefore, unconditionally pro-life.'"

The cardinal spoke of how the gift of faith leads people to respect life.

"It is not surprising, then, is it, that the Catholic Church in witness to that fullness of faith which is her divine gift, is singular in her affirmation of the right to life and of human solidarity, particularly with the poor and those most vulnerable in our society?" he said.

"It is Jesus who taught us this! It is Jesus who revealed his very presence in those who stand before us in need."

Cardinal Law added, "Listen again to what he said. 'I myself am the bread of life.' Jesus is life. In Jesus we celebrate the birthday of life. The Eucharist is given us for life."

He said, "We are pro-life because we have learned from Jesus never to claim to be the master of another's life but to be ready ... to give our lives, without counting the cost, so that others might live."

Not even the national shrine, which is often billed as the United States' largest Catholic church, had enough seats for those in attendance, many of whom came with sleeping bags to spend the night there.

At the beginning of Mass, Cardinal Law told the assembly that a television commentator had asked him, "What do you say to young people about pro-life?"

"I said, 'Look at the crowd out there and ask instead what do the young people say to us who are older about pro-life?' ... We are grateful to you who are the pro-life movement.... This is it. We are grass-roots."

Cardinal Law was principal celebrant of the Mass. Among the 200 concelebrants were two dozen of his fellow bishops.

“Catholic Schools — Schools You Can Believe In” Is Theme For 23rd Annual Catholic Schools Week

WASHINGTON, DC — “Catholic Schools — Schools You Can Believe In” is the theme for the 23rd annual Catholic Schools Week Jan. 26-Feb. 1, and for the seventh National Appreciation Day For Catholic Schools on Wednesday of that week, Jan. 29.

The celebrations are part of a year-round marketing campaign to showcase the quality, value-added education provided in 8,300 Catholic elementary and secondary schools nationwide.

The National Catholic Education Association (NCEA) and the United States Catholic Conference (USCC) co-sponsor the campaign which provides Catholic educators with marketing tools ranging from billboards and posters to camera-ready ads and radio commercials. This is the third and final year featuring the “Schools You Can Believe In” theme.

In addition to the four-color logo depicting a figure holding aloft a Bible, the National Marketing Campaign features an illustration from award winning artist Bill Keane, creator of The Family Circus. A multicultural cast of characters join Billy and Dolly in Catholic school this year, pictured first as hard-working students and later as successful adults.

Since 1974, Catholic Schools Week has served as a celebration of both U.S. education and Catholic schools in particular.

“In recent months the media has put a spotlight on Catholic schools, highlighting our success in character development, academic achievement and graduation rates,” said Leonard DeFiore, NCEA president. “These results underscore that Catholic educations are providing an exceptional service to our Church and to the country. Catholic Schools Week celebrates their courage and commitment.

According to Msgr. Thomas McDade, USCC secretary for education, the marketing campaign has been integral to enrollment increases in Catholic schools over the past four years. “Through active marketing efforts in our schools and dioceses, more parents are learning about the values-based education in Catholic schools and are making that choice for their children.”

For the past two decades, Catholic educators and students have conducted parades, academic assemblies, community service projects and many other activities during Catholic Schools Week to recognize the schools and their role in the Church and community. National Appreciation Day was founded in 1990 as an opportunity to reach out to legislators and other community leaders to encourage their support for Catholic schools. On Jan. 29, Catholic student representatives will journey to Capitol Hill to speak with members of Congress about the value of a Catholic school education. They will also deliver background on the Catholic school network to every congressional office.

USCC is the national public policy organization of the U.S. bishops. NCEA represents more than 200,000 educators serving 7.6 million students in Catholic education at all levels.

In Brinks Spree, Recognition For Boy And His Catholic School

WASHINGTON (CNS) — For Herbert Tarvin, a sixth grader at St. Francis Xavier Elementary School in Miami, goodness has turned out to be much more than its own reward.

Since the 11-year-old schoolboy returned 85 cents of an estimated $550,000 in cash and food stamps that spilled out of an overturned Brinks truck Jan. 8, he has received praise from local officials; calls from TV talk shows, Disney and a pro sports team; and rewards enough to begin a college trust fund.

Herbert and a single mother of six were the only people to return money during an amnesty period that ended Jan. 11. A Miami firefighter had turned in a bag containing $330,000 within minutes of the accident in the Overtown neighborhood.

Herbert, who had found the 85 cents under the Interstate 95 overpass where the truck overturned, said he returned the money “because my mom and my teacher taught me to be honest.” His mother, Valerie Stovall, said Herbert was excited but was staying focused.

“There have been a lot of good things happening for him,” said Herbert’s principal, Sister Michele Dolyk, a member of the Allegheny Franciscans. But more importantly, she suggested, his celebrity has prompted some rethinking.

At a time when “people just think negatively about what happens in the inner city,” she told Catholic News Service in a telephone interview Jan. 15, the boy’s “actions speak loudly about many children in our school. Herbert put a face on all the children in the inner city.”

Sister Dolyk said St. Francis Xavier — “in one of the poorest sections of Miami” — has 156 students, mostly African-American and Hispanic, with some of Haitian and Filipino origins. “We try to get them to ask, ‘What would Jesus do? What’s the right thing to do?’” she said.

In one of the 100 calls the school has received about Herbert, the principal said a woman reported that, through his example, she had decided to honor a contract she was about to break. Sister Dolyk observed that, regarding today’s “indifference to things that are wrong, a child is leading them.”

The nun said school classes in Montana and Virginia have sent 85 cents from each student. “The Montel Williams Show” and “Leeza” have called, as have Disney World and the Miami Heat basketball team.

Herbert’s parents set up an education trust fund for him. The boy, who hopes to become a prosecutor, wants to attend Morehouse College in Atlanta.

He was presented with a framed certificate of recognition by Dade County commissioners in a City Hall ceremony. “He wore his school sweatshirt,” Sister Dolyk said proudly.

And despite his youth, Herbert was invited by State Attorney Katherine Fernandez-Rundle to become an intern next summer; she made an exception to the age requirement of 16. His class also was invited to attend an upcoming swearing-in ceremony.

Sister Dolyk described him as a typical boy. “He loves school, loves sports; he gets into some scrapes, but he’s a conscientious youngster,” she said.

Though not a Catholic, Herbert “comes from a good Christian family,” she said, adding that “his parents share their faith and values with him.” Herbert has been a student there since first grade. His older brother and younger sister do not attend St. Francis Xavier.

Oblate Father Jack Lau, pastor, told The Florida Catholic, Miami’s archdiocesan newspaper, that “the hype surrounding” Herbert’s action “seems to point to a lack of morals in our nation.”

Gabriel Possenti

Gabriel was born in Assisi, Italy, in 1838. At age 18 he entered the Order of Passionists. He was given the name Brother Gabriel of Our Lady of Sorrows. His life was not extraordinary. However, his fidelity to the rule, a joyful spirit, consideration for others and his devotion very much impressed those around him. Just as Gabriel was finishing his studies for the priesthood, he fell ill and died at age 24. He was canonized in 1920. His feast is Feb. 27.

Season Of Giving Never Ends For OLM Students

By MARY COYNE WESSLING

Correspondent

WINSTON-SALEM — If Christmas is the season of giving, then the students of Our Lady of Mercy School can boast that they celebrate it all school year long.

Carrying on a tradition begun several years ago, OLM students launched the first campaign of this school year in September. By October, they raised enough money to buy tickets to the Dixie Classic Fair for residents of a local AIDS Care Center.

"They brought in over $340 of their own hard-earned money," boasted Principal Sandra McMonagle. The best part came when the residents came to the school to tell the children how much they enjoyed the fair. It was, McMonagle said, a chance for the students to meet their beneficiaries firsthand.

With the Dixie Fair experience still fresh in their minds, the students pitched pennies into baby bottles located in their classrooms to benefit the mothers and children at Room at the Inn. They also sponsored a "blue jeans for babies" day, giving $1 to wear blue jeans with the proceeds going to the March of Dimes. By November they collected enough dry and canned goods to fill 68 Thanksgiving baskets. And in December they raised another $651 for Christmas gifts for two local groups. In between campaigns, students often helped with other parish programs — everything from baby-sitting during a parent workshop to helping load up trucks with food for charity.

"Outreach is a powerful thing here," McMonagle said. "It's an ongoing lesson of the corporal works of mercy."

As part of their learning experience, the students are urged to earn the money they give rather than ask their parents for it and collect goods for donations on their own.

"Sometimes a child from a comfortable middle-class family doesn't understand how the needy live," the principal said. "This can be a humbling yet gratifying experience for them. My kids love to do this work."

Whenever possible, the money and goods are given to local organizations, allowing the students to learn more about their community and ways in which to support it. Going to local charities also enables them to meet the people they aid. "Our students show respect for these clients. I'm proud of that," McMonagle said.

The school also benefits from the lessons in giving, she added. "The support for this type of giving comes from the parents of students as well as the parish community. The students see it and respond in kind. The caring transfers to the clients but also to the playground. We have students who genuinely help each other."

McMonagle credits St. Joseph Sister Gertrude Flynn with involving students in outreach. As pastoral associate of the parish, Sister Gertrude knows the needs of the community and how the children can help.

"These children are more aware of the world than I was as a child," Sister Gertrude said. They have a wonderful, open attitude toward the people we help. It's almost as if they consider these clients their friends."

The OLM students like being givers, even if it requires a sacrifice on their part. "It's hard to give up my pennies sometimes," admits third-grader Jackie Dalession. But give them she does, including the ones she collects from her grandfather.

Jennifer McMonagle and Trey Kitchum, both eighth-graders, enjoy the giving campaigns, especially when classes compete against one another to raise the most funds. Jennifer's contributions this year have come largely from baby-sitting earnings. Trey has donated funds he earned from doing household chores.

"It doesn't bother me to give the money," Trey said. "The AIDS patients we gave tickets to really appreciated it. They don't get to do much as a group."

Second-grader Katheryn Lyons also donated earnings from doing household chores to the pennies campaign, and last year was chosen to help sort food donations. The smile on her face was evidence that both experiences were good ones.

"At Our Lady of Mercy School we have always taught you take what you have and use it for the good of others because it wasn't given to you alone," McMonagle said. "Christ made us for a reason. When we ask what Christ does about poverty in Winston-Salem or about the homeless, we tell the students His answer is: 'I made you.'"

Jackie Dalession, Katheryn Lyons, Trey Kitchum, and Jennifer McMonagle are among the Our Lady of Mercy students who enjoy taking part in the school's giving campaigns.

Vicar for Education Discusses Mission of Diocesan Schools

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Father James Hawker, diocesan vicar for education, likes what he sees in western North Carolina when it comes to Catholic schools. The former director of religious education for the Archdiocese of Boston arrived "on loan" more than a year ago at the request of Bishop William G. Curlin to enhance the religious educational life of the diocese's youth.

At the dawn of Catholic Schools Week, Father Hawker chatted with The Catholic News & Herald about Catholic schools: their importance, their mission, their contribution to the lifeblood of the Diocese of Charlotte. Following are excerpts of the conversation.

Q. What is the significance of Catholic Schools Week?

A. One of the purposes of Catholic Schools Week is to remind people of the role and responsibility of Catholic schools within the mission of the Church. It provides an opportunity to celebrate the existence and the contribution of these learning environments.

Q. How does the mission of Catholic schools fit into the overall mission of the Church?

A. Catholic schools perform a unique service within the educational mission of the Church. The Catholic school is a learning environment within which the vision and values of Jesus are proclaimed and explained, reinforced and lived. It is

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Adolescent Jesus Helped His Mother Become A Disciple

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's remarks in English at his weekly general audience Jan. 15.

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin
Mary, we consider the finding of Jesus in the temple.
Mary and Joseph, concerned at the absence of Jesus, discover him after three days in the temple of Jerusalem, talking with the teachers of the law. All who heard him were amazed at his understanding and answers (Lk 2:47). In response to Mary's anguish, Jesus declares that he must be about his Father's business (cf. Lk 2:49).

This Gospel episode shows us the young Jesus as already conscious of his identity and mission. It also sheds light on Mary's growing participation in the life and work of her son. By contemplating the mysteries of Christ's life (cf. Lk 2:51), she associated herself ever more fully with his mission. Mary is not just the one who gave birth to Jesus; she is the woman who, by her personal obedience to the Father's plan, cooperates in the Son's work of bringing salvation to the world.

Diversity Can Work For Common Good, Pope Tells Kyrgyz Ambassador

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Diversity and development can work for the common good at the hands of enlightened leaders, Pope John Paul II told Kyrgyzstan's first ambassador to the Holy See. Omar Sultanov, also Kyrgyzstan's envoy to Germany, presented his credentials to the pope Jan. 11. The Vatican established diplomatic relations with the former Soviet republic that borders China in August 1992. All the member-states of the former Soviet Union now have such ties to the Vatican. In his greeting, Pope

John Paul said Sultanov's arrival in Rome "marks another step forward in your nation's journey of freedom" and congratulated him on Kyrgyzstan's progress.

Vatican Publishes Collection Of Papal Speeches On Penance

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican has published a collection of papal speeches about the sacrament of penance to promote interest in the sacrament and increase the desire of the faithful to go to confession, said U.S. Cardinal William W. Baum. The cardinal, head of the Vatican's Apostolic Penitentiary, a church tribunal that deals with matters of conscience and questions arising from the sacrament of penance, presented the second edition of the collection Jan. 14.

Unity Requires Dialogue, Says Pope

ROME (CNS) — Dialogue and self-examination among Christians must be intensified if progress is to be made toward complete communion in the faith, Pope John Paul II said during the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity. The pontiff spoke at the Sunday blessing in St. Peter's Square Jan. 19, the second day of the annual commemoration, which this year was conducted under a motto taken from St. Paul's second letter to the Corinthians: "We implore you on behalf of Christ, be reconciled to God."

Time Management for Teens

How do you balance your life?

Many, if not most, teens I know have busier schedules than I do.

In the high school where I teach, students take seven classes every day. In addition, almost every one of them participates in extracurricular activities. Many work, too.

Frankly, I don't know how they juggle it.

Teens and parents: Just pause for a moment and consider the time management challenges in such a schedule. Even if you have just 15 minutes of homework in every class, that adds up to almost two hours of school work a night. If you're participating in sports or drama or some equally intensive activity, you can count on another two hours of practice, performance or game every week night.

If you're employed, you undoubtedly work the notorious 5 to 9 shift, so well-known to teen-agers.

It's a tough call, isn't it?

You want to do well in school, but you also love playing soccer or being involved in drama, music or dance. You also need money, not only for the moment, but also for the future.

How in the world can you do everything at once?
Welcome to life.

Teens have a wonderful enthusiasm for life. Some of my students recently brought to class songs that they thought captured who they are and their sense of what life is all about.

The students brought in music from Iggy Pop to Garth Brooks, but every one of the songs had essentially the same theme: Make the most out of life, and get everything you can out of the time you've got.

I think that is what drives teens in their endless round of activity.

What takes up their time is not meaningless.

Rather, it's an expression of that lust and excitement for life we expect from the young, experiencing as much as they can in what time they have.

What inevitably follows is the next lesson life has to teach us. Life is full to the brim of experiences that bring us joy and growth, but we human beings have only 24 hours a day to live and learn.

It all comes down to what my students will tell you, perhaps even in chorus, is one of Ms. Welborn's basic guidelines:

Life is a trade-off. You can't do it all. Or, at least, you can't do it all at the same time.

There are few of us who can be exemplary students, spectacular athletes, stunning actors and make enough money to afford that cool new car all in the limits of our junior and senior years in high school.

No, for most of us something has to give.

It can be a hard choice. You want to do well in school. You want to get into a good college. But it is difficult to keep up your grades because you've got soccer practice two hours a day, an activity which takes up time and energy.

What do you do?

No one can tell you. You must do some honest thinking for yourself.

What do you want out of your future? What's going to get you there? Scholastic achievement or playing on a mediocre soccer team? Getting up that GPA or making a few dollars an hour working at the local grocery store?

You can't do everything, so maybe it's time to think.
What do you really want to do, and what is going to help you do it?

When Do You Feel Most Alive?

One of the great joys of being Director of The Christophers is the opportunity to host our television series, Christopher Closeup. It has the distinction of being the longest running religious affairs program in the U.S. In fact, it airs around the world.

I am coming to realize what accounts for its continuing appeal for so many viewers. Christopher Closeup keeps the focus on the person being interviewed. Our point of view is that each person, including every TV guest, is unique and makes a difference. Each one of us is faced with the choice to light a candle with the gift God has given us, or to yield to the darkness by holding back and ignoring our abilities.

So far in my first season I have had memorable conversations with talented and articulate men and women from many different fields. Among them: Tim Russert, broadcast journalist and host of NBC's Meet The Press, jazz great Dave Brubeck, author Fr. Richard McBrien of Notre Dame University. Each touches the Christopher theme by sharing the intimate, vital connection between their active careers and their spiritual convictions.

Another was Laurie Beechman. She is a singer and actress in New York's musical theater whose career is a catalogue of Broadway hits — "Cats," "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dream Coat," Les Miserables, and "Annie."

Recently she recorded a CD of favorite tunes with an unusual theme. It's called No One Is Alone: Songs of Hope and Inspiration from Broadway. She did this out of very special circumstances. Laurie has been fighting ovarian cancer for the last eight years.

She explained that she did this album because "I work very hard to be optimistic and to be hopeful. These times have been very difficult and changed my life in every possible way, yet I can't say it's all been terrible. I like to say to people that where cancer changes your life, you decide how you're going to live that life. That's your choice.

"There are many, many people like me walking around who are actively dealing with a chronic illness and yet what we tend to read most about is the tragedy of people who lose their lives to it. People assume if you're not cured, you won't live."

She is indeed. The sheer force of her faith illuminates her craft. "I feel most alive when I'm using the gifts God gave me," she says.

Laurie Beechman's story is a parable of hope that Father James Keller, the founder of the Christopher movement, would have appreciated. He understood that pain and suffering and uncertainty are a part of the human experience. And so is keeping hope alive in our hearts. That's why his words still ring true:

"Hope discovers what can be done instead of grumbling about what we cannot. Hope opens doors where despair closes them. Hope pushes ahead when it would be easy to quit. Hope cherishes no illusions nor does it yield to cynicism. Hope lights a candle instead of cursing the darkness."

For a free copy of the Christopher News Note, "Hold On to Hope," send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to The Christophers, 12 East 48th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Precepts of the Church

Q. I accompanied a young woman acquaintance to her Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults program. At no time were what we used to call the "six precepts of the Church" mentioned. Do we still have them? If so, what are they?

A. The juridical obligations and rights of all members of the Catholic Church are in the Code of Canon Law and generally described in one section (208-223). The section following (224-231) spells out specific responsibilities and rights of lay people.

These regulations simply reflect what our faith already teaches about our obligation to work cooperatively to build and sanctify the body of Christ. They can briefly be summarized as follows:

1. To lead a full sacramental life, especially to participate in the Mass each Sunday and holy day, sharing at the same time in holy Communion; and receive the sacrament of reconciliation regularly, at appropriate times.

2. To provide proper religious education for oneself and one's children, especially by use of Catholic schools and other educational programs.

3. To observe the marriage laws of the Church.

4. To strengthen and support the Church, including one's own parish community and clergy, and the worldwide Church.

5. To practice penance and self-denial in the Spirit of Christ, including fast and abstinence on days appointed by the Church's leaders.

6. To share in the missionary spirit and apostolic work of the local and universal Church.

It is just coincidence that this group numbers six. In the RCIA program you speak of, these duties and rights were probably not listed in one neat order, but I'm sure they were all explained at appropriate times.

Q. A friend often watches Mass on television rather than go to church. She says it is the same. Is she right?

I told her no, but cannot explain why.

A. Many Catholics still do not realize that the practice and obligation concerning Sunday eucharistic liturgy does not require that we hear or watch someone else do something, but to be there to do it personally.

The Eucharist is an action, a celebration of the Catholic community, and cannot be substituted for by watching a television program, even if it is a picture of the Mass.

If one cannot be present for Sunday Mass with one's parish or other community, a television or radio Mass may help one to pray and to be united spiritually with the Mass being celebrated everywhere.

But such listening or viewing is never a substitute for being there. The American bishops are currently studying new policies that will make this clear and establish guidelines governing how and when Masses should be celebrated for television.

A free brochure on ecumenism, including questions on inter-Communion and other ways of sharing worship with people of other faiths, is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Parish, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions may be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

Take it to The Limit

A few weeks ago, my six-year-old son Bobby, came home from a neighbor's house and said, "At Joey's house he's allowed to call his sister 'stupid' and tell her to 'shut-up' without getting in trouble. How come those are bad words in our house but not at 'Joey's'?"

As a parent, this line of questioning makes me very uncomfortable as well as nostalgic for the days when my kids were toddlers and could barely speak, never mind ask probing questions. It's important to my husband and me to be very clear about what's acceptable behavior in our house without putting down another parent or making a judgment about their parenting style. This is a real challenge for moms and dads because it's our job to make sure that our kids understand respect, courtesy and kindness in a society that often emphasizes disrespect, selfishness and power.

I know that even with some of my closest friends we have each staked out our own limits regarding language, toys, movies and behavior. I'll never forget one summer night during our vacation when my husband and I discussed this subject with four of our closest friends. As our kids played I the next room and one child used a certain word, a discussion followed about the parameters of acceptable and unacceptable words in each of our homes. It quickly turned into a session of laughter and teasing "we allow the word blank but not blank in our home." "You let your kids say blank but not blank?" "You say blank but don't allow your kids to say blank?" And on it went. Although there are differences in each of our homes, each of us had clear limits with our kids. This doesn't mean our children have never tested those limits!

As parents we established boundaries and rules based on our own upbringing, the uniqueness of our kids and our life and faith experiences. One of my closest friends often tells me what a struggle it is for her not to swear around her two boys because she grew up in a home where four letter words were the norm. Some of my close friends who have children with special needs, hyperactivity and attention deficit, have helped me to understand that they're basically having a good day if "shut up" and "stupid" are the worst words that comes out of their child's mouth that day.

Still, it's upsetting to hear young children use foul language. About a year ago there was a TV program on this subject. A reporter followed young children around and recorded their bad language and swear words for all America to hear. The parents of these kids either threw up there hands or laughed every time their child uttered another word that was bleeped during the interview. One mother said, "They are only words; it could be much worse." It could be worse and for many children it is. But I wonder why it didn't concern the parents that these words are often charged with hostility, anger and dis-

Catholic Schools Week

Join In Celebrating The Good News In Catholic Education

By DR. MICHAEL SKUBE

The 23rd annual national Catholic Schools Week is Jan. 26-Feb. 1, and our 14 elementary, one middle school and two high schools look forward to celebrating the good news of Catholic education with activities ranging from community service projects, assemblies and school Masses.

This year's theme, "Catholic Schools: Schools You Can Believe In," holds a dual meaning. In addition to offering students the opportunity for excellence in education, Catholic schools prepare our young people with the rudiments necessary to live a very worthwhile Christian life.

Catholic Schools Week is a local celebration happening at 8,000 Catholic schools in every area of the country. These individual observances combine to make a national celebration.

The four colors comprising this year's Catholic Schools Week logo are very meaningful as well. Each color represents an element of nature: blue for water and sky, green for plant life, orange for fire and yellow for sun. The figure represents all those touched by Catholic schools: students, teachers and parents. The book the figure holds represents the academic excellence of Catholic schools and the Bible. The sunburst behind the figure represents the dawn of a new day. The logo emphasizes the positive, futuristic view of Catholic schools.

Thousands of buttons bearing the logo have been distributed and people are encouraged to wear them on "National Appreciation Day," which is Wednesday (Jan. 29) of Catholic Schools Week.

I would like to share with you a few facts about the Catholic Schools in the Diocese of Charlotte:

- There are 14 elementary, one middle school (grades 6-8) and two high schools.

- Enrollment for the last eight years has increased as follows:

1990-91	4,818
1991-92	4,873
1992-93	5,159
1993-94	5,614
1994-95	5,857
1995-96	6,207
1996-97	6,546

- A total of 1,986 students have been added to the enrollment since 1989. Enrollment has increased by 339 students since last year. There are 5,462 elementary and 1,084 high school students.

- The student body consists of 3,367 girls and 3,279 boys.

- Sixteen women religious, seven priests, brothers and deacons, and 66 lay men and 369 lay women teach in our schools assisted by approximately 200 support staff.

- Of the five largest diocesan schools, four are in Charlotte and one is in Greensboro. Holy Trinity Middle School has 838 students, Charlotte Catholic High School has 729 students, All Saints has 574 students, St. Gabriel has 552 students and Our Lady of Grace in Greensboro has 455 students.

- Members of the Diocesan School Board are: Joseph Marinello, president; Hussein Sadek, vice-president; Janet Smith, secretary; Father Dennis Kuhn, pastors' representative; Richard Martinez, principals' representative; Georgette Schraeder, teachers' representative; Al Albert; Paul Fedorkowicz; Martha Gallagher; David Morgan; Marianne Misko; Brigitte Ruggiero; and Michael Skube.

- The average annual cost to educate a student in North Carolina public schools is $5,147. With 6,506 students in our Catholic schools, parents have saved N.C. taxpayers more than $33 million this year alone. This does not include the additional expense of building more schools to accommodate our 6,000 students.

What our students learn lasts a lifetime. Tradition, morality, faith, hope and love reinforce those values already established at home. That is why "our Catholic schools are schools you can believe in."

At Asheville Catholic, "Real Life" Connection Given Top Priority

Asheville Catholic School students Courtney Sinsky, Katie Bridgman and Robbie Kimbrough work in the computer resource room.

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — More than 75 percent of the students at Asheville Catholic School are Roman Catholic, but don't ask Principal Judy Cavallo to tell you which is which.

"I don't see Catholic or non-Catholic," she says emphatically. "I see family." Fostering family unity in an environment of diversity and nurturing the growth of personal faith is how Cavallo expresses the challenge of Catholic education.

Spelling out the "Catholic" features of such a school depends on whether one uses an uppercase or lowercase C. Not surprisingly, students who are not Catholic tend to focus on the more noticeable religious practices and formalities. A Presbyterian sixth-grader comments on the frequency with which Catholics receive Communion at school liturgies. A Jewish seventh-grader is excited by the opportunity to learn for herself which religious traditions are a common heritage. Episcopalian students are surprised at similarities in the ways Catholics worship.

Students at Asheville Catholic from other religious traditions say they are there because their parents believe they will be more challenged academically. All of them find the homework load heavier and the testing more frequent than in public school. None are fond of wearing uniforms. Yet, given their own choice in the matter, the students would elect to stay at Asheville Catholic. Their reasons, in this case, align more closely with the views of their Catholic classmates. "The school is small enough that everyone gets the chance to know one another; we have good friends here; we know our teachers and they get to know us very well," said an eighth grade non-Catholic who has attended Asheville Catholic since pre-kindergarten.

classrooms and corridors — an easy and congenial atmosphere, not lacking in order or purposefulness, but relaxed as well as respectful. Religion is definitely a subject in the classroom curriculum, but religious values pervade the whole daily schedule. The religious implications of secular matters are discussed, and as one 8th grader put it: "My teacher tries to make connections between religion and 'real life.'"

Not only making connections, but actually erasing that line between religion and "real life" is given top priority by Cavallo and the staff at Asheville Catholic. The physical education teacher is as likely to explore connections between good sportsmanship and the Sermon on the Mount as the teacher of religion. The propriety of behavior at recess is no less significant than in the classroom.

Donna Gibson, who has taught sixth grade — including the religion class — for seven years, attributes much of the school's "Catholicity" to the leadership and personal example of principals in recent years. "They have expressed their spiritual convictions strongly," she says, adding that "they have instilled in all of us a sense that we are to be living the Gospel and sharing it with the students."

Denise Mead, the school's religion coordinator, points out that although Catholic members of the faculty teach religion classes, all the teachers share the responsibility "to make it clear that religious values and morals are an everyday matter."

Both Mead and Gibson agree that teachers at Asheville Catholic must be as creative as they are dedicated because they have fewer financial resources at their disposal. Despite the generosity and hard work of parents and staff, says Gibson, "It's very difficult to have all we'd like to educate our students because our funding cannot match what is available in the public system."

The Relic

Despite Flaws, Film Offers Suspenseful Moments

NEW YORK (CNS) — A mutant creature who needs human brain matter to survive crashes a party of swells at a Chicago museum in the gory monster flick, "The Relic."

Opening in the Brazilian rain forest, the movie is often so dark it's unclear if one or several monsters are percolating once a wooden crate from South America arrives at the Natural History Museum and evolutionary biologist Penelope Ann Miller gets curious about its strange organic contents.

Meanwhile, grumpy police detective Tom Sizemore is stumped by the deaths of all the seamen on a freighter from Brazil, especially in light of their scooped-out brains. The two events seem connected when a museum guard is found murdered and minus brain tissue, so the cop orders a full search of the huge museum and its milelong tunnels, just as museum officials are about to host a gala party for rich patrons.

Pressured by the mayor into OK'ing re-opening the museum for the society shindig, the cop orders his team to continue the search. This turns up a humongous beetle-lizard-human more than willing to upgrade its feeding frenzy to rich food — as in billionaires' brains.

Director Peter Hyams loads his horror movie with much babble about genetic mutations, evolution and myth, and shots of decapitated heads are unnerving (but clearly animatronic models). Despite its flaws, there are suspenseful moments, especially in the last 40 minutes when the grotesque creature is fully revealed and the hunted are forced to flee through flooded tunnels.

Still, many will justly feel "The Relic" borrows shamelessly from the "Alien" movies and "Jurassic Park" throughout the murky narrative.

Adding some polish to this sleek monster movie are appearances by Linda Hunt as the museum director undaunted by a murderer when contributions are at stake, and James Whitmore as a veteran researcher who accepts his fate with a tranquility only a truly curious scientist could muster.

Because of graphic fantasy violence with shots of decapitated heads, some rough language and intermittent profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Video

"D3: The Mighty Ducks" (1996)

Thin sequel about the problems of the now-teen-age hockey team at a posh prep school where they encounter hostile students and their old coach (Emilio Estevez) is replaced by a grim new one (Jeffrey Nordling). The formula story is a contrived mixture of youthful pranks and emotional struggles leading up to the big game and its bone-crunching physical contact. Some dangerous stunts, vulgar humor and a few coarse expressions. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Escape from L.A." (1996)

After being separated from the mainland by an earthquake, Los Angeles in 2013 serves as a prison island for undesirables into which a war hero-turned-criminal (Kurt Russell) is sent by the president (Cliff Robertson) to retrieve a doomsday device from a power-mad anarchist (George Corraface). Director John Carpenter's derivative sequel to "Escape from New York" (1981) is chock full of gunfights, chases and sleek special effects that add up to mindless escapism. Recurring stylized violence, some rough language and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"He Walked by Night" (1948)

Case history of a cunning cop-killer (Richard Basehart) who evades the Los Angeles police department for months until routine legwork by a persistent detective (Scott Brady) leads to his apprehension. Though dated by a heavy-handed narration, director Alfred Werker's dramatization effectively stages the action scenes in semi-documentary style with notable success, especially the climactic chase through the city's storm drains. Stylized violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Latcho Drom" (1994)

Dramatically unstructured presentation of Gypsies performing their music, song and dance as filmed in such diverse locales as Romania, Spain and India. In stringing together this sampling of musical performances, director Tony Gatlif provides a broad sense of Gypsy musical traditions from joyous celebrations of life to lamentations of their persecution through the ages, but gives little insight into their history and culture. Subtitles. Fleeting nudity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Naked City" (1948)

Crime picture filmed on the streets of New York City follows the painstaking methods of a veteran homicide detective (Barry Fitzgerald) in linking the murder of a model to a gang of jewel thieves. Directed by Jules Dassin, the bustling city landscapes add a human dimension to the drama of a sordid murder investigation with occasional narration by producer Mark Hellinger and a thrilling chase climax atop the Williamsburg Bridge. Stylized violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"T-Men" (1947)

Gritty tale of Treasury Department agents (Dennis O'Keefe and Alfred Ryder) infiltrating a Los Angeles counterfeiting ring by masquerading as gangsters from Detroit. Directed by Anthony Mann, the story is narrated in semi-documentary style as the undercover agents try to get the goods on hardened criminals (notably Charles McGraw, who kills informer Wallace Ford in a steam bath), with tension mounting from moody visuals and credible plot twists. Stylized violence in realistic underworld situations not for young children. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The White Balloon" (1996)

A 7-year-old girl living in Teheran goes to buy a plump goldfish for the Islamic New Year's celebration but loses the money down a streetside grate and enlists the aid of harried passers-by to retrieve it before nightfall. Producer-director Jafar Panahi's Iranian production tells its simple tale in real time from the youngster's perspective with much of its appeal coming from the varied reactions of those called upon to help the child. Subtitles. Distraught youngster. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

At home in my pilgrim cosmos

The sense of being on pilgrimage is essential to a robust religious faith.

Christian spirituality instructs us that excessive attachment to "this present age" ties us down and enchains our spirits. For this reason, the wandering figure of Abraham remains the exemplar of our deeply religious need to pull up our roots when a glorious destiny calls.

Thus Christianity sees our life here as an exodus journey, at times even a desert wandering:

—In the New Testament, Jesus the "Son of Man" is portrayed as having

"What is problematic is a view of our planet as little more than a way-station that we simply pass through, and which we mindlessly trash on our way to a 'better home.'"

"no place to lay his head."

—In Luke's Gospel, Jesus' followers are challenged to move steadily toward Jerusalem. They must not look back and should even "leave the dead to bury the dead."

If we turn to the East we notice that the Buddha also had to forsake the luxuries of home, to become detached from all clinging desire in order to find enlightenment. And in Hinduism the "sannyasin" finally forsakes home and hearth altogether to be closer to God.

Much of the world's religion requires that we accept the "homeless" character of our existence.

Today, however, the ecological crisis forces us to think in a new way about this religious ideal.

For a fundamental condition of ecological responsibility is that we learn to treat this world as our home. But how can we reconcile faith's pilgrimage ideal — the religious ideal of a "homeless" pilgrimage — with the call to embed our lives and actions more deeply than ever in this earth and its ecosystems?

I suggest that what is problematic is a view of our planet as little more than a way-station that we simply pass through, and which we mindlessly trash on our way to a "better home."

I fear that many of us harbor the deep suspicion that we really don't belong here, and so in the name of religion we distance ourselves from passionate concern for the well-being of nature.

In other words, the ideal of religious homelessness does not inevitably entail an ideal of "cosmic" homelessness in which the earth becomes a place to get the ethical need to feel at home in nature so as to conserve our habitat for future generations of living beings.

How do we hold these two persuasions together?

Fortunately, the new scientific no-be squeezed out of this new way of understanding the world. But if the universe has a finite past — and quite likely even a definite beginning — then it becomes possible for us to understand the whole of the cosmos as a still-un-away from in order to find salvation.

We are torn, or so it seems, between two values:

—The religious ideal of being on a journey is very compelling, and so we are reluctant to see ourselves as truly belonging to the cosmos.

—But many of us also take seriously tion of an expanding and evolving universe can come to our aid here.

If science has taught us anything over the last century and a half, it is that the natural world itself is a restless adventure. Nature is not static, eternal and necessary, as scientists and philosophers used to think.

The cosmos is a still-unfolding story with a finite past and an incalculable future.

Hence, for us to embrace the natural world means that we must also welcome its inherent restlessness. Taking the scientific picture of the world seriously requires that we embed our own unsettled lives of pilgrimage within the much larger context of a cosmic pilgrimage.

By accepting nature's own fundamental homelessness, in other words, we can be at home in this universe.

At first glance you may wonder what theological significance could possibly folding story.

This would mean that it is not just the human spirit that has embarked upon an immense journey. Rather, the entire cosmos may be understood as a pilgrimage into the great mystery we call God.

Therefore, we do not need to abandon the natural world in order to follow the religious advice to live homelessly. The cosmos is our fellow traveler.

Indeed, we may even be permitted to say that the universe's own homelessness is the root system of our religious restlessness.

Our spiritual hunger for the divine, therefore, can be satisfied by attuning ourselves more intimately to nature, not by extricating ourselves from it.

(Haught is professor of theology at Georgetown University in Washington and author of "Science and Religion" and "The Promise of Nature.")

THIS EDITION IN A NUTSHELL

Our universe expands. But as it expands, it also shrinks. Science and technology bring an entire human universe to our doorstep. Science even brings to light the needs of the Earth itself — its need for care. The human family is now accustomed to crossing new frontiers of understanding. Yet contradictions abound. For example, great advances are made in medicine, but disease proliferates all over the globe. As each new frontier is crossed, we are challenged yet again not to neglect the frontier of the spirit within.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Where is the new frontier of human discovery today?

There is a new frontier in space. Scientists long to understand how galaxies come to be. Currently they hope to discover whether life ever existed on Mars.

There is a new frontier in medicine. The Human Genome Project hopes to find genetic cures for many diseases, while avoiding potential abuses of its work, the project's director told a group of U.S. Catholic bishops recently.

A different kind of frontier is crossed as instant communications "relocate" the earth's most distant points, making knowledge of them immediately accessible. No longer will any "far-off" human needs be obscured from the larger human family's view.

As each new frontier is crossed, knowledge of the world "out there" takes a quantum leap forward. But here is another noteworthy point:

The exploration of each new frontier challenges us to understand ourselves better, to explore the world within. The world of the spirit always represents a new frontier in its own right.

This question must always be asked:

Will our expanding awareness of the universe outside us activate an expansion of the universe within and cause our universe to evolve as a place of greater love and care?

Knowing the direction of your journey

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

Scientists have come up with all sorts of theories about how our universe came into being and some fascinating evidence to support those theories.

A much more practical question, however, is why we exist.

The question supposes that there is an intelligent being behind it all, one who could create with a purpose and guide people toward the achievement of that purpose.

Actually, people cannot intelligently embark on a journey — in this case the journey through life — without knowing where they are going or what new frontiers they are meant to cross.

The Israelites were convinced that God had a purpose in creating them. But the people were not always clear about its precise nature.

At first they thought their most important goal was to reach the Promised Land, a land they could call their own. With God's obvious help they had crossed that frontier — taking possession of the land of Canaan and settling down.

And they felt at first that their goal was the enjoyment of physical life: health, reasonable comfort, large families, continued life. The people followed God's directives in hopes of securing a long life, which they regarded as God's blessing.

Death, however, was an undeniable fact, and what happened after that was shrouded in mystery. The people believed in an afterlife, but it was shadowy to them. It was centuries before the Israelites conceived of an eternal reward.

The first clear indication of this belief was in the book of Daniel, written about 175 B.C.: "Many of those who sleep in the dust shall awake. Some shall live forever, others shall be an everlasting horror and disgrace. But ... those who lead many to justice shall be like the stars forever" (Daniel 12:2-3).

Here was a positive goal giving bright meaning to life.

The author of the Book of Wisdom (75 B.C.) spelled this purpose out graphically: "But the souls of the just are in the hand of God, and no torment shall touch them" (Wisdom 3:1).

Jesus' resurrection, however, gave final and definite meaning to all existence. It guaranteed an eternity of sharing in his victory over all evil, including death, in a realm where God will wipe away our tears and where there will be "no more death or mourning, wailing or pain" (Revelation 21:3-4).

So life is eminently worth living. The road we're on leads somewhere. But it's not an escape route from the here and now.

Instead, we discover that the "way" we're following represents a new frontier of love and justice, always needing further exploration, but always possessing ultimate meaning in light of the resurrection and always able to look ahead with hope.

Expanding universe brings world to our doorstep

By Father Eugene LaVerdiere, SSS
Catholic News Service

People say our universe is expanding, not just the astronomical universe, but our scientific and technological universe.

Whoever thought human beings would visit the moon and send a spaceship on a planetary expedition? It is awesome.

But the expanding universe is filled with contradictions:

—At the very time the universe is expanding, I have a strong feeling that it is shrinking.

—While we may be able to conquer space, we are not making much headway with poverty. As some become fabulously rich, more become wretchedly poor.

—We are making great advances in medicine, but disease continues to proliferate all over the globe.

When you see pictures on television

ment. I spent my last afternoon in Nairobi visiting a slum that houses thousands of people, many of whom gravitated to the city when there was no longer enough agricultural land for an expanding population. You can only divide and subdivide a plot of land so many times!

In the company of Maryknoll Father John Lange and a group of wonderful African women dedicated to the poorest of the poor, I visited some 15 homes. Perhaps I should call them family shacks.

The homes were built of tin on wooden frames, with dirt floors. They had a bed, a couple of stools, a little table, a few boxes and a kerosene lamp. Each house had a door but no windows. Spaces between the sheets of tin let in mosquitoes. Outside, the goats, chickens and dogs scrounged for scraps along the open sewers.

There was no heat, though because of the altitude Nairobi can be quite cold at night. During the day the equatorial sun ferments the sewage and beats down on the tin roofs.

On the edge of the slum you can see modern factories and office buildings. Close by, you pass rows and rows of houses where the middle class and the affluent live.

I am sure you can picture the environment. But can you picture the people?

My first thought was of a parable in Luke's Gospel, that of "a rich man who dressed in purple garments and fine linen, and dined sumptuously each day. And lying at his door there was a poor man named Lazarus, covered with sores, who would gladly have eaten his fill of the scraps that fell from the rich man's table" (Luke 16:19-21).

When it is read in a slum, the parable's description of the rich man and poor Lazarus sounds very realistic.

I met people in that Nairobi slum with all kinds of wounds and ailments, including a broken pelvis, infected sores, knife wounds, ulcers, AIDS and the ever-present malaria. The most heart-rending scene I saw was a little infant trying hard to get some nourishment from his mother's breast. But he was unable to suck and in need of medical attention.

He tried. And he cried. And he tried again. The cry of the poor! A little human symbol of the wretched, helpless poor of the world! I wish I knew his name.

Thank God our scientific and technological universe is expanding. It brings our shrinking human universe to our doorstep.

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

In your own ever-new and changing "universe," what is the value of faith? Why?

"Without faith, where would be the meaning in my life? What would there be to look forward to, to be hopeful about? Faith gives me a sense of security, a sense of a base in this changing world." — James Keiser, San Jose, Calif.

"Faith is ... my anchor because it gives me stability and a place of refuge. It's my rudder because I can't just stay in one place and faith helps me know where I'm going." — Mary Frost, Laramie, Wyo.

"I work as a nurse, and faith is important for all of our patients. In fact, I'd say it's the No. 1 value here at the hospital." — Susan Larsen, Baudette, Minn.

"In the world today, it's hard to find stability.... My faith in the church and in Jesus is necessary to help me be grounded." — Tim Ritchey, Thornton, Colo.

Cipriani To Join Commission To Aid In Hostage Crisis

LIMA, Peru (CNS) — A Peruvian archbishop who has played a leading role in the hostage crisis at the Japanese Embassy is to serve on a new commission aimed at bringing the situation to a peaceful end. Archbishop Juan Louis Cipriani of Ayacucho "has been called to participate in the Commission of Guarantors by the Peruvian bishops, with the assent of the Holy See and with the hope that a solution can be reached quickly," Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said Jan. 16 at the Vatican.

Network Correspondent To Anchor PBS Show On Religion

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Bob Abernethy, who has been in semi-retirement status at NBC News, will again get into the full swing of the news business as the man in charge of a new PBS weekly news program on religion and ethics. "Religion Newsweekly," as the show is tentatively titled, will debut sometime this summer. No date or time has been set, but the Lilly Endowment has fully funded the program to the tune of $5 million.

Diocese Welcomes Director Of Religious Formation For Schools

Sister Maureen Meehan

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — When Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan initiated her role as diocesan Director of Religious Formation for Schools in November 1996, she assumed a four-tiered responsibility to young Catholics across western North Carolina.

Sister Maureen brings an extensive background of training and experience that aids her approach to word, worship, community, and formation. Those elements, she said, form not only the core of her position, but the very basis of the Catholic school model itself.

"I would suggest my role as being a developer, a listener, a provider for the educators and the children within the Catholic schools system," she said of her vocation. "I'd like to stress an awareness within our schools of the ongoing invitation to make Christ come alive today as well as into the 21st century."

As a student and educator, Sister Maureen has centered her life around Catholic instruction within schools for more than 20 years. In addition to her bachelor's degree in education, she has also earned master's degrees in religious education administration, theology, and spirituality. She holds a doctorate in ministry as well.

She has taught at the elementary, high school and college levels in Pennsylvania, New York, and Connecticut, including having served as principal for a time in a Connecticut elementary school. In Harrisburg, Penn., she was a member of the team that opened four religious education centers — a development she called "most valuable" in her experience in a diocesan setting.

After the ravage of Hurricane Hugo in 1989, Sister Maureen spent time in Charleston, S.C., in a coordinating capacity for a parish's religious studies program and other diocesan work.

Those experiences — and, even more so, her work today — stem from what she referred to as "Gospel values" whose presence is vital to the mission of Catholic schools.

Through her implementation of "the word," Sister Maureen devotes particular attention to assisting religion teachers in their purpose and to assist in carrying out the schools' evangelical aspirations. In the realm of prayer and worship, she serves as a resource to personnel as they plan, present and evaluate liturgies and prayer experiences in the schools.

As a cultivator of community, Sister Maureen meets with members of diocesan agencies, pastors, parish coordinators and other personnel to address mutual areas of concern. In each of the schools, she talks with principals to address ways of developing faith formation of individual faculties.

While her role does include such prescribed elements, Sister Maureen said she is always amazed at the infinite examples of seeing Gospel values in action.

She talked of students' "looking at the world through eyes of awe, seeing the beauty of creation, and taking ownership to care for this creation."

Sister Maureen looks for other ways of enhancing the Catholic school as a formative community as well. An emphasis on multiculturalism will be placed in liturgical preparations and in textbooks during 1997, and she said studies into bringing such mediums as the Internet into the classrooms are underway.

Ensuring the well-being of the Catholic school setting is a responsibility of students, teachers and parents alike, she said, calling the collaborative effort between parents and school faculties "very positive and motivating." She added that the role of the teacher is one whose bounds are limitless.

"The teachers are symbols of the Church," she said. "They are teachers of prayer, and they are companions for young people as they journey in the light of faith."

That journey is one Sister Maureen holds in the highest regard, and she said the warm reception she has felt in this diocese has been inspiring. "There is such a strong focus on making Church come alive here," she said, "and Catholic identity is very much present in the schools of this diocese."

Employment Opportunities

Sponsor a Child at a Catholic Mission. It's Affordable!

Little Corina lives in a small mountain town in Honduras. Her mother is blind and her father abandoned them. Your concern can make a difference in the lives of children like Corina.

Your opportunity to help a very poor child is much too important to miss. And Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), an international Catholic child sponsorship program can show you the affordable way.

Through CFCA you sponsor a child for the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide one poor child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to sponsor at a level you can afford. CFCA will see to it from other donations and the tireless efforts of our missionary partners that your child receives the same benefits as other sponsored children.

Your sponsorship pledge helps provide a poor child at a Catholic mission site with nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

And you can be assured your pledge has its greatest impact because our programs are directed by dedicated Catholic missionaries with a long-standing commitment to the people they serve.

To help build your relationship, you receive a picture of your child (updated yearly), information about your child's family and country, letters from your child and the CFCA newsletter. But most important, you'll receive the satisfaction of helping a poor child.

Please don't miss this opportunity to make a difference. Become a sponsor for one poor child today!

Retired Bishop, Paralyzed Officer Honored With Pro-Life Awards

By TRACY EARLY

BROOKLYN, N.Y. (CNS) — Retired Auxiliary Bishop George E. Lynch, a native of the Bronx who returned to his home after serving in the Diocese of Raleigh, N.C., was honored by the Diocese of Brooklyn at its annual Sanctity of Life Mass Jan. 18.

The bishop, who will turn 80 in March, was praised for continuing his active involvement in abortion protests, including getting arrested and being jailed, at a time when many people would be seeking the comforts of retirement.

Although Bishop Lynch has been jailed several times, a federal judge recently acquitted him of violating an injunction on the grounds that he had religious motivation for his actions.

The Pro Vita Award of the Brooklyn Diocese, presented at St. James Cathedral, was also given to former New York police Detective Steven McDonald, his wife, Patti Anne, and their son, Conor, who was born after the detective was shot in 1986 and left paralyzed from the neck down.

McDonald, who was shot by a teenager in New York's Central Park, is a native of the Brooklyn Diocese who now lives in the Rockville Centre Diocese.

McDonald, supported by his family, has remained a public presence in New York. In 1995 he spoke about his faith at a eucharistic congress held by the Brooklyn Diocese.

Evelyn J. Aquila, director of the diocesan Respect Life Office, said the McDonalds had "taught this city" by the Christian courage they exhibited as a family.

At the Mass, the Parish Respect Life Award was given to St. Rocco's Parish of Brooklyn for its "long involvement in the diocesan Sanctity of Life Program and the tremendous variety of parish programs that directly enhance the lives of Catholics and non-Catholics in their community."

Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick of Newark, N.J., celebrant and homilist for the Mass, called Bishop Lynch "a special sign to our generation and to our American society."

Speaking just two days after the bombings at the Atlanta abortion clinic, Archbishop McCarrick praised Bishop Lynch for rejecting the path of those who engaged in a "misguided effort to use the tools of evil to fight evil."

He commended Bishop Lynch for "courageously persevering" in his witness at public demonstrations and in prison cells.

The Old Testament reading for the Mass was the story of the young Samuel being awakened in the night by a call from God (1 Samuel 3:1-10).

Keying the homily to that story, Archbishop McCarrick said God was calling "men and women of our nation," and telling them, "Do not continue sleeping in this sleep of death."

"America is not hearing today's call," he said. "How many times must the Lord call?"

Private Funds Promised For Children In Religious Schools

By EUGENE HORN

MILWAUKEE (CNS) — Continued private support has been promised to children from low-income families attending religious schools after a Wisconsin court ruled the schools are ineligible to take part in a state-funded school choice voucher program.

A Milwaukee group called Partners Advancing Values in Education, known as PAVE, announced it plans to raise $4.5 million by August to enable children currently receiving PAVE tuition scholarships to remain in Milwaukee's religious schools for the 1997-98 term.

The group's announcement came after Madison Circuit Judge Paul Higginbotham ruled Jan. 15 in a 51-page decision that expanding the school choice program to church-run schools violated the state constitution.

The judge ruled it was also unconstitutional to expand the nonreligious school portion of the program from the 1,650 schools currently participating in it to the 15,000 allowed by legislation approved in 1995.

The school choice program was begun in 1990 and is limited to schools within the city of Milwaukee. A temporary injunction against religious schools participating in the program had been in place before Higginbotham's ruling.

Higginbotham's ruling is expected to be appealed to the Dane County Circuit Court of Appeals, then back to the Wisconsin Supreme Court, which had sent the case to Higginbotham without rendering an opinion, and eventually to the U.S. Supreme Court.

About half of the 4,153 children from low-income families who received PAVE funds for the current school year had enrolled in religious schools through the Milwaukee School Choice Program.

PAVE initiated an emergency fund for the choice-eligible students last August after Higginbotham refused to allow children from low-income families to attend religious schools under the choice program. The judge said the program passed by the state Legislature was unconstitutional.

The education group's executive director, Dan McKinley, told the Catholic Herald, Milwaukee's archdiocesan newspaper, that "considering that we're in the midst of a strategy-planning process, the ruling came at a good time to work into our plan for the next year."

He said his organization's fund-raising goal for the next year is $200,000 higher than the amount raised last year to provide partial tuition grants for recipients.

"Our goal is to have all kids currently enrolled in religious schools who are receiving PAVE funding remain there," he said. "We'll have to make a case to our past supporters and seek new supporters to raise $4.5 million by mid-August."

McKinley described Higginbotham's ruling as "one more step along the road to the Supreme Court."

"The whole question is whether the primary effect is to help a family or to aid a religious society or organization, and this had to be cleared up," he said.

"It will take a couple of years to get it done but I'm confident that we're working for fair legislation and it takes a while for the law to catch up."

Richard Mason, principal of St. Anthony Elementary School in Milwaukee, where half of the 260 enrolled receive PAVE funds, said school choice is good for both private and public education because "the competition helps fine-tune your own school."

Mason said in addition to the competitive advantage there also is a need for alternative models of education for low-income families.

Capuchin Brother Bob Smith, principal of independent Catholic Messmer High School, said he was saddened by Higginbotham's decision because he believes that the judge failed to look at the totality of the program and the impact on children and their families.

Predicting that school choice eventually will be legalized, Brother Smith said, "I thought it was interesting that the ruling came on the birthday of (the Rev.) Martin Luther King."

"Considering what he stands for, I'm wondering what kind of message it sends to people, especially those who are poor and disenfranchised," he said.

Brother Smith called Higginbotham's ruling "just a small piece of the large battle that will take place."

In Washington, National Education Association president Bob Chase commended Higginbotham's ruling.

"We all want the very best education for our children," said Chase, "but using tax dollars to support private or parochial schools is not the answer. Taxpayers should not be forced to subsidize the private choice of individual parents."

important to recognize that in the Catholic school, all subjects should be presented and reinforced from the perspective of Catholic Christian values.

There is very clear interrelationship between the message that is shared — specifically the religious message — and the formation of community. That formation is also very much influenced by liturgical worship in the school, and the involvement of the participants in service.

The objective of Catholic schools, of course, is to be involved specifically with education. But education deals with much more than cognitive knowledge. It includes formation, which is concerned with attitudes, values and behavior as well. That really goes to the very core of a person — mind, heart, spirit and soul.

Q. How do Catholic schools play a role in society itself?

A. The contribution of Catholic schools is in preparing persons to commit themselves to building up the kingdom of God. That upbuilding of the kingdom, which is one of peace and justice, is always going to be beneficial to the transformation of our society.

The Catholic school prepares young people to continue their journey of faith according to their age, state and ability. The school, then, contributes to the common good of society in that those beneficiaries of Catholic education within the school setting are prepared to take a responsible role as citizens.

Q. Certainly, Catholic Schools Week is a means of celebrating and promoting who Catholic schools are. How do those involved in the schools maintain that awareness year-round to better meet the needs of students?

A. It is essential that all school personnel be better prepared personally as witnesses of the Lord and professionally as educators whose teaching incorporates the values of our faith.

One key to that goal is the annual retreat day for all of the school personnel in the diocese. They have the opportunity to gather for reflection, for conversation, for prayer. It is a very participatory experience. There are semi-annual workshops as well, which are also very important in assisting our personnel professionally and personally to fulfill their role.

Secondly, the individual faculties meet frequently during the course of the school year. There, too, is a prayer component that is integral to their identity and to the fulfillment of their mission.

A key responsibility of our diocesan office is to ensure that religion teachers in the schools have a very clear grasp and understanding of the teachings of the Church. That is crucial if they are to share the authentic message of the Church with young people. And again, it's vital to continue programs of formation for faculties in general so that they will be able to better share from the value perspective of the Church and the Lord.

Also, it's always valuable to assist parents to come to a deeper understanding of the relationship between the home and school. We strive to promote specific ways by which that partnership can be strengthened.

The overall point is that while a variety of formation programs take place through the school year, a great importance is placed on continually presenting opportunities for growth and development for everyone involved in leadership and school ministry. There's a wonderful spirit within the school setting in that the personnel are eager to take advantage of these opportunities.

Q. As diocesan vicar for education, how would you describe the state of Catholic schools in western North Carolina?

A. I am deeply impressed by the level of commitment of the principals in the Catholic schools and their great enthusiasm to fulfill their spiritual and academic role.

I'm also impressed by the teachers and staffs, and the level of collaboration and cooperation manifested by the schools and families. It has been quite apparent to me that the vast majority of families really view themselves as being in partnership with the schools.

There seems to be a very strong understanding by everyone involved that the foundational reason for participating in Catholic education in the school setting is to assist persons of faith to continue their journey through cultivating their persons, talents and abilities. Everyone in the schools of this diocese — administrators, teachers, and of course the students themselves — participates in the common tasks of ensuring the well-being of their schools as faith community. The diocese has made a very visible, obvious commitment to Catholic schools.

The lines between adults and children are much more casual today than when I was a kid. In some ways this is a welcome change. In the past there was a blind obedience to adults and authority figures that left many children powerless, alone and without any rights. Some adults abused their authority and harmed children physically, emotionally and sexually. We continue to see the devastating effects of this abuse. These adults weren't deserving of respect. As I often try to explain to my kids—for both children and adults—respect is something that's earned.

The libraries and book stores are stocked with books on parenting and positive discipline that offer lots of useful information and strategies. But I have found that the most effective parenting advice is given by Jesus in St. Matthew's Gospel: "Do to others what you would have them do to you." Each time I'm arbitrating yet another argument between my kids or refereeing one more of their melees, the only words that seem to make sense to them are: "How would that make you feel if someone said that or did that to you?"

And St. Paul also offers some solid ground rules for parents who are looking for guidance in what to teach their children: "Get rid of all bitterness...and anger, hard words, slander and malice of every kind. In place of these, be kind to one another, compassionate and mutually forgiving, just as God has forgiven you in Christ. Be imitators of God as His dear children. Follow the way of love, even as Christ loved you... There was a time when you lived in darkness, but now you are light in the Lord. Well, then, live as children of the light."

Vatican: Legalizing Drugs Can't Solve Abuse Problems

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Drug abuse is a symptom of deep social and psychological problems that cannot be addressed by the legalization of so-called "soft" drugs, said the Pontifical Council for the Family.

Instead of making drug use easier to control, as some proponents of legalization argue, it would make drug use seem more acceptable, the council said in a Jan. 21 statement.

The council said the statement was published in response to requests from parents to the council about recent attempts in Italy and elsewhere to legalize the sale and use of marijuana and a few other types of narcotics.

But the pontifical council said it makes no sense to distinguish between "soft" and "hard" drugs when both are used as a means of escaping reality and impede an individual's maturation and growing acceptance of responsibility.

"The consumption of such substances favors isolation, above all, and then dependence with the passing on to ever stronger products," the statement said.

Because drug use is largely a phenomenon associated with youths and young adults, it has a strong impact on families as well as on individuals, the council said.

"The problem, in effect, is not in the drug but in the spiritual illness which leads to drugs," the document said.

The council said modern societies must take a large share of the blame for the growth of drug abuse.

"We live in a world in which children are left on their own too soon," it said.

While wanting to instill a sense of responsibility and independence in young people is laudable, the council said that too often youngsters have no adults around them for support, and they do not find support in society.

"In the face of a world which seems empty and with little hope for the future, some search in every way possible for ways to feel alive," including through the use of drugs, the document said.

The legalization of drugs, the council said, runs the real risk of increasing drug abuse rather than controlling it.

In addition, the document said, it can be assumed that legalization would send a message of approval to young people, in effect saying "that which is legal is normal and, therefore, moral."

The pontifical council said that in discussing ways to deal with illegal drug use, political concerns can never take priority over concerns for the common good and for the good of individuals.

"With the prospect of legalizing the sale and use of products which favor drug addiction, it is the destiny of human beings which is at stake," it said.

"Behavior which leads to drug addiction cannot possibly be corrected if products which reinforce that very behavior are placed on the open market," the document said.

155 Members Of 105th Congress Are Catholics

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The 105th Congress includes a record number of Catholics — 155 senators and representatives. Of the 435 representatives and 100 senators, 24 senators and 131 representatives are Catholics, the largest single religious denomination in the Congress. At its start in 1995, the 104th Congress included 21 Catholic senators and 128 Catholic representatives for a then-record of 149. More of this session's Catholic members are Democrats than two years ago, when there were a record nine senators and 54 representatives who were members of the GOP. This term, nine of the Catholic senators are Republicans and 15 are Democrats. In the House, 50 Catholics are Republicans and 81 are Democrats.

Clinton Speech Cites Cardinal's Words About 'Gift Of Time'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In an inauguration speech about healing divisions of culture and politics, President Clinton drew on the philosophy of the late Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago. "America demands and deserves big things from us," Clinton said Jan. 20 after taking the presidential oath of office for the second time. "And nothing big ever came from being small. Let us remember the timeless wisdom of Cardinal Bernardin, when facing the end of his own life, 'It is wrong to waste the precious gift of time on acrimony and division.'" The cardinal made the remark at an address launching the Catholic Common Ground Project in October, a few weeks before he died of cancer. The cardinal first announced the project in mid-August.

Rev. King's Legacy Cited In Prayer Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) — With Inauguration Day falling on the observance of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, the Rev. Jesse Jackson invoked the late civil rights leader's philosophies at a pre-inaugural prayer service Jan. 20 attended by President Clinton. Rev. Jackson noted that Rev. King, as he led the push for civil rights through a network of churches and volunteers, held no public office, had no personal wealth, no military force and no national organization. "Yet he did more than any single leader this century," Rev. Jackson said.

Bishop Pilla Urges 'Bold Action' Against Land Mines

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, has urged President Clinton to open his second term in office with "bold action" to bring a "global ban on anti-personnel land mines." In a letter to Clinton Jan. 13, a week before the presidential inauguration, Bishop Pilla urged that the United States support more fully the recent Ottawa initiative for an accelerated ban treaty, joining "other nations committed to a global ban," and "lead by example," taking independent policy initiatives that "could further the process of stigmatizing these indiscriminate weapons, which is an essential part of pursuing a global ban."

Death Penalty Abolitionists Arrested At Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A new campaign to abolish the death penalty in the United States was launched Jan. 17 with a demonstration at the U.S. Supreme Court in which 18 protesters were arrested, including three members of the Catholic Worker movement. The protest was staged on the 20th anniversary of the execution by firing squad of convicted murderer Gary Gilmore in Utah. He was the first prisoner executed after the Supreme Court re-instituted the death penalty following a 10-year moratorium. Abe Bonowitz of Los Angeles, a member of the Abolitionist Action Committee, said there are now 400 people on death row in California and 3,000 in the U.S.

Supreme Court To Reconsider Ban On Religious School Aid

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Supreme Court agreed Jan. 17 to reconsider its 12-year-old decision barring children in religiously run schools from receiving publicly funded remedial education in their schools. The Clinton administration last fall joined New York City school officials and parents of parochial school students in asking the court to reconsider its 1985 decision in Aguilar vs. Felton. At stake are hundreds of millions of dollars being spent not for educational purposes, but to comply with the high court's 1985 ruling. A new decision, expected by the end of the court's term this summer, could set significant new guidelines for how public funds may be used to provide students in nonpublic schools with benefits available to their public-school counterparts.

Abortion Protesters Arraigned

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (CNS) — Eleven Lambs of Christ abortion protesters were arraigned on federal charges Jan. 10 for blocking entrances to a Rochester abortion clinic Dec. 7. U.S. District Judge Jonathan W. Feldman freed the 11 on their own recognizance after they were photographed and fingerprinted and entered no plea on charges of violating FACE, the 1994 Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act. John J. Broderick, a Long Island attorney representing 10 of the defendants, said they will plead not guilty if the federal government takes their case to trial. Broderick's son, James, is representing the 11th defendant.

Louisiana Bishops Denounce Stances Of Racial Superiority

BATON ROUGE, La. (CNS) — Holding that one race is superior to another is a serious sin, and "to persist obstinately" in that stance is "incompatible with God's original creation and our redemption in Jesus Christ," said the nine active Catholic bishops of Louisiana. The bishops made the comments in a statement titled "Racial Harmony." It was released Jan. 16 by the Louisiana Catholic Conference to coincide with the Jan. 20 federal observance of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

Pope Established Annual Day Of Consecrated Life

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II has established an annual "Day of Consecrated Life" to highlight the role played by religious men and women in the church. The pope said the day will be celebrated on the Feast of the Presentation of the Lord, Feb. 2. He said the day is appropriate because it recalls the total giving of one's life, as well as the gift given by the parents of those with religious vocations.

MOCKSVILLE — There is currently no resident Catholic pastor in Mocksville, but the faith remains alive in this Davie County town through the more than 80 families who are registered parishioners of St. Francis of Assisi Church.

The church community, considered a parish in its own right several times during its history, traces its beginnings to the 1950s. In November 1958, Holy Rosary parish in Lexington assumed pastoral responsibility for a group of about 15 Catholics in Mocksville. Father James Keenan, pastor of Holy Rosary, celebrated Mass in the homes of the Mocksville congregation until April 1959, when the old National Guard Armory took on the role of a place of worship.

The developments marked a growing presence of Catholics in Davidson and Davie counties. By the mid-1950s, the need for larger church facilities in Lexington had led to the building of a new church and rectory, which Bishop Vincent Waters dedicated in July 1958. Back in Mocksville, the site of the present church was purchased in 1960. The mission was placed under the patronage of St. Francis of Assisi.

Church life in Mocksville during the 1960s was a formative period. In the latter half of the decade the chapel was renovated and enlarged, and the Ladies Guild, for several years a staple of the parish, was begun. In 1968 pastoral care of the mission was switched to the Salisbury parish of Sacred Heart.

The mission status was underscored in 1970, when again a change in pastoral responsibility returned St. Francis of Assisi Church to the care of the Lexington parish. Despite the frequent changes, the family of faith continued to grow. The number of families worshipping in the Mocksville church grew from 17 in 1970 to more than 50 by mid-decade.

In 1975, with the help of a $17,000 bequest forwarded to the church by Gertrude Dann of Norwich, Conn., the congregation sought permission to build a multi-purpose facility on the church grounds. Authorization was granted, and Bishop Michael J. Begley dedicated the structure, to be used for liturgical celebrations, religious gatherings and social functions, in October 1975.

Expansion continued the next year when the church family purchased land adjacent to its property. A house on the site became a rectory, and with the land comprising four acres, the congregation had room for future additions.

In 1980, St. Francis of Assisi welcomed its first resident pastor, and with him, parish status. Friars of the Atonement Father Noel McSweeney was installed in October of that year and would remain until 1983, when the church again was regarded as a mission.

Sacred Heart parish in Salisbury once more took on duties in Mocksville until 1987, when the church's pastoral needs were met by Holy Family parish in Clemmons. From that point until now, sacramental obligations have been carried out by a number of pastors from Holy Family, Sacred Heart and, for a time, St. Francis of Assisi itself.

The mission label was removed once more in 1991 when Father Bernard Manley became pastor of St.

Francis of Assisi. He remained in Mocksville until mid-1996 when Mercy Sister Anita Sheerin was appointed parochial administrator. Father Thomas Clements, pastor of Sacred Heart parish, serves as minister of sacraments for the Mocksville parish.

Sister Anita calls the parish an active, energetic and devoted one. Through a strong faith formation program, whose participants now meet in a recently donated mobile trailer on the church grounds, parish members are eager to cultivate their faith lives. A parish assessment team has also been assembled to study future expansions. With dedicated Community Life and Family Life Commissions, along with an enthusiastic parish council, St. Francis of Assisi parish, according to Sister Anita, is a hope-filled family of faith.

1997 Diocesan Support Appeal

February 2 to April 6

CELEBRATING TWENTY-FIVE YEARS OF MINISTRY TO THE PEOPLE OF WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA

Seminarian Education

Gifts To DSA Help Answer God's Call To Vocations

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

Pledges made to the Diocesan Support Appeal will again support seminarian education.

According to Vocations Director Father Frank O'Rourke, the diocese is now blessed with 23 men studying for the priesthood. The seminarians come from a variety of backgrounds and bring a wealth of experiences to the diocese. In addition to studies during the school year, seminarians work in diocesan parishes and offices during the summer.

Following are the stories of two men's journeys in faith, and why they answered God's call to serve the Diocese of Charlotte.

Shawn O'Neal

After obtaining his undergraduate degree in History from Appalachian State University in 1991, Shawn O'Neal thought a career in middle school education was on the horizon.

"I enrolled in graduate school at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte and was working toward my (teaching) certificate. But while there, I again felt a calling that had been lingering for some time," he explained.

The first time he considered the priesthood was while at Appalachian State, but O'Neal felt he needed to develop "a more adult faith life" before pursuing a vocation.

"While at UNC-Charlotte, I realized I couldn't keep asking 'what if' without seriously thinking it through," he said.

In the fall of 1993, O'Neal met with Vocations Director, Father O'Rourke, who was very supportive. O'Neal felt it was important to strengthen his "own faith and relationship with God and Jesus." The following year, O'Neal enrolled at St. Meinrad Seminary in Indiana. Although his discernment process was a lengthy one, the seminarian said it was time "well-spent."

While many seminarians use their summer assignments to learn more about the diocese and its people, O'Neal literally feels right at home. He is a native of Charlotte and member of St. John Neumann parish.

The second-year theology student worked at the diocesan Media Center during his first summer assignment. This past summer, he studied Spanish in San Miguel de Allende, Mexico with fellow seminarians Frank Seabo, Dave Brzoska, and Chris Davis.

"The eight weeks there was an excellent educational experience. It was extremely helpful to experience another culture," he said.

While in the Central American country, O'Neal said the seminarians saw a population with an unwavering connection to the Church. "Pilgrimages were made to the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Mexico City by thousands of people," he said. "Some walked 150-160 miles to the basilica. They are truly a people of strong faith."

Chris Gober

Chris Gober is one of the diocese's newest seminarians.

He enrolled at Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., last August after completing undergraduate work at St. Charles Borromeo College. He obtained a B.A. degree in philosophy at the Philadelphia-area school.

The seminarian was initially studying for the Diocese of Peoria, Ill., but "they (Peoria) had a great number of vocations, and I was interested in doing missionary work," Gober said.

Through a friend, Gober heard of the need for priests in the Charlotte Diocese. He met with Bishop William G. Curlin last summer. "I asked the bishop his definition of a missionary diocese, and he responded, 'One where the harvest is great but the laborers are few.' I truly have a desire to be in an area like ours that is growing and has many needs."

Gober began considering a vocation his freshman year in college. "I went on a trip to Rome with four priests," he said. "Once I began to understand the nature of the priesthood, I realized it was my calling."

At that time, the lifelong Catholic was pursuing a career in physical therapy and sports medicine. "But (after the trip) I felt called to do something deeper, more spiritual," he explained.

A first-year theology student, Gober is adjusting to life in the nation's capital. Besides his studies, he volunteers one day a week at Gifts of Peace, a shelter for homeless people operated by the Missionaries of Charity. "They (the sisters) are a wonderful example of bringing the love of Jesus into the world," he said. "There is so much I can learn from their simple way of life."

Gober is one of three Charlotte Diocese seminarians at Catholic University, and they are in the process of starting a weekly prayer group with Father John Putnam, a diocesan priest who is studying canon law at the college.

Gober is excited to return to the Charlotte area this summer. "I am looking forward to getting to know the diocese and its people better," he said.

Father O'Rourke said he and Bishop Curlin are extremely happy to have the men who have answered God's call to serve the diocese. "I ask you to please continue to pray for all our seminarians as they continue their journeys to the priesthood," Father O'Rourke added.

Counseling Ministry Is Strength For Family Of Murdered Child

By PAUL FREDETTE
Correspondent

ASHEVILLE

— With the sale of their home near Cleveland and preparations for moving to Asheville consuming the majority of their time, Ginny and Richard Knapil probably guessed the end of 1994 would be harried and stressful. What they could not have anticipated was the nightmare of grief and incomprehension that overtook them when their eldest son, Kippy, 18, was murdered on Dec. 29 in Key West, Fla.

The agony of loss they experienced was incredible and their sense of vulnerability assumed overwhelming proportions. "I was afraid that Kip's murder would eventually lead to the death of his younger brother, Kirt, from sheer emotional devastation," says Ginny Knapil. Her concern is still apparent, but manageable now through counseling her family has received from Trinitarian Sister Marie Frechette, director of the western regional office of Catholic Social Services.

At the suggestion of Father Francis Cancro, pastor at St. Eugene Church, the Knapils sought relief from their grief through the counseling ministry offered by CSS. "I'm lucky to be counseling in an environment that allows me to ask people about their spirituality," explains Sister Marie. She stresses the critical importance of spirituality in a holistic approach to total emotional health.

Ginny Knapil admits quite candidly: "I don't think I could have trusted other counseling services. I was so relieved to find real help, trained professionals with a dependable response and people who could reinforce your faith while giving you sound advice."

Initially, one of the biggest challenges for the parents was focusing on the enormity of their younger son's loss. "He not only lost his big brother but also his best friend," says Knapil, her eyes welling up with tears. "All Kirt's friends were up in Ohio, and his father and I were preoccupied with our own grief."

Knapil believes that without the help they received from CSS, some family members might have come close to suicide, and an already tragic situation could have become far worse. "We might have just stumbled along," she says, "but Sister Marie put us in touch with groups like Parents of Murdered Children and Compassionate Friends, and made some excellent reading materials available to us." Gradually, the Knapils built a support network that included fellow parishioners at St. Eugene's.

Knapil feels her faith and prayer life have been indispensable to avoid getting caught up in self-pity. "It would have been so easy to stare at a light bulb the rest of my life," she says. "But the counseling and support we received helped

Evangelization

Landings Reaches Out To Charlotte Diocese Catholics

by JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

BREVARD — When Sacred Heart parishioner Tom Vallie met up with long-time friend Paulist Father Jac Campbell several years ago, a foundation was laid for an evangelical program within the Charlotte Diocese.

Father Campbell, the creator of the Landings program, suggested to Vallie that parishioners in western North Carolina who have, for whatever reasons, left the Church can embrace an affirmative, spiritual way of returning "home."

The Landings program centers around a 10-week period during which active and returning Catholics gather to share experiences. Contemporary themes pervading Church life are discussed, and the meetings explore individual concerns of the participants.

Following the last session, members go on a retreat focusing on reconciliation, after which those still wishing to return are welcome to participate fully in the Church family. While pastors and other parish staff participate by selecting possible candidates and lending support, the program is presented by lay volunteers.

In 1995, Vallie attended a training workshop in New Jersey. He returned to North Carolina a certified facilitator, and the diocese had its first Landings program in place. Reaction to the outreach has been positive in Brevard, said Sacred Heart Church's pastor, Father Carl Del Giudice.

"The response has been very encouraging," said Father Del Giudice. "I have been looking for a way to help returning Catholics find their way into our community and to feel welcome here. Landings has been excellent for that, and at the same time has provided a spark of interest among practicing Catholics as well."

Meanwhile, at the invitation of Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization, Father Campbell also offered to help at the diocesan level. In May 1996 Father Campbell and the program's national coordinator, Joan Horn, conducted training programs through which Vallie and more than a dozen other parish representatives from across the diocese became certified facilitators.

Future training sessions for the remaining parishes are being planned as well by the diocesan evangelization ministry, whose funding comes from the annual Diocesan Support Appeal (DSA).

In Vallie's view, the existence of a laity-operated evangelical program is essential not only to Catholics making their way back to the Church. In addition, he said Landings serves as a reminder for members of congregations to make the most of their parish-life experience.

"It's really a program of reconciliation," he added. "But in a broader sense, it's evangelical in that it sensitizes a parish to all of its programs. Landings can bring about a reexamination of a parish's approaches."

A unique evangelical tool for the people of the Charlotte Diocese, Landings is a means of reaching people in the pews on an ongoing basis, Vallie said. Plans for the "next step" for graduates of the program are underway: "Living Our Catholic Faith, 101 (With Lab)" is scheduled to begin in February at Sacred Heart.

"The lab part of that suggests it's not just learning about the faith," added Vallie. "It's about living it. Once members have experienced Landings, they are eager to learn and experience more of their Catholic faith and their faith community. They are hungry for community and a connection to what Father Campbell calls 'our family of families.'"

The combination of the programs, he hopes, will continue the apostolic reaching out that defines the very heart of evangelism in the Church.

Ways To Give

The Diocesan Support Appeal is a call to give financial support to 37 agencies and ministries.

Most people contribute by making a pledge, payable over six months. But there are other ways to give, such as donating stocks or bonds, says Jim Kelley, director of development.

Consider supporting the DSA not only in the present but also in the future through such means as wills and trusts. "This allows people to give now and to give later," says Kelley.

For information on wills and trusts, call Jim Kelley at (704) 331-1709 or 377-6871.

Many The Gifts, Many The Works

By JOANN KEANE
Associate Editor

CHARLOTTE — Coming to grips with the death of their murdered son, a couple in western North Carolina seeks solace through Catholic Social Services counseling. Diocesan Support Appeal funding helps make CSS counseling possible.

DSA funding helps support our seminarians on their journey toward becoming the priests who will serve us into the next millennium.

These and other stories about the life-changing ministries supported by the DSA appear in this edition of The Catholic News & Herald. Over the next eight weeks, parishioners of the 89 parishes and missions will be reminded of the good works that result from their generosity through a series of articles in this newspaper.

Bishop William G. Curlin likens the campaign to an oft-used quote of retired Bishop Michael J. Begley: "the Church isn't a me thing, it's an us thing."

"In my three years as bishop of Charlotte, I have witnessed the wonderful involvement of the laity," says Bishop Curlin. "Certainly, the DSA is an opportunity to demonstrate — not only our financial commitment — but our involvement in Church ministries."

The DSA helps thousands of individuals throughout the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte. It supports 37 social service, educational, multi-cultural, and vocational ministries.

Turning need into reality is one of the goals of the DSA. "Many the Gifts, Many the Works" is more than a catchphrase for the 1997 campaign; it is the core of the Diocese of Charlotte.

"This theme links stewardship with the context of development," says Jim Kelley, director of development. "It is gifts of time, talent and treasure that bind our lives to the Church. In the DSA, people are asked to contribute out of their need to give thanks, as well as the Church's need to receive both funding and services. At the same time, the annual appeal reminds us that the three elements of stewardship are equally important."

"The faithful of the diocese are known for their generosity," says Barbara Rohrman, associate director of development, who directs the DSA campaign. "As people become increasingly aware of stewardship as a way of life, they respond generously in gratitude for their many blessings," she says. "The DSA raises necessary funding, not for the diocese, but for life-changing ministries for people in the diocese."

The kickoff begins with this newspaper and a video to be shown in all parishes and missions the weekend of Feb. 2. Members of the diocese will receive a letter next week from Bishop Curlin, asking for their support.

The appeal — which officially runs from Feb. 2 to April 6 — will raise a total of $2,580,000. Like last year, this appeal reflects an increase due to continued growth in the diocese. "More individuals in our parishes means increased needs and services," says Barbara Rohrman.

While each year tests the limits of services, the people of the diocese are quick to extend a hand in faith. "We continue to witness an increase in the number of contributing households," says Rohrman. Historically, better than half of all diocesan households contribute to the DSA.

Every parish and mission contributes by meeting a goal (see page 11) based on its annual offertory. Contributions above and beyond the set goal are returned to the parish. In turn, if the parish or mission falls below the goal, they still must meet the assigned target.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Christians Must Focus Hearts, Minds On Christ For Unity

Dear brothers and sisters,

"God has reconciled the world to himself through Christ and has entrusted to us the message of reconciliation" (cf. 2 Cor 5:18). During this Week of Prayer for Christian Unity all Christ's followers are invited to ponder these words of St. Paul, to implore the grace of reconciliation and to bear common witness to the Gospel.

The path to Christian unity is marked not only by theological dialogue and institutional contacts, but also by spiritual ecumenism, consisting in prayer and the conversion of hearts. Many leaders of churches and ecclesial communities visited me this past year, including the archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. George Leonard Carey. Among the promising ecumenical events of the year was my meeting with His Holiness Karekin I, catholicos of all the Armenians, and the signing of the common declaration in which we professed the one faith in Jesus Christ, true God and true man. In this first year of immediate preparation for the great jubilee, let us all turn our eyes to Jesus Christ our savior and pray fervently for the unity of all his followers.

I wish to welcome all the English-speaking visitors present at today's audience, especially the pilgrims from Denmark, Finland and United States. I thank the choir for its praise of God in song. Upon all of you I cordially invoke the grace and peace of Christ our savior.

Struggle, Pain Show Spouses Are Human, Pope Tells Tribunal

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Struggle, pain and sacrifice in a marriage are signs that the couple is human, not that one or both spouses are incapable of fulfilling the responsibilities of marriage, Pope John Paul II said.

When examining requests for a marriage annulment, the Catholic Church begins with a presumption that the marriage was valid, the pope said in a Jan. 27 speech to the Roman Rota, a Vatican tribunal that handles annulment appeals.

"In evaluating the capacity for or the act of consent necessary for the celebration of a valid marriage, one cannot require that which is not possible to ask of people in general," the pope said.

The human person, he said, is "always growing, called to make responsible choices based on his initial potential, enriching them ever more with commitment and the help of grace."

The Church's teaching, he said, "is marked by a healthy realism in understanding the freedom of persons."

A realistic approach takes into consideration the limits placed on people by their "human nature burdened by sin" and the "never insufficient help of divine grace," the pope said.

Understanding the human beings involved in the marriage relationship, he said, one becomes aware of "the necessity of sacrifice, the acceptance of pain and struggle as indispensable to being faithful to their obligations."

An unrealistic, "idealized" picture of what marriage is, he said, has led some people "to interpret the normal difficulties which can be registered in the journey of the couple ... as an authentic incapacity to assume the obligations of matrimony."

The Church's presumption of validity makes sense not only from a legal point of view, but also from an anthropological starting point, he said.

Not being fully aware at the outset of the reality of the struggles one would face later in marriage does not invalidate the consent, the pope said.

However, he said, the officials of the Roman Rota and others who work in church marriage courts still have "the difficult task of determining, with the help of the human sciences, that minimum under which one could not speak of a capacity or sufficient consent for a true marriage."

DSA Ministries Assist Those In Need

February is upon us, and in the Diocese of Charlotte, that means the annual Diocesan Support Appeal takes center stage. The campaign runs from Feb. 2-April 6.

It is a time of year to reflect upon the many gifts God has provided, blessings for many of us that include a steady job, good health, and supportive families. For others, the gifts come through the 37 diocesan ministries and agencies which assist them in meeting sometimes difficult needs. Several stories this week highlight how these life-changing ministries have positively impacted people throughout the diocese.

The appeal affords each of us the opportunity to offer financial assistance for the work of the Church. Last year, thousands benefited from DSA-related programs, and that figure will increase as the diocese continues to grow. Statistics reveal the overall Catholic population in our 46-county area has increased by 8 percent in the past 12 months, which means the Church is serving more people than ever.

This year, the diocese also celebrates 25 years of ministry to the people of western North Carolina. It is hard to believe the Catholic population has more than tripled since 1972 — from 34,200 to more than 104,000 registered parishioners today.

If the Church is to continue to fulfill its mission of preaching the Gospel to all people, then our gifts of time, talent and treasure are needed. As good stewards, Catholics are again asked to respond generously to help meet the campaign's $2,580,000 goal.

The DSA campaign kicks off this weekend, as all churches feature a video examining some of our diocesan ministries. Parishioners will also receive a letter from Bishop William G. Curlin asking for their support.

The appeal is a chance for us to touch the lives of our brothers and sisters throughout the diocese. We pray, as in years past, that Catholics continue to share their many gifts.

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

"Don't You People Know Jesus Was White?"

Recently I was struck by the notion that we see only half of anything. The other half is the meaning we give to what we see. This idea came innocently enough from reactions we received here at the Christophers to our 1996 Christmas card.

The front of the card shows a young boy of ambiguous ethnic background and on the inside an inscription from Isaiah: "And a little child shall lead them." Within a week of sending the card, I received several inquiries. Most wanted to know if they could order extra copies of the card. What was fascinating was the range of descriptions assigned to the boy's racial background: I'd like to get copies of your card that featured "the little black boy," "the Eurasian child," "the Mexican youth" and even "the small Chinese lad."

A few, very few I am glad to report, took exception to the boy's swarthy complexion. "Don't you people know that Jesus was white?" complained one.

Actually, no, I didn't know that. What I do know is that most often we see what we want to see, what we are predisposed to see. And in this day when so many try to move beyond bigotry by encouraging mutual respect for distinct cultural heritages, this Christmas card becomes a small case study.

In The Heart of The Enlightened, Anthony de Mello tells a story that puts the issue in perspective: A woman complained to a visiting friend that her neighbor was a poor housekeeper. "You should see how dirty her children are — and her house. It is almost a disgrace to be living in the same neighborhood. Take a look at those clothes hung out on the line. See the black streaks on the sheets and towels!" The friend walked up to the window and said, "I think the clothes are quite clean, my dear. The streaks are on your windows."

We see what we want to see. A non-Christian stands before a painting and sees a woman holding a child and reacts to it differently than a Christian who sees there the Madonna presenting the Christ Child to a world anticipating salvation. Understand that there is not one universal meaning for all. There is the meaning we give to our lives. But is that all there is — one's individual take on reality? No.

Jesus encourages us to find that personal meaning and share it. He reminds us that in the Kingdom of God, individual meanings are part of a unity that transcends all differences. "There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ."

This is a unity none of us is called to create, but to recognize. In God's Kingdom, our lives extend beyond our skins. We live in a radical interdependence with each other and God.

If this is true that "beauty is in the eye of the beholder," who is the ultimate judge of what is beautiful but God? In the meantime, healing — multicultural, racial, ethnic, religious, sexual, or any area we see as divisive — begins when I take the log out of my own eye.

So I was thrilled to get those requests for the Christopher Christmas card! They helped me understand that whatever meaning I or anyone else may attach to it, ultimately means nothing until I respect my next door neighbor and all the people of the world. Without exception.

"We Know It Isn't Wasted..."

By Paul and Mina Sweeney

ASHEVILLE — When Mina, who is Hispanic, was studying in college in Texas, she received help from the local annual appeal in that diocese. As a result, we try to help the Hispanic community through our time, talent, and treasure as often as possible. We are aware of the good works accomplished in western North Carolina through the DSA, especially in the area of Hispanic ministry. We feel our gift to the DSA is one way to help meet the spiritual and physical needs of our Hispanic brothers and sisters in the diocese.

In recent years we have been very fortunate financially speaking. We really feel that we need to help take care of others to the best of our ability. To use our good fortune simply to increase our own net worth is inappropriate. After all, everything we have really belongs to God. We are grateful for the many blessings God has bestowed on us, and we want to share some of those blessings with those in need.

Finally, there is a very pragmatic reason for giving to the Diocesan Support Appeal. We have seen first-hand where the money goes, and we know that it isn't wasted.

We are confident that the funds raised by the DSA go directly to the ministries and agencies serving the people of the diocese.

"We Want To Help Our Parish..."

By Jane and Ed Glodowski

CHARLOTTE — As we watch the Diocesan Support Appeal Video and listen to the pulpit talks every year, we are always convinced of the good works that come from this appeal. We are truly moved by the stories of how the DSA helps others in the diocese.

Also, it seems to us that this is the only time during the year that our Bishop requests help to carry out the many programs that he must oversee throughout the diocese. The Bishop has such a great responsibility to provide for the needs of such a growing diocese, yet he asks us just once each year to assist him financially in his mission.

Although the DSA makes us feel a part of the greater church, we also have strong ties and a commitment to our own parish, and we want to help our parish reach its goal.

"It Makes Me Feel Good..."

By Joseph Moore

GREENSBORO — I was brought up Catholic and was fortunate enough to attend a Catholic School all my life. I have always been grateful for God's blessings in my life, and giving has always been just a natural part of living. It is a way of returning to God for all of His gifts. I guess you could call it repayment.

It makes me feel good to know that I am making a difference in someone else's life. I don't have the time or the talent to serve others directly in the variety of ways the many DSA-funded ministries serve our brothers and sisters throughout the diocese. By contributing to the DSA, it is my way of doing what I can to help others. It isn't as direct as I would like, but through the DSA, I know the appropriate agencies will provide the programs to meet the needs of others throughout the diocese.

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

The Unpopular Position

"Here comes this dreamer...Come now, let us kill him... and we shall see what will become of his dreams (Genesis 37:19-20)." Though this ominous conspiracy was against Joseph, favored son of Jacob, it offers meaningful reflection on the life, ministry and death of Martin Luther King Jr., a dreamer whose vision of our world he skillfully shared with us. With his great skill and compelling dreams he redirected the course of our country's history.

King's life and ministry, and the dream that he articulated so brilliantly, were deeply grounded in the teachings of Jesus. And just as surely as Jesus was murdered, it was inevitable that King would be. For his message, while it was happily received by many, was far too radical for the preservers of the then status quo. King's message was Jesus' message: Love.

The radical message of love is so powerful and so threatening that the forces of evil will always rally to squash it. Those forces of evil for King were not contained just in the ideology of white supremacy and systemic racism, but also in the masses who thirsted for the "cup of hatred" and wanted to capitalize on the initiative of the time, to strike while the iron was hot, to match white power with black power (an eye for an eye).

But, King took the unpopular position of love. In the glow of Dr. King's posthumous celebrity as an American hero, particularly among African Americans, it perhaps is too easy to forget that at the time of his death, King's popularity among African Americans was receding. The thirst for "Black Power" had created a din among young blacks that rivaled popularity of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the nonviolent course of action that King and his organization espoused.

King was also treading on thin ice with the Johnson Administration, jeopardizing important alliances for historic strides in civil rights. His denouncing the war in Vietnam was indeed politically incorrect, but consistent with his mission of love.

Taking King's life was not the only way the forces of evil tried to "kill the dreamer." What makes him a hero was not his position of leadership with masses of support behind him. It was his adherence to the message of Jesus, even when his friends denounced him.

This concept of loving beyond convenience requires courage and faith, for sure. But King took it a giant leap forward. He loved those who hated him. King was truly a follower of Jesus who tells us, "Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you ... for God makes the sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the righteous and on the unrighteous. For if you love those who love you, what reward do you have?" (Matthew 5:44-46)

As beneficiaries of the dream and followers of Jesus, we must ask ourselves if we are willing to follow Him to the cross. As we celebrate the birth, life and ministry of Martin Luther King Jr. we must all understand that as followers of Jesus, we are inheritors and protectors of the dream. And his dream lives on in us.

The Diocesan Support Appeal helps spread the light of Christ by funding 37 ministries and agencies. Many of these assist parishes and missions within the 46 counties of the Diocese of Charlotte. Through their gifts, parishioners are given the opportunity to participate in the work of Jesus in our diocese.

Some of the DSA-supported ministries at St. Therese Church of Mooresville and Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville are highlighted on these pages. They are vibrant faith communities made even stronger by DSA-related ministries.

Justice and Peace Coordinators Pam Krehnbrink and Bob Wessmiller use computers to match parishioners' needs with the ministry's 275 volunteers, who offer services in 30 areas. St. Therese also has a sister parish in Honduras, and their correspondence is largely via E-mail.

Members of the parish's "Landings" group meet once a week at the home of Penny and Jim Atkinson. "Landings" is an evangelization tool for Catholics interested in returning to the Church. Shown are Penny Atkinson, Bob Brock, Karen Kull, Mercedes Jones, and Gerry Mitchell.

A puppet ministry was recently created for church youth through the parish's Faith Formation program. Shown are Corey Hewitt, Jay Sandke, Suzannie Miller, Tara Scire, Taylor Muckerman, Director of Faith Formation Mary Ann Evanoff, and Youth Minister Pam D'Agnostino.

Respect Life coordinators Jeff Norkus and Anne Cerutti plan a trip to Washington, D.C., for the annual "March for Life."

Bishop Says DSA Provides Opportunity To Help Others

By JOANN KEANE
Associate Editor

An Interview With Bishop William G. Curlin

"Many the Gift, Many the Works" is the theme for this year's Diocesan Support Appeal. How does the theme fit the role and purpose of the DSA?

The needs of our rapidly growing diocese are many and varied. Yet, the faithful of western North Carolina are generous to respond. In my three years as bishop of Charlotte, I have witnessed an involvement of laity that is highly commendable. Truly, "Many the Gifts, Many the Works" is an appropriate theme for the 1997 Diocesan Support Appeal. The campaign is an opportunity to express our financial commitment in support of our Church ministries.

This year, we celebrate 25 years of ministry to the people of western North Carolina. There has been tremendous growth in those 25 years. What is your vision for the future, and how does the DSA help you carry out that vision?

Certainly one of the most evident issues for the future is growth. In just 25 years, parish rosters have more than tripled. We expect the number of Catholics to continue to grow as we cross into the new century. As our community grows, so do the needs. Though we continue to provide sacramental ministry and offer service to those in crisis, we must anticipate needs that arise in the next generation. The DSA allows us to meet the needs of today laying the groundwork for the future.

Many Catholics give to their parish weekly offertory, building funds, special collections and community agencies. Why is it also important for Catholics to support the DSA?

There is a temptation to address one's personal needs and sometimes forget the family next door. So it is with our parish involvement. But we're all part of the extended family of the diocese. That's why I'm so grateful for the generosity of people who — while sacrificing for their immediate parish needs — have the vision of being supporting members of the larger diocesan family.

Sometimes it is difficult for parishioners to see how their contributions to the DSA help them and others in their parish or mission. What is your response to that?

This is why our diocesan newspaper is so important in every Catholic home. Through our newspaper, people read stories of their neighbors in faith. Not just during the DSA campaign, when specific ministries are highlighted, but year-round as the lives of those sharing and sometimes struggling in faith unfold within the pages. From Catholic Social Services to Faith Formation, reports and heartwarming stories are often included in our diocesan newspaper.

Bishop William G. Curlin

How important is stewardship of time, talent and treasure to a person's faith journey? How does stewardship relate to the DSA?

We're trying to make people conscious of their particular gifts which enrich the life of the Church. The DSA provides an excellent opportunity to show not only our financial involvement but our personal involvement in the ministries that sustain our diocese. For example, stewards of time pray daily for those who minister to the people; stewards of talent are actively involved as volunteers in ministry.

Are the 37 ministries funded by the DSA keeping up with the need for social services, educational services, multi-cultural services, and vocations in the diocese?

Life brings much growth and change. We have to be willing and prepared to meet increasing needs. Our response today will determine our response tomorrow. The Church must always be open and willing to respond to a diversity of new challenges in helping our neighbors.

Finance Office Good Stewards Of DSA

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — All of us are asked to be good stewards of the gifts God provides, and the diocesan finance office makes sure pledges made to the annual Diocesan Support Appeal are treated no differently.

"As the people of the Church have entrusted us with their gifts, we are then accountable to them for the good use of these resources," said Bill Weldon, fiscal manager.

"We are all very conscious of the sacrifices people make," he added. "We have a strong sense of responsibility to use the funds as prudently as possible to achieve the goals of the various ministries and agencies."

DSA funds will aid the work of 37 agencies and ministries in 1997. As in years past, the focus of the appeal is Catholic Social Services, Multi-Cultural Ministries, Educational Ministries and the Vocations Program.

The goal of $2,580,000 is a 9 percent increase over last year ($2,363,000). "With inflation running around 3 percent and an increase of 8 percent in our Catholic population, additional funding is needed to maintain the same relative level of support for our growing diocese," Weldon said.

The breakdown of finances among ministries is as follows: Catholic Social Services, $843,904; Multi-Cultural Ministries, $214,146; Educational Ministries, $1,060,476; Vocations Program, $355,030. Additionally, $106,444 will be used to cover expenses associated with raising the funds.

Before the more than 38,000 pledge cards are mailed to Catholic households and videos roll the weekend of Feb. 1-2, countless hours have been put in making preparations for the campaign. "The budget process started last September when each department began planning for the 1997-98 fiscal year," Weldon noted.

According to the fiscal manager, two components — program changes and cost increases — are examined when establishing the DSA budget. Each budget item is evaluated and addressed on a case-by-case basis.

"Program directors are constantly trying to expand services to be responsive to the growing population, but at the same time, are very conscious of the limited resources and exercise control of their spending," Weldon said.

"We continually evaluate how every dollar can best be used to meet the objectives of each ministry," he added.

One change in this year's budget is additional funding for the permanent diaconate. This ministry will be assuming additional responsibility for the chapel at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport, and funding new formation classes for candidates to the permanent diaconate, Weldon said. "Most of the $55,000 increase in this budget is to provide funding for these programs."

Also, the Hispanic Ministry is receiving an additional $20,000. "With the increasing Spanish-speaking population, we are extending our evangelization efforts," Weldon said.

Organizational changes were made as well. Youth Ministry is now a separate department within the diocese's Educational Ministry, and the Office of Justice and Peace now falls under the CSS umbrella.

There are many needs in the diocese, and many worthwhile projects and ministries. "The financial picture only tells part of the story. The real story is told by the people who benefit from these programs," Weldon said. Last year CSS helped in excess of 6,000 people, the Office of Faith Formation touched the lives of more than 30,000 and Multi-Cultural Ministries assisted more than 6,000.

As the diocese grows, its needs grow. And so does the budget, Weldon said.

"We appreciate the generosity of the people of this diocese immensely," he added. "It's certainly not something we take for granted."

Respect Life Ministry Promotes Prayer, Education

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — As a diocesan and parish-level ministry, the Respect Life movement supports the fundamental tenets of Pope John Paul II's encyclical Evangelium Vitae. So says Jack Sweeney, whose work as a Respect Life coordinator and committee member at two parishes has centered around the pope's defense of the sacredness of life.

Sweeney, a parishioner of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte, has witnessed a variety of ways that people use to demonstrate their pro-life stance. In every instance, he says, there is the need to realize the definitive concept of life in light of the Church's teaching.

"We're trying to develop a respect for both the beauty and sanctity of life from the very first moment of conception until natural death," he says. "So our mission encompasses the complete spectrum of life as we know it."

Sweeney calls the role of parish committees a supportive one modeling themselves around the diocesan Respect Life office, funded by the annual Diocesan Support Appeal. Through the leadership and assistance of Maggie Nadol, diocesan coordinator, parish committees plan their programs according to what Sweeney calls "the culture and needs" of individual parishes.

When Sweeney became a parishioner of St. Vincent de Paul almost three months ago, he says the Respect Life ministry was already firmly established there. As a committee member, he works with the other members to ensure the presence of vehicles that will maintain ongoing awareness. Written and verbal communication and a variety of media are keys to that consciousness, he says.

In addition, he says illustrations of parish support can work wonders on a larger scale. A former parishioner of Holy Spirit Church in Denver, he and another church member attended the annual March for Life in Washington, D.C., in 1994. The parishioners established a Respect Life committee and the next year, two busloads made the trip.

"You have to provide the opportunity for people who feel really strongly about this movement to act," says the past Respect Life coordinator for Holy Spirit Church. The fundamental starting points, he added, are prayer and education by everyone involved.

Because the committee members assume leadership roles, Sweeney adds that they also take on the responsibility of continual learning. "We have to stay educated and share with one another what's happening and what's coming down the pike," he said of approaching such issues as euthanasia, capital punishment and assisted suicide, all of which he calls threats to today's society.

As for facing future developments in the Respect Life crusade, Sweeney notes with admiration the importance of one segment of the population. "I believe that the strength of our future Respect Life organizations lies with our youth," he says. "They are extremely open to education and to getting involved." Sweeney has particularly encouraged youth participation in Respect Life efforts the past few years.

The committee member notes that through Respect Life activities, the youth become aware of the broad scope the ministry encompasses. "When we stopped at the steps of the Supreme Court with our teens (during the March for Life), we paused there and prayed, not only for the aborted babies, but also because of the fact that there are currently arguments on whether or not there's a constitutional right to die through assisted suicide."

"This ministry is an excellent way for the teens to realize that pro-life doesn't mean anti-abortion," he continued. "Life means natural death, also."

Suggesting ways of realization is key to Maggi Nadol's role as diocesan Respect Life coordinator. Each year she receives an informational packet from the National Conference of Catholic Bishops providing liturgical, educational and prayerful resources. She forwards the packets to every pastor in the diocese for use in parishes throughout the year.

Like Sweeney, Nadol notes that prayer and education are essential in the Respect Life movement. "You're always trying to reach that balance," she says. "That's the ideal. As a diocesan ministry, one of our main goals is to raise people's awareness about the incredible assault on life."

At St. Vincent de Paul Church, the Respect Life committee strives to present concrete ways of promoting that awareness. By partaking in the annual March for Life in January, the Life Chain each October, and ongoing projects like the Adopt-a-Cross memorial for aborted babies, parishioners show their support, both at and away from home.

In Nadol's view, the ministry can especially thrive at the parish level through eager participation by the pastor. "If the pastor is going to take it on as an issue of the heart," she says, "you'll see that filter down to the congregation."

Jack Sweeney agrees. "The bottom line is the commitment and support of the clergy in our parishes," he says. "That leadership is extremely important. If we have that, the sailing is easy."

Counseling Ministry Is Extension Of God's Mercy

us to grow and to find hope again. I've learned which questions to ask and which not to — I don't ask why anymore. I didn't doubt there was a God, but I was quite angry with God for what had happened. Now I can say I'm grateful to have had him (Kippy) for 18 years."

Sister Marie is pleased with the progress the Knapils have made in just two short years in coping with this tremendous personal ordeal. The murder of their son as yet remains unsolved. Their pain is prolonged by the ongoing investigation, and a much needed resolution still seems far off. But they are not without hope.

of the Church, extending God's mercy and compassion through a variety of services to families in crisis situations. She feels privileged, she says, to express the love of God that "leads people to the desires of their heart."

Sister Marie estimates that 65 percent of the funding for the ministry of the western regional office comes through the annual Diocesan Stewardship Appeal (DSA). There is no doubt in her mind that without DSA funding, services like the extended grief counseling provided to the Knapils simply would not be available. "It's such a gift," says Ginny Knapil, "to escape the feeling that nobody cares, because I know that somebody does care."

Visit the Marian Shrines of France with Bishop William G. Curlin April 7-17, 1997

Join Most Reverend William G. Curlin, Bishop of Charlotte, on a pilgrimage to the Marian Shrines of France and Northern Spain. Your 10-day journey begins in Paris and concludes in Barcelona. Three days are devoted to shrines and churches in Paris, with day trips to Lisieux and Chartre. Then board France's famous TGV (rapid train service) south to Lourdes for a day-and-a-half of devotion at the Shrine and Basilica of the Immaculate Conception. Winding through the spectacular Pyrenees mountains, you will spend the night in the tiny country of Andorra. Wake the next morning for a bus ride to the Monserrat for a tour of the towering Benedictine Monastery and Shrine of the Black Madonna.

Your final destination is the Spanish town of Barcelona, where we conclude this pilgrimage.

Marian Shrines with Bishop Curlin is priced at $2,350 per person based on double occupancy and includes:

- Round trip economy class airfare from Charlotte or Washington
  - Luxury, air-conditioned motorcoaches
    - First class accommodations (in Lourdes, superior tourist class)
  - Continental breakfasts and dinners
- Personal guide aboard each motorcoach
  - All entrance fees
  - Local guides
- Luggage handling and all transfers
- TGV train service from Paris to Lourdes

Bishop's Call To Catholics: Support Sanctity Of Life

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

GREENSBORO — Despite a society which condones many evils including abortion, Catholics must stand firm and continue to support the sanctity of human life, Bishop William G. Curlin said at a Mass for the Unborn Jan. 29 at St. Pius X Church.

"During my 40 years as a priest, there have been many changes in the world, both good and bad," Bishop Curlin told the more than 125 people in attendance. "But I never thought we would reach the point where laws actually sanction the killing of innocent, unborn children."

Society has evolved from an "age of innocence" where lives centered on church, school and family in the 1940s and '50s, to a time where many people believe there is no evil in the world, Bishop Curlin said. Evil does exist, but faith can always overcome it, he added.

"We must believe in the power of prayer. No matter how discouraging things get, we must realize that God holds us in the palm of His hand," Bishop Curlin added. "We can change the world if we believe God is with us."

The bishop's comments came a week after Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston reasserted Catholics' need to be unconditionally pro-life at the annual Mass in Thanksgiving for the Gift of Life celebrated Jan. 21 at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington. More than 5,000 people, including 25 bishops and 200 priests, attended the Mass. Bishop Curlin was among the concelebrants.

Cardinal Law, chairman of the Catholic Bishops' Committee for Pro-Life Activities, has since written President Clinton and asked him to reconsider his position on the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, Bishop Curlin said. In his letter, the cardinal asked the president to meet with him and knowledgeable physicians to discuss the partial-birth abortion procedure.

Part of Bishop Curlin's homily centered on the act, which if implemented would outlaw the killing of partially delivered infants. The bill passed both Houses of Congress last spring but was vetoed by the president. An attempt to override the president's veto failed in the U.S. Senate last September. A week before the Senate vote, the House of Representatives had voted to override the veto.

"There is no justification for an act that is clearly infanticide," Bishop Curlin said.

Christians must unite in one voice to protect the sacredness of life, the bishop added.

"Let us pray for those who know the terrible anguish of abortion, that God in His mercy will forgive and help them," Bishop Curlin said. "Let us pray for our nation, that we will all believe in the sanctity of human life."

Scott Hahn Delivers Message Of Faith

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — "Hold on to your faith. Live it, love it, share it," an enthusiastic Dr. Scott Hahn told his audience of 1,100 on Feb. 1 at St. Matthew Church. His plea, delivered near the end of his three-session series, "A Faith Journey with Jesus," culminated two days of bearing witness to what Hahn called the divine heritage of the Catholic Church.

"We the Church are the bride of Christ, and Christ will do whatever it takes to vindicate the beauty and to rescue and render spotless those for whom he bled and died — and those for whom he intercedes right now," Hahn said during one presentation.

The series was sponsored by the Catholic Evangelization Commission of Charlotte.

An associate professor of theology and Scripture and director of the Institute of Applied Biblical Studies at Franciscan University of Steubenville, Ohio, the former Presbyterian minister also travels extensively to discuss a wide range of subjects pertaining to Catholicism. His visit to Charlotte reinforced his positive view of the Church in this region.

"I would say that the Catholic Church has one of the most exciting futures anywhere in the world here in the South," he told The Catholic News & Herald, "and especially in the Carolinas, not just because of transplants (moving here), but because you have so many non-Catholic Christians who are having friendships form with Catholics."

"It is so exciting to see people discovering that Catholicism isn't what they thought," he added.

In his own life, that discovery took years to achieve. In his Jan. 31 "Conversion Story," Hahn admitted to an audience of 1,600 people that his evangelical, academic, Presbyterian background led to his being "steeped in anti-Catholic convictions" as early as his high school years.

Troubled at finding inherently Catholic tenets of faith in later studies, Hahn dove deeper into his investigations. Struggling with his own distrust and objections from friends and his wife, Kimberly, he realized his views of the Catholic Church were littered with misconceptions.

In the mid-1980s, he attended Mass for the first time. "When the shift occurred from the Liturgy of the Word to the Liturgy of the Eucharist ... I felt something new," he said. "When the priest pronounced the words of consecration and elevated the host, I felt the last drop of doubt draining out of my mind and heart. I heard myself saying, 'My Lord and my God, it's really you.'"

Hahn was received into the Church at Easter in 1986. Kimberly entered in 1990. "Entering the Catholic Church for me was like coming home," Hahn said. "Ten years later, I'm more grateful than ever that this abiding truth is so permanent and universal. It's like a harbor for your soul after being storm-tossed for so long."

In all three presentations, Hahn concentrated on living the Catholic faith with the realization that God, through the "new covenant," formed a flesh-and-blood family relationship with his people. Drawing scriptural parallels to Passover and the bond between Jesus and His Church in his talk "The Fourth Cup," and focusing on Lent and the Beatitudes in relation to God's mercy in his "Alive in Jesus" story, Hahn offered ways to more profoundly understand and participate in the covenant.

Scott Hahn Visits Charlotte Church, Sharing Faith, Testimony, from page 1

Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte, was reminded of that relationship. "As Catholics, we should take more pride in the Eucharist than we sometimes do," he said. "I'm glad Scott brought that out, to wake up Catholics that we do have the body and the blood of Christ every time we come to Mass."

"The man is very well-versed in his subject, and he gets his points across very well," said Ron Dangelo, who attended with about 25 fellow parishioners from Immaculate Conception Church in Forest City. "He's not just preaching something that he read. He's preaching something from inside."

"He's like a mentor to me," said Gail Buckley, a parishioner of St. Ann Church in Charlotte, who entered the Catholic Church four years ago. "Most of my friends are Protestants, so I know the questions and the objections that they have. Scott gives us the words that we need to help break down those walls that are up between Christians so that we can all be united."

Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas, diocesan director of evangelization, hopes that such events "feed and nourish" people who will in turn build up the Church. "What a wonderful experience it was to see the evangelization commissions across Charlotte working together to present this," he added. "I think that's a very special quality: the sharing of faith, the witnessing of faith as Church."

Retrouvaille Helps Couples Transform Troubled Marriages

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

CHARLOTTE — Ruggero and Karen Ridino were on the verge of becoming a statistic. After eight years of marriage, the couple separated and their future together looked less than promising.

The negative elements of their marriage seemed to outweigh the positive. "We had looked to a Christian counselor for help, but were at the point of hopelessness," Karen Ridino recalled. During the summer of 1994, Karen picked up The Catholic News & Herald and read about Retrouvaille, a program designed to help troubled marriages. With nowhere else to turn, the Ridinos — parishioners at St. Matthew Church — decided to attend a weekend session that fall.

Like others, the Ridinos entered the program uncertain about what to expect; what they came away with was a renewed commitment to their marriage.

"It was a very peaceful experience. Retrouvaille helped us focus on God's will for our marriage," Karen said. "We realized we needed to live our lives more in tune with God's word."

Retrouvaille — French for rediscovery — involves "presenting couples" who share their stories and the process of rebuilding their marriages. Participating couples work on specific topics in private.

Unlike Marriage Encounter — which is designed to help good marriages get better — Retrouvaille is for couples dealing with serious problems, explained Rev. Mr. Nick Fadero of St. Patrick Cathedral, who with his wife, Irene, served as Retrouvaille couples coordinator for the Diocese of Charlotte for three years.

"One goal of the program is for couples to continue dialoging," he said. "We ask them to select a subject each day, write on it for 10 minutes, and exchange ideas. With dual career families, it can be difficult. One spouse may travel frequently, so we encourage other communication methods such as the telephone or fax machine."

According to Rev. Mr. Fadero, Scott and Elizabeth Thomas of Holy Spirit Church in Denver were instrumental in bringing Retrouvaille — which is open to all faiths — to the diocese in 1993. "They were involved with Marriage Encounter and realized the need for a program to help struggling couples," he said.

The Ridinos learned other things about themselves and their marriage during follow-up sessions. "We learned love is not a feeling," Karen said. "Love is something you decide to do in spite of behaviors you don't like."

Two years later, the Ridinos are happily married and the Diocesan couples coordinators for the Catholic Social Services program that is partially funded by the Diocesan Support Appeal. They will host three Retrouvaille sessions this year: April 11-13; July 11-13; and Oct. 10-12.

Although the program has helped transform her marriage, Karen Ridino wishes Retrouvaille had been available years ago. "My parents are divorced. Both of them are convinced that if a similar program was available during their difficult times, they would still be married today," she said.

For information about Retrouvaille, call Lee Montelbano, (800) 470-2230.

Forum, Faith Formation Share Vision For Christian Initiation

RCIA coordinators at the 90-Day Institute discuss Lenten practices before and after Vatican II.

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — The North American Forum on the Catechumenate and the Diocese of Charlotte's Faith Formation Office recently co-sponsored "Focus on Initiation: The Ninety Days" at the Catholic Conference Center. The program was designed to help parishes implement RCIA (Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults) during the Lenten/Easter season.

The North American Forum is a group of pastoral ministers, liturgists and catechists who spread their vision of RCIA through experiential learning techniques.

The forum's team included Kathy Brown, dean of the School of Ministry in Phoenix, and director of parish initiation and leader in social justice programs; Thomas Morris, executive director of the North American Forum and assistant director of Religious Education in the Archdiocese of Washington; and Father Ron Oakham, a Carmelite provincial and facilitator of the catechumenate.

The program divided the 90 days into Lent, Triduum and the Easter season. Because the Scrutinies — rites which include biblical reflections on baptism — occur during Lent, they were given special emphasis.

In her presentation, Brown described these 90 days as a retreat period for the catechumens. She emphasized that the individual should be fully instructed in the Catholic faith before the retreat begins.

In another session, Father Oakham gave his historical account of how the emphasis on Lent has changed throughout the centuries. Starting with a focus on the catechumens in the second through fifth centuries, Father Oakham sees a broader focus today to include everyone. Regarding the last 20 years, he noted a positive change in attitude from having to "earn salvation" during Lent in the past to simply "responding to salvation."

The overall reaction to the institute was positive. "I was very pleased with the attendance. Including team members, there were 75 participants," said Sheri Wilson, local organizer and RCIA coordinator for the diocese. A few visiting coordinators from Florida, South Carolina, Virginia and Canada took part as well.

Phillip Michelet, a new member of the RCIA team at St. John Neumann Church in Charlotte, was anxious to apply some of the ideas from the institute to their thriving program. "We have 30 catechumens at this time," he added, which is not uncommon for the parish.

Another participant wished there had been greater discussion on how to immerse the catechumen in the Catholic faith so these rites would have greater meaning.

"Ninety Days" is one of four North American Forum institutes which the diocese sponsors throughout the year.

Dear Friends in Christ,

In Central and Eastern Europe, the collapse of communism has radically changed the lives of millions of people. Freedom and opportunity abound, but decades of oppression have left people morally and spiritually starved.

The Catholic Church has made tremendous progress in the region over the past six years. Mass media is spreading the Word of God; Catholic schools and social service organizations are reopening and seminaries and religious houses are being rebuilt. The Church has worked tirelessly to nourish the faith of millions of men, women and children raised in an atheistic society. Yet, much work remains to be done.

The collection for the Church in Central and Eastern Europe will be taken Ash Wednesday, February 12. We ask your generous response in order that we might continue to help rebuild the Church and nourish the faith of the region.

Sincerely in Christ,

Very Reverend Mauricio W. West, V.G.
Chancellor

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Mothers Should Look To Mary

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider the life of the Holy Family of Nazareth. Although the Gospels say little about Jesus' childhood and youth, this must have been a time of special closeness between mother and son as they sought each day to do God's will. As Jesus grew in wisdom, age and grace (cf. Lk 2:52), Mary understood better the meaning of her own motherhood. Her quiet life during the "hidden years" at Nazareth is an example to many other mothers and to all who strive to grow in faith, hope and love. Our lives, too, are "hid with Christ in God" (Col 3:3), and Mary shows us how a life which seems humble and ordinary in the eyes of the world can advance God's plan of salvation by radiating the love and peace of Jesus Christ.

I am pleased to greet the English-speaking visitors present at today's audience, especially from Denmark, Norway and the United States. I extend a cordial welcome also to the pilgrims from the Archdiocese of Toronto. Upon all of you I cordially invoke an abundance of heavenly favors.

Pope Calls Abortion Symptom Of Society's Selfishness

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II, marking Italy's pro-life day, said abortion was a symptom of selfishness in modern society.

Respect for human life, he said Feb. 2, is a value that "absolutely must be regained, if we want to keep from falling into an abyss."

The pope, who has condemned abortion, euthanasia and other sins against life in countless speeches and documents, spoke from his apartment window overlooking St. Peter's Square, where church groups waved pro-life banners.

The pontiff said human life "cannot be disposed of at will" because it belongs to the Creator, or the "author of life."

"Love inspires the culture of life, while selfishness inspires the culture of death," he said. "The Lord says: 'Choose life, so that you and future generations can live!'"

The pope emphasized that when the Church speaks of protecting life, it means from its first beginnings in the mother's womb to natural death.

His words touched upon a controversial topic in Italy, where legislators recently introduced a proposal that would stipulate juridical rights for the human embryo.

Joy Through Suffering

Lent begins appropriately each year with a gospel reading about Jesus being tested for 40 days in the desert. This year the reading is from the gospel according to Mark (1:12-15), the earliest and most primitive of the Gospels, which tells the story in simple terms. There, the Spirit of God drives Jesus out into the desert, traditionally the haunt of evil spirits, for a trial of strength with the forces of evil.

In Matthew and Luke, the story is expanded by describing what the temptations of Jesus were, namely, to worldly ambition that could jeopardize the very nature of his mission. Of course, there is no parallel story in the gospel according to John, because that writer always portrays Jesus in complete control of his destiny and not subject to any human weakness.

The background for the story of the trial of Jesus in the desert was the belief that the Messiah was the divine agent who would destroy the kingdom of evil, here represented by Satan, with whom Jesus is pictured as joining battle on Satan's own turf. The trial lasts 40 days, the traditional period of trial derived from the 40 years (roughly a generation) during which Israel was thought to have wandered in the desert after the Exodus from Egypt.

Jesus here achieves a decisive victory over Satan, but it is not the end of the war. This gospel pictures the battle continuing in the ministry of Jesus, as he rebukes demons and drives out evil spirits as signs of his messianic activity. And the author implies that the struggle will continue, too, in the lives and sufferings of the Christians of his own day.

After this story, the author pictures Jesus proclaiming the imminent arrival of God's kingdom. The challenge is issued in words taken from later Christian terminology: "Repent and believe in the gospel" — exactly how the early Christian preachers summarized what they thought people had to do to be saved.

The Old Testament reading (Gen 9:8-15) describes the gracious intervention of God after another legendary period of trial and testing, the 40 days of the flood. In the priestly tradition from which this section is taken, the flood marked the end of the first period of the world and inaugurated a new era.

This story of the nearly universal destruction of the human race, during which the world almost reverted to procreation chaos, was motivated by the universal spread of corruption and violence.

The priestly tradition concludes this myth by picturing God making an everlasting covenant with all living creatures, promising never again to destroy the earth. And all would be reminded of this everlasting covenant every time they saw a rainbow in the sky.

The second reading contains a rather enigmatic passage from First Peter (3:18-22), in origin an early Christian bishop's homily at an Easter baptism during a time of persecution toward the end of the first century. He compares the trials and sufferings the new Christians will have to undergo to a baptismal bath corresponding to the great flood at the time of Noah. Then he claims that they will triumph through suffering just as Jesus did. Those who die symbolically with Christ in baptism will also rise with him, pictured here as mounting in triumphant procession to the abode of God in the seventh heaven.

During these 40 days of Lent, our spiritual journey will take us through suffering to joy, through Calvary to Easter. Lent was once a period of preparation for baptism, as in our restored rite of the catechumenate. For the baptized Christian, it is a period of purification. May this Lent prepare us to recommit ourselves to Christ when we renew our baptismal vows at Easter.

Lent: Three Steps Toward Spiritual Renewal

I usually enter into Lent with reflections and good intentions about spiritual renewal and commitment. Too often I see these dissolve into ritual, lip service and old habits.

Over the years I have come up with three steps I find useful. You might take them yourself to bring God's will and your desires together to achieve the most you can with your life — for yourself and for others.

First, study your daily actions, especially those activities that express your personality. The things you do that demonstrate your commitment to something. It may be the way you go about your job, spend your leisure time, or activities in the neighborhood or larger community.

Behind any of these activities which you have given some kind of priority is a will, your will. Honest reflection reveals that the demands of your will to commit to something cannot be satisfied by human effort alone. This revelation leads to the next step: an awareness of the role your conscience plays in your actions,

At this second stage, you see more clearly how your conscience actually negotiates what you want to do with what you really do. For example, you recognize within yourself a yearning for religious truth. You know you cannot reach it yourself. Either you believe that you are the master of your destiny, or that some force beyond yourself is necessary to satisfy your will to commit to moral truth. At that moment you know you need God if you are to accomplish what it is you ache to achieve.

For the third level of reflection, consider carefully the things religion has to say to your conscience. What does religious truth say to your own need for truth?

What about the possibility that God can enable you to move beyond yourself — to share in a will that reflects your own? Now what?

If you cannot become by yourself what you most want to become, you can open your heart, mind and soul to God's grace-filled intervention. Recognize the pure gift of faith in God's power to bring your will to fulfillment. This final step can lead to a life of service and purpose.

Christ rejoiced with Peter at his moment of self-awareness: "Blessed are you, Simon son of Jonah, for flesh and blood has not revealed this to you, but my Father in Heaven." And to the woman who touched the hem of Christ's robe and was transformed, He said, "Daughter, your faith has made you well; go in peace."

This Lent can be the beginning of a new life for you, too. One in which you say "I love you" to someone who needs to hear it. One in which you take the risk of performing an extraordinary act of generosity and kindness. One in which you bear someone else's suffering just by being there. One in which you find reasons greater than your own satisfaction to keep going. One in which you chose to trust rather than despair. One in which you become like the one you love, holy as your God is holy.

What you and I can discover as we move deeper into the Lenten season is that God's greatest desire is one and the same with the deepest human desire — that we find the source of healing and life; that we dwell in the spirit of lasting love.

May your Lenten reflections be full of meaning and full of His grace!

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

When Catholics Are Allergic To The Communion Host

Q. I have been a eucharistic minister in our parish and local hospital for 10 years. Last week a patient informed me that she is allergic to the host and could not receive Communion. Not knowing what else to do, I said a prayer with her and left. How can one handle a situation like this, when the person wishes to receive our Lord in the Eucharist?

A. I am told your patient sounds like one of many who suffer from a disease called celiac sprue. Their digestive systems are unable to absorb the gluten in several cereals, one of them wheat.

The disease usually begins to appear in early childhood, but continues through adulthood. An otherwise normal life is possible, however, if the individual avoids wheat, barley, rye and oats, basically all cereal grains except rice and corn.

The condition is relatively rare, but I have known, and today am acquainted with, a good many who have it. They usually identify themselves in connection with receiving Communion, as this woman did with you.

Two possible avenues lie open for receiving the Eucharist. Some with the disease can receive at least a small part of the host without ill effects.

I'm sure you know it is perfectly permissible to minister Communion this way. Probably you have encountered people with other physical problems who could not swallow or digest a whole host but could manage a small piece.

At Mass, the individual can simply ask the priest or whoever is ministering the Eucharist to give only a small part of the host. From my experience, this works satisfactorily with many celiac sprue victims, but they should consult their physician before taking even this tiny portion of wheat.

The other option is to receive Communion only under the form of wine. This manner of receiving is often the only one possible for patients who, for one reason or another, cannot swallow the host.

Since we believe that Christ's entire eucharistic presence is contained equally under the form of bread and wine, this alternative is in no way a lesser or imperfect way to receive.

The priest places some of the consecrated wine at Mass into a small vial or bottle, which is then taken and ministered to the patient.

If one having the illness attends a Mass at which Communion is distributed under both forms, he or she may pass up the bread and receive from the cup.

Information about this disease and how it relates to receiving Communion is available from the Celiac Disease Foundation, 13251 Ventura Blvd., Studio City, Calif. 91604-1838, (818) 990-2354.

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Selfless Acts Offer Hope For TV

Recently we have been struck by occasions of social responsibility and genuine sensitivity on television. While in the midst of personal grief over the loss of his only son, Ennis, TV star Bill Cosby extended to a grieving mother his concern and empathy over the loss of her daughter, who was killed the same day as Ennis. On top of all this, the family has asked that no taxpayer funds be used as reward money to solve the case.

We were also moved by the snack food manufacturer who rescinded their television ad for the Super Bowl out of deference to the family and friends of the woman who was killed in the bungee jumping accident associated with the half-time festivities. The ad featured a bungee jumper with a tortilla chip in his mouth who successfully scoops a portion of dip in his jump.

While discussing these acts of other-centeredness with our children at dinner, they shared with us other selfless acts by their friends. We shared such behavior we have witnessed in our work worlds. Then we reflected on the times when we had been that way toward each other.

We try to recognize the enemies of materialism and conspicuous consumption who often raise their heads on TV.

It's refreshing to see blatant, "senseless" acts of kindness emanating from what we often refer to as the "idiot box."

Advertisers tend to lay it on especially thick during the "Superhype" of the Super Bowl. It seems that they loosen the throttle on the commercial hype gauge and make outlandish ads that perpetuate falsely alluring images. Viewers are encouraged to not just buy their products, but to buy into the images their commercials project. In demonstrating sensitivity toward the family of the bungee jumper who was killed, this Super Bowl advertiser showed a value for respect over profits.

When TV celebrities and advertisers are socially responsible they promote something more than their self-interests. They promote hope, and in doing so, they encourage social responsibility.

Though we often feel surrounded by a culture of self-centeredness, these "senseless" acts of social responsibility leave us with feelings of hope, trust, and confidence. There is goodness out there.

Pope Invokes Special Blessing On Homeless In 1997 Lenten Message

The season of Lent recalls the 40 years spent by Israel in the desert while on its way to the promised land. During that time the people experienced what it meant to live in tents, without a fixed abode, totally lacking security. How often they were tempted to return to Egypt, where at least there was a supply of bread even though it was the food of slaves. In the insecurity of the desert, God himself provided water and food for His people, protecting them from every danger. For the Hebrews the experience of being totally dependent on God thus became the path to freedom from slavery and the idolatry of material things.

The Lenten season is meant to help believers, through a commitment to personal purification, to relive this same spiritual journey, by becoming more aware of poverty and of life's uncertainties and by rediscovering the providential presence of the Lord who invites us to open our eyes to the needs of our brothers and sisters in need. In this way Lent also becomes a season of solidarity with individuals and peoples in so many parts of the world who find themselves in very difficult situations.

For Lent 1997, the first year of preparation for the great jubilee of the year 2000, I would like to pause and reflect on the tragic situation of the homeless. As a text for meditation I suggest the following words taken from Matthew's Gospel: "Come, O blessed of my Father, for I was homeless and you took me in" (cf. 25:34-35). The home is the place of family communion, where from the love of husband and wife children are born and learn how to live; in the home children learn those fundamental moral and spiritual values which will make them the citizens and Christians of tomorrow. In the home too, the elderly and the sick experience an atmosphere of closeness and affection and support, also in times of suffering and physical decline.

But how many people there are, unfortunately, who have been uprooted from the atmosphere of human warmth and welcome typical of the home! I think of refugees, victims of wars and natural disasters, and those forced to migrate for economic reasons. I also think of families evicted from their homes, those unable to find housing, and the many elderly people whose pensions do not enable them to find a decent and affordable place to live. At times these hardships lead to other tragedies such as alcoholism, violence, prostitution and drug addiction. Last June, while the World Conference on Human Settlements, Habitat II, was meeting in Istanbul, I called attention to these serious problems at the Sunday Angelus. I emphasized their great urgency and recalled once again that the right to housing belongs not only to the individual as such, but also to the family, made up of several individuals. The family, as the basic cell of society, has a full right to housing adequate to its needs, so that it can develop a genuine domestic communion. The church recognizes this fundamental right and is aware of her obligation to work together with others in order to ensure that it is recognized in practice.

Many passages in the Bible highlight the duty to help the homeless.

In the Old Testament, the Torah teaches that strangers and the homeless in general, inasmuch as they are exposed to all sorts of dangers, deserve special concern from the believer. Indeed, God clearly and repeatedly recommends hospitality and generosity toward the stranger (cf. Dt 24:17-18, 10:18-19; Nm 15:15, etc.), reminding Israel of how precarious its own existence had once been. Later, Jesus identified himself with the homeless: "I was a stranger and you welcomed me" (Mt 25-35), and taught that charity toward those in this situation will be rewarded in heaven. The Lord's apostles urge the various communities which they had founded to show hospitality to one another, as a sign of communion and the newness of their life in Christ.

It is from the love of God that Christians learn to help the needy and to share with them their own material and spiritual goods. Such concern not only provides those experiencing hardship with material help but also represents an opportunity for the spiritual growth of the giver, who finds in it an incentive to become detached from worldly goods. But there is a higher motivation which Christ indicated to us by His own example when He said: "The Son of Man has nowhere to lay His head" (Mt 8:20). By these words the Lord wished to show His total openness to His heavenly Father, whose will He was determined to carry out without letting Himself be hindered by the possession of worldly goods. For there is always a danger that earthly realities will take the place of God in the human heart.

Lent is thus a providential opportunity for fostering the spiritual detachment from riches necessary if we are to open ourselves to God. As Christians, we must direct our entire lives to him, for we know that in this world we have no fixed abode: "Our commonwealth is in heaven" (Phlm. 3:20). At the end of Lent, the celebration of the Paschal mystery shows how the Lenten journey of purification culminates in the free and loving gift of self to the Father. It is by taking this path that Christ's disciples learn how to rise above themselves and their selfish interests in order to encounter in love their brothers and sisters.

The Gospel call to be close to Christ who is "homeless" is an invitation to all the baptized to examine their own lives and to treat their brothers and sisters with practical solidarity by sharing their hardships. By openness and generosity, as a community and as individuals, Christians can serve Christ present in the poor, and bear witness to the Father's love. In this journey Christ goes before us. His presence is a source of strength and encouragement: He sets us free and makes us witnesses of love.

Dear brothers and sisters! Let us fearlessly go up with Christ to Jerusalem (cf. Lk 18:31) and accept His invitation to conversion, so that we may cling more fervently to God, the holy and merciful one, especially during the Lenten season of grace. I pray that this Lent will enable all to hear the Lord's plea to open their hearts to all those in need. Invoking Mary's heavenly protection in a special way upon the homeless, I cordially impart my apostolic blessing.

Guidelines For Lent

• The time of Lent is to be observed by Catholics as a special season of prayer, penance and works of charity.

• Ash Wednesday and Good Friday in particular are the most important penitential days of the liturgical year. They are days of both fast and abstinence. Fridays in Lent are days of abstinence.

• The rule of fasting states the only one full meal a day can be taken. Two small meals, "sufficient to maintain strength," are allowed, but together they should not equal another full meal. Eating between meals breaks the fast, but drinking liquids does not. The rule of fasting binds all Catholics from age 18 to 59.

• Abstinence refers to the eating of meat. Under the present law it does not include egg or milk products meat-stock soups or gravies. The rule of abstinence binds all Catholics 14 years old and older.

• The substantial observance of the laws of fast and abstinence is a serious obligation. Those whose work or health would be impaired are excused from fasting and abstaining. The individual can decide if there is a proper cause to excuse. A more serious reason should be present to excuse from Ash Wednesday and Good Friday penance.

• Self-imposed fasting on the other weekdays of Lent is recommended. Abstinence on all Fridays of the year is also highly recommended. The Peace Pastoral of the American Bishops, stating that prayer is incomplete without penance, urges Friday abstinences as something all American Catholics should offer up for the sake of world peace.

• Parents and teachers should see to it that even those who are not bound by the laws of fasting and abstinence because of age are brought up in an atmosphere conducive to a sense of penance.

• The faithful should be clearly and positively encouraged to receive the sacrament of penance during Lent. There should be adequate time scheduled for confessions before Easter. Group penance services should not be scheduled for the last days of the Holy Week. At no time is it permitted to schedule a group penance service for the purpose of giving general absolution without individual confessions.

• The liturgical directions of the Sacramentary and the Lectionary must be faithfully observed regarding all the special Holy Week rites.

• Funeral Masses are not allowed on Holy Thursday, Good Friday or Holy Saturday. The funeral rite outside of Mass can be held either in church or at the chapel on those days, with a funeral Mass later.

• The RCIA is incorporated into the liturgy during Lent. The Rite of Election is celebrated the First Sunday of Lent. On the third, fourth and fifth Sunday of Lent, the Scrutinies take place during Mass.

Vocations Update

By FATHER FRANK O'ROURKE

Greetings and peace!

The following updated list of our 23 seminarians is published with the hope that you will support, encourage and keep these men in your prayers.

I hope that you will get to know our seminarians through upcoming issues of The Catholic News & Herald and by their participation in the life of our diocese during their summer assignments.

I have listed their dates of birth and projected years of ordination to emphasize the wide range of ages among the seminarians. I sincerely invite other men to examine the possibility of their calling to the priesthood in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Beverly Hills Ninja

Farley Film Features Silly Plot

NEW YORK (CNS) — The latest movie vehicle for oversized comedian Chris Farley is the underwhelming "Beverly Hills Ninja" (TriStar).

The formula, fish-out-of-water set-up has Farley as klutzy, would-be ninja Haru, who washed ashore in Japan as a baby and was raised to be the Great White Ninja.

When a mysterious American blonde (Nicollette Sheridan) crosses his path in Japan, naive Haru is convinced her gangster boyfriend (Nathaniel Parker) will bring her great misfortune. Following her all the way to Los Angeles, Haru gets embroiled in an international counterfeiting scheme, all in the name of rescuing a duplicitous damsel in distress.

Director Dennis Dugan turns in a routine assemblage of sight gags based on Farley's girth, but providing little real mirth.

Farley's dubious martial-arts skills are initially amusing but soon, unlike his character, wear thin. Comedian Chris Rock is wasted as a Beverly Hills bell-hop who sees Haru as a ninja extraordinaire worthy of imitation.

When Farley isn't flinging himself through glass walls wielding fish as if they were fatal firearms, he is seen mystically communing on the Plane of Enlightenment with his adopted father (Soon-Tek Oh), courtesy of cheesy special effects.

Although the skimpy plot is supremely silly, at least a sweet-natured tone is maintained as the bumbling innocent brings the bad guys to their knees by sheer serendipity.

It's not a deplorable way to pass a spare hour or two, but Farley fans have the most to gain and won't be as disparaging about the dopey script.

Due to much comic violence and some sexual innuendo, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Ex-Mrs. Bradford" (1936)

Suave amateur detective (William Powell) teams with dizzy ex-wife (Jean Arthur) to solve a series of racetrack murders along the way to inevitable remarriage. Director Stephen Roberts gets surprisingly little comic mileage out of the Powell-Arthur pairing in a routine mystery which resembles but lacks the class of the "Thin Man" series. Mild menace. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Jack" (1996)

Bittersweet comedy in which a 10-year-old boy (Robin Williams) who's aging at four times the normal rate persuades his overly protective parents to let him attend school and make friends his own age, despite looking like a 40-year-old man. Directed by Francis Ford Coppola, the interactions between Williams and the children is intermittently amusing, though the life-affirming theme is heavy-handed, achieving more sentimentality than the intended poignancy. Some sexual innuendo, crude expressions and occasional toilet humor. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Bambi" (1942)

Walt Disney's classic animated feature conveys the simplicity, charm and excitement of Felix Salten's novel, especially in its appealing characterization of Thumper, Flower and all the others who inhabit the young deer's forest world. The story has some intense moments, notably the forest fire sequence and the death of Bambi's mother, though in a context not beyond the resources of most young viewers.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

"Dinner at the Ritz" (1937)

Dated but still enjoyable murder mystery in which the daughter (Annabella) of a French financier (Stewart Rome) sets out to find her father's killer despite the protests of her fiancé (Paul Lukas) and the interference of a British detective (David Niven) posing as a dippy playboy. Directed by Harold D. Schuster, the mystery plot isn't much but the high-fashion settings, polished cast and comic misunderstandings between amateur and professional sleuths still have appeal.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

The unsatisfied human spirit's turning point

By Father David K. O'Rourke, OP
Catholic News Service

Wanting something more, something better from life, is nothing new. But being able to pursue that "something more" is a modern privilege.

Having real choices in life is new. People didn't tend to have so many options 100 years ago.

Most of us like it this way. But we're often better at wanting choices than we are at making good ones.

Learning how to take advantage of our privileged situation in a positive way — learning to make good choices — is a major challenge to us and something worthy of our reflection, particularly during the Lenten season.

It is not easy. The desire to have something better so often comes wrapped up in frustration and perplexity. We want something better, but we don't know what it is we want. What we think is that, whatever we have now, "this ain't it!"

The situation can be immobilizing.

I spoke recently with a young woman finishing her senior year at college. "And then what?" I asked.

"I don't know," she said. "I might take some time off. Maybe I'll get a job. But whatever I do I don't want to jump into something permanent too soon."

Clearly, she is afraid of losing her options. She believes that there is something better somewhere out there; whatever it might be, she doesn't want to lose out on it; and time is probably on her side.

But time isn't moving elsewhere, changing jobs and starting over. This was a lot for me to handle on only a half-cup of coffee.

So I asked him to slow down, get

We talked about goals in life and attitudes toward life. I believe that both Eric and his wife found the discussions liberating.

It turned out that they each fore deciding to ask for guidance with troubling situations. And they get into the turmoil because they assume that what they are looking for in life must be something concrete like a new town, or a new relationship, or a new job.

But what makes our lives better doesn't have to be some new place or person or thing. It can be human and spiritual. Put simply, this means it can be a new attitude, a new way of looking at life, even a new way of life.

Eric concluded that his job was an important part of who he was, but not the sum total of himself. He and his wife concluded that there was more to their relationship and their life than their house and the daily routines they had developed.

In fact, with retirement a possibility, the couple decided it was time to start thinking about what they wanted out of their life together, what their new priorities should be.

And the last time I talked with the young student I mentioned earlier, she still was undecided about what she wanted to do. But she recognized that the answer to her unsettled feelings wasn't just figuring out "what came next" but figuring out what she wanted to do with her life. This merited serious thought.

We can all reach points in life where we sense that things can't keep going the way they are. Something, we realize, has got to give.

Reaching a turning point can be somewhat frightening. But it is also a great opportunity. It is the kind of situation that can lead us to make our best choices ever.

In fact, this can be the sort of situation in which conversions are made.

always on our side, as another very human situation illustrates.

Early one morning I received a phone call. A man I'll call Eric asked to see me right away. I'd known him for years, and I could tell he was in a panic.

"Come on over," I said. "I'll have some coffee ready."

He looked haggard when he arrived. Put simply, and tragically, he was thinking about leaving his wife, his finger off the panic button and tell me what was going on.

What he described was a situation of boredom at work, sameness at home and weariness with life. I've heard this many times.

"There's got to be something more. I go to work and I make believe I like it. I come home and force myself to act happy. I go to bed and don't sleep. And then I get up and do the same thing over again the next day. I don't want to keep going on this way," Eric said.

That was the first of a number of meetings. Soon we also included his wife in the discussions. Interestingly, we ended up talking not about work stresses or marriage or family problems, but about human choices in the broadest sense.

wanted something better. If possible they wanted it together, and they were happily surprised to discover that they could say so to each other.

THIS EDITION IN A NUTSHELL

Human beings tend always to feel somewhat unsatisfied — to long for something more in life. In the face of this longing, people often make big choices. Learning to make good choices is the real challenge. With that in mind, however, it is important to realize that it can be perilous to ignore our deep yearnings for "something more" in life. For in the experience of those hungers we are drawn closer to God. The psalmist wrote, "Only in God is my soul at rest." That psalmist learned early what St. Augustine expressed later: "Our hearts are restless, and they will know no rest until they rest" in God.

Lent and the human condition: Heeding our hungers

By Dan Luby
Catholic News Service

She lives alone in a small house in a New England suburb. Divorced, mother of six, grandmother of six more, her family is a source of joy, affection and concern.

She has a gift for words, but she's a good listener too. Her neighbors see her love for flowers and tea parties with grandchildren on the big screened-in porch her sons built.

Colleagues at a health care agency know her as a team player who is bright, patient, funny. At 63, she has a full life. I've known her almost 50 simplicity. She hungers for peace at every level: in neighborhoods, in families and in her own heart.

But the hungers undergirding her consciousness don't simply leave her unsatisfied with the way things are; they move her to act.

She studies. She keeps up with what's going on in the world by reading and keeping her eyes open. Once in a while she'll go to a lecture or take a class. She talks about ideas and ponders their implications and looks for connections.

She listens to the truth of people's lives — colleagues, children, strangers in the supermarket checkout line. She tries to keep her mind open to new ways of thinking.

She supports, with modest contributions and volunteer labor, groups that promote peace. She endeavors to make her purchases from socially responsible manufacturers. She stays politically aware and writes to the town council and the president and everybody in between.

Perhaps most important,

"Beneath her gracious demeanor is a deep hunger which moves in her life like an underground stream, enriching it with extraordinary freshness."

her many hungers lead her to pay attention to her own life. In a world numbed by the anesthetic effects of mass media and consumerism, she listens to her own heart in silence.

She reflects on her longings and listens for the harmony that results when our deepest desires match the world's greatest needs.

In that convergence of inner and outer voices we can hear the voice of God.

It is part of the human condition to be unsatisfied with the world as it is.

We sense within ourselves urgent longings for a reality greater, deeper, more simple than we see. But we often resist noticing because feelings of dissatisfaction always involve pain.

It can, however, be perilous to ignore our deep yearnings for "something more," since it is precisely in the experience of those hungers that we are drawn closer to God. For ultimately, every longing we have is an echo of our most fundamental longing for God.

Lent is a season to renew our conversion to Christ. So let this Lent be a time for paying greater attention to your hungers, to find in your own sense of longing the voice of God calling you to deeper communion and more generous action.

What's not so ordinary is her sense of holy dissatisfaction. Beneath her gracious demeanor is a deep hunger which moves in her life like an underground stream, enriching it with extraordinary freshness and energy.

She hungers for justice. She longs for a more compassionate world, one like the Kingdom of God which Jesus proclaims.

She hungers for truth — about God, about the world, about what it means to be human, about the culture of which she is a part, about herself.

She hungers for courage to do the right thing, to challenge the faceless and dark powers which lull us into complacency and indifference.

She hungers for community and

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Lent offers an opportunity to meditate on the human condition, but not, I hope, to despair of it.

Admittedly, the human condition "ties us down" in a variety of ways, requiring us:

—To work; to fulfill trying responsibilities.

—To endure others' inadequacies, not to mention our own.

—To suffer fatigue of spiritual and physical kinds.

Not surprisingly, people sometimes complain that they feel enslaved or trapped by their human condition, and thus dissatisfied and unfulfilled in their lifestyle.

But is the human condition a curse or a blessing?

If we conclude simply that our human condition is a curse, we might not hear God's voice when it addresses us through the people and situations that share our human condition.

And suspecting — perhaps subconsciously — that things have gone wrong if we're feeling unfulfilled in our circumstances, anger may be all that we can muster in the face of our most challenging human predicaments. Will anger be sufficient?

Nonetheless, is the human condition a blessing?

Many testify that when they searched out the human condition's positive side, they met God within it. And, meeting God on a new level, grace moved them to react to human predicaments in new ways. And that launched a transformation of their very existence.

"More, please"

By Father John J. Castèlot
Catholic News Service

God lavished favors on the ancient Israelites in a marvelous way — rescuing them from slavery in Egypt, entering into an intimate covenant with them at Sinai and bringing them into possession of their own land, the Promised Land.

But they were still not satisfied. Like Oliver Twist, they constantly held up their bowls and pleaded, "More, please."

Not that they were ungrateful or unappreciative of all God had done for them. Quite the contrary! But like all human beings, they craved not simply fulfillment and happiness, but perfect happiness.

Still, as an agricultural and pastoral people living close to nature and to God, they knew that some things can't be rushed, that there is an inevitable waiting period between the time of sowing and of reaping.

And the people seemed to sense, almost instinctively, even if not consciously, that only God could satisfy their infinite longing. Thus, we read: —"Only in God is my soul at rest" (Psalm 62:2).

—"O God, ... for you my flesh pines and my soul thirsts like the earth, parched, lifeless and without water. Thus have I gazed toward you in the sanctuary to see your power and your glory, for your kindness is a greater good than life; my lips shall glorify you" (Psalm 63:2-4).

In this we hear a gnawing hunger for God, a hunger that can be assuaged only by God.

But isn't that impossible in this life, where "no one can see God and live"? The psalmist finds at least partial satisfaction in the temple liturgy, where he feels close to the totally other, transcendent God. In listening to the Scriptures the psalmist is reminded not only of the love God has demonstrated for the people but of the promise of further fulfillment.

Here the psalmist finds hope and encouragement. By continued striving he grows constantly in intimacy with the one who is the ultimate goal of all his yearnings.

"God is our refuge and our strength, an ever-present help in distress. Therefore we fear not, though the earth be shaken and the mountains plunge into the depths of the sea; though its waters rage and foam and the mountains quake at its surging. The Lord of hosts is with us; our stronghold is the God of Jacob" (Psalm 46:2-4).

One of my favorite prayers is the psalmist's plea: "In you, O Lord, I take refuge; let me never be put to shame" (Psalm 31:2). It is short, but full of confident hope.

The psalmist learned early what St. Augustine expressed in a memorable prayer: "Our hearts are restless, and they will know no rest until they rest in you."

Nun's Support Helps Skater Reach International Special Olympics

Brandon Herzog practices his routine on the ice at Gardiner Lane Skating Rink in Louisville, Ky. Already a three-time state gold medal winner, the 14-year-old will be skating in the International Special Olympics winter games Feb. 1-9 in Toronto.

By ROY J. HORNER

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (CNS) — Out on the ice rink, 14-year-old Brandon Herzog is a picture of grace, precision and determination.

The path that he began at age 7 when he was a student at the former Ursuline-Pitt School has led him to the International Special Olympics' world winter games Feb. 1-9 in Toronto.

Brandon is the first athlete from Kentucky in 12 years to earn a spot on the 133-member U.S. Special Olympics team. And he is in the only Kentuckian on this year's team.

More than 2,000 athletes from 80 countries were to compete in Toronto in such events as Alpine skiing, cross-country skiing, figure skating, speed skating and floor hockey.

Since he began competitive figure skating six years ago, Brandon has won three gold medals in state-level Special Olympics games. He also has done well in basketball and other sports, and in 1992 competed in a national speed-skating event.

Not bad for a youth who was diagnosed at age 6 as mildly mentally retarded and whose mother was told he might never learn to ride a bike.

When Brandon first took up skating at Ursuline-Pitt (now Pitt Academy), his enthusiasm was noticed by Louisville Ursuline Sister Regina Marie Bevelacqua, a veteran Special Olympics coach who was the principal of the school for special-needs students at the time.

Brandon, who lives in LaGrange and attends Oldham County Middle School, participated with his teammates in December in a five-day training camp at the U.S. Olympic training center in Lake Placid, N.Y. He is also holding his own intense practices at the Gardiner Lane Skating Rink in Louisville.

"I will do my best," Brandon said of his chance to compete for a gold medal in figure skating in the International Special Olympics.

Sister Bevelacqua and Mary Jo Payne, another former Ursuline-Pitt staff member, planned to be in the audience along with his parents, John and Runae Nichols, when Brandon skated in Toronto.

"He's excited," said Runae Nichols, a surgical nurse at Norton Hospital and a member of the Cathedral of the Assumption Parish. "He's been working really hard ever since he found out he made the team."

Nichols said Brandon's initiation to ice skating occurred when his aunt in Owensboro took him to an ice rink. Shortly after that, Nichols enrolled her son in the Ursuline-Pitt school, where Sister Bevelacqua took students ice skating each week.

Sister Bevelacqua, now the administrator at St. Mary Center in Middletown, said Brandon learned to figure skate with a passion. He also watched the sport on television, and would bring along his videotapes of skating to watch after school.

He eventually began private lessons, and Sister Bevelacqua encouraged him to compete in the Special Olympics.

"He really loved it," she said. "Soon, all we had to do was eat and drink ice skating. He would always bring his VCR tapes and show them. His practices were a joy to him, something that he really loves."

"He's just a very special guy and worthy of being called to be the only one from Kentucky to be a part of the International Special Olympics," Sister Bevelacqua added. "I'm so very proud of him."

Missionaries Of Charity Postpone Selection Of Superior General

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity have postponed the election of a superior general until the end of February. The election had been scheduled for Feb. 2.

Sources at Missionary of Charity headquarters confirmed the postponement Jan. 27, though they did not give a new election date, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Jesuit Father Edward le Joly, Missionaries of Charity spiritual adviser for 33 years, said that Mother Teresa's health is grave.

"She is dying, she is on oxygen," Father le Joly told Agence France Press Jan. 25. "Her spine is in a mess. She is in great pain. She is confined to her room and nobody can see her. Her only visitors are doctors and some sisters who are doctors themselves."

He expressed doubt that Mother Teresa would live much longer.

A local Church source, who asked not to be named, told UCA News that the order's general chapter, now under way, needs more time to select a successor to Mother Teresa, the 86-year-old Nobel peace laureate and founder of the order.

Church sources said the nuns' reluctance to elect a new leader while Mother Teresa is still alive was seen as a major hurdle in the run-up to the chapter, postponed from October because of Mother Teresa's ill health.

Several nuns told UCA News that some chapter participants are in India for the first time and do not know many of their colleagues, and that they also have to get to know other sisters to vote conscientiously and with responsibility.

According to the congregation's constitution, chapters — held every six years — also address major congregational affairs and suggestions from members, determine needed changes for submission to the Vatican, study the order's apostolic orientation and its extension, and decide on erection and suppression of regions.

Flynn To End Ambassadorship To Vatican By Mid-July

ROME (CNS) — The U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, Raymond L. Flynn, will leave his post by mid-July, informed sources in Rome said.

The ambassador was informed by the White House in late January that his tour of duty would end "on or about" July 15, the fourth anniversary of his arrival in Rome.

Flynn had earlier told Catholic News Service that all of the U.S. ambassadors who were political appointees and not career diplomats had been informed they would likely be replaced during President Bill Clinton's second term.

Flynn was in the middle of his third term as mayor of Boston when Clinton named him ambassador to the Vatican in 1993.

Initially his wife, Catherine, and several of his six children moved to Rome with him. The children later entered U.S. universities and Catherine Flynn returned to Boston for a variety of family reasons.

Even before he arrived in Rome, Flynn's vision of the post became a point of controversy as he promised to expand it to include work on a broad range of humanitarian and social justice concerns around the world.

In addition to working on a project of closer cooperation between Catholic aid agencies and the U.S. government, Flynn has delivered U.S. aid to India and visited Bosnia-Herzegovina and a variety of African countries.

The ambassador also was criticized in the United States for strongly — and publicly — opposing Clinton's veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act.

Cardinal Asks Clinton To Meet About Partial-Birth Abortions

Boston Cardinal Bernard Law talks to a reporter during the March for Life Jan. 22 in Washington.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As Congress prepared to take up the partial-birth abortion issue once again, the head of the U.S. bishops' pro-life committee urged President Clinton to meet with him and a physician knowledgeable about the procedure.

Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston, chairman of the bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities, issued the invitation in a letter to Clinton made public Jan. 22, the 24th anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision on abortion.

"It is my sincere hope that the forthcoming discussion will avoid the worst aspects of last year's debate," he said in the letter. "I pray that time will not be wasted debating claims that have been proven to be false."

The cardinal made clear that the bishops would not support legislation introduced Jan. 21 by Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., which would ban third-trimester abortions with exceptions for the "life or health" of the mother.

He said an exception for the health of the mother "eviscerates the ban," because the Supreme Court has interpreted "health" in the context of abortion to mean "almost any social or emotional reason."

"Furthermore, the evidence that partial-birth abortion is never necessary to preserve a woman's health or fertility is overwhelming," Cardinal Law said. He urged Clinton to consult with a member of the Physicians' Ad Hoc Coalition for Truth, a group of 400 doctors who oppose partial-birth abortions.

Rep. Charles T. Canady, R-Fla., said Jan. 22 that he would reintroduce the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, which passed both houses of Congress but was vetoed by Clinton. A vote to override the veto passed in the House, but failed in the Senate.

The legislation vetoed by Clinton would have banned a procedure used in late-term abortions in which the unborn child is partially delivered, feet first, before surgical scissors are stabbed into the base of the infant's head. The child's brain is then removed by suction, allowing for easier delivery of the collapsed head.

Catholic Relief Services Launches 22nd Annual Lenten Program

Catholic Relief Services unveils its 22nd annual Lenten program, Operation Rice Bowl, on Ash Wednesday, Feb. 12. The program invites the Catholic community to begin this season of renewal by participating as individuals and groups in prayerful service-oriented activities.

In the Charlotte Diocese, last year's Operation Rice Bowl campaign raised more than $14,000 — an increase of 65 percent. Nationally in 1996, Catholics raised $4.3 million through the campaign for Catholic Relief Services development projects. Long-term sustainability is the target of these initiatives, aiming to help people develop skills and resources they can use long after the agency has turned over the projects to the local community.

Operation Rice Bowl benefits members of each participating diocese in the United States as well. Local poverty alleviation efforts receive 25 percent of the contributions raised. In the Charlotte Diocese, a diocesan-wide committee has been formed to accept grant proposals from parishes wishing to work on poverty issues in their community or internationally. The Office of Justice and Peace, (704) 331-1736, can provide information.

"Ambassadors for Christ," this year's theme for Operation Rice Bowl, are those who St. Paul said "represent Christ to the foreigner, the stranger, those less known to us, the marginalized, and most especially the poor, near and far." Through acting as Ambassadors for Christ, Catholics redirect time and money spent on snacks and luxuries to prayer and activities that strengthen their understanding of the suffering of others.

Operation Rice Bowl encourages Catholics to take part in its four components of prayer, fasting, education and almsgiving. "We believe that the Catholic community in the United States embraces this opportunity to live for others during Lent," said Kenneth F. Hackett, executive director of Catholic Relief Services. "Operation Rice Bowl encourages sacrifice and a selfless way of life, ideals that embody the Catholic spirit of seeing Christ in the poor and suffering."

Operation Rice Bowl offers materials through parishes and parochial schools that encourage participation in the Lenten season, including the Home Calendar guide for families, the Educator's Guide for catechists and youth ministry professionals, and the new Parish Guide for Operation Rice Bowl coordinators. Most symbolic is the rice bowl, the primary reflection of the hunger and hardships faced by the poor in the developing world. The rice bowl enables Catholics to participate on an individual basis in response to the call of the poor.

Founded in 1943, Catholic Relief Services is the official overseas relief and development agency for the Catholic community in the United States. Its assistance is provided solely on the basis of need, not race, creed or nationality.

To participate, call (800) 222-0025 to order free materials. For information on local grants, call Joanne K. Frazer, Office of Justice and Peace, (704) 331-1736.

St. Luke Hosts Pax Christi Presentation

MINT HILL — Pax Christi National Chairperson Mary Carter Warren will present "Be a Peacemaker... 'The time is now... and I am here!'" from 1-4 p.m., and "Fighting Fair: Peacemaking in the Family," from 6-8 p.m. Feb. 16 at St. Luke Church.

"We can model and mentor to one another, not because we have all the answers but because we share the questions," Warren says.

Begun in France in 1945, Pax Christi (Peace of Christ) International's first mission promoted reconciliation between French and German Catholics. More than 50 years later, the organization now holds consultative status as a non-governmental organization at the United Nations. Pax Christi has a presence in 30 countries on four continents.

Pax Christi, U.S.A. was formed in 1972 and currently has more than 12,000 members. The movement consistently supports Catholic social teachings such as a preferential option for the poor and the consistent ethic of life.

A peace group was formed at St. Luke in the wake of the Gulf War in 1991. They continue to educate themselves and others about what it means to take a stand for peace.

"We have individuals who have been members of Pax Christi for several years. What we lack is an organized chapter in the Charlotte area," said Society of the Holy Child Jesus Sister Veronica Grover, education consultant at St. Luke.

The peace group joined with the parish outreach committee to sponsor a Family Peace Day last year. The day included activities which focused on family development and unity. The group also sponsored a display table during the Justice and Peace Conference at Belmont Abbey last fall.

Father Joe Mulligan, pastor at St. Luke, recalls Warren's efforts with the Outreach and Campus Ministries at St. Leo parish in Winston-Salem three years ago. "She's a high-energy person who has good instincts about the ministry and bringing forth people's giftedness," he said.

Temptation of Christ

"At once the Spirit drove him out into the desert, and he remained in the desert for 40 days, tempted by Satan. He was among wild beasts, and the angels ministered to him."

Archeologists Uncover Unusual Cross Outside Old City Of Jerusalem

By JUDITH SUDILVOSKY

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Israeli archeologists uncovered a bronze cross inlaid with wood in excavations of a Byzantine-period commercial area just outside the walls of the Old City of Jerusalem.

It is the first such cross to be discovered anywhere, but it probably was not wood from the cross of Jesus, archeologist Ronny Reich said at a press conference Jan. 22.

"I can't recall in my experience another cross with a piece of wood inlay, and it is outstanding in that respect," he said. However, he said, there is no indication that the two-to three-gram (.07- to 0.1-ounce) pieces of wood inside the two-inch bronze cross are slivers of the cross of Jesus, despite claims of such a possibility in the Israeli media.

"This cross is inlaid with two pieces of wood and was most probably a souvenir of Jerusalem for some pilgrim. Souvenirs were already introduced in the Byzantine period and pilgrims brought back with them holy oil, water and crosses made here, much like (pilgrims) today," said Reich.

"We will start the procedure of analysis of the wood.... The question is do we sacrifice the wood for the analysis, because then we'll have no wood left (inside the cross). I don't know. We'll see."

Reich said he does not believe the wood is part of the true cross because "all over Europe there are many collections of relics and if you put all the wood from these relics together you would get 100 crosses.... It is very unlikely it is a piece of the cross."

Even if, after analysis, the wood proves to be from the time of Jesus, there is no assurance that the wood actually came from the true cross, he said.

"It is a matter of belief.... You have to make a difference between science and archeology, and matters of belief," said Reich.

The fifth and sixth centuries, part of the Byzantine period, were relatively peaceful in Jerusalem and people dared to build outside the walls of the city, said Reich. Most of the residents at that time were Christians with a few sprinkling of Jews, added archeologist Eli Shukron. It was a time when there were many pilgrims coming to the Holy Land and the souvenir business was brisk.

According to legend, the true cross was kept inside Jerusalem's Church of the Holy Sepulcher after St. Helena supposedly found the cross. In 614 Jerusalem was conquered by the Persians and the cross was taken to what is now Iraq. Ten years later, the Byzantines reclaimed the cross in a military campaign started for that specific purpose. After the Muslim invasion of the area, the cross was lost.

The recently discovered bronze cross, which appears to have been part of a necklace, was found in the ruins of a shop on the outskirts of the wall of the Biblical city of Jerusalem. The shop was located behind the main street leading from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, which was lined with other shops and is believed to have been frequented by Holy Land pilgrims.

Archeologists also discovered what they believe to be a restaurant, a bath house and a hostel for pilgrims. In addition they found several other bronze crosses, pottery, glass shards and coins.

The $5 million excavations began in 1989 when the area outside of Jaffa Gate was developed for a luxury apartment complex, which included underground parking and a connecting pedestrian bridge.

The discovery of the Byzantine-period neighborhood required a change in construction plans, allowing the neighborhood to remain intact underneath a modern four-lane road. The Israeli Antiquities Authority hopes to develop the area into an archeological park.

It is common practice in Israel for archeologists and construction workers to work practically hand in hand, since historical ruins are found at almost every construction site.

Often the findings are deemed not significant and are covered back up. But there are cases, such as this one, where the find is significant and careful excavations are carried out.

The developer sometimes foots the bill for excavations, as in this case, so the relationship between archeologist and developer is not always cordial.

A small bronze cross inlaid with wood is held by an archeologist Jan. 22 at a site below the Jaffa Gate in Jerusalem. The cross dates between the fourth and fifth centuries A.D. The archeologist in charge of the excavation said he does not believe the wooden pieces were part of the cross of Jesus.

Father John G. O'Brien, Former Raleigh Priest, Dies

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla. — Father John G. O'Brien, a priest of the Diocese of Raleigh for almost 44 years, died at his retirement home Feb. 2. He was 86.

Born in Dorchester, Mass., July 8, 1910, to the late John and Helen M. (Sullivan) O'Brien, Father O'Brien was ordained a priest of the Diocese of Raleigh by Bishop Vincent S. Waters on May 14, 1953, at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro.

His early assignments included assistant pastor positions at St. John Church in N. Wilkesboro, St. Elizabeth Church in Elizabeth City and at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Newton Grove.

His first pastorate was at Sacred Heart Church in Brevard in January 1957. He was subsequently named pastor at St. James Church in Concord, Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem, St. Joan of Arc Church in Asheville, St. Elizabeth Church in Elizabeth City, Sacred Heart Church in Dunn, Sacred Heart Church in Southport and St. Eugene Church in Wendell.

He also served the diocese as director of the Missionary Apostolate, a training program for newly ordained priests in Edenton. Over the years he held positions as the dean of the Elizabeth City Deanery and diocesan consultor. He retired on July 9, 1985.

"Father O'Brien was a man who was deeply interested in the study of theology," said Father Gerald Lewis, vicar general of the diocese. "He never stopped his studies."

"He was a gentle man — a loving pastor," Father Lewis said. "And he was a humorist. He had a great sense of fun."

Father Lewis added that Father O'Brien was also well known for his fondness of playing the piano. "He could sit at a piano and get all of us in a sing-along," he said.

Father O'Brien is survived by his sister, Ruth Waas, also of St. Augustine, and by his brothers Eugene, of Townsend, Md., George of Albany, N.Y., and Joseph of Philadelphia.

A wake service was held Feb. 5 at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church. Bishop F. Joseph Gossman presided over a Mass of Christian Burial for Father O'Brien at Our Lady of Guadalupe Feb. 6. He was buried in the priests' section of the Our Lady of Guadalupe cemetery.

Washington Archdiocese Launches Inner-City School Initiative

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In an effort to maintain and strengthen its inner-city Catholic schools, the Washington Archdiocese is forming a consortium of seven Catholic elementary schools in the District of Columbia. "I will not abandon the city of Washington in its time of need," Washington Cardinal James A. Hickey said. "While there is often good reason for closing schools, I prefer to invest new resources and launch creative programs to ensure a happy and successful future for D.C. Catholic schools and the families they serve." Cardinal Hickey announced the Catholic Center City School Consortium, believed to be the first of its kind in the nation, Jan. 30.

Maryknoll Order Welcomes PepsiCo Decision To Pull Out Of Burma

MARYKNOLL, N.Y. (CNS) — The corporate responsibility officer for the Maryknoll Fathers and Brothers welcomed a decision by PepsiCo to stop doing business in Burma. "We're ecstatic about it," Maryknoll Father Joseph P. La Mar said Jan. 28. He called it a significant achievement that reversed a policy PepsiCo had insisted it would not change. Father La Mar has been a leading figure in the campaign to bring pressure on the Burmese regime by persuading American corporations to avoid business dealings there until respect for democracy and human rights is established.

NAFTA Benefiting Only Small Minority Of People, Says Nun

MARYKNOLL, N.Y. (CNS) — The North American Free Trade Agreement has benefited only a small minority of the Mexican people, according to a Maryknoll nun working in one of the country's poverty areas, Oaxaca. "The oppression and poverty get worse every year," said Sister Joan L. Malherek. The factories set up by foreign investors provide some jobs but "at terrible hours and low pay," she said. Sister Malherek, a native of Mankato, Minn., was interviewed Jan. 24 while a delegate to the Assembly of the Maryknoll Sisters at their headquarters in Ossining.

Works Of St. Thomas Aquinas Available On CD-Rom

ROME (CNS) — Thanks to an octogenarian Jesuit linguist, the collected works of St. Thomas Aquinas now fit in the palm of one's hand. The Latin-language CD-ROM "Thomae Aquinatis: Opera Omnia" was unveiled in Rome Jan. 28, offering scholars an unprecedented tool for research on the writings of the 13th-century theologian and philosopher. The single disk contains all 118 volumes of the saint's works, as well as 61 related medieval texts. That comes out to more than 10 million words.

Pope Tells Rome Mayor Public Safety Key For Year 2000 Preparations

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In addition to resolving traffic, parking and lodging problems in preparation for the year 2000, the city of Rome must improve public safety, Pope John Paul II said. The pope held his annual meeting with the mayor and city council of Rome Jan. 30. "Serious and surprising episodes of violence," which have included at least two serious attacks on Roman priests in the past three months, "are symptoms not only of the lack of security in which numerous citizens live, but also of a lack of values which makes civilized living problematic," the pope said.

Parish Profile

CLEMMONS — The growth of the Catholic Church in the central Piedmont of North Carolina was furthered in 1976 when the Diocese of Charlotte purchased 10 acres of land in western Forsyth County.

The diocese also bought a nearby house to use as a rectory, office, week-day chapel, religious education center and meeting place.

Initially established as a mission of St. Leo parish in Winston-Salem, the Catholic community of Clemmons and nearby Lewiston gathered for its first Mass in July 1978. For a number of years following, the congregation worshipped in a Presbyterian church, a Moravian church, a funeral home, a country club and a school facility.

Meanwhile, in November 1979 members of the mission formed the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Guild, the first formal organization of parishioners and a key development in the mission's journey to parish status. Although no longer formally structured today, members of the Guild make up an important component of church life; their annual autumn craft bazaar is the single-largest fund-raiser for the Clemmons parish.

An elevation in status was indeed granted in 1980, when in August Bishop Michael J. Begley canonically established Holy Family parish. Parishioners chose the Holy Family as their patrons, and the newly formed building committee turned attentions to constructing a multi-purpose facility. Paulist Father Robert Scott was installed as Holy Family Church's first resident pastor. At that time, the parish comprised about 200 registered families.

By April 1981, plans had been developed for a 9,200 square-foot building including a worship area, reconciliation room, offices, nursery, kitchen, and concourse for social events. Construction ensued after breaking ground in February 1982, and in December 1984 Holy Family Parish gathered for the first Mass in the new church. The registry included some 550 families by mid-decade.

parish into the latter half of the 1980s. With the need for more space pressing, the parish in 1986 began another building project: a family center featuring classroom space, a larger nursery, offices, storage space and restrooms. The addition was dedicated by Bishop John F. Donoghue in 1987.

The steady influx of Catholics into the region meant greater numbers of people in need of spiritual and sacramental leadership. As such, during the late-1980s into the '90s clergy of Holy Family assumed pastoral responsibilities for St. Francis of Assisi Church in Mocksville.

The development of Holy Family Church has been assisted in spiritual and physical terms by the parishioners themselves. Fund drives for beautification and improvement projects were successful thanks to the commitment of the congregation, which by the mid-1990s had reached more than 1,100 families.

Community involvement has helped as well. During the mid-1980s, a corporation donated four acres to the parish when it relocated offices from behind the church property. The land now houses a picnic shelter, basketball court and a new playground, the latter funded primarily by the parish's Mothers Support Group.

Father Frank O'Rourke has been pastor of Holy Family parish since July 1996. The church continues to reach out to Catholics in western Forsyth County, as well as the faithful in Davie, Davidson and Yadkin counties.

Multi-cultural outreach is a staple of the parish, especially in light of the large Hispanic population in the area. Father Fidel Melo, a native of Mexico and parochial vicar of Holy Family Church, plays a key role to his Hispanic brothers and sisters by celebrating Mass with them at the Cristo Rey Catholic Hispanic Center of Yadkin Valley. Sister Andrea Inkrott and Sister Linda Scheckelhoff serve as administrators of this Yadkinville mission of Holy Family parish.

Father O'Rourke, who also serves as the diocesan director of vocations, has seen a steady rise in the Catholic population not only in the Clemmons area, but throughout the Diocese of Charlotte. He prays that people will continue to answer the call of the Holy Spirit by pursuing much-needed vocations.

Visit the Marian Shrines of France with Bishop William G. Curlin April 7-17, 1997

Join Most Reverend William G. Curlin, Bishop of Charlotte, on a pilgrimage to the Marian Shrines of France and Northern Spain. Your 10-day journey begins in Paris and concludes in Barcelona. Three days are devoted to shrines and churches in Paris, with day trips to Lisieux and Chartre. Then board France's famous TGV (rapid train service) south to Lourdes for a day-and-a-half of devotion at the Shrine and Basilica of the Immaculate Conception. Winding through the spectacular Pyrenees mountains, you will spend the night in the tiny country of Andorra. Wake the next morning for a bus ride to the Monserrat for a tour of the towering Benedictine Monastery and Shrine of the Black Madonna.

Your final destination is the Spanish town of Barcelona, where we conclude this pilgrimage.

Marian Shrines with Bishop Curlin is priced at $2,350 per person based on double occupancy and includes:

- Round trip economy class airfare from Charlotte or Washington
  - Luxury, air-conditioned motorcoaches
    - First class accommodations (in Lourdes, superior tourist class)
    - Continental breakfasts and dinners
  - Personal guide aboard each motorcoach
    - All entrance fees
    - Local guides
    - Luggage handling and all transfers
  - TGV train service from Paris to Lourdes

Diocese Working To Address Needs Of Seniors

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

The following is the first in a series of articles focusing on the wants and needs of the elderly in the Diocese of Charlotte, and how the Church is addressing this very important issue.

CHARLOTTE — With its sandy beaches and scenic mountains, North Carolina has long been known as a vacation respite. From Manteo to Murphy, tourists flock here for summer sun, to take advantage of the beautiful brisk falls or ski at numerous winter resorts.

But now, the Tar Heel State is becoming one of the nation's most prevalent retirement spots. Statistics show North Carolina ranks fifth in the U.S. in the number of senior citizens moving here to retire. Of that figure, the majority are Catholic. And census data reveals approximately 20,000 of those above the age of 60 are parishioners in the Diocese of Charlotte, which translates to approximately 20 percent of the Catholic population.

Additionally, 8 percent of Catholics in the diocese provide regular caregiving to an elder, which means nearly 30 percent of Catholics are either elders or have direct care responsibilities with elders.

With that in mind, the diocese will spend the next few months conducting listening sessions in each vicariate to get input from as many seniors as possible.

Catholic Educators Say They Hope Clinton Education Focus Helps All

WASHINGTON (CNS) — While Catholic school officials were enthusiastic about President Clinton giving top priority to education in his State of the Union address, many expressed concern that his proposals might not help those who need it the most.

"It's very exciting that education has taken its rightful place as a top national priority, but like many college presidents, I question the details of the proposals," said Patricia McGuire, president of Trinity College in Washington, in an interview with Catholic News Service.

McGuire was one of 600 college presidents attending the Feb. 5-7 National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities conference in Washington. For these college presidents, Clinton's proposal to make college education more accessible did not fall on deaf ears.

As part of his proposed "Call to Action for American Education," Clinton said that "we must make the 13th and 14th years of education — at least two years of college — just as universal in America as a high school education is today, and we must open the doors of college to all."

Accessible college education was but one of 10 proposals in the Feb. 4 address that put education as his No. 1 priority along with his plan to spend $51 billion next year to back the recommendations.

Other plans to help U.S. education included rebuilding dilapidated schools; helping children learn to read; establishing national teaching credentials; developing national and state educational standards; providing Internet access to all classrooms; and giving parents the right to choose the right public school for their child.

"Catholic educators welcome this administration's goal for a nation blessed with 8-year-olds who can read, 12-year-olds who are computer literate and college-bound 18-year-olds," said Leonard DeFiore, president of the National Catholic Educational Association.

But DeFiore, in a statement released Feb. 5, said the president "must consider the rights and needs of all children, including the 3.4 million students enrolled in our nation's Catholic schools, colleges and universities."

McGuire told CNS her primary concern with Clinton's proposal to make colleges more accessible was that students with the least resources still might not get the best shot at an education.

Dominican Sister Mary Andrew Matesich, president of Ohio Dominican College in Columbus, agreed. She said she was "cautiously in favor" of the college proposals because they could help a lot of families who are struggling to pay tuitions. But she said the "poorest students would not gain anything" because the tax credits would offset the Pell Grant scholarships many of them receive.

She also questioned a proposed America's Hope scholarship, because it requires students to maintain a B average to keep their scholarship funds. The scholarship would be modeled on a Georgia program which provides two years of a $1,500 tax credit for college tuition, enough to pay for a typical community college.

"The disadvantaged students who need this most are often coming from the lousiest educational systems. They might be bright, but in their first semester of college they might gasp just to get a C," said Sister Matesich. She also said the pressure on faculty members to give Bs would be overwhelming.

"From a perspective of justice, I have problems" with the way Clinton's proposals would be funded, she added. "I'm not sure we should cut taxes."

Stacy Savage, a senior at Seton Hill College in Greensburg, Pa., who attended the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities conference with her school president, said Clinton's goals sounded great, but she wasn't sure how they could realistically be funded.

Christian Brother Patrick Ellis, president of The Catholic University of America in Washington, also commented that the proposals were not perfect, but added, "any help is appreciated."

None of the college presidents would be so ungracious as to fight the proposals, he said, "but we'll learn to make our case more compellingly."

It is also in the process of separately surveying three groups — elders, adults with elder caregiving responsibilities, and priests, deacons and religious sisters — to seek feedback on seniors' wants and needs. The information will be used to plan new programs for elders. "We have mailed out 3,000 surveys and hope to get at least 1,700 back," said Suzanne Bach, CRISM (Catholic Retirees in Special Ministries) coordinator for the diocese.

"In order to gain the best perspective on future ministries with elders, we need to understand the wants and needs of elders, adultchild caregivers and clergy/religious," added Gerry Carter, director of Family Life and Special Ministries for Catholic Social Services, who along with Bach is helping spearhead the effort. "We are especially hoping for an active response by the clergy and religious so that we can help develop programs which augment those ministries already active in parishes and diocesan organizations. Catholic Social Services continues to strive for a close association with the parishes and to be a resource for our clergy and religious in their ministries."

Just as importantly, a task force of 30 individuals from various backgrounds has been formed to assess the needs of those over age 60 in the diocese. "The group consists of clergy, elders, adults with elder caregiving responsibilities and professionals. They will meet four times, then make recommendations to the Chancery on how the diocese could approach this issue," Carter explained.

The study has the full support of the Chancery, Bach added. "They provided the funding for the survey because they feel it is important to address seniors' needs," she said.

Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor, calls elders a guiding light of the Church. "Because they carried the faith for us so long, let us take time to determine how we might better respond to their concerns," he said. "This is another example of the diocese using a proactive approach in responding to our diverse needs."

Questions in the four-page study will query their church community, activities, household, and what is most important to them in their lives.

Twenty-three senior citizens filled out surveys at the first listening session held Jan. 31 at St. Ann Church. Participants were also given the opportunity to raise questions they have about elderly issues. Concerns ranged from housing to transportation, to pastoral care and socialization.

"What kind of pastoral care are we providing to seniors who can't get out?" one attendee asked.

Others said the elderly are an overlooked asset in the realm of community.

"I think we don't understand the power of our senior population and the resources they provide," said Msgr. Richard Allen, pastor of St. Ann's.

Mercy Sister Jean Marie Kienast, pastoral associate at St. Matthew Church, agreed. "The time is right to raise a united voice and provide to a very important part of our population," she said.

The task force's first meeting was held Feb. 13 at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory. They will meet again in March, April and May. By July 1, the group will have its recommendations for the diocese on the issue of providing more for seniors.

"It will be a strategic plan with both short-term and long-term goals," Carter said. "The diocese and CSS are committed to seeing this through."

Thus far, listening sessions have been held in Charlotte and Hickory. The continuing schedule of sessions will be featured in "Corner on CRISM" ads found in future issues of The Catholic News & Herald.

Public School Has Crucifixes, Religious Art — For A While

By JOHN STRANGE

WILMINGTON, N.C. (CNS) — For about five months, Wrightsville Beach Elementary School may have been the only public school in the country to have crucifixes and religious art in its classrooms.

Classes for the school were held at St. Mark Church in Wilmington after Hurricane Fran severely damaged the school building in September. Staff and students returned to their public school Jan. 27.

"We practically have a brand new school," said principal Inez Richardson about her newly remodeled building. The school, which had been flooded with several feet of water, has all-new flooring, furniture, computers, textbooks and other materials. Two mobile classrooms also were replaced.

But the public school's time at the Catholic parish formed a "bond that will go on forever," said Richardson. "We just fell in love with everybody out there."

Father Matt Hendrick, St. Mark pastor, told the N.C. Catholic, newspaper of the Diocese of Raleigh, it was an easy decision when the church was approached with the proposal to house the public school temporarily.

"It was almost providential," Father Hendrick said. "They needed to have 10 classrooms; we have 10 classrooms. It was a matter of the foot fitting into the shoe, and it fit perfectly."

Father Hendrick said the school's needs also fit the church's philosophy of outreach and evangelization. "This has truly been evangelization," he said. "We as a parish were able to fill a critical need for the community. We were very well received."

St. Mark opened its religious education classrooms and offices to the school. Students and teachers ate their lunches in the parish hall and had recess in the yards and parking lots.

"The rooms were small but we got along very well," Richardson said. "Academically, the children were able to keep up with their studies."

Crucifixes and religious art remained in the hallways and classroom, and Richardson said there were no complaints from parents or others in the community. "I think they were just anxious and grateful to find a place after the storm," she said.

However, the juxtaposition of a Catholic church and a public school did lead to some odd moments.

For example, parish staff member Sherry Jones tells of how one teacher set up a display of papier-mache spiders and other creatures underneath needlework pictures of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Madonna and Child.

A sign, halfway between the table and the religious pictures, read, "Take a Look at These Creepy Critters."

"We're going to miss them," said parish secretary Vicki Peters. "One of the teachers said to us, 'We're going to miss you so bad, maybe I'll have to change churches.'"

Initiation Process Welcomes Christians To Catholic Faith

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — Much like the faith life of baptized Catholics, the journey of participants in the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults (RCIA) process is a call to continual conversion.

Barbara Hayden agrees. The director of liturgy and parish RCIA liaison at St. Paul the Apostle Church has participated as an RCIA coordinator at a number of parishes throughout the country since 1982. In her experience, she has witnessed countless examples of the Holy Spirit at work in various stages of people's lives.

The RCIA is the process through which adults prepare to receive the sacraments of initiation and are welcomed into full communion with the Catholic Church through a number of stages. In the Charlotte Diocese, RCIA is a ministry of the Office of Faith Formation, which is funded through the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

"That whole journey is just an incredible feeling," says Lisa Daly, a St. Paul parishioner who entered the Church in 1993. She currently serves as a candidate's sponsor. "There was a really strong family sense of love and welcoming. These were people that you laughed with, that you cried with, that hugged you when you looked like you needed a hug."

Daly, who attended Mass for about 10 years with her husband and children before entering the RCIA process, adds that her decision to become Catholic enhanced her family life. "We were becoming whole with Jesus and at the Lord's table," she says. "It was a powerful feeling of completion."

Following a period of inquiry, participants enter the catechumenate which informs and instructs on the tenets of Catholic-Christian living. Additional formation includes intensive studies into the sacraments, and a phase called the mystagogy during which the rites experienced at initiation are concentrated upon.

While candidates cannot sacramentally participate until completing the rites of initiation, they are encouraged to attend Mass and participate in other ways. "During the period of catechumenate, for instance, we expect people to be involved in the life of the Church," Hayden says. "Whether they work in a soup kitchen or assist in faith formation or usher at Mass, it is important that these people experience and live the Catholic way of life."

Hayden and the other team members try to ensure that participants comprehend the fundamental tenets of the faith while making their commitments. "We're making allowances for all levels," she says of the program's structure at St. Paul Church, where the process was altered in September 1996 to make it a more ongoing, formative one.

"There are certain things that we feel people need to have before they are fully received into the Church," she adds. "They need to understand the importance of the sacraments, for instance, and the Catholic-Christian code of morals."

Hayden says the restructuring has allowed coordinators to better individualize the needs of each participant. She adds that the program reaches out to all interested parties, from completely unchurched inquirers to non-Catholic spouses who have attended Mass with their partners for years.

Gary Haines, who began going to Mass at St. Paul Church in 1988 with his wife, decided to enter the RCIA process in 1993. He was welcomed into the Catholic Church at the Easter Vigil the following year and has since become an RCIA team member for St. Paul parish.

"My faith journey had brought me to the realization that I was ready to join the Catholic Church," he says. "I enjoyed the (RCIA) process thoroughly, and whatever questions and misunderstandings I may have had on the liturgies and that sort of thing were well-covered."

For Dr. Cris Villapando, diocesan director of faith formation, experiences like Daly's and Haines' are shining examples of the beauty of the RCIA process. "The Rite of Christian Initiation is one of the most powerful liturgical symbols of the Church," he says.

"In it and through it," he adds, "the larger Catholic community is reminded of its commitment to Christ. Consequently, they hopefully realize that mediocrity and being a Christian are incompatible things in light of our baptismal commitment. This process is an energizing thing that can stimulate the Church as a whole."

College Students Renew Faith, Foster Friendships

Students from colleges and universities throughout the diocese participated in "A Day of Covenant Renewal." Here they renew their baptismal vows.

HICKORY — On Feb. 1, nearly 70 college students and campus ministers from Appalachian State University, Belmont Abbey College, Davidson College, N.C. Agricultural and Technical State University, UNC-Charlotte, Wake Forest University and Western Carolina University put their rivalries aside to discover their unity in Christ during "A Day of Covenant Renewal," a retreat sponsored by the Campus Ministry Office.

After the ice-breaker, which involved push-ups, leap frogs and songs, the students processed to the main hall of the Catholic Conference Center to renew their baptismal vows. Father Frank Cancro, pastor of St. Eugene Catholic Church in Asheville, who facilitated the retreat, next asked three pointed questions: "Who are you? What do you want? And why do you want it?" The retreat involved students developing their desire to seek answers to these questions throughout their life journey in faith.

With the parable of the prodigal son as the road map, Father Cancro led the students into three discussions about the main characters of the parable: the prodigal son, the older son and their loving father. In the summary session, the students reflected on their own stories in light of the parable.

"Be honest with yourself. Celebrate the gifts God has given you and work to fill gaps caused by the 'prodigal moments' of your life," Father Cancro said.

"I have never been to a retreat where the focus was on just one Bible story. It allowed us more time to examine each character," said Karl Ulrich, who attends UNC-Charlotte.

To help students contemplate their names, Father Cancro called each participant by name and gave its meaning. "Kim," he whispered softly to one of the young ladies. "Your name means peaceful heart." As each student received the religious meaning of their name, they seemed to receive much more, as seen by the excitement and joy in their faces.

The day ended with a banquet like the one described at the end of the parable of the prodigal son. "We want to make the dinner very special, like a coming home. Since most of the students have to go through cafeteria lines, we decided to serve them at tables with candles and flowers," said Gloria Schweizer, campus minister for Western Carolina University, who helped organize the event.

The purpose of the day of renewal was to challenge students to reflect on their own lives and to help them establish fellowship with other Catholic college students in the diocese. From the warmth and friendship shared by the group, these goals were accomplished.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Flu Forces Pope To Cancel Audience, But He Greet Pilgrims

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A case of the flu forced Pope John Paul II to cancel his general audience on short notice Feb. 5, but he still made a brief appearance for the benefit of those who had assembled in St. Peter's Square.

In a statement released half an hour before the event, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said that the previous evening the pope suffered from a sore throat, which might have been caused by "an influenza syndrome."

Several Vatican officials had recently been struck by a flu virus that was also affecting many residents of Rome, among them Pope John Paul's personal secretary, Msgr. Stanislaw Dziwisz.

The news release noted that papal audiences planned for Feb. 6 with the Spanish prime minister and the foreign minister of Australia were postponed.

"The pope was advised to rest in bed several days," said the statement, which Navarro-Valls delivered by hand to journalists without additional comment.

Pope John Paul, however, was more direct.

"The flu has entered the house of the pope and has also reached me," he read from his balcony in a clear and steady voice to about 2,000 people below.

"The doctor advised me against going out and, especially, asked me to forgo the customary Wednesday general audience," the pope said. "I must therefore limit myself to greeting you from the window of my study. I do this with great affection; I thank you for your presence and for your prayers, notwithstanding the rain."

The pontiff then dedicated a few minutes to discussing that day's commemoration of the Italian martyr St. Agatha, who is credited with refusing to renounce a vow of chastity under pressure from a Roman official. Despite torture, various forms of humiliation and the amputation of her breasts, St. Agatha became legendary for remaining true to her vow and her dedication to God.

Pointing out that the name Agatha means "good," the pope said, "I hope that everyone can be 'good,' that is, faithful witnesses to the love of the celestial father, who fills you with many gifts and who calls you to participate in his joy."

Pope John Paul said faith brings a profound peace that cannot be disturbed, even in the midst of difficulty. He then greeted the pilgrims of various lands in five languages and said he sent his "cordial thoughts to those who are sick, assuring to all a special recollection in (his) prayers."

Guest Column

Rev. Francis T. Gignac, S.J.

Reflections On The Second Sunday Of Lent: A Beloved Son

The three readings today are linked by the theme of a beloved son. In the first reading (Gen. 22:1-18), Abraham is asked to sacrifice his beloved son Isaac. Paul alludes to this story in the second reading (Romans 8:31-34) when he writes that God is on our side because He did not spare His own Son but handed Him over for us all. And the Gospel story of the transfiguration (Mark 9:2-10) gives the Christian reader the instruction from on high, "This is my beloved Son; listen to Him."

For the people of Israel, Abraham was the ideal believer. Just as Adam (the Hebrew word for "man") was the symbol of humanity, so Abraham was the symbol of all who trusted in God. Abraham was called to leave his home and to settle in a land that God would show him. He was to be the father of a great nation, but for a long time he and Sarah, his wife, were childless. Then their son Isaac, the reward of their faith, becomes the test of that same faith. Abraham is asked to surrender his only son, his only hope for the fulfillment of God's promises. In this story, his trust is rewarded by the sudden appearance of a vicarious animal victim, a God-given substitute.

The second reading is a commentary on the first. The story of Abraham being willing to sacrifice his only son struck the early Christians as a type and model of the sacrificial death of Jesus, who in their eyes was God's beloved Son. And so Paul writes, in rather legal terminology, that God is on our side because He did not spare His own Son. God the Judge has already pronounced sentence in our favor. We cannot be condemned because God's beloved Son, Christ Jesus, who died for us and was raised to glory by God, is at God's right hand interceding for us.

The Gospel story of the transfiguration, this year from the version in the earliest gospel, continues the theme of the beloved Son.

It is a story of revelation, addressed to the Christian reader, of who Jesus really is. The scene takes place on a mountain, the traditional place of God's revelation. It is described in stock apocalyptic imagery. It is placed just after the first prediction of the passion in the Gospel tradition to give the Christian reader a foretaste of the glory that is to come after Jesus' ignominious suffering and death.

Then Moses and Elijah are pictured appearing and speaking with Jesus. When Peter speaks up and says, "Rabbi, let us make three tents; one for you, one for Moses, and one for Elijah," this reflects an initial stage of Christian belief that Jesus was the equal of Moses, the first and greatest leader of Israel, and of Elijah, by legend the first and greatest of the prophets.

But then a cloud overshadowed them; just as a cloud (symbolic of the presence of God) led the Israelites in the desert after the Exodus; just as a cloud overshadowed the temple in Jerusalem to signify God's special presence there and overshadowed Mary as a sign that her child was God's beloved Son. When the chosen disciples looked up, the story goes, they saw no one, only Jesus. They came to realize that Jesus is not just the equal of Moses and Elijah, but that He completely surpasses them. In Him all the Law and the Prophets find their fulfillment.

All three readings today speak of sacrifice and death. Glory and life come only through suffering and death. During Lent we are invited to die symbolically to selfishness and sin, so that we can live more fully for God and for others. We are invited to be conformed to the suffering and death of Jesus, whom we confess as Lord, so that we can also become conformed to the glory of his risen life.

Jesuit Father Francis T. Gignac is a professor and chairperson of the Department of Biblical Studies at The Catholic University of America in Washington.

God And The Presidents

Presidents Day has come to be recognized more for sales and long weekend getaways than a patriotic celebration. But it's a good time to spend a little time with two great leaders who were outspoken in acknowledging their personal dependence on God. While many historians have described the political journeys of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, far fewer have looked at their public journey with the Lord. God presided over every critical decision made by these men of faith.

Not many citizens now realize how often Washington insisted that our freedom as a nation has its origin in God — and will endure only so long as this truth is cherished. As commander in chief of the colonial army, he told his troops: "Let us therefore rely on the goodness of the cause and the aid of the Supreme Being, in whose hands victory is, to animate and encourage us to great and noble actions."

Washington implemented the instructions of Congress that the men in his army be provided with spiritual assistance by assigning chaplains to each regiment. "The blessings and protection of Heaven are at all times necessary, but especially so in times of public danger."

Taking the oath of office as first president of the United States on April 30, 1778, Washington spontaneously added this four word prayer of his own: "So help me God," an invocation still used in official oaths by those taking public office, in courts and in other legal proceedings.

And he spoke of our dependence on God in his inaugural address: "It would be peculiarly improper to omit in this first official act, my fervent supplication to the Almighty Being who rules over the universe — who presides in the council of nations — and whose beneficial aids can supply every human defect."

Just as Washington's words blended spiritual and moral values into every aspect of American life, Abraham Lincoln repeatedly invoked God's presence in America's history. He coined one of his most memorable phrases when he declared Americans "an almost chosen people" whose rise "held out a great promise to all." He hoped to be "a humble instrument in the hands of the Almighty."

During the Civil War's dark days, Lincoln depended on prayer, "When everyone seemed panic-stricken ... I went to my room ... and got on my knees before Almighty God and prayed.... Soon a sweet comfort crept into my soul that God Almighty had taken the whole business into His own hands."

Later he reminded both sides of the conflict that American slavery had been an "offense against God," and that the scars of "this terrible war" demanded compassion: "With malice toward none; with charity for all," North and South must "bind up the nation's wounds ... and to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

In truth, my friend, millions of Americans, including presidents, have relied on their faith in God and for the moral knowledge that told them how to conduct their lives, including their political lives. The ability of religious faith to fire political imagination and conscience at the executive levels of government must not be underestimated or ridiculed.

As Stephen Carter observed in the Culture of Disbelief, "When pundits worry about the influence of religion on politics, they are worrying, as it were, against history." Indeed, history has already decided.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Pope's Comments On Evolution

Q. We hope you can clear up some confusion about what our Holy Father said recently about evolution.

We have read that, according to the pope, many recent scientific discoveries lead us to realize that "the theory of evolution is more than a hypothesis."

However, two recent newspaper columns claim that this is a mistranslation, composed by certain "secularists" and promoted by some American Catholics. The real translation, they claim, is the one in the Vatican newspaper.

To be honest, the translation they say is right doesn't make much sense. Can you help? Where could we obtain a copy of the pope's talk?

A. On Oct. 22 of last year, Pope John Paul II presented a message to the Pontifical Academy of Sciences concerning new scientific information on the theory of evolution and explained the Church's position about that theory.

As you are aware, the theory of evolution proposes that, through many eons, our human bodies evolved from pre-existing living beings into their present form.

I, too, have seen a number of writers who say much the same as the ones you read. They generally reflect a strong fundamentalist interpretation of the Bible, especially the Genesis stories of creation.

At any rate, the information they present is incomplete and often false. They obviously feel it is important to minimize what Pope John Paul said.

Shortly after the pope delivered his message, the English language edition of the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano quoted the Holy Father as saying that "new knowledge has led to the recognition of more than one hypothesis in the theory of evolution."

A few days later the same newspaper's editor acknowledged its wrong translation and affirmed the correct translation.

Forgive my quoting French for a moment, but it will help answer your question properly. In his message the pope said the following: "... de nouvelles connaissances conduisent a reconnaître dans la theorie de l'evolution plus qu'une hypothese." The normal English translation of that sentence, and the correct one according to L'Osservatore Romano, is "(N)ew knowledge leads to the recognition of the theory of evolution as more than a hypothesis."

The pope goes on to say that the convergence of results in scientific work, conducted independently, "is in itself a significant argument in favor of this theory."

No one familiar with our pope and his respect and love for science and scholarship will be surprised by his words.

At very least, it proves, if proof were any longer needed, that the pope is not a fundamentalist when it comes to interpreting the Scriptures. He is open to every help qualified scholars can give us to delve more deeply into the truth. As he reminds us elsewhere in this message, "We know, in fact, that truth cannot contradict truth."

The Legacy Of Pope John Paul II

Tad Szulc (pronounced "Shultz"), in his biography titled "Pope John Paul II," was full of praise for his friend Karol Wojtyla, but he admitted cautiously that it was too early to determine how history will judge his papacy.

The Holy Father has defined himself as a restorative pope, but the word "restorative" has often puzzled me. Exactly what is it that he wants to restore? The need for restoration implies that the Church before 1960 was better and healthier.

Father Thomas Merton writing in 1958 had a slightly different view. He described the Church this way: "Stern, practical legalism. Man face to face with the demands of the divine will.... Harshness, aggressivity. Ascetical separation of 'body' (evil) and 'soul' (good).... Primacy of economics tacitly admitted. Distrust of what is interior, distrust of joy, of happiness. Asceticism seen as self-discipline, dour, individualistic, puritanical."

Is the pope trying to go back to this model?

Father Merton admitted that his description was an oversimplification; nevertheless he was uncomfortable with the rigidity of the day.

St. Augustine's influence was still strong. Augustine said that God was our end, but in order to attain our end we needed to aim at perfection. To him that meant a single-minded pursuit of the things of the spirit, as opposed to the things of this world.

Augustine encouraged us to hold this world in contempt.

Thomas Merton turned to Scripture for enlightenment and found it in the words of Jesus, "Follow me." For him

Jesus was the way of perfection. "God is love, and he who abides in love, abides in God and God in him" (1 John 4:16).

Thankfully Vatican Council II swept aside the Augustinian pessimism and taught us to rejoice in the joys and hopes, the griefs and the anxieties of this world. Indeed, we were taught to embrace the world and strive to make it a more just and humane place to live.

When Pope John XXIII announced plans for the council in 1959, he was interested in reform, not restoration. Six years later many of the pastoral reforms he envisioned, as well as some he never dreamed of, were overwhelmingly approved by the council fathers.

The most significant reform had to do with collegiality, the idea of shared authority between the bishops and the pope. Pope Paul VI gave his approval to this.

Whether true collegiality has been achieved is a matter of hot debate in the Church today. Many believe it has not. It was one of the main problems cited by Cardinal Joseph Bernardin of Chicago before his death.

It is too early to tell how history will judge the papacy of Pope John Paul II. He has been a tireless champion of orthodoxy and social justice, and for that we are grateful. But the question remains: Has he implemented the spirit of Vatican II as fully as the council fathers expected?

Time will tell. Perhaps we will need a Vatican Council III to find the answer.

Catholic High School Features Father, Son Teaching In Tandem

Glenn A. Young and Glenn A. Young share more than just their name. The father and son teach at St. Mary-Bundschu Memorial High School in Independence, Mo.

By LORETTA SHEA KLINE

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (CNS) — A father and son who teach at St. Mary-Bundschu Memorial High School in Independence have more in common than their last name.

For one, they have the same first name.

When Glenn Anthony Young, 27, joined Glenn Allan Young, 49, on the faculty this school year, it created a slight problem: How do you distinguish "Mr. Young" from "Mr. Young"? The solution: the designations "Mr. Young the Elder" and "Mr. Young the Younger."

Both Youngs share other traits. Both were highly influenced by their Catholic educations, both tried other careers before teaching, and both have intense classroom styles driven by a belief that what they are doing makes a difference.

And both were inspired by men they admired.

The elder Young, who describes his youth as troubled, believes he probably would have ended up in prison if a teacher had not taken interest in him when he was 11 years old. He met the teacher in a summer youth program.

"My life and love of what I'm doing I patterned after a man that I loved — Jim Eskew," he told The Catholic Key, newspaper of the Diocese of Kansas City-St. Joseph. "He took me under his wing, and straightened my life out."

Young attended St. Pius X High School, where Eskew was a teacher and coach. And when Young joined the St. Mary faculty 25 years ago, Eskew was his principal. In fact, it was Eskew who encouraged Young to become a teacher.

Young, who has a bachelor's degree in police science, did probation work for two years and grew dissatisfied dealing with hardened offenders. Eskew suggested teaching.

"I thought, why don't I try to work with kids and help steer their lives in a proper direction, rather than working with them after they had already committed a crime," Young said.

Eskew was Young's role model both professionally and personally. When Eskew died in 1990, Young felt as if he had lost a family member.

"I hope I can have a fraction of the impact he had on lives," said Young, who teaches geography and American government and also has a master's in secondary administration. "I know he is looking down on me, and keeps me going."

Young said he uses humor — "mounds of it" — to reach students, and enjoys keeping them guessing as to what he will do next. He added he continually tries to improve by reading, listening, thinking and making an effort to come up with new ideas.

"I don't consider myself a success," he said. "I'm working for success."

To the contrary, says Young's son. "I see him as being a real expert at what he does," he told The Catholic Key.

The first-year teacher said that having a chance to work with his dad means a lot to him. He sees it as the passing on of a tradition.

"I see how dedicated my dad is, and that comes out of Mr. Eskew's influence on him," Young said.

The younger Young attended nursing school for a year before deciding to major in English. After graduating from college, he spent four years with the Kansas City Health Department doing AIDS prevention education and working with people being treated for tuberculosis.

But he said his desire to become a teacher was born out of his love of the school environment and his passion for teaching religion. He is working toward a master's degree in theology by taking summer courses at the University of Notre Dame.

Young said he cannot help getting excited about the subject. "I hope they (students) do understand that it is something you can feel real passionate about in your life," he said.

"I learned so much being a student in a Catholic school myself," he added. "I don't think I appreciated it all the time. I look at my life now, and see so much of it as the result of what I learned in a Catholic school."

While a student at Archbishop O'Hara High School, Young tutored inner-city children, worked at a soup kitchen and volunteered for food drives, his father recalled.

"The neat thing about Glenn is that he has a very big heart, to help mankind in any way that he can," his father said.

"Seeing him every day, doing the thing he has the passion for, makes me extremely proud of the good individual he's grown to be."

Vocations Update

Greetings and peace!
The "good news" is that two men have recently responded to the call of the Holy Spirit to begin studies for the priesthood in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Charles Messler, a lifelong Catholic, is 48 years old. He has taught in Catholic schools and has most recently been involved in renovation and restoration projects as a general contractor. As a young man, Charles spent one year in seminary, left to complete college, married, was widowed, and again heard the call to the priesthood.

Charles is from Hibernia, N.J., and as of this month is studying at St. Meinrad Seminary in Indiana. He is currently enrolled in his first year of theology.

Stephen Doering, 25, attended Catholic schools in his hometown of Baton Rouge, La. He graduated from Elon College in Burlington, N.C. and worked for a year teaching and counseling troubled adolescent boys. Through his studying the history of the Roman Catholic Church and its significant place in civilization, he rediscovered his life's calling. With the devoted encouragement of a college professor, Steven made the decision to live his faith by way of the priesthood. He entered St. Vincent Seminary in Latrobe, Penn., in January.

These men are an answer to your prayers and are presented here with the hope of inviting men — both the young and not-so-young — to consider being priests. Charles and Stephen have very different backgrounds and experiences. However, it is same Spirit that has prompted their response.

Please join me in inviting others to ponder being called to priesthood in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Jesús perdido y hallado en el Templo

CIUDAD EL VATICANO (VIS).— En la Audiencia General del 15 de enero en el Aula Pablo VI, el Santo Padre se centró en el relato evangélico de Jesús perdido y hallado en el Templo de Jerusalén, en el cual “Jesús revela con su fuerte personalidad, la conciencia de su misión”.

“A través de este episodio, Jesús -dijo Juan Pablo II- prepara a su madre al misterio de la Redención. María y José, en los tres días dramáticos en que el Hijo se separa de ellos para permanecer en el Templo, viven la anticipación del triduo de su pasión, muerte y resurrección”.

El hallazgo de Jesús al tercer día “constituye para sus padres el descubrimiento de otro aspecto relativo a su persona y a su misión”. Recordó la pregunta de María a Jesús: “¿Hijo, por qué nos has hecho esto?”. Y añadió que “se podría percibir aquí el eco de los ‘porqués’ de tantas madres frente a los sufrimientos que les acarrearán sus hijos, y también de los interrogantes que surgen en el corazón de todo hombre en los momentos de prueba”.

El Papa evocó la respuesta de Jesús a su Madre: “¿Por qué me buscabais? No sabías que yo debía estar en las cosas de Mi Padre? Con esta expresión, El, de un modo inesperado e imprevisto, descubre a María y a José el misterio de su Persona, invitándoles a superar las apariencias y abriéndoles perspectiva nuevas sobre su futuro”.

“María y José no perciben ni el contenido ni el modo de su respuesta, que parece tener la apariencia de un rechazo”. La Virgen, concluyó el Santo Padre, “conservando en su corazón un acontecimiento tan cargado de significado, alcanza una nueva dimensión de su cooperación a la salvación”.

María en la vida oculta de Jesús

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).—En la Audiencia General del 29 de enero en el Aula Pablo VI, el Papa habló de la Virgen en la vida oculta de Jesús, y señaló que “en la atmósfera digna y laboriosa de Nazaret, María se esforzaba en comprender la secuencia providencial de la misión del Hijo”.

Aunque “los Evangelios ofrecen pocas noticias sobre los años transcurridos por la Sagrada Familia en Nazaret (...) se puede deducir que el clima de serenidad y de paz presente en la casa de Nazaret y su orientación constante hacia el cumplimiento del designio divino, conferían a la unión entre la madre y el hijo una profundidad extraordinaria e irrepetible”.

“Las labores cotidianas sencillas y humildes asumían a sus ojos (de María) un valor singular, en cuanto a que Ella las vivía como un servicio a la misión de Cristo. El ejemplo de María ilumina y alienta la experiencia de tantas mujeres que desarrollan su trabajo cotidiano exclusivamente entre las paredes domésticas. Se trata de un empeño humilde, escondido, repetitivo y, con frecuencia, no suficientemente apreciado”.

Juan Pablo II añadió que la Virgen, en su labor doméstica, “vive la esperanza de un modo excelso; sabe que no se quedará decepcionada aunque no conozca los tiempos y los modos con que Dios realizará su promesa. En la oscuridad de la fe y ante la ausencia de signos extraordinarios que anuncien el inicio de la tarea mesiánica del Hijo, Ella aguarda, más allá de toda evidencia, esperando el cumplimiento de la promesa por parte de Dios”.

El Papa concluye la semana de oración por la unidad de los cristianos

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).— A las 6:00 de la tarde del día 25 de enero, fiesta de la conversión de San Pablo y último día de la Semana de Oración por la Unidad de los Cristianos, Juan Pablo II presidió una Misa en la Basílica romana de San Pablo Extramuros.

Esta celebración, señaló el Papa, “asume un significado ecuménico particular, gracias a la presencia de nuestro queridísimo hermano en Cristo, Católicos de la Grande Casa de Cilicia, Su Santidad Aram I, a quien saludo con afecto cordial y fraterno”.

En la homilía, el Papa habló de “el designio de salvación de Dios para todas las naciones. Se trata de un plan universal, se podría decir incluso ‘ecuménico’”. Agregó que “esta misión universal de salvación asume un fuerte relieve en el día en que la Iglesia recuerda la conversión de San Pablo”.

Antes de su conversión “el celoso fariseo Saúl estaba convencido de que el designio de salvación tenía que ver solamente con un único pueblo: Israel”. Persiguió a los discípulos de Cristo en Jerusalén y “desde Jerusalén se dirige hacia Damasco (...) (donde) es iluminado por la luz que viene de lo Alto. Cae a tierra y en aquel momento dramático Cristo le hace caer en la cuenta de su error”.

“Desde el momento en que Jesús resucitado se le reveló en Damasco hasta el testimonio supremo que dio aquí en Roma, Pablo fue un ferviente servidor de la comunión que debe existir entre los miembros del Cuerpo de Cristo”, dijo Juan Pablo II. Añadió que la inspiración que llevó a escoger la reconciliación como tema de la Semana de Oración por la Unidad de los Cristianos de este año vino de “la actividad apostólica (de Pablo) a favor de la reconciliación y la comunión de los creyentes, luego de su conversión”.

El cardenal sodano celebra una misa por la paz en Guatemala

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).— En la mañana del 16 de enero, en la Capilla Paulina del Vaticano, el Cardenal Secretario de Estado Angelo Sodano, en presencia de sacerdotes de Guatemala y de otros países, celebró una Misa de acción de gracias por el reciente acuerdo de paz firmado en Guatemala.

El Obispo Cipriano Calderón Polo, Vicepresidente de la Pontificia Comisión para América Latina, y otros prelados de la Secretaría de Estado, estaban entre los concelebrantes. Asistieron los Embajadores ante la Santa Sede de Guatemala, Honduras, Cuba, Argentina, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Bolivia, Colombia, Chile, México, Venezuela, Panamá, Brasil, Perú, Paraguay, Uruguay, Portugal, España, Eslovenia y Estados Unidos.

El Cardenal Sodano resaltó varios fragmentos de la carta que Juan Pablo II escribió al Presidente de Guatemala el 17 de diciembre de 1996, en la que señala que la nueva paz alcanzada “es ciertamente un don de Dios y fruto del diálogo” y “por tanto, es realmente un momento de gracia para el pueblo guatemalteco”.

También habló de la urgencia de paz en el mundo y de su fragilidad en muchos lugares y de la necesidad del perdón para “salir de situaciones marcadas por odios antiguos y violentos”.

Mensaje del Padre

Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M.

Filipenses 2, 6-11: "El, siendo de condición divina, no se apegó a su igualdad con Dios, sino que se redujo a nada, tomando la condición de servidor, y se hizo semejante a los hombres. Y encontrándose en la condición humana, se rebajó a sí mismo haciéndose obediente hasta la muerte, y muerte en una cruz. Por eso Dios lo engrandeció y le dio el Nombre que está sobre todo hombre, para que al Nombre de Jesús se doble toda rodilla en los cielos, en la tierra y entre los muertos, y toda lengua proclame que Cristo Jesús es el Señor, para gloria de Dios Padre".

Hermanos y hermanas, en la Cuaresma revivimos el camino de Jesús, el camino del Calvario. La carta de San Pablo a los Filipenses nos recuerda que ese camino empezó muchos años antes y duró toda la vida de Jesús. El camino de Jesús empezó con un rebajamiento divino. Se despojó de su condición divina, se inclinó hacia la humanidad tomando la condición de siervo. Es el misterio de la Encarnación, del Verbo hecho carne. Es el misterio de Dios humilde y oculto en la humanidad. Recordamos que nosotros seremos efectivos en nuestra misión de cristianos en la medida que nos mantenemos humildes y ocultos en el Señor.

Esto a veces es difícil para nosotros dada la realidad de lo que sufren los que nos rodean. Queremos ser defensores de la verdad, de la justicia; queremos denunciar toda opresión y violación de los derechos humanos. Nos es muy palpable cómo los pobres se inclinan bajo la opresión social, política, económica, cultural. Jesús también predicó una Buena Nueva a los pobres y la liberación a los cautivos. Pero la predicó con un corazón manso y humilde, oculto en su Padre.

Hoy día es urgente el respeto a los derechos humanos, el anuncio de la justicia. Por eso mismo, es igual de urgente que compartamos la experiencia de Jesús, la experiencia de rebajamiento. Esta experiencia duró toda la vida de Jesús. Es un error pensar que la cruz de Jesús viene únicamente al final de su vida. El fue rechazado por su propio pueblo; los dirigentes de su pueblo lo perseguían; sus discípulos en muchas ocasiones no sabían de qué estaba hablando y peleaban entre sí sobre quién iba a ser el más grande, el más importante. Jesús llevó estas cruces toda su vida. El acepta pacientemente las limitaciones de los que trabajan y predicar con El.

Al empezar la Cuaresma, caminamos hacia el Calvario y la Resurrección junto con Jesús. Iniciamos este camino con un acto de rebajamiento. Nuestro camino no puede ser distinto que el camino recorrido por El. No existe otro camino: si queremos elevar a los pobres de Cristo, debemos compartir lo que El experimentó rebajándose. Debemos aceptar limitaciones similares. Debemos aprender a aceptar a las personas imperfectas; así somos todos. Vivimos y actuamos en una comunidad imperfecta. Por amor a la comunidad, hemos de abandonar preferencias personales y cuidarnos de todo lo que no nos deja inclinarnos hacia el pobre, como Cristo se inclinó a lavar los pies de sus discípulos.

Hermanos y hermanas, al iniciar este camino de la Cuaresma hacia la Pascua, hagámoslo humildes y ocultos en Cristo, recordando las palabras de San Pablo: "Se inclinó hacia el hombre tomando la condición de siervo".

El Decálogo

El término Decálogo significa: Las 10 Palabras. Nosotros las llamamos Los 10 Mandamientos.

Por la Sagrada Escritura sabemos que expresa con fidelidad la voluntad divina acerca de la conducta de todos y cada uno de los seres humanos. Proclama la ley que Dios mismo manifestó a Moisés en el monte Sinaí (Ex. 20, 2-17 - Dt. 5, 6-21).

En la catequesis de la Iglesia la forma de conservar y explicar el Decálogo ha variado con el transcurso de los siglos. La forma más conocida y seguida en catecismos y textos morales nace con San Agustín, en el siglo V y la reproducimos aquí:

1. Adorarás al Señor tu Dios y el El sólo servirás.
2. No pronunciarás el nombre de Dios en vano.
3. Santificarás los días de fiesta.
4. Honrarás a tu padre y a tu madre.
5. No matarás.
6. No cometerás adulterio.
7. No robarás.
8. No mentirás.
9. No desearás la mujer de tu prójimo.
10. No codiciarás las cosas ajenas.

En el Antiguo Testamento, en el marco de la Antigua Alianza entre Dios y su pueblo Israel, el Decálogo ocupa un lugar prominente, ya que constituye el testimonio perenne de la misma Alianza (Ec. 25, 26 - Dt. 5, 2). Dios se revela a su pueblo, dándole a conocer su voluntad y su pueblo, al aceptarla y cumplirla, lo reconoce como Dios único, vivo y verdadero. La observancia del Decálogo es la preparación del pueblo de Israel para recibir de una forma conveniente y digna al futuro Mesías, a Jesucristo, el prometido Redentor de la humanidad.

En el Nuevo Testamento, además de preparación para recibir a Jesús, la observancia del Decálogo es la base sobre la cual el Redentor construye en el hombre redimido el edificio de la gracia.

De hecho en la Nueva Alianza esta observancia está explícitamente confirmada (Mt. 5, 17) y los mismos consejos evangélicos la suponen (Mt. 19, 5-21). Por supuesto, para los discípulos del Señor el Decálogo debe ser interpretado y vivido desde la perspectiva de hijos e hijas de Dios: una observancia filial motivada por el amor, que es el mandamiento supremo que nos ha dejado el Señor.

En la próxima edición: el Primer Mandamiento.

Sepultado Cardenal Landázuri,, recordado como hombre de los pobres

LIMA, Perú (CNS) — El Cardenal Juan Landázuri Ricketts, ex- Arzobispo de Lima, fué sepultado el 19 de enero en la Catedral de Lima, cerca del altar de Santo Toribio de Mogrovejo.

El Cardenal, quien prestó servicios durante 35 años, más que cualquier otro Arzobispo de Lima, murió de cáncer el 16 de enero a la edad de 83 años.

El Cardenal Augusto Vargas Alzamora, de Lima, presidió la Misa de Funerales, que fué concelebrada por más de 50 obispos, incluyendo al Nuncio Papal, Monseñor Fortunato Baldelli, y más de 150 sacerdotes.

Entre los asistentes a la Misa estuvieron el Presidente del Perú, Alberto Fujimori, acompañado por miembros de su Gabinete; el presidente del Congreso peruano, Víctor Joy Way; el Alcalde Alberto Andrade, de Lima; y el presidente del Tribunal Supremo, Raúl Castillo.

Después de la Misa, millares de peruanos de Lima y otras ciudades alrededor del país rindieron homenaje al Cardenal Landázuri, mientras su cadáver pasaba en procesión a través de la plaza central de Lima. Batallones de todas las fuerzas armadas peruanas participaron en la procesión.

Aproximadamente 50 personas por minuto habían desfilado por la Catedral para presentar sus respetos al cardenal peruano durante una vigilia de tres días efectuada en dicha catedral.

Vargas y Cipriani — El Cardenal de Lima, Augusto Alzamora Vargas (izquierda) con el Arzobispo Juan Luis Cipriani Thorne en las afueras de la residencia del Embajador japonés en Lima el 26 de enero, a los 41 días que los rebeldes se apoderaron de la residencia. Los dos eclesiásticos la visitaron para reenfocar el interés de la Iglesia Católica en resolver la crisis.

Monseñor Cipriani se une a comisión para ayudar con crisis

LIMA, Perú (CNS) — Un Arzobispo peruano que ha desempeñado un papel principal en la crisis de los rehenes en la residencia del Embajador del Japón, fue nombrado como miembro de una comisión que procura dar fin a la situación pacíficamente.

“Monseñor Juan Louis Cipriani, Arzobispo de Ayacucho, ha sido llamado a participar en la Comisión de Garantes por los Obispos peruanos, con el asentimiento de la Santa Sede y con la esperanza de que pueda lograrse una solución rápidamente”, dijo el portavoz del Vaticano, Joaquín Navarro-Valls el 16 de enero en el Vaticano.

A través de varias visitas dentro de la residencia, el Arzobispo ha celebrado Misas, escuchado confesiones, ayudando a redactar comunicados y hasta negociado por la puesta en libertad de algunos rehenes.

Más de 20 miembros del Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru se apoderaron de la residencia durante la noche del 17 de diciembre, durante una recepción a la que servía de anfitrión el Embajador del Japón, Morihisha Aoki.

Los rebeldes retuvieron a más de 500 comerciantes, embajadores y otras personas de alto rango como rehenes, y habían puesto en libertad a la mayoría de ellos para el 6 de enero. Los rebeldes tenían aún a 74 rehenes el 17 de enero.

La comisión fue propuesta por el Ministro de Educación, Domingo Palermo, representante del gobierno peruano en las negociaciones con los rebeldes.

El dirigente rebelde Néstor Cerpa Cartolini dijo que él aprobaba la creación de la comisión propuesta. También dijo que los rebeldes no ejecutarían a ninguno de los rehenes, pero dijo al gobierno que los rebeldes no consideraban que su rendición fuera un fin aceptable para la situación.

“El modo pacífico no es que salgamos deponiendo nuestras armas y rindiéndonos. Eso es imposible”, dijo Cerpa.

Diócesis publica guía bilingüe de reflexión para el milenio

PHOENIX (CNS) — La Diócesis de Phoenix ha publicado una guía para todo el año en español e inglés, para ayudar a los católicos a prepararse para el nuevo milenio, reflexionando sobre las lecturas dominicales del Evangelio.

La guía de reflexión de 56 páginas, titulada “Jesús: La Puerta al Milenio”, fue publicada como suplemento especial del “Catholic Sun”, el periódico diocesano de Phoenix.

Para cada lectura del Evangelio desde el 8 de diciembre de 1996 hasta el 23 de noviembre de 1997, la guía destaca también una “cita de semilla” para reflexión y oración, y delinea los modos de compartir y vivir la Palabra.

“Oro porque esta oportunidad para el crecimiento espiritual les ayude a dar testimonio a otros que ‘Jesucristo: Ayer, Hoy y Para Siempre’, está en medio de nosotros” dijo Monseñor Thomas J. O’Brien, Obispo de Phoenix, en un mensaje publicado en la guía.

Arzobispo insta a perdón cinco años después de terminar la guerra

SANSALVADOR (CNS) — Cinco años después del fin de la guerra civil de El Salvador, Monseñor Fernando Sáenz Lacalle, Arzobispo de San Salvador, pidió a todos los residentes que procuren la reconciliación a través del perdón.

“No es cuestión de olvidar lo que sucedió; antes bien, se trata de volverlo a examinar con nuevos pensamientos”, dijo Monseñor Sáenz a los feligreses en una Misa celebrada el 18 de enero.

La Misa fue celebrada en la Basílica de la Virgen de Guadalupe, en San Salvador, para señalar el quinto aniversario del acuerdo de paz auspiciado por las Naciones Unidas entre el gobierno y los rebeldes izquierdistas.

El Presidente Armando Calderón Sol, los ministros del gobierno y los dirigentes comerciales, así como el Nuncio Papal, Monseñor Manuel Monteiro de Castro, se hallaban entre los concurrentes a la Misa.

Los ex-guerrilleros, que ahora son un partido político, tuvieron un servicio religioso separado en otra parte de la ciudad.

Ochenta mil personas murieron, otras 9,000 desaparecieron y decenas de millares de salvadoreños huyeron de sus hogares durante los 12 años de combates.

A tenor de los acuerdos de paz, el ejército fue disminuido en gran medida en su tamaño y purgado de oficiales superiores acusados de abusos contra los derechos humanos.

Se estableció una nueva fuerza de policía civil y se pusieron en práctica reformas constitucionales. Los ex-rebeldes depusieron sus armas y formaron un partido político.

Una comisión internacional de veracidad, establecida al final de la guerra, recomendó entre otras medidas una campaña pública de reconciliación, así como indemnizaciones económicas para las víctimas de los abusos contra los derechos humanos.

En una carta del Papa Juan Pablo II, leída por el Nuncio durante la Misa del 18 de enero, el Papa daba gracias por las gestiones de los salvadoreños para consolidar el trámite de paz.

La Compasión

El diccionario de la Real Academia define la compasión como “sentimiento de ternura y lástima que se tiene del trabajo, desgracia o mal que padece alguno”. Seguramente no suena bien en los oídos del lector la palabra lástima, pero el diccionario nos reconduce a la ternura desde el amor, pues define lástima como “enternecimiento y compasión que excitan los males de otros”.

Vemos, por tanto, que la compasión se exterioriza, se manifiesta como sentimiento de ternura, pero necesariamente arranca del amor, se nutre de él, pues sabemos que la ternura es siempre consecuencia del amor.

La compasión está al alcance de cualquiera. Ser compasivo es estar diligente, pronto y atento a revestirse de ternura y comprensión para con aquellas personas que se sienten amenazadas por la enfermedad, la pobreza y la desesperanza.

La toma de conciencia ha de iniciarse con un trato cordial y afable, expresado en el gesto benevolente; la amplia y sincera sonrisa y la palabra cálida y amable que despierten en el hermano que sufre los sentimientos de comunicación y amistad.

Practicas la compasión cuando acoges al que sufre y le das cálida y sincera hospitalidad en tu corazón con sumo tacto y delicadeza, y le aceptas de manera tan natural y espontáneamente que es imposible que se sienta humillado por tu acción.

Si miras detenidamente en tu derredor verás que son incontables las personas aisladas, solitarias, enfermas y pobres que desfallecen lentamente a pocos pasos de ti. Esboza una sonrisa, tiende cálida y firme tu mano, y ofrécete solícito como hermano y amigo, y proporcionarás consuelo y esperanza.

Al crear hábitos de hacer el bien a nuestro semejantes, nos conducimos seguros por la única senda que acorta todas las distancias hacia la auténtica felicidad. Como dice un proverbio hindú: “El bien que hicimos la víspera es el que nos traerá la felicidad por la mañana”.

Pidamos a nuestro Señor Jesús que, mediante el Espíritu Santo, haga surgir de lo más profundo de nuestro corazón, hacia nuestro prójimo, la palabra HERMANO.

El padre Stanley Rother: el primer santo de Oklahoma?

OKLAHOMA CITY (CNS)— Para los 1,600 residentes del pueblo agrícola de Okarche, cerca de Oklahoma City, hay una clase de estupefacción al pensar que uno de los suyos podría llegar a ser un santo.

Pero para aquéllos que le conocieron, son precisamente la sencillez y la devoción de Stanley Rother lo que llena sus corazones de orgullo natal.

Herido mortalmente en una masacre hace casi 16 años, el biznieto de un agricultor alemán inmigrante que ayudó a establecer el pueblo de Okarche, en el centro de Oklahoma, fué uno de 13 sacerdotes — y el primer sacerdote estadounidense — martirizado durante la guerra de guerrillas de 36 años en Guatemala, una tragedia que se estima causó 140,000 muertes.

El humilde sacerdote que se ha convertido en un modelo para los católicos de Oklahoma es una de las 78 personas cuyos nombres han sido presentados para la canonización al Vaticano en febrero último por los obispos de Guatemala.

De ser canonizado, el Padre Rother sería el primer santo nacido en Oklahoma y sólo el segundo — después de Santa Elizabeth Ann Seton — nacido en los Estados Unidos.

El día en que el Padre Rother murió, el 28 de julio de 1981, las tropas mataron también a 13 personas e hirieron a otras 24 en el pueblo de Santiago Atitlán, una villa aislada a 50 millas al suroeste de Ciudad Guatemala.

El cadáver del Padre Rother fué devuelto a su pueblo natal de Okarche, pero su padre, Franz, estuvo de acuerdo con que se sepultara el corazón y alguna sangre de su hijo en la iglesia de Santiago Atitlán, donde se levantó una placa conmemorativa.

El Padre Rother — En esta foto de archivo se muestra al Padre Stanley Francis Rother, con niños indígenas tzutuhiles, poco antes de su muerte en 1981. El fué el primer sacerdote estadounidense muerto durante la guerra de guerrilla de 36 años en Guatemala.

Mary Spinks, Benefactress Of Diocese, Dies At 83

HENDERSONVILLE — Mary R. Spinks was a firm believer in Catholic education. A lifelong supporter of Catholic schools, Spinks last fall donated $130,000 to Immaculata School for a computer networking project. "I have always felt education is so very important, and I think more emphasis should be put on it," she said after making the gift.

The Immaculata School benefactress and member of Immaculate Conception Church died Dec. 23, 1996, in Hendersonville after a brief illness. She was 83.

A native of Jersey City, N.J., Spinks split her residency between Henderson County, N.C., and Florida for the last 14 years. She was the wife of Frank Spinks, who died in 1994.

Her commitment to Catholic schools will continue to serve the diocese for many years. In her will, Spinks created an endowment in the diocesan Foundation for Immaculata School. The $300,000 gift will supplement existing scholarships, according to Luanne Ferguson, Spinks' attorney. "The endowment will also be available to minority students. Mrs. Spinks was a very strong believer in reaching out to multicultural needs," Ferguson said.

"Through her gift to the diocese, Mrs.

Spinks is leaving a legacy to Immaculata School so it can continue to grow and serve more students in the future," said Jim Kelley, director of development and executive director of the Roman Catholic Foundation of the Diocese of Charlotte. "More and more of our parishioners are following her example by remembering the Church in their will and estate plans."

Sister of Holy Cross Judith McKenna, principal, said students and faculty plan to have a memorial Mass in Spinks' honor. "She was part of the Immaculata School family. We certainly will miss her. Because of her generosity and interest, we were able to complete what was outlined in a five-year plan in one year," Sister Judith said of the computer project. "Mrs. Spinks wanted to do something that would positively affect the future of our children."

Spinks is survived by a daughter, Maureen Schan of St. Petersburg, Fla.; one granddaughter, Bonnie Nixon; one grandson, William Nixon; and three great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by a grandson, John Nixon.

A funeral Mass was held at Immaculate Conception Church. Burial was in Chapel Hill Memorial Park in Largo, Fla.

Student Designs Logo For Church Anniversary

HIGH POINT — As part of the 12-month celebration of its 50th year, young parishioners at Immaculate Heart of Mary Church were asked to design an anniversary logo to be used on church banners and liturgical items. Nine-year-old Robert Bosken, a fourth-grader, submitted the winning entry and was awarded with a U.S. savings bond by Father Joseph Zuschmidt, pastor.

Robert is the son of Kathy and Donald Bosken of Thomasville.

Refugee Office Receives Grant

CHARLOTTE — Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte's Refugee Office recently received notice of a $10,000 challenge grant from the Kathleen Price Bryan Family Fund of Greensboro.

To receive the grant, the Refugee Office must raise an additional $20,000 in new pledges from non-governmental sources by Jan. 1, 1998.

The grant will enable the Refugee Office to develop its Community and Family Strengthening Project for newly arrived refugees who have been resettled into the Charlotte region from around the world. This unique project is designed to enhance the refugees' orientation to the U.S. by disseminating pertinent information and facilitating relationships between the refugees and the community, particularly area agencies such as the Police and Health Departments.

The Refugee Office is an agency of Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte which empowers its refugee clients to become self-sufficient, self-reliant and productive members of society by providing quality services and a caring support system upon their arrival into the Charlotte area.

The Kathleen Price Bryan Family Fund supports North Carolina nonprofit initiatives in arts, youth, education, health, human services and public interest.

For more information, contact the Refugee Office at (704) 568-8806.

Speedway President To Receive Award

BELMONT — Howard A. "Humpty" Wheeler Jr., president and general manager of Charlotte Motor Speedway, will receive the Grace Award in ceremonies at Belmont Abbey College Feb. 21 at 6:30 p.m. in the Student Commons.

The event, sponsored by the Belmont Abbey College Board of Advisors and the Belmont Abbey College Associates, will culminate in an after-dinner presentation of the award bearing the name of Charles L. Grace, president of Cummins Atlantic, Inc., in Charlotte and long-time supporter of Belmont Abbey College. Grace serves on Belmont Abbey's Board of Trustees and is its past chairman.

The Grace Award is presented each year to an outstanding area businessperson and citizen whose contributions and commitments have significantly improved the quality of life throughout the region. Wheeler is the third recipient of the honor.

Wheeler, whose professional background includes stints as a writer, television producer, management consultant and boxing promoter, joined the Charlotte Motor Speedway in 1975. During his tenure the speedway has doubled its seating capacity to 120,000.

Among the numerous awards he has received over the years, Wheeler was honored with the Charles J. Maxwell Award, given by North Carolina to the most outstanding person in travel and tourism. He has been named National Head Injury Foundation's Man of the Year and Humanitarian of the Year by the Charlotte Athletic Club as well.

He has served on the board of directors of the Boy Scouts of America, the N.C. Governor's Travel Commission, Catholic Social Services and the Charlotte Drug Council. He currently serves on the boards of the National Head Injury Foundation, Speedway Children's Charities, Belmont Abbey College and the N.C. Governor's Sports Commission.

Proceeds from the award ceremony will provide scholarship funds for the families of employees of the Belmont Abbey College Associates. For information on attending the event, call (704) 825-6890. Costs are $85 per person, and $625 for corporate tables seating eight.

U.S. Priest Heads International Youth Sports Exchange Program

By LUCIEN CHAUVIN

PROSPECT, Conn. (CNS) — On most Monday nights, Father Philip Cascia can be found in the church hall of St. Anthony's Parish in Prospect calling out bingo numbers.

If he's not on hand for the weekly bingo, Father Cascia can sometimes be found having dinner with Cuban President Fidel Castro in Havana or with Vietnamese Prime Minister Vo Van Kiet in Hanoi.

Since 1989, Father Cascia has added the role of global goodwill ambassador to his daily tasks as parish priest.

His personal relationships with international officials have helped open doors to the teams made up of U.S. high school students he takes to foreign countries.

As the head of Intersport, a nonprofit group that takes high school sports teams to countries that do not have the best of relations with the United States, Father Cascia has led groups of young men and women to China, Cuba, South Africa, Vietnam and the former Soviet Union and its now-independent nations. He is currently working on a deal to bring a high school baseball team to North Korea.

The 40-something diocesan priest said he had the idea to organize Intersport in 1988 while teaching and coaching at a Catholic school in Waterbury, Conn.

The sports exchange involves mainly baseball and soccer teams, but Father Cascia has also taken U.S. high school volleyball teams and wrestlers to different countries.

The priest said the push to formally organize Intersport came from an unexpected source: former President Ronald Reagan.

Father Philip Cascia (right), founder and director of Intersport, poses with martial arts action star Chuck Norris. Norris, a supporter of Father Cascia's nonprofit sports exchange program, shares a sporting interest with the priest, who is a fourth-degree black belt in freestyle jujitsu.

When the students returned from Moscow, Father Cascia received a call from the White House saying that Reagan wanted to meet them. The president wanted to know what the students thought about young people in the Soviet Union. Father Cascia said the president took him aside and told him the sports exchange was an excellent idea and that he wanted the priest to continue the effort.

"The program gives young people an opportunity to appreciate what we have here ... but at the same time see that our country is not the center of the universe. It is a chance to build understanding among young people in different countries," the priest said.

Mother Teresa's Health Improved

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa's health has improved from what it was in late January, said her doctor.

"I have been visiting her. She is better now," Dr. Ashish Kumar said Feb. 2.

Mother Teresa, 86, had been suffering respiratory problems and spinal pain, and in late January the spiritual director of the Missionaries of Charity expressed doubt that she would live much longer.

The Missionaries of Charity postponed a scheduled Feb. 2 election of a superior general of their order during their chapter until the end of February. Church sources said the nuns' reluctance to elect a new leader while Mother Teresa is still alive was seen as a major hurdle in the run-up to the chapter, postponed from October because of Mother Teresa's ill health.

"They will hold discussions for about a month. Any time during that period they can make up their mind to choose a successor to Mother Teresa," Archbishop Henry D'Souza of Calcutta told reporters Feb. 2.

The archbishop announced in early January that, because of health problems, the 1979 Nobel peace laureate and founder of the Missionaries of Charity had decided to step down as the order's superior general.

In August and September, Mother Teresa was hospitalized for three weeks for cardiac problems, malaria and a lung infection.

She fell out of a chair and injured her head about a week after her release and was hospitalized for 10 days.

In November, Mother Teresa underwent angioplasty to remove blockages in two of her major coronary arteries.

She was released from the hospital and returned to the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse Dec. 19.

Junior And Senior High Youth Workshop Addresses Sexuality

Faith Formation Coordinator for the Central Region Peg Ruble (center) leads a group activity with teens during the sexuality workshop at St. Mary Church.

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

SYLVA — Cold winds and icy roads could not deter more than 70 junior and senior high youths from meeting at St. Mary Church in the foothills of the Smokies to add yet another chapter to the "Battle of the Sexes."

For two hours that morning, junior high students from St. Mary's, St. Joseph's in Bryson City, St. John's in Waynesville and St. Francis of Assisi in Franklin listened and responded as Peg Ruble, faith formation coordinator for the central region of the diocese, helped them explore their feelings about the opposite sex. The senior high group met in the evening.

Ruble previously addressed concerns at a meeting with 20 of their parents to explain the purpose of these sessions. She stressed the need for a healthy, holistic and Catholic approach to sexual issues which she insists must be situated in the wider context of human relationships.

Ruble reviews Church documents with parents, assuring them that the ideas she presents represent authentic Church teaching. The statement of the U.S. bishops, Sexuality: A Perspective on Life-long Love and Learning (United States Catholic Conference) and The Catechism of the Catholic Church are her chief resources, but she also draws from Scripture and documents like the encyclical Humanae Vitae. "I make this an educational opportunity for parents, too," says Ruble.

The faith formation coordinator does not only review the documentation, but tries to show its appropriate usage with differing age groups. "I share insights developed by Richard Richert in the Insight into New Creation Series, a parish education program in human sexuality published by Brown and ROA, which is one of the best written resources for educators," explains Ruble, who conducts an average of 15 such workshops each year.

Ruble says parental concerns usually focus on the mixed messages their children are receiving — the bold assertions of the culture vs. a perceived weakness of Church proclamations. She contends that the Church's message is already strong enough, but that parents must try to live it in their homes, and that parishes have an educational responsibility in this area. "Sexuality is an area often neglected by parishes because it is a countercultural topic that people still find scary and difficult to discuss," says Ruble, who has teens of her own. She describes her personality as one that lends itself to presenting such information factually, but in a loving way. "The topic is a hard one to broach with people. In order to do so you have to know what true love looks like," she says without flinching.

For their part, the teens participating in the session seemed energized by the opportunity to exchange views openly. They engaged each other and their adult leaders in group exercises designed to elicit their convictions about masculinity and femininity.

The challenge of being male and female, created in the image and likeness of God, but conditioned by the values of an exploitative culture, surfaced repeatedly. For the youngsters convened at St. Mary's, this was a challenge charged with peril and promise alike.

Church Minister Of Music Directs Schola Cantorum

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

WINSTON-SALEM — It was a match made in heaven: Dr. Marc Innes, an accomplished opera singer, musician, and director, and Schola Cantorum Carolinanae Borealis, a group of singers from area churches, performing together traditional Catholic music.

When Dr. Innes, Minister of Sacred Music and Liturgy at Holy Family Church in Clemmons, was asked to direct Schola Cantorum Carolinanae Borealis (Latin for "Northern Carolina School of Plain Songs or Chants"), he couldn't resist the challenge even though he was currently directing six other choirs. "I agreed to be the music director provided the group perform once a month at Holy Family," he recalled.

Part of their mission statement reads to "reacquaint congregations with the rich tradition of music in the Roman Catholic Church." Schola, in existence for only 11 months, is achieving this goal through performances at parishes in the Diocese of Charlotte at celebrations such as Father Thomas Walsh's retirement Mass and Christmas midnight Mass at Holy Family; the 75th anniversary of Holy Angels Church in Mt. Airy; the Feast of St. Francis Mass at St. Francis Church in Mocksville; and monthly Masses at St. Phillip Church in Statesville.

"It's wonderful to be able to preserve the traditional celebration of the Mass," said Enid Hageman, a member of the school whose love for the chants inspired her conversion to Catholicism years ago.

The repertoire of the group consists of more than 60 selections ranging from Gregorian chants such as "Ave Maria" (chant) to "Adoramus te, Christe" and from "The Seven Last Words of Christ" and Mozart's "Ave Verum Corpus." The Gregorian chants, however, stand out as the hallmark of the group.

Inspired during the period c.370-c.600, the Gregorian chants were named after Pope Gregory I, who was instrumental in their early preservation. Often done without accompaniment, the chants have stylistic difference, described as plain, severe, jubilant, or ornate. The text, sung in Latin, relies heavily on the Psalms and illustrates a strong influence by Jewish tradition and liturgy.

"These sacred hymns have survived the test of time, and the Latin text as suggested in Vatican II continues to provide the necessary bridge for all cultures," said Dr. William Chimiak, parishioner at St. Leo Church in Winston-Salem and bass singer for Schola.

In the tradition of the first School of Singers in Rome, Dr. Innes provides not only musical direction, but ensures deeper interpretation of the music through instruction on sacred liturgy and history. Besides extensive European studies, he obtained seven degrees in the U.S., including a Doctorate of Musical Art from Julliard School of Music, Master of Music from Northwestern University and a Master in Sacred Music at the Eastman School of Music.

Through Schola, Dr. Innes and his 16-member school are educating congregations who may have forgotten or who have never been exposed to this timeless and harmonic prayer form. Members also see the music as a way to bring dignity, reverence and beauty to the Mass. St. Augustine goes even further to say, "Music, that is the science or the sense of proper modulation, is likewise given by God's generosity to mortals ... to lead them to higher things."

Dr. Marc Innes directs the traditional selection "Panis Angelicus," at Midnight Mass at Holy Family Church. For information about joining the school or if you would like to invite Schola to sing at your parish contact Dr. Marc Innes, (910) 766-8133 or visit their web site, <http://www.wfu.edu/~ebrokea99/schola/schola.html>.

New Jersey Inmate's Release To Have Abortion Prompts Debate

SOMERVILLE, N.J. (CNS) — The release of a Somerset County Jail inmate to have an abortion and the appointment of an attorney to represent the interests of the unborn child have touched off a debate in New Jersey. But the fate of the unborn child of 33-year-old Sonya Jackson remained uncertain Feb. 5, four days after Superior Court Judge Leonard Arnold released her from jail, citing Jackson's "absolute right to terminate this pregnancy." "This court is not a legislature, this court is not a political arena, this court is bound by the law," Arnold said in announcing his decision. However, he left standing his earlier appointment of lawyer Richard F. Collier Jr., president of the Legal Center for the Defense of Life in Morristown, as the unborn child's legal representation.

Geneticist Resigns After Admitting Embryo Experiments

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Dr. Mark Hughes, a geneticist at a Catholic-run medical center in Washington who had admitted in January to performing tests on human embryos, has resigned voluntarily. Hughes was the director of the Institute for Molecular and Human Genetics at Georgetown University Medical Center, where he also was a professor. The resignation, dated Jan. 24, was announced Feb. 3. According to Georgetown spokeswoman Clare Fiore, the Jesuit-run university did not ask Hughes to resign because he told university officials the work was an isolated incident and not research that involved ongoing experimentation. "He apparently wanted to focus on that type of research, which he cannot do here because of our restrictions," Fiore said. "He is no longer an employee of the university."

Religious Leaders Urge New Approach To Welfare Overhaul

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (CNS) — In an unprecedented show of unity, Missouri religious leaders have asked that principles of justice and compassion be applied to a retooling of their state's welfare system. The heads of Missouri's four Catholic dioceses were among the 47 religious leaders who signed the statement on welfare. "We can only work for welfare reform that strengthens families, encourages productive work and projects vulnerable children," the statement said.

Bishops Denounce Ruling For Man's Right To Assisted Suicide

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (CNS) — The Florida Catholic Conference has denounced a ruling by a state judge that a dying man has the constitutional right to have his doctor help him die. Judge S. Joseph Davis Jr. of the Palm Beach Circuit Court, ruled Jan. 31 that Charles E. Hall is legally entitled to have his physician, Dr. Cecil McIver, provide him with a lethal dosage of drugs so he can commit suicide, thereby ending his suffering from AIDS. Davis' order included an exemption from prosecution for McIver and anyone else present at or assisting in Hall's suicide. And it attempted to limit the scope of the ruling to only Hall's specific case.

Vatican Confirms One-Day Papal Visit To Sarajevo In April

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican confirmed that Pope John Paul II will make a one-day trip to Sarajevo in April to promote reconciliation and religious harmony in the wake of several years of war.

The pope will travel to the Bosnian capital April 13 at the invitation of the Bosnian government and Cardinal Vinko Puljic of Sarajevo, a Vatican statement said.

It said the pope had two main objectives in making the visit: to encourage the Catholic community in Bosnia-Herzegovina to carry on its "active Christian witness in every part of the country," and to promote understanding and cooperation with the members of all religions.

The Vatican provided no details of the papal program, but one main event was expected to be an outdoor Mass for the approximately 500,000 Catholics of the Sarajevo area.

Philippine Bishops Call For Calm Following Murder Of Bishop

COTABATO CITY, Philippines (CNS) — Philippine bishops called for calm after Oblate Bishop Benjamin de Jesus of Jolo was killed Feb. 4 outside the cathedral in his southern Philippine apostolic vicariate. Archbishop Fernando Capalla of Davao, who heads the Philippine bishops' Commission on Interreligious Dialogue, warned against "rushing to make connections between Bishop de Jesus' murder and Abu Sayyaf or other Muslim extremist groups. It is hard to make any conclusions right now. It is the responsibility of the church to make strong pronouncements against the deed, but to offer forgiveness in spite of it. That's what our Christian faith means."

Ecuadoran Church Urges Economic Reform

QUITO, Ecuador (CNS) — The majority of Ecuadorans favor the resignation of President Adbala Bucaram, according to a poll published Feb. 3 in the capital, Quito. According to a poll conducted by the firm Cedatos, 57 percent of those interviewed called for the president's immediate removal from office. Another 41 percent said Bucaram should remain in office, but only if he makes important changes in his policies. The president of Ecuador's bishops' conference, Bishop Jose Mario Ruiz Navas, said in January that the Bucaram government is "making the rich richer and those most in need even poorer."

Parish Profile

BISCOE — When Our Lady of the Americas Church was founded in 1989, a multicultural outreach to the ever-growing Hispanic community in the Charlotte Diocese was further strengthened.

Bishop John F. Donoghue, along with Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father Gerard R. Clarke, established the first Catholic Church in Montgomery County. Among the local population were thousands of Hispanics, whose rich cultural and religious heritage is reflected and lived in Our Lady of the Americas Church. Father Clarke, who had previously served as chaplain at the Hispanic Center in Charlotte, was designated administrator. He remains in Biscoe today.

Bishop Donoghue dedicated and blessed the sanctuary in February 1990. Two Masses in Spanish were originally scheduled, along with one in English. Since then, growth in the congregation prompted the addition of a Saturday vigil Mass as well.

In an effort to promote Hispanic cultural and religious identification, Our Lady of the Americas Church is adorned with symbols: an image of Our Lady of Guadalupe — "la Morenita" — and a large candle with many colored bands representing the flag colors of Hispanic peoples. Outside, cacti surround the church's mission bell and mission cross.

For Hispanics and Americans, the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe is significant in that she was specified patroness of Latin America in 1910 by St. Pius X and patroness of the Americas by Pope Pius XII in 1945.

The emphasis on community is strong in the parish, with ethnic lines disappearing into a co-operative effort involving Hispanic and American parishioners alike. American parishioners, of which there are about 100, work side-by-side with their Hispanic brothers and sisters to maintain the church's vigor, both physically and spiritually. Parish volunteers renovated the church building's interior in 1992, for instance, and a group of retired parishioners maintains the church grounds and assumes the responsibility of church repairs.

The educational mission within Our Lady of the Americas Church is shared by volunteers through an active CCD program taught in English and Spanish. Hispanic parishioners learn English as a second language at the church as well.

More than 2,000 immigrants have come to the area since the church's founding; now, the Hispanic population totals about 5,000 people. Father Clarke, who holds a doctorate in Spanish Literature and taught Spanish in high school and college for 32 years, serves as shepherd to a family of more than 400 people who gather to celebrate the universality of their Catholic faith. He notes that the American parishioners have served as a bridge to the Hispanic community through volunteering services, talents and financial resources in spiritual, educational, and social activities.

Called To Conversion

GREENSBORO — Bishop William G. Curlin presided at the Rite of Election and the Call to Continued Conversion for the Greensboro and Winston-Salem vicariates Feb. 16.

During the ceremony at Our Lady of Grace Church, 35 catechumens and 75 candidates were presented by Father James O'Neill, OSFS, pastor of St. Paul the Apostle Church and vicar for the Greensboro vicariate.

A catechumen is a person who has been found ready by the community of faith to take part in the next celebration of the sacraments of initiation (baptism, confirmation, Eucharist) at the Easter vigil. A candidate has been baptized in another Christian tradition and is preparing for reception into full communion of the Roman Catholic Church, or is a Catholic who is preparing to complete their reception of the sacraments of initiation (confirmation, and/or Eucharist).

"The conversion you will be living isn't a once-in-a-lifetime thing. It's a day-to-day journey," Bishop Curlin said. "I thank God for your presence here and the work of the Spirit which is bringing you into the fullness of our sacramental life in Christ, especially the Eucharist."

Diocese of Charlotte Explores Options For Triad Catholic Schools

Plans for triad Catholic Schools in the next millennium were endorsed February 11, 1997 by pastors and principals (of the triad region) and presented to Bishop William G. Curlin for consideration.

The proposal includes plans for construction of a more regionally located state-of-the-art high school, and the creation of a middle school on the same site as a relocated Bishop McGuinness High School.

A middle school would create classroom space in existing elementary-level schools to allow for anticipated growth in the triad area.

In a Feb. 13 letter to triad area Catholics, the Reverend Mauricio West, Vicar General and Chancellor, said, "Each of these elements or directions is designed to provide the best option in accommodating needed expansion in relation to triad Catholic schools. Bishop Curlin will convene another meeting of the participants within the coming months to initiate a review of a number of pastoral, educational and financial issues related to this expansion project."

Currently, the triad area is served by five elementary (K-8) schools: Our Lady of Grace, St. Pius X in Greensboro; Our Lady of Mercy and St. Leo in Winston-Salem; and Immaculate Heart of Mary in High Point. Bishop McGuinness High School in Winston-Salem, (9-12) is the only high school serving the region.

Church Officials Consider How To Counter Muslim-Christian Violence

By JOHN THAVIS

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Across Asia, the Middle East and Africa, recent episodes of violence between Muslims and Christians have worried church officials and left them wondering how to best counter the trend.

The victims have ranged from a slain bishop in the Philippines to poor Christian families in Uganda. So far in 1997, Muslim-Christian conflicts have also erupted in Pakistan, Egypt and Indonesia.

But while deploring the violence, Vatican experts have been careful not to characterize it as a "religious war."

Bishop Michael L. Fitzgerald, secretary of the Vatican's Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue, cautioned that each episode has local causes that must be taken into consideration.

"I wouldn't see this as a reflection of a crisis in Christian-Muslim relations. It is obviously discouraging, but it underlines even more the need for talking together," he said Feb. 16.

Father Felix Machado, who heads the Asian desk at the Vatican council, said the real problem was the growing politicization of religions.

"I don't think Islam and Christianity, as religions, are in conflict. But there is more exploitation of religious differences for political gain, with one group being placed against the other," he said.

The result, he said, is frequently a "majority-minority syndrome" in which tensions can easily flare up into violence.

Vatican diplomatic officials were attentively studying the political and religious aspects of several events:

— In Jolo, a Muslim-dominated area of the Philippines, Bishop Benjamin de Jesus was shot to death outside his cathedral in early February, and authorities detained two suspects linked to an extremist Muslim group.

— In Indonesia, several hundred people were killed in Borneo in January as indigenous Dayaks, who are Christians, attacked the homes and shops of Muslim immigrants.

Later, thousands of Muslims ransacked the churches, banks and shops of a Christian neighborhood outside the Indonesian capital of Jakarta. Muslim-Christian riots in other parts of the country left several dead and scores of buildings burned.

— In Pakistan's Punjab region in early February, after decades of peaceful relations, local Muslims rioted against Christians, destroying 12 churches and burning hundreds of books used by seminarians and students. Some 800 Christian families were left homeless in the violence, which one priest said was abetted by local civil authorities.

— In northern Uganda, Muslim guerrilla groups reportedly conducted three raids on Catholic missions in late January, vandalizing church structures and stealing equipment and money.

— In Egypt, Muslim militants stormed a church charity meeting in early February and shot to death nine Coptic Christians. It was the worst violence inside a church in recent Egyptian history.

Vatican officials said Bishop de Jesus' murder in the Philippines underscored the increased risk Catholic leaders are facing in some predominantly Muslim areas. In places like Algeria, bishops and priests have been specifically targeted by Muslim extremists.

But as Bishop Fitzgerald pointed out, Bishop de Jesus' funeral was attended by hundreds of Muslims from the area, and the slaying was quickly followed by encounters between the local bishops and Muslim representatives.

"This is significant. There are signs that religious leaders are coming together," Bishop Fitzgerald said.

Others questioned whether the religious aspect of the Philippines killing may have been overplayed and noted that authorities now think a family grudge played a part in the crime.

Jesuit Father Thomas Michel, a Muslim expert who knew Bishop de Jesus well, said the biggest single factor in the attack may have been the easy access to guns in the Philippines. That's a worrisome development in other parts of the world, too, he said.

"The trend that I find is not so much of Muslim-Christian violence, but a trend of availability of weapons, which in itself induces people to acts of greater vio-

Task Force Addressing African-American Concerns

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

CHARLOTTE — As a result of a formal position statement issued by the Diocese of Charlotte's African-American Affairs Ministry expressing concern over the relative absence of African-Americans throughout the Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools Systems (MACS), members of the ministry and school officials have formed a task force to address issues raised.

The task force, which includes members of the African-American Affairs Ministry's board of advisors, MACS schools principals, board members and administrators, and two Charlotte area priests, has met several times since November.

"There is still the perception that MACS does not welcome African-American students, and that school officials don't seem to be bothered by the small number of African-American students and faculty. They also do not seem concerned about the decline of the African-American student population," said Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, vicar for African-American Affairs. There are only three African-American teachers on the MACS faculty, he added.

Currently 69 of the 3,631 students enrolled — or 1.9 percent of the MACS student population — are African-American. That figure is down from 79 students during the 1995-96 school year, according to Dr. Charles LeBlanc, MACS regional superintendent.

"It's obvious we do not have the percentage of African-Americans we'd like to," the MACS superintendent said. "Every person who wants the opportunity for a Catholic education should have it."

"It's important that Catholic education be available to those people who wish to make use of its services, regardless of gender or nationality. We need to look at the human issue, not the color issue," he added.

The task force has formed five subcommittees to address areas of concern raised by the African-American Affairs Ministry. They include: employment — to look at ways to increase the number of African-American teachers and administrators; enrollment — to explore ways to increase the African-American student population; curriculum — to include African-American tradition, history and culture in curriculum; cultural awareness — to ensure faculty and student body are knowledgeable to the culture and needs of African-Americans; and economic equality — to ensure that neither social nor economic inequalities are allowed to deny equal opportunity for admission to MACS schools.

"Historically, Catholic schools have been a great evangelizer in the African-American community," Rev. Mr. Todd noted.

Dr. Michael Skube, superintendent of diocesan schools and a member of the employment subcommittee, said MACS officials have begun actively recruiting more African-American faculty members. The superintendent visited Winston-Salem State University and North Carolina A & T University last week. "We will also take part in a private school minority job fair and the University of North Carolina at Charlotte's minority job fair in March," he added.

To better understand African-American perceptions of the MACS system, the task force is planning to distribute a survey to all black parishioners in the 11 churches that compose the Charlotte vicariate. The group hopes to have parishioners complete the questionnaire after Mass in the next few weeks.

"The survey is designed to find out why African-American (Catholics) are not putting children in the Catholic Schools system," Rev. Mr. Todd said.

Pat Murphy, principal at Our Lady of Assumption School, feels the task force is a positive step to creating better Catholic schools for the future. "It's important that we continue to talk to and understand each other, our cultural likenesses and differences, people to people."

"We need to work together, share our giftedness with each other, and be responsive to one another," she added. "I see this as a very beneficial thing to all in the schools and community."

During the process, the schools' Catholic identity must stay at the forefront, Dr. LeBlanc noted. "We've got to keep priorities in mind," he said. "Catholic modeling should take priority to all modeling."

The task force will meet again in March to tabulate the results of the survey, and to finalize what subcommittee recommendations will be implemented. Schools that make up the MACS system include: All Saints, Our Lady of the Assumption, St. Ann, St. Gabriel, and St. Patrick (all elementary schools); Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School; and Charlotte Catholic High School.

"In their synagogue was a man with an unclean spirit; he cried out, 'What have you to do with us, Jesus of Nazareth? Have you come to destroy us? I know who you are — the Holy One of God!' Jesus rebuked him and said, 'Quiet! Come out of him!' The unclean spirit convulsed him and with a loud cry came out of him." (Mark 1:23-26)

Campus Ministry Provides Home Away From Home

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — Helping college students grow spiritually, academically and culturally is a task not taken lightly by Alberta Hairston.

The Catholic campus minister for North Carolina Agricultural & Technical State University and Bennett College since August 1994 says she has seen Catholic students "go underground" with their faith during college for a variety of reasons. That's why she considers campus ministry a most valuable resource.

"Campus ministry is very important for college students, especially in an area where the faith is in a minority," she says. Throughout the Diocese of Charlotte, the ministry receives funding from the annual Diocesan Support Appeal. At North Carolina A & T and Bennett — schools with all or nearly all African-descended student populations — Hairston has seen Catholics face challenges to their faith and, at times, their lifestyles.

"Primarily, our Catholic students are coming out of northern and eastern areas where they're accustomed to large, urban, predominantly black Catholic churches," she says. "Here, they find themselves in a minority both in their churches as well as among other Christians on the campuses. We try to offer students a safe, comfortable place to be who they are — to be black and be Catholic — in addition to giving them a place to call home."

In addition to the sense of family the students share with Hairston, whom they affectionately call "Mama H.," the ministry provides educational resources which teach and reinforce a variety of Church tenets. "We have a whole wall of books that have to do with faith and religion," the campus minister says, "as well as books that discuss Islam, Buddhism and the Protestant movement. If there are questions, I try to teach and make available to them the answers."

While Hairston notes that the group is largely self-managed, she hopes to provide a sense of direction in many aspects of college life. "I encourage them to govern themselves because that's part of the educational process," she adds. "I try to supplement their classroom learning by encouraging them to take leadership roles, to do hands-on things that ultimately are going to help them regardless of their major."

The group gathers for informal discussions on matters of faith, morality, sexuality and justice, she says, and every month they come together for Mass with Father Frank Connolly, pastor of St. Pius X parish in Greensboro. Hairston sees a steady influx of students come into Thea House, the Catholic student center, where a television room, kitchen, study areas and other amenities are frequented daily. Funds from the DSA allowed Hairston to purchase a much-needed computer recently as well.

The students also look for ways to offer outreach to the local community. By participating in events which celebrate African contributions to Catholicism and American society, for instance, the students combine faith with culture.

Hairston says such a form of outreach not only can enrich the community as a whole, but the students become active at their schools, in their cities and in their churches, "doing those things that will help them be participants in a parish setting, rather than just sitting in the pews."

She adds that almost half of the students involved in Catholic campus ministry at Bennett and A & T are not Catholic. "They're learning a lot about being Catholic, and they're having their questions (about the faith) answered," Hairston says. "They're learning Catholicism in an informal way by getting a feel for the Church and its form of worship."

For Alberta Hairston, campus ministry goes far beyond the walls of Thea House, located just across the A & T campus entrance. Seeing the ministry as an evangelical, educational and cultural outreach, she says it can provide much-needed strength to young Catholics during a potentially turbulent period of formation.

"Today, to say you're Christian and proud of it is often just not the popular attitude," she says. "So it becomes important that the Church presents itself to students in a friendly, approachable manner. Through campus ministry, they can see faith in action."

Pope Encourages 'Mutual Trust' Between Teachers And Teen-agers

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Curriculum revisions and new teaching methods will not improve education unless teachers are able to create an atmosphere of love and respect in their classrooms, Pope John Paul II said.

"One often sees in teen-agers today contradictory attitudes which are a sign of confusion in the search for a fully satisfying self-realization," the pope said in a Feb. 18 message to middle school teachers.

The process of education must help them overcome their confusion and that cannot occur unless each student feels respected and trusted, the pope told the Union of Italian Catholic Middle School Teachers.

As Catholic educators, he said, the teachers must be committed to ensuring their professional relationship with their students is "lived in a spirit of love. This requires the offering of mutual trust and a commitment to collaboration between teacher and student."

Whatever confusion teen-agers today seem to be experiencing, "one needs to look upon youths with trust; one must dialogue with them using open and direct language," he said.

But no matter how easy talking may be for some teachers, the pope said, their words will have little impact if they are not backed up by attitudes and a lifestyle proving the teacher's maturity and Christian faith.

Some 400 representatives of the teachers' association were holding their national meeting in Rome in late February. The pope sent a written message rather than meeting with the group because he was on his annual Lenten retreat.

"The Christian knows well that the future of the world is not only awaited, but is planned for and built with the positive elements of the present," the pope said.

As the Italian government, like many others, debates a reform of the country's education system, Pope John Paul asked the teachers to be "courageously open to innovations" and active participants in the design of new programs.

Pope Says Sinfulness Will Not Lead God To Destroy World

By JOHN THAVIS

ROME (CNS) — Although people continue to commit sins, we should not fear the world's destruction as divine retribution, Pope John Paul II said.

The pope made the remarks during a visit Feb. 16 to a Rome parish, his last major official function before beginning a weeklong Lenten retreat.

Appearing fully recovered from a bout with the flu earlier in the month, the 76-year-old pontiff said Mass and spoke at length to groups of parishioners at a church on the southern outskirts of Rome.

His sermon recalled the biblical account of Noah and the great flood, prompted by the sinfulness of the people of that era. Yet the Bible makes it clear that God promised he would not send another flood to devastate the earth, he said.

"Through the ages of history, people have continued to commit sins, perhaps even greater than those committed before the great flood," the pope said.

"But from the words of God's covenant with Noah, we understand that no sin can lead God to annihilate the world which he created," he said.

The pope said this new vision of the world underscores the value the created world has in God's eyes and his commitment to protect it from destruction.

Speaking later from his apartment window above St. Peter's Square, the pope endorsed the traditional Church approach to Lent — with prayer, fasting and charity.

He said prayer can take many forms, in a community or as an interior dialogue with God. Fasting should ultimately aim to make hearts more open to God, he said.

Charity, the pope said, should be more than an occasional gesture. It should become an attitude of welcome and sharing with others.

"It's enough to open one's eyes to discover the great many people around us who are suffering materially or spiritually," he said.

Violent Trend Worries Church Officials,

lence. I think we're really missing the point when we attribute this to religious causes, although that may be the pretext," he said.

Ethnic or economic factors are often key to such violence, church officials said. The attacks in Borneo, for example, essentially involved a clash of two Indonesian cultures over territory. The armed forays in Uganda occurred in an area long tormented by ethnic-based roving militias.

In Pakistan, however, at least one clearly religious factor was cited: the ease of invoking religious blasphemy laws, which have been adopted over church objections. The rioting in Punjab was sparked by an accusation that Christians had desecrated the Koran, the Islamic holy book.

As for the ongoing Christian-Muslim dialogue, church officials said they were convinced it was doing some good.

Father Michel pointed to the southern Philippines, where he said Christians and Muslims have worked hard in recent years to prevent a recurrence of widespread conflict that marked the 1970s. There and elsewhere, it's hard to guess what would have been happening if there had been no dialogue, he said.

Father Michel, who dealt with Muslim issues for the Vatican from 1988 to 1994, said he thought the whole concept of the church's dialogue with Muslims was evolving in a more realistic way.

"Previously, I think we had this unexamined idea of dialogue that fit in with a historical optimism, that things were going to continue to get better," he said.

"Now, I think we understand that dialogue has got to be carried on in the worst of situations, at all times," he said.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Observance Of Lent Means Following God's Will, Says Pope

Dear brothers and sisters,

Today, Ash Wednesday, the Church begins her Lenten journey of prayer, penance and renewal in response to Christ's call to conversion: "Repent, and believe in the Gospel" (Mk 1:14). During Lent we fix our eyes on the cross of Christ and ponder its message of salvation and hope. The Lenten season is a time for growth in holiness through meditation on God's word and the discipline of personal and common prayer, fasting and almsgiving. We are encouraged to show our conversion by practical solidarity with those in need. This year, as the church prepares to celebrate the Great Jubilee of the Year 2000, Lent calls us in a special way to deepen our love of Jesus Christ, the incarnate son of God and the savior of humanity. Through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary, may all Christians grow in faith during this holy season and bear ever more joyful witness to the crucified and risen Lord.

Pope Asks Rome Clergy To Keep Churches Open As Much As Possible

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II asked the clergy of Rome to keep their churches open as much as possible in order to meet the busy schedules of their faithful.

Priests, he said Feb. 13, must make a greater effort "to meet the needs, schedules and desires of our people, who often work very tiring hours and who need to find priests ready to listen and able to give a word of faith, encouragement and consolation."

At his annual meeting with the pastors and leading clergy of the Diocese of Rome, which he heads, the pope focused his attention on efforts to strengthen the Catholic identity of Rome and its citizens in preparation for the year 2000.

The program, which includes the training and commissioning of some 12,000 lay missionaries committed to home visits and distributing copies of the Gospel, will not succeed without the guidance of holy priests, the pope said.

"We are ministers of reconciliation and, therefore, we carry out an essential part of our mission through ministry in the confessional," he said.

"But we cannot do so with sincerity and effectiveness if we ourselves do not first turn constantly to the mercy of God, assiduously confessing our sins and imploring the grace of conversion," the pope told the priests.

Priests do not own the Word of God, nor the sacraments, nor the parish churches, he said.

"The priest receives from Christ the goods of salvation on behalf of each (of the) faithful and of the entire people of God," he said.

Priests must preach the Gospel in fidelity with Church teaching "without ever confusing it or substituting it with our own words or views," he added.

Reflections On The Third Sunday Of Lent: Spirit And Life

The first reading (Exodus 20:1-17) contains the Ten Commandments from the Sinai covenant. The ancient Israelites modeled this covenant on contemporary political suzerainty treaties — First came the identification of the overlord, "I am Yahweh your God." This was followed by a historical prologue reciting benefits conferred, "who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery." Then follow the stipulations or laws to be obeyed.

The Ten Commandments fall into two groups of five listed in descending order of importance. The first is literally, "Do not prefer any other god to me." The Hebrews were not yet monotheists; but for them there would be only one God, Yahweh, whom they would serve. The second is originally, "Do not make any graven image of me" (in later versions, it is reworded to refer to idols). It reflects an insight that Yahweh could not be adequately represented by any statue; the only true "image" of God was man and woman in their complementarity.

The third commandment, "Do not use my name," meant that one should never pronounce the personal name of Israel's God (adonai, LORD, is substituted in worship). This also served to keep people from using His name in curses and blessings and thus seeming to manipulate Him. The fourth, "Keep the sabbath," enjoins a weekly day of rest. The fifth is to "Honor your parents," those who stand in the place of God.

The sixth commandment, "Do not murder," reflects the worst thing one could do to a fellow member of the community. The seventh, "Do not commit adultery," has more to do with life than sex. At this time, life after death was thought of only as survival in the name and person of one's children, and this gave the man the right to know who his children were. The eighth commandment really means "Do not kidnap," the next worse thing you could do to another was to sell him into slavery. The ninth, "Do not commit perjury," is rather minimalistic: when you are called to testify, then you must tell the truth. The tenth states, "Do not covet (desire and take) your neighbor's house (property)," spelled out as "wife, manservant, maidservant, ox, and ass."

These Ten Commandments have often been called the highest moral code of antiquity. In the rather primitive terms of 3,000 years ago, they expressed loyalty to their God by promising not to prefer other gods to Him, to practice justice toward their fellow countrymen, and to exact vengeance upon their enemies. Early Christians saw in the teachings of Jesus an invitation to interiorize these laws and concepts: Love your enemies, forgive one another, don't even be angry with another.

In some respects, we have come a long way in our religious insight since biblical times, especially in our acknowledgment of the dignity of the individual human person, in our concepts of freedom and religious liberty, and in our abhorrence for slavery and racism. In some other areas, we seem not to have made as much progress. But our challenge is to keep growing. Our call as Christians is to follow Jesus along His way, not literally by living as He did in first-century Palestine, but by becoming more and more imbued with His Spirit and by thinking and acting in accord with it in the realities of this day and age.

Keeping Promises, Taking Responsibility

Whitney Lee could not decide what she wanted to be. A doctor, maybe. Other days, she thought a country singer. Of course it really looked like fun to ride on the back of a garbage truck. But Whitney was only four and had plenty of time to decide.

But she didn't. On Super Bowl Sunday, 1995, Whitney Lee died. She was killed when a 17-year-old drunk driver smashed into the car her mother, Ann Lee, was driving.

Time stopped only for Whitney. Mrs. Lee also has a three-year-old son who needs her. And there is something else she must do. A promise she made to her daughter while the child lay in a coma for two days: "You will not die in vain. I will not let anybody forget you, or how you died."

So she leaves her Gulfport, Miss., home to tell her story. She lobbied her state legislature for tougher drunk driving laws. She has spoken out on television. Mostly, though, Ann Lee talks to young people, showing them pictures of her child, dead and alive. She begs them not to drink and drive.

One day the driver, no longer so young, will also speak on the same subject. That won't be until he finishes a 20-year prison term for driving under the influence and causing the death of Whitney Lee. The judge's sentence includes five years of probation. During that time he will have to address youth groups on the "effects of his decision" to drink and drive.

The judge included one other requirement with the consent of the Lees. He levied a $520 fine. Every week for the next 10 years the convicted driver must write a check for $1 and send it to the Lee family. And it must include the notation "for the death of your daughter, Whitney."

It's been said that you can't legislate morality. That's true — up to a point. Taking responsibility for our actions is integral to being people of conscience. This young man may not need a sentence to make him remember his actions and their consequences, but insisting on reflection, however brief, is just and merciful.

Guilt is a terrible burden. Yet one is worse. When you have hurt someone, whether intentionally or as the result of bad judgment, you must feel shame. Mark Twain said that a human is "the only animal that blushes. Or needs to." People may boast about not playing by the rules — or the Commandments. But it is a matter of simple responsibility to admit when something is your fault.

Once you acknowledge to yourself what you have done wrong, the next step is confession to God and God's people. Contrition calls for accountability. You need to act, to make amends, to do everything possible to right the wrong. Some matters are so serious, there can be no complete restitution. Whitney Lee will never grow up. Still, you need to ask forgiveness. It may not be granted. That's something that you have to live with.

What about the person who was wronged? Why should someone forgive? Does the guilty one deserve it? "Forgiving means to parson the unpardonable, or it is no virtue at all," said G.K. Chesterton. I know that to God no one is unpardonable.

Ann Lee never wants anyone to forget her daughter and that includes the young man responsible for her death. But forgiveness she has already offered him.

"Blessed be the merciful, for they will receive mercy."

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Turning the Other Cheek

Q. In a column some time ago, you spoke of the Gospel passage about "turning the other cheek" (Mt. 5:39).

My nephew asked me about this recently, and I could not give a satisfactory answer. He didn't say why he asked, but I think his children and family take unfair advantage of his generous nature.

What does this commandment of Jesus really mean? If someone hurts us must we keep on letting them? Shouldn't we ever, as we used to say, "give them some of their own back"?

A. The verse you quote contains one of the many remarks of Jesus that seem to contradict experience and common sense. I think at least two considerations are vitally important here.

First, Jesus is acknowledging and warning us against the danger that if we resist evil the wrong way, we become the evil we are fighting.

Part of evil's insidiousness is that it conquers us, can only conquer us, not by its own strength but by enticing us to imitate the violence against life, the destructiveness, which is the very essence of evil.

It is no coincidence that shortly after the words you quote (Mt. 5:39) Jesus commands us to become perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect, who makes the sun and rain fall on the good and the bad.

If we are to be holy as the Father is holy, our Lord insists, then we too must treat people, even the "worst," with kindness and compassion. If we don't, we become like them.

In other words, in our response to evil of whatever kind we are never detached observers or actors. We are deeply involved personally.

If our reaction becomes (as we are so often tempted), "I can be just as mean as you are," that is precisely what will happen. We become as evil as the evil we claim to reject.

To say it in traditional terms of temptation by the devil, he almost never tempts us directly to evil; our hearts and wills are too much attracted to what is good for that to happen. So he seduces us to think we are doing the good by responding to evil and lies with our own version of lies and of disrespect for life and truth, and he has us hooked. It's what happened to Adam and Eve. It's what happens in every sin.

This theme is central, of course, in the Sermon on the Mount (Mt. 5-7) and is repeated throughout the Gospels, nowhere so clearly as at the cross.

The Gospel writers tell us that when all their animosity on Calvary was played out, the enemies of Jesus seemed mysteriously to realize the cosmic event that was taking place before them. All the evil and violence they stood for was being conquered by the infinite, perfect good hanging on the cross.

So they played their last card. "Let him come down from the cross now and we will believe" (Mt.

27:42). Show us that your raw power is greater than ours, and we will accept you. Interestingly, this challenge was considered so important to the crucifixion event that both Matthew and Mark repeat it twice.

Of course Jesus refused, and by His death and resurrection proved, we believe, that His and the Father's kind of loving, life-giving and life-respecting power would prevail in the end.

As St. Paul sees it, the maxim "Do

Little Flower Was Not The First

There was an error in a recent edition of The Catholic News & Herald concerning the Church of the Little Flower in Revere, N.C. It was actually the third Catholic Church in Madison County, not the first.

The following is from the record of Jesuit Father Andrew V. Graves:

1886—St. John's Catholic Church in Hot Springs, N.C., was a mission of St. Lawrence Church in Asheville.

1905—Mrs. Bessie Safford, being the only Catholic in Hot Springs, feared vandalism to the church. She wrote Bishop Haid, requesting his permission to tear down the church and build a chapel next to her home. She was granted permission on the condition that her gates would never be closed to the public. The chapel was built of local stone and attached to the northwest corner of her house on the west side. She used the altar, organ, and pews from St. John's. She bought stained glassed windows from France. The chapel was named "Our Lady of Loretto."

1931—Jesuit Father Lawrence Toups was appointed pastor at Revere. Since there wasn't a church there, he offered Mass at people's homes, and sometimes under big pine trees. He frequently spent the night in his sleeping bag.

About this time in 1930 or early 1931, a gift of $1,000 was given to him to build a church there. It was named "The Church of the Little Flower."

Is There More Than One Brand Of Catholicism?

Permit me to seek clarification regarding a statement in The Catholic News & Herald some weeks ago.

Mr. Scott Hahn, a convert to Catholicism, was referred to as a "zealous and balanced communicator of contemporary orthodox Catholicism."

It leads one to wonder if this suggests there's a brand of Catholicism out there that is not orthodox? If so, it'd be neighborly of someone to identify the alternative species. I feel there are many in the Diocese of Charlotte that would find this matter of great interest.

Pro-life Speaker To Visit Hickory Parish

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — The year 1997 is already booked for Barbara McGuigan, California's education director for Human Life International. Fortunately, St. Aloysius Church is among her stops as she presents a two-part retreat, "God's Plan for Love and Life," Feb. 28 and March 1 sponsored by the Charlotte Diocese Respect Life Office.

After lectures at Georgetown University and Loyola College-Baltimore, a Catholic high school retreat in Pennsylvania and taping a youth program for television, McGuigan, twice nominated a Catholic Woman of the Year, will come to Hickory. "We are fortunate to have someone of her caliber come to the diocese," said Maggi Nadol, diocesan Respect Life Coordinator.

Even after 20 years of ministering to youth and their families, McGuigan still marvels at how the ministry has blossomed. Starting with a pro-life talk to a confirmation class and their sponsors in California, she now speaks to thousands each year, not including radio and television appearances.

"I remember that first talk and the apprehension I had after saying 'yes' to the confirmation director. The more I studied abortion, the more depressed I became and the more I felt I was not the one to give this talk," McGuigan recalled.

God had a different idea. The success of that presentation launched many other speaking engagements. Today she is in great demand, traveling as far as Australia, Canada, Costa Rica, Ireland and New Zealand with her message of God's love and mercy.

"For the first few years, I concentrated my talks on abortion and the victims of abortion. But I realized that if I wanted to make a difference I needed to get at the root of the problem: abused sex," said McGuigan. Thus was born one of her retreats, "God's Plan for Love and Life," which included not only talks on the sanctity of life but the proper use of God's gift of sexuality.

When questioned about her success, she gives the credit first to God, then to her parents and the Church. She added that her parents had prepared her for this ministry, "They took the time to answer all my 'whys?' I encourage parents to inspire their children with the truth so they can go on to inspire others."

Since abstinence is not a popular topic in a culture which preaches the opposite, McGuigan is often the "David" against "Goliath." But somehow, through her genuine love of youth, her message is making a difference.

Missionaries Of Charity Superior General To Be Elected By Feb. 25

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Missionaries of Charity sources in Calcutta say a superior general for the religious order will be selected "definitely on or before Feb. 25."

They told UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand, that the elections will be held when the 123 electors at the order's ongoing chapter are ready.

The congregation's constitution allows for up to four scrutinies, or ballots, and there are no set time limits, so an election date cannot be set exactly.

Mother Teresa, who founded the order in 1950 and has led it since, is now 86 years old and ailing, and she is not expected to be re-elected. She was elected unanimously in all seven previous chapter elections since 1961.

The current chapter, being held at the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse in Calcutta, was postponed from October due to Mother Teresa's heart problems, which required her to undergo her third angioplasty in five years in November.

The chapter convened following a mandatory eight-day retreat held Jan. 16-23, but the election process scheduled to begin Feb. 2 was postponed.

Missionaries of Charity sources earlier said the sisters' reluctance to elect a successor to Mother Teresa while she is ailing was proving to be a major hurdle.

The motherhouse is closed to outsiders during the chapter. The electors and nuns involved said they are sworn to secrecy concerning chapter proceedings and added that Mother Teresa is well.

The Missionaries of Charity constitution stipulates that the superior general, called "mother" by congregation members, be elected by secret ballot with an absolute majority of votes.

If three scrutinies fail to produce an absolute majority, a fourth will take place, with only the leading two members from the previous ballot eligible for votes.

Should a tie happen in the fourth ballot, the elder of the two sisters is considered elected and cannot refuse her election unless the chapter allows it.

Six councilors general are also elected through secret ballot to help manage the affairs of the congregation.

According to the constitution, the superior general must be at least 40 years old and have been in final vows for at least 10 years. She may be re-elected for a second but not a third term.

The successive elections of Mother Teresa as superior general were exceptions to the constitution and were made with permission from the Vatican.

The Subtle Mysteries Of Ordinary Time

By FATHER PATRICK DALY

During Ordinary Time, the thoughts of pastors turn to the mysteries of the Church and of the sacred liturgy. These mysteries allow no easy answers. Here's a sample:

1. Why is it that, no matter how long the various parts of Mass take, people always blame the length of the Mass on the homily? "Ran a little long today, Father."

2. How come Catholics can't live without the weekly parish bulletin? Last winter we missed the bulletin a couple of times during huge snow storms. People were positively testy. "What do you mean no bulletin? What will I read during the homily?"

This mystery has a corollary. How come if everyone reads the bulletin, they can't remember it? During the week they call the parish office so that the secretary can read it to them. Perhaps they just like hearing it.

3. Why does it take so long to line the people up for the Offertory procession, and why do they always seem so surprised when the ushers come to get them? (What? Now?) We can sing six whole verses of a song, and they are still only halfway up the aisle. We have a short aisle.

4. Where do those people go who have to leave the church as soon as they receive Communion? Are they having a sudden anxiety attack? Do they have a plane to catch? Maybe they just want to get to the door and light the vigil candles before they are all gone? (Most likely they are trying to beat the Protestants to brunch at the local Holiday Inn. There is nothing like the promise of eggs Benedict to turn a herd into a stampede.)

I've thought about putting alarms on the doors (Caution: Leaving Mass early will cause alarm to sound!) Once I went to a Baptist church where they locked the doors until the service was over. We have much to learn from our separated brethren.

5. Why do people leave dirty Kleenexes in church? At home do they blow their noses and then just drop the tissues on the floor? I think not. What they seem to do is store them up all week in their purses and pockets, and unburden themselves in church. Maybe we should put litter bags in the pews like the ones people have on the dashboards of their cars.

6. Why won't some people sing? Perhaps they don't know the words. We cleverly have hymnals. Perhaps they don't like music. Perhaps they do like music. Perhaps they don't think it's their turn. No easy answer to this one.

7. How can we get Christian charity to extend as far as the parking lot? People who have just wished each other peace moments before are cutting each other off in the driveway.

These are among the mysteries of "ordinary time."

Videos

"Carmen Jones" (1954)

Bizet's tragic opera is updated to World War II, when a soldier (Harry Belafonte) falls for a pretty worker (Dorothy Dandridge) in a Southern parachute factory, then goes AWOL to follow her to Chicago where he strangles her after she dumps him for a prizefighter. Directed by Otto Preminger, the strong period Americana and fine African-American cast can't overcome the disappointment of the movie's flatly dubbed singing and stiffly staged musical numbers. Sexual situations and innuendo.

"The Jackie Robinson Story" (1950)

Robinson stars as himself in a dramatized account of his life from college athlete and World War II service to being hired in 1946 by Brooklyn Dodgers president Branch Rickey (Minor Watson) as the first black player in organized baseball. Directed by Alfred E. Green, the low-budget production emphasizes Robinson's prowess on the field and his resolve to be a credit to his race, despite insults and threats by white bigots. Halting but sincere treatment of its era's struggle for racial equality.

"Hank Aaron: Chasing the Dream" (1995)

In recounting Aaron's 1954-76 baseball career and his part in opening the major leagues for other African-American players, writer-director Mike Tollin amplifies the newsreel footage with dramatic re-creations and informative interviews. Narrated by actor Dorian Harewood, the feature-length television portrait of an individual and his times knits together baseball nostalgia with social history in unusually compelling fashion that most will find well worth watching.

"Man and Boy" (1972)

Western about a black ex-cavalry man (Bill Cosby) who struggles to maintain his Arizona homestead in spite of racial tensions after the Civil War, with the action centering on the odyssey of father and young son trying to recover a stolen horse. Directed by E.W. Swackhamer, the racial dimension is handled quite well and the story has a certain gritty honesty but the plot has some gaping holes and foggy motivations, especially in a climactic shootout. Stylized violence and some salty dialogue.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

"Nightjohn" (1996)

A young girl slave (Allison Jones) on a cotton plantation in the 1830s faces the wrath of her cruel master (Beau Bridges) after secretly being taught to read by the title character (Carl Lumbly) who's determined to bring the power of literacy to his oppressed people. Directed by Charles Burnett, the television production gets strong performances from a largely African-American cast in a dramaportraying the painful injustices of slavery and one man's attempt to transcend its inhumanity. Some intense scenes of physical and spiritual violence.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Fools Rush In

Sentimental Date Movie Has A Heart

NEW YORK (CNS) — Whether a spitfire from South of the border and a WASP from the Big Apple can find marital bliss in Las Vegas is the focus of Columbia's "Fools Rush In."

Whether the audience can buy the ups and downs of their rocky relationship is the real question — and for easy-to-please romantics the answer is yes. This is a nonviolent, easy-on-the-eyes tale of lust turned to love in the face of constant culture clashing.

Vivacious Isabel (Salma Hayek) works out of Vegas as a photographer, but drives home to Mexico once a week for dinner with her extended Catholic family of parents, five brothers and assorted relatives.

She believes in signs and destiny, and in fact has just broken off with her Mexican boyfriend since there were no signs to indicate he was Mr. Right.

At a Vegas restaurant she bumps into transplanted New Yorker, workaholic Alex (Matthew Perry), and feels it is fate. But Isabel is embarrassed to wake up the next morning beside him — not something a good Catholic girl should do. She flees and he can't locate her.

Three months later she returns simply to inform him she is going to have his baby, but expects nothing in return. After an evening of soul searching, Alex persuades her to marry him immediately and then the fun begins.

Her family at first wants to kill him, while his snobby parents arrive on their doorstep and assume she is merely the Mexican cleaning lady. Isabel is feeling none too sure that he married her for the right reasons and Alex is being pressured to transfer back to New York just when the baby is due.

Instead of a happy family of baby makes three, divorce seems to be their destiny.

The upside of director Andy Tennant's romantic comedy is the depiction of a young couple who made a mistake but are striving to establish a loving and lasting relationship, honor their commitments and start a family in earnest.

The movie also offers a positive portrait of Isabel's Mexican-Catholic family as warm and nurturing, not as stereotypical hot-tempered Hispanics.

The film's vision of Catholicism may be well-meaning as well, but here faith seems mostly a matter of superstition and believing in signs and fate, hardly an accurate reflection of what being Catholic is all about. Nonetheless, the fact that Isabel takes her religion seriously and turns to prayer for guidance is more than the average Hollywood movie would bother to include in its script.

And the movie is centered on Hayek's Isabel, a feisty personality who brings Perry's bland Alex to life as he is suddenly wedded to a culture where people express their emotions openly — and proceed to paint his house all manner of bright colors.

Sure the outcome is predictable and almost in the category of formula when Isabel goes into the fastest first-time labor in history in a downpour at Hoover Dam, scene of their decision to marry in the first place.

But given their believable desire to give their rushed-into nuptials a fighting chance, romantics in the audience will root for them and be pleased by their second wedding, this time a dual religious ceremony with all parents present and accounted for.

Certainly it is a picture of how a marriage can teeter on the brink but not be destroyed if both parties make their best effort to understand and compromise for a greater good.

In other words, it's a sweet date movie, one that is a bit overstuffed sentiment but with its heart in the right place.

Because of sexual innuendo, occasional profanity and an instance of rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material is inappropriate for children under 13.

Happiness in all the wrong places

By Father Lawrence E. Mick
Catholic News Service

"You will receive $10 million!" the envelope shouted at me, while the fine print quietly added "if you have and return the winning number."

Almost every month my mail contains a letter promising abundant riches if I just return my sweepstakes entry form with the winning number. Many of these letters try to tempt me by describing how wonderful my life will be if I am the lucky winner.

This kind of appeal is effective in our culture. Most people harbor a secret dream of winning big someday and having their lives transformed. Just note the long lines of people purchasing lottery tickets when the jackpot climbs to $20 million. "If only we could win," we think, "our troubles would be over."

With the proliferation of lotteries, however, many reports have described the winners' experiences. Apparently, some winners found that winning the lottery was the worst thing that ever happened to them.

Accompanying their newly acquired wealth were headaches, ruined marriages, destroyed friendships and unexpected misery. Which merely proves the old adage that you can't buy happiness.

growth in happiness. Growing in holiness means that we increasingly focus our hearts and our lives on the true source of happiness and turn away from yearning for more. Our hearts have the capacity for more joy than this life can provide.

Every sin is ultimately an attempt to mens to celebrate the scrutinies, we all are invited to "scrutinize" our own lives and to celebrate the sacrament of penance as a way of redirecting our hearts toward true happiness.

Lent is not a time of unrelenting sadness. There may be sadness and remorse over our sins, but the liturgy speaks of Lent as a time of joy.

The first preface for Lent in the missal, for example, says that each year God gives us "this joyful season when we prepare to celebrate the paschal mystery with mind and heart renewed."

As we move closer to the Lord and orient our lives more fully to love, we come to know more and more joy. But this does not mean our lives will be problem-free.

There may be times when we are beset with difficulties and find it hard to feel any joy or happiness. At such times, we need to call to mind and cling to the fundamental truth that God loves us and cares for us: This is the bedrock of our joy.

Even amid life's difficulties and sorrows, this joy remains at a deep level within us, for we know that nothing can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus.

Those who know this happiness are false idols bearing empty promises.

On Lent's third, fourth and fifth Sundays, parishes with catechumens preparing for baptism at Easter celebrate the scrutiny rites, put something or someone else in God's place, hoping to fill the emptiness within.

Happiness is something we all seek. The pursuit of happiness is even listed in the U.S. Declaration of Independence as an inalienable right given by the Creator.

The problem is that we so often pursue happiness in all the wrong places. This can lead us into sin if the temptations that attract us involve sinful behavior. How does this work?

The temptation holds out the hope of happiness. Though the wrong behavior involved cannot make us happy, it is nonetheless the hope of happiness that tempts us.

Curiously enough, our growth in holiness actually can be understood as which are part of the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults. These rites are special times of prayer that God will enable the catechumens to overcome whatever is defective and sinful in their lives and strengthen what is good.

The scrutinies remind us all of the importance of facing the sin and evil that infect our lives.

The first step in overcoming sin is to admit that it has sometimes found a home in us.

But the scrutinies do not focus only on the negative; they also seek to strengthen "all that is upright, strong and good" in the catechumens' lives.

We can only successfully turn from sin if we turn to the good. We will only find true happiness if we turn from the things that offer false hope and turn toward the source of true joy.

Of course, this pursuit of happiness is a lifetime endeavor; we never quite get there in this world. We can find much happiness, and our lives will be increasingly joy-filled as we give ourselves to Christ and live according to the Gospel.

Still, all the joys and happiness that we do experience in this life leave us

"God loves us and cares for us: This is the bedrock of our joy. Even amid life's difficulties and sorrows, this joy remains at a deep level within us."

As a popular song put it several years ago, we go "looking for love in all the wrong places." God is love, and it is to God we must look if we want to be happy.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

It would be an unhappy state of affairs if we were happy and didn't know it. Maybe that's why many counselors encourage people contending with difficulties to take notice of every good thing happening in their lives.

It's not a matter of "wishing away" people's problems or suggesting they don't need to be addressed. But every life consists of more than problems.

—Growth is witnessed unexpectedly (in someone else; in ourselves).

—People thought to be fearful and foolish exercise courage and good judgment.

I believe it does us a world of good if we take notice of all such "happenings." It takes practice, however. So here is a practice plan.

One day this Lent, take time out in God's presence. Ask what good things happened in your life today.

—Were you greeted by someone's uplifting smile?

—Were you grateful that someone else was happy?

—Did you sense God's action in your life?

—Did you complete a task you considered important?

—Did you handle a difficult relationship fairly well?

Repeat this exercise tomorrow and the next day, identifying whatever is good in your life. Think of it as naming God's gifts to you.

Amazing discovery! Formula for happiness

By Anne Hansen
Catholic News Service

My family is barraged daily by messages conveying the notion that the right clothes, car or computer will make them feel happy. These things may bring contentment for awhile. However, when the novelty of the purchase wears off, then what?

Being the mother of five children, I will not deny that putting my money worries aside might make life more enjoyable. But would it be the key to happiness?

I know people who do not lay awake nights worrying about tuition or taxes. They have the means to make just about any purchase. But even they still seem to be searching for that one thing that will finally bring happiness into their lives.

So what is this elusive thing we all search for?

My work allows me to listen to the stories of many families. Their stories are sometimes filled with hurt and uncertainty. I cannot offer a formula for their success, but I can note that there is so much turmoil that they need to stop and reassess priorities and make changes.

The families and individuals that appear the happiest are those who understand what they want out of life and are moving in that direction. They express a real trust in God and a willingness to live by God's commandments.

These people realize that peacefulness within their family is far more important than any material good. Their joy comes from life's simple

She was thrilled to sit and play with her 6-year-old and think of nothing more than what to eat for lunch. She wondered aloud why she didn't do this more often. It felt so good!

It does not work to have happiness as a goal in life. For happiness is a byproduct of our interactions with others.

A woman I was working with in a bereavement ministry training class realized in the middle of the class that she had never allowed herself to grieve for her dead parents. The knowledge that she could still work through the grieving process even years later made her feel hopeful. She left the class with a smile.

Let me propose this as a newspaper headline on happiness: Amazing Discovery — Formula for Happiness: Slow down, simplify, downsize!

Not particularly profound, and Wall Street will not pick it up, but maybe some families will.

their wits end and will do anything to regain control and peace in their homes.

It often comes as a surprise that their own state of mind and feelings may be causing some of the turmoil. When offered advice that includes more family time, fewer business trips and dinner together as often as possible, they are skeptical. It's reassuring, some time later, to hear the success stories.

THIS EDITION IN A NUTSHELL

An unceasing quest for happiness is a factor of the human condition. But in our human predicament, we constantly are challenged by this reality: While growth in holiness goes hand in hand with growth in real happiness, looking for happiness in all the wrong places leads us away from God. What, then, is happiness? And how can happiness co-exist with the problems and perplexities of our actual circumstances?

The peace that can co-exist with trouble

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

The desire for happiness is universal. God's people in both the Old and New Testaments shared the basic human yearning for happiness. But, strangely, they had no word corresponding exactly to our words "happiness" or "happy."

The one word which comes close to what we mean by this elusive state is the Hebrew "shalom." This is commonly translated as "peace," but it means much more than freedom from care or trouble.

"Shalom" is a strongly positive term connoting fulfillment, perfection. As such, "shalom" is a gift from God. Through it, we share in God's perfection. And through it we discover that peace goes hand in hand with following God's will.

In the story of Jesus' birth, the angels sing "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to those on whom his favor rests" (Luke 2:14). A bit later, the aged Simeon will exclaim: "Now, Master, you may let your servant go in peace, according to your word, for my eyes have seen your salvation" (Luke 2:29-30).

Simeon had seen Christ, who is peace.

Since peace is God's gift, human striving for it is fruitless on its own. The fascinating book of Ecclesiastes dramatizes this truth.

The author of Ecclesiastes poses as Solomon: wealthy, wise, sensually indulgent. But he discovers, to his dismay, that none of these things brings him the happiness he wants. He has tried them all and found them to be "vanity" (emptiness) and a grasping for the wind.

Is humanity then doomed to unhappiness?

No. There is a happiness available to everyone, but it is not found in any of those things for which people so frantically strive, and definitely not in an excess of any of them. It is found in a moderate enjoyment of life's simple pleasures.

"Go, eat your bread with joy and drink your wine with a merry heart, because it is now that God favors your works.... Enjoy life with the wife whom you love, all the days of the fleeting life that is granted you under the sun. This is your lot in life, for the toil of your labors under the sun" (Ecclesiastes 9:7,9).

Perfect happiness is beyond our reach, but a measure of real happiness is within the reach of all. And it is a happiness that can co-exist with trouble and pain.

Here I am referring mainly to peace. Remember, peace is not just freedom from trouble. Peace is much more positive. It can arise when you've done as much as you can in a given situation, you've prayed about it and the last step is to remain hopeful.

(Father Castelot is a Scripture scholar, author, teacher and lecturer.)

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

What is your idea of happiness?

"Being content, being with family, feeling secure, feeling loved and loving others. When my spiritual life isn't good, other things aren't good either." — Bryan Barcaro, State College, Pa.

"I'm happiest when I'm in touch with who I am inside and able to express that... I was able to attend the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995, and I was happy to be there working together with women from all over the world for the betterment of women." — Mary Gindhart, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Happiness means ... contentment, being at peace with oneself. Serenity comes to mind. The spiritual qualities are the most important, more than having the nice house, the good job." — Rick Joiner, Richmond Va.

"Love. Having somebody love you.... Good health would add to that." — Don Turney, Reno, Nev.

Seattle Prelate Returns To Ministry After Treatment For Leukemia

By CHRISTINE DUBOIS

SEATTLE (CNS) — Archbishop Thomas J. Murphy of Seattle resumed his public ministry Feb. 10 with a Mass and anointing of the sick at St. James Cathedral.

He took the occasion to speak of his own struggle with leukemia and to challenge the idea of assisted suicide.

The 64-year-old archbishop was hospitalized Dec. 1 with reduced kidney function and acute leukemia. He was hospitalized for 39 days and has been recovering at home since then.

The evening Mass at the cathedral marked the World Day of the Sick, an annual observance initiated by Pope John Paul II in 1993 for Feb. 11, the Feast of Our Lady of Lourdes.

In his homily Archbishop Murphy said that in the past he celebrated such observances as one bringing the gifts of God's word, the Eucharist and anointing to others who were sick.

"Tonight, however, I come as one who also shares the human condition of fragility and illness," he said. "I join all of you who suffer from cancer or leukemia, HIV or aging, broken bones or broken spirits, emotional or physical disabilities."

"I still have leukemia," he told them. "I am still in need of your prayers."

The archbishop administered the anointing of the sick to about 20 people and was himself among the hundreds who received it from assisting priests.

He called it ironic that the last time he met with his people for an evening Mass in the cathedral was in November when Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago died.

"That gathering provided me with the opportunity to reflect on the realities of life and death," he said. "I did not realize then that I would have the opportunity to speak about these same realities from personal experience."

"Our society today finds it far too easy to dismiss the value of the weak and fragile among us," he continued. "The great temptation today is to remove the aging and dying from our midst in the name of compassion or a false sense of autonomy. There is the great cry to legalize assisted suicide to protect the dying from what they fear most: intractable pain, loss of control (and) human dignity, and financial stress."

But "assisted suicide is not compassion," he said. "True compassion is the willingness to share the pain of others, to be present to them, to learn from them and to recognize that human life is a gift from God. We cannot allow a court, a legislature or another human being the right to say that one human being, though fragile, sick or aging, has less value than another."

Decisions about human life "from the moment of conception to the moment of natural death," he said, "are not a matter of only privacy or only the autonomy of the individual."

Instead, "such decisions must recognize the value of faith, family and friends who offer their support, love and care," he added. "Just as quality experiences of living call for the presence of others, the quality experience of dying requires the same."

He said that as someone with a life-threatening illness, he can "appreciate the possibility of death."

"However," he added, "I appreciate even more the care, love, faith and hope that family, friends and health care personnel have shared with me."

He said he plans to choose "only those treatments that offer a reasonable hope of benefit" and not those which would impose "excessive burden" to himself or others.

At a press conference before the liturgy Dr. David White, the hematologist in charge of the archbishop's treatment, said Archbishop Murphy has responded "remarkably well" to chemotherapy but still has slight blood irregularities and is receiving weekly transfusions.

The archbishop said he was looking forward to returning to limited public ministry. He said he was not aware of any plans to name a coadjutor archbishop to assist him.

Facing a life-threatening illness has given him a new appreciation of life, he said. He now savors the splendor of a sunset and pauses to study intricate wood carvings in the cathedral.

"It's like a Polaroid camera," he said. "You look at things and you want to take hold and develop it slowly."

"You do it with people," he added. "You don't say, 'Hi, how are you?' and not wait for an answer, as we often do. You appreciate and savor the moments we take for granted."

Rosalynn Carter Works To Improve Care For Dying

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Faced with an apparent rise in demand for assisted suicide, a new coalition chaired by former first lady Rosalynn Carter is working to improve the care of the dying.

"If the medical community had not failed in caring for patients at the end of life, we would not have to be addressing this issue (of assisted suicide)," Carter said Feb. 13.

She made the remarks at a press conference held in Washington to announce the formation of the "Last Acts" coalition, of which she is honorary chair.

But she said it was not just the medical community but society at large that had failed the dying. "We don't plan for death," she said. "We don't recognize the problems that come with the end of life."

Carter said her husband, former President Jimmy Carter, "hopes the Supreme Court rules against" assisted suicide, but that she agreed with an earlier comment by Dr. Kathleen M. Foley that "before the assisted suicide debate and after the assisted suicide debate, the dying will be with us."

Foley, co-chief of the pain and palliative care service at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, said the coalition will be working to identify "barriers to humane, compassionate end-of-life care in the United States" and suggest ways to overcome them.

Funded by an initial $1.7 million grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the Last Acts coalition is made up of 72 national organizations including the American Medical Association, the American Nurses Association, the American Association of Retired Persons, the National Consumers League and the National Council of Catholic Women.

"Last Acts will be much more than platitudes about a good death," said Dr. Steven A. Schroeder, president of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. "It will challenge patients, families, health care professionals, medical educators, the clergy, and other stakeholders to undertake new and creative efforts to improve care at a critical time in people's lives. It will push for specific reforms across the board — reforms that, if successful, will involve millions of Americans."

Among the specific reforms, he cited:

- Comprehensive health insurance plans that include coverage for end-of-life care and services such as hospice and home care, pain management and palliative care services.

- Standards of practice for health professionals, religious leaders, lawyers and financial managers regarding communication with patients and clients on death and dying.

- Changes in medical textbooks, "so that death is not depicted solely as a failure, but also as the natural culmination of a life."

- Better training for health professionals and clergy in death and dying counseling.

Schroeder said a 1995 study of 9,000 patients in five medical centers, commissioned by the Johnson foundation and reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association, found that patients experience "more pain than is necessary" and that their desires about treatment often differ from the care they receive.

Carter said her interest in care for the dying began when she watched her father die when she was 13 years old. Her grandmother died the following year, and her grandfather — then age 70 — came to live with her family until his death at age 95.

Even now she continues to be a caregiver for her 91-year-old mother, who "wants me home all the time" in Plains, Ga., she said.

"We all will face caregiving in one way or the other, particularly since Americans are living longer with chronic illnesses," Carter said. "I can't think of a more noble undertaking than Last Acts, because the campaign will help people face death with the knowledge that they will be cared for on their own special and unique terms."

For Lent, Cardinal Tells Catholics To Abstain From Judging Others

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — For Lent, Los Angeles Cardinal Roger M. Mahony has asked Catholics to stop “judging and condemning others.”

Citing the Catholic Common Ground Initiative inaugurated last summer by Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago, Cardinal Mahony urged “that a high priority be given to adopting a far more generous spirit of charity and civility towards one another.”

Before his death from cancer last November, Cardinal Bernardin inaugurated the Catholic Common Ground Initiative to unite and revitalize mainstream U.S. Catholics around their shared faith, values and mission.

In his 1997 message for Lent, Cardinal Mahony said he joined the initiative because “I felt that a spirit of harsh judgment, bitterness and disunity were beginning to take hold at many levels in the church here in our country.”

“This strident spirit was being expressed in various columns and letters to the editor in official and unofficial Catholic periodicals and newspapers, on radio talk shows and even in public demonstrations pitting one group in the Church against another,” he wrote.

“I was becoming ever more sad to see this meanness replace the ideal to which Jesus has called us,” he said. “The harm to relationships within the Church itself was growing and the real public scandal exhibited to people outside the church was becoming embarrassing.”

He cited Jesus’ warning in Scripture not to judge or condemn others.

“Too many people continue to discover a small splinter in someone else’s eye without recognizing the wooden beam in their own,” he said. “Joined to this excessive zeal to condemn others is a prideful self-righteousness by which certain people offer themselves as the paradigms of orthodoxy — thus justifying their lack of charity, understanding and forgiveness.”

He suggested that for Lent, Catholics should:

- Not only fast from food and drink, but abstain from “judging and condemning others.”

- Pray “for the unity of our Catholic community, for those with whom we might disagree and for a new civility among all of us.”

- Study and reflect on the Bible, especially passages on Jesus’ patience and forgiveness in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke.

- Prayerfully study the sections of the “Catechism of the Catholic Church” on the characteristic marks of the Church as one, holy, catholic and apostolic.

- Reach out in charity not only to the poor and homeless, but also “to those who may differ with us so that our dialogue and conversation will reflect Jesus’ call in our lives.”

Upon Cardinal Bernardin’s death Archbishop Oscar H. Lipscomb of Mobile, Ala., succeeded him as head of the initiative committee.

Pole Says He Was Mentally Unstable When He Killed Priest

By JONATHAN LUXMOORE

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — The convicted killer of a Polish priest now being considered for beatification has said he believes he was made mentally unstable at the time of the murder by the anti-church ideology of the communist secret police.

However, he added that he had never hated the Catholic Church and had visited his victim’s grave during several day-releases from prison.

“It was like a drug — I was a drugged maniac, definitely not a psychologically healthy person,” said Grzegorz Piotrowski, a former Interior Ministry agent.

“I was so drowned in ideology that even at the risk of the death penalty, as the prosecutor later demanded, I decided to defend the ‘firm’s interests.’”

In an interview with Poland’s popular Super Express daily, Piotrowski said he was not fully aware of what he was doing when he murdered Father Jerzy Popieluszko with three fellow-agents from the ministry’s church-monitoring department in 1984.

“I acted with a feeling of higher purpose. I thought even suffering inflicted on individuals was justified if it secured peace in the state,” he said.

Piotrowski gave the four-hour interview after being granted six months’ release from Piotrkow Trybunalski prison by a Polish appeals court, which accepted his plea to be allowed to support his family with temporary work.

Piotrowski, whose life sentence was reduced to 15 years in 1987, was freed on parole after serving just nine.

However, the Supreme Court ordered him to return to jail in February 1995 after ruling that the parole order had “failed to reflect society’s sense of justice.”

The three other agents convicted of the slaying were also released early after two controversial sentence revisions.

Piotrowski told Super Express that, after the murder, he had “finally sobered up” after watching Father Popieluszko’s funeral on television. He added he had paid several visits to the priest’s Warsaw graveside during 24-hour home leaves, and the faces of Father Popieluszko’s mourning parents had become “deeply etched” in his memory.

“Shocked by the thousands of people I saw there, I began to understand what had happened,” Piotrowski said.

The bound and gagged body of the 37-year-old Father Popieluszko, who was well known for his work among industrial workers from Poland’s then-outlawed Solidarity movement, was dredged from a reservoir at Wloclawek, Poland, in October 1984.

A formal process for his beatification was launched Feb. 8 at Warsaw’s St. Stanislaw Kostka Church, where the priest is buried.

Preaching at the Mass inaugurating the beatification, Poland’s Catholic primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, said the process would not be “straightforward or easy” and would aim at “proving through proofs and testimonies” that Father Popieluszko’s death “had its foundation in the Church’s faith.”

However, he added that the Church believed all conditions had been fulfilled in the priest’s case.

“An act of martyrdom must conform to circumstances described by church law, meaning a persecutor who is full of hatred for God and the Church, and a persecuted person who placed God above his own life,” the cardinal said.

A former prosecutor in the Popieluszko case, Edward Wende, told Poland’s Catholic information agency KAI Jan. 31 that Piotrowski had written letters to several Catholic priests, as well as Father Popieluszko’s parents, which “if honest, testify that he is currently experiencing internal changes.”

Piotrowski told the newspaper: “There are moments now when, with all the power of my will, I call to the figure of Father Popieluszko, addressing him intimately. But it is only a monologue — from the other side, there is only silence.”

Airline Officials Allege Gunfire Caused Crash That Killed Bishop

JOLO, Philippines (CNS) — Airline association officials alleged gunfire may have caused a plane crash at the Jolo airport in which a retired Filipino bishop and three others died.

Government officials said an official investigation was not complete.

Lito Juane, vice president of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots' Association, said Feb. 17 that the plane had been "shot at seven times" in the right wing, referring to the association's independent investigation into the Feb. 14 crash.

The day of the crash, witnesses said sparks could be seen coming off the right wing shortly after takeoff. According to Jolo residents, armed bandits in hills near the airport occasionally fire at arriving or departing planes.

But Renato de Villa, Philippine secretary of defense, said Feb. 18 that the association's investigation should not be taken "at face value."

"I hope that people would not jump to conclusions until after an official investigation on the matter," he added.

Retired Bishop Antonio Nepomuceno of Cotabato, Philippines, died in the crash the day he attended the funeral of Bishop Benjamin de Jesus, apostolic vicar of Jolo.

Bishop Nepomuceno, one of several bishops who participated in the funeral Mass, was in the plane bound for Zamboanga when it hit a tree just after takeoff.

In addition to the 71-year-old bishop, a magazine reporter, the pilot of the single-engine plane and an unidentified man were also killed.

Thousands of Christians and Muslims attended the Feb. 14 funeral at Jolo's Our Lady of Mount Carmel Cathedral for Bishop de Jesus, 56, who was shot and killed Feb. 4 as he was getting into his car outside the cathedral.

Soldiers held back crowds who heard the service broadcast on loudspeakers outside the church. Government snipers occupied the belfry, and some 2,000 soldiers were on duty in the town amid police intelligence reports that Muslim extremists planned to assassinate more Christian leaders.

A liturgical dancer waved a bamboo cross holding a cassock stained with red paint, moving fellow bishops and other participants to tears, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. Bishop de Jesus was wearing a cream cassock and skull cap when he was shot outside the cathedral in Jolo, 560 miles southwest of Manila.

During the processional, 26 Philippine bishops and Archbishop Gian Vincenzo Moreni, apostolic nuncio to the Philippines, walked under a canopy of swords raised by 60 Knights of Columbus clad in white uniforms and feathered hats.

Archbishop Carmelo Dominador F. Morelos of Zamboanga and Father Filadelfo Estrella, Philippine Oblate provincial, assisted the main celebrant, retired Bishop George Dion of Jolo, 85.

In a message to Filipino Catholics,

Pope John Paul II described Bishop de Jesus as "a true servant of peace and a tireless worker for harmony" between the region's Muslim majority and the rest of the population.

Catholics account for about 14,500 of the 624,000 people within the boundaries of the apostolic vicariate, which serves nine parishes and two mission areas.

Police detained a man and his 19-year-old son in connection with the murder. The two were said to be sympathizers of the outlawed Islamic extremist group, Abu Sayyaf.

Earlier, the Philippine bishops' conference denied press reports that Masses in the apostolic vicariate had been canceled to bring speedy resolution to the killing of Bishop de Jesus.

The national Philippine Daily Inquirer had reported that Masses were canceled in mourning for the bishop.

UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand, reported that Msgr. Pedro Quitorio, bishops' conference spokesman, said services had been moved to the Our Lady of Mount Carmel Chapel, where the bishop's remains lay prior to the funeral. The chapel is located in the compound of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate College of Notre Dame near the cathedral in Jolo.

The more than 1,200-member Catholic Educational Association of the Philippines declared Feb. 14 as a national day of mourning and prayer for Bishop de Jesus.

Marist Brother Manuel de Leon, the association's president, asked member schools to celebrate Mass, light candles and hold eucharistic adoration during the day, to coincide with the bishop's burial in Jolo.

CPA Figures Show Rise In Catholic Circulation Due To Magazines

RONKONKOMA, N.Y. (CNS) — A nearly 10 percent increase in overall Catholic magazine circulation has fueled a rise in the total circulation of Catholic publications in the United States and Canada, according to the Catholic Press Association.

U.S. magazine circulation went up 11 percent from 1996 levels, from 14,011,477 to 15,491,747, said the CPA, a trade association for Catholic publications that is based in Ronkonkoma, a Long Island suburb of New York.

Canadian magazine circulation dropped slightly from 863,637 to 861,611, but the U.S. increase brought the total magazine circulation up to 16,353,358 from last year's 14,875,114, or about 9.9 percent.

Total circulation for 644 Catholic newspapers, magazines and newsletters in the United States and Canada stands at 26,790,289, according to the CPA's tally, up nearly 6 percent from last year's figure of 25,343,743.

The jump in U.S. magazine circulation in 1997 more than makes up for the 6.7 percent drop suffered between 1996 and 1995, when it totaled 15.1 million. This year's increase came despite a slight decrease in the number of U.S. Catholic magazines, from 254 to 250.

Circulation for 167 U.S. diocesan newspapers rose just 0.2 percent, from 5,572,838 to 5,585,511, while the 13 Eastern-rite publications saw a drop of 0.1 percent, from 72,472 to 72,361. The five U.S. national newspapers dropped 1 percent, from 214,000 to 211,637.

Some of the figures were first published in the February issue of the Catholic Journalist, the CPA's monthly newspaper. A statistical summary of Catholic publications was included in the CPA's 1997 directory, also released in February.

Foreign-language publications suffered the biggest circulation drops. Canadian foreign-language publications dropped 37 percent, from 281,500 to 177,100, while U.S. foreign-language publications dropped 15 percent, from 460,528 to 392,128. The U.S. change was attributable to the reclassification of a Spanish-language Puerto Rican newspaper into the diocesan paper category.

But that reclassification led to a near-quadrupling in the "other diocesan newspapers" category, which skyrocketed from 21,700 in 1996 to 81,700 in 1997.

Circulation held steady for Canadian national and diocesan newspapers. The figures remained unchanged from last year's levels of 36,100 and 80,000, respectively.

Newsletter circulation was up, too. While the Canadian number remained unchanged — one newsletter with a 12,000 circulation — U.S. circulation grew 2 percent, to 3.79 million, and the number of newsletters increased by three, from 132 to 135.

The Catholic Daughters of the Americas will solicit funds in April for the "Safe Return Program." The program helps return memory-impaired people to safety through a national database.

1996 Showed Increase In Number Of Missionaries Killed, Says Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In 1996 at least 46 missionaries were killed — an increase from the previous year, according to the Vatican missionary news service that released the report in mid-February.

Forty-one of the victims were working in Africa, 19 of them in Zaire, said a report in the Feb. 20 edition of International Fides Service.

"The Church has always had courageous children who have given their lives in order to carry the light of the faith to the nations, but the past 12 months have seen an exceptionally high number of missionaries killed in action," the report said.

Last year the news service announced that in 1995, 30 missionaries were killed while abroad.

In its summary for 1996, Fides named the 46 priests, religious and lay workers and gave their countries of origin, and where and when they died. The count included three bishops, 18 priests, eight male religious, 13 nuns and four others.

The list started with U.S. Presentation Sister Patricia McAleese, hacked to death on a beach in Ghana Jan. 8, and ended with a Zairian diocesan priest, Father Pascal Kanyamanza, who died Christmas Eve.

Fides noted that the actual number of victims might be higher, because the list does not include those who are missing and feared dead. Among the missing is an African bishop.

The report included without comment the four missionaries known to have been killed in the first six weeks of 1997, including Bishop Benjamin de Jesus of Jolo in the Philippines.

not be conquered by evil but conquer evil with good" (Rom. 12:21) is part of the way of life to which we are committed as followers of Jesus Christ.

On the other hand, whatever good intentions we might claim, once we begin resisting what we perceive as evil with our own pettiness, vindictiveness, unkindness, jealousy and cruelty, we have already been conquered by evil.

Second, very briefly, genuine love and caring seriously obligate us to intervene when we see people act destructively toward themselves or others.

As Jesus says in that same Sermon, however, we are never permitted to judge or correct others until we have first carefully judged ourselves and our motives (Mt. 7:5).

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about the sacrament of penance is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions for Father Dietzen may be sent to him at the same address.

Correction:

The CRISM Corner in the Feb. 14 issue listed March 20 as the date for CRISM's "Day Tripping With Father Mo" event. The trip has been postponed until May. The date will be announced in the CRISM Corner in a future edition of The Catholic News & Herald.

'Climate Of Impunity' Remains In El Salvador, Official Says

By MIKE LANCHIN

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Five years after the signing of peace accords, a "climate of impunity" still exists in El Salvador, "favoring all types of crime," warned an official at the Jesuit-run Central American University.

"Problems which caused so much suffering in the past have still not been resolved and are still going on," said Benjamin Cuellar, head of the university's Human Rights Institute.

The institutions involved in fighting crime and imparting justice "must play their proper roles," added Cuellar.

Human rights groups say 80,000 people died and some 9,000 more disappeared during the country's 12-year civil war, which ended in January 1992.

Cuellar said the new civilian police force set up after the end of the war has failed to live up to expectations. The 7,000-member civilian force replaced the three existing security bodies, which were renowned for systematic human rights abuses and corruption.

The university's Human Rights Institute is currently assisting three Salvadoran families struggling to uncover information about the killings of their sons. In each case, police officers were allegedly involved, yet the investigations have been blocked by the authorities.

According to Cuellar, these cases "call into doubt any advances so far made" in the country. He said they show the "frailty of the situation" in the country, which could "lead us back into something far worse than the past."

In one case, the battered body of Rosali de Vilanova's 24-year-old son, Adriano, was found at the foot of a ditch near his home on Sept. 5, 1995.

"I've been waiting for 18 months for the truth to come out, but nothing has come about," she said. "I have lost faith in the police and the justice system."

Independent investigations carried out by a national newspaper, the human rights office of the Archdiocese of San Salvador and the government's Human Rights Ombudsman office have all identified the assassins as local police officers. A group of officers were initially arrested, but were later released and never charged.

De Vilanova spoke of a "total lack of collaboration" on the part of the public security authorities and of her own frustrations at the lack of justice in her son's case.

These sentiments were shared by the family of Ramon Mauricio Garcia Prieto, a young architect who was gunned down in broad daylight in front of his wife and 2-year-old son in June 1994.

"We don't seek vengeance ... rather that the public knows the truth about Ramon's killing," said his mother, Gloria de Garcia Prieto.

The family believes Ramon was murdered by hired gunmen, among them active police officers, on the orders of an influential military chief. Despite being wealthy landowners and coffee growers, the Garcias have been unable to use their influence to bring the killers to justice.

The Vilanovas and the Garcias spoke of facing a "wall" when they tried to pursue investigations into their sons' deaths.

The Garcias have been receiving death threats, and unmarked cars constantly watch their house.

Carlos Gaytan's attempts to clear up his son's death have been equally frustrating. Fifteen-year-old William Gaytan was shot to death at point-blank range by police officers who had been pursuing him for alleged joy-riding.

The officers involved have been charged with manslaughter, not homicide.

Rock Hill Oratory Announces Summer Camp Schedule

ROCK HILL, S.C. — The Oratory Religion Camp, now in its 27th year, recently announced the schedule for its two one-week 1997 summer sessions. Campers under the age of 13 entering grades 2-7 in September will gather at Camp York in Kings Mountain State Park from July 13-19 and July 20-26 to live, pray, play and study together during a resident experience of Christian living.

Morning sessions are devoted to religion activities, and afternoons to recreation and crafts. Campers live in cabins with staff persons and need to bring clothing, toiletries and bedding.

The cost for each camp session is $90. For more information and applications, contact The Oratory Religion Camp, P.O. Box 11586, Rock Hill, S.C. 29731. Volunteer counselors are encouraged to write for a staff application as well.

Bishop Says Peru Negotiations Open "New Hopeful Stage"

LIMA, Peru (CNS) — Negotiations between representatives of the Peruvian government and Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement rebels represent "the beginning of a new hopeful stage" of the hostage crisis in Lima, said Bishop Miguel Irizar Campos of Callao. "We cannot be overly enthusiastic about this process, because it will take some time," said Bishop Irizar, spokesman for the Peruvian bishops' conference. "It is certainly an improvement in comparison with the stalemate that preceded the dialogue." The first face-to-face meeting between Minister of Education Domingo Palermo and Roli Rojas Fernandez, a lieutenant of Tupac Amaru leader Nestor Cerpa Cartolini, was held Feb. 11 in a house near the Japanese Embassy in Lima. The house was rented by the Red Cross.

Children from the neighborhood of the besieged Japanese ambassador's residence in Lima offer free lemonade to a Peruvian policeman Feb. 7. Signs above the stand read, "Only for journalists and police" and "He who is thirsty come to me and drink: Jesus Christ." Tupac Amaru rebels took over the compound Dec. 17 and were still holding 72 hostages.

Church Changes Needed To Reach Generation X

DE PERE, Wis. (CNS) — The Church is going to have to think and act in a whole new way if it hopes to meet the needs of Generation X, said an assistant professor of religious studies at St. Norbert College. It will be a difficult task because those in Generation X — persons born between approximately 1965 and 1985 — see Christianity "as just another home page," said the professor, Howard Ebert. This is because Christianity has become just another voice, rather than the formative voice in our society.

Anti-Hunger Groups Launch "Hunger Has A Cure" Campaign

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Many of the nation's top anti-hunger organizations have joined forces in a major new campaign to end hunger in the United States through public education and advocacy. Titled "Hunger Has a Cure," the campaign was launched at a Feb. 11 press conference in Washington. Benedictine Sister Christine Vladimiroff, president and CEO of Second Harvest, a Chicago-based network of more than 180 community food banks nationwide, said hunger is a disease affecting nearly 30 million Americans, including more than 13 million children. "The disease is a silent stalker of American youngsters," she said. It "shortens life, increases infant mortality, breaks down the immune system, stunts growth and makes it difficult, if not impossible, for a child to learn." "It is a disease we can cure," she added.

Cardinal To Pope: Write More Books — They Fund Projects

ROME (CNS) — Cardinal Alfonso Lopez Trujillo said he has asked Pope John Paul II to write more books. With part of the royalties from the pope's 1994 book, "Crossing the Threshold of Hope," the Vatican is helping construct a home for Rwandan orphans modeled on Boys Town, said the cardinal, president of the Pontifical Council for the Family. "I told him, 'Holy Father, you must keep writing,'" Cardinal Lopez Trujillo said Feb. 11 at a Rome meeting on preparing for the year 2000.

Sponsor a child

at a Catholic mission for just $10 a month

This is Conchita. She lives in Guatemala in a one-room house with a tin roof, a dirt floor and no electricity. Only four years old, she must help her mother carry water for cooking and bathing. She gets very tired but finds little comfort on her stiff wooden bed with a straw mattress. Because her father earns only $25 per month as a day laborer, there is no money for playthings, and even basic necessities are a luxury to her family of six.

But there is hope!

You can help one very poor child like Conchita through Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), a Catholic sponsorship program assisting needy children at Catholic mission sites around the world.

For as little as $10 a month, only 33 cents a day, you can help a poor child receive nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

Through CFCA, you can sponsor a child with the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide a child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to do what you can.

CFCA works hand-in-hand with dedicated, trusted Catholic missionaries and lay leaders who know their communities and labor tirelessly to improve conditions for needy children and their families. Your sponsorship dollars help them do the work Jesus has called us to do.

When you become a sponsor you receive a photo of your child, their personal family history, a description of the country where your child lives, and the CFCA newsletter. Your new friend will write you — and you may write them as often as you like. But most of all, you have the satisfaction of helping a child in need.

Please don't miss this opportunity to make a difference.

St. John The Baptist Church

TRYON — The presence of the Benedictines in western North Carolina has done much to build up the Church since the 1870s, when members of the order arrived in Belmont to establish a monastery and college. The monastery was elevated to abbey status in 1884, and the Benedictines in 1910 were given the status of "nullius" — that is, without diocesan jurisdiction.

While operating under nullius status, the Benedictines extended their work beyond the 500-acre estate upon which they built their monastery and school. One such place was Tryon, where in 1911 they built the first church in their eight-county territory.

With less than a dozen people in attendance, the structure was dedicated as St. John the Baptist Church in October 1911 by Benedictine Abbot Leo Haid — also consecrated a bishop in 1888 by Bishop James Gibbons, then vicar apostolic of North Carolina. The congregation included the church's primary benefactors, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hallahan of Philadelphia. Benedictine Father Michael McInerney, the renowned architect of Belmont Abbey who designed some 500 buildings in his career, had designed plans for the church. In 1924, he began a five-year pastorate at the Tryon parish.

From its founding until the reduction of the "nullius" to Gaston County in 1944, St. John the Baptist Church existed as a mission of Belmont Abbey. In 1923, the mission's parishioners — for decades numbering around 12 — and local townsfolk directed a refurbishing project of the church and grounds. That year a rectory was built as well. Father James Manley, the only priest in the church's early history who was not a Benedictine, was pastor.

With the end of the Benedictines' pastorate in 1944 came St. John's first resident pastor, Father Vincent Mahoney. Growth in the St. John Church congregation had been virtually nonexistent into the late 1950s; no reports exist stating that the church's seating capacity of 75 was ever filled. Still, an influx of retirees from the North visiting and moving to the North Carolina mountains began in the '60s, and a steady increase in church membership ensued.

Meanwhile, the rectory began serving a three-year period as a place of worship, when on June 25, 1959 — just a day after the feast of St. John the Baptist — the church burned.

With tremendous help from the local community, the congregation immediately set out to build a new spiritual home. Gifts of money, materials, labor and support arrived from the area and from across the country, and with a contribution from the Catholic Extension Society, construction began in January 1962.

Father (now Msgr.) Joseph Kerin administered as pastor of the Tryon congregation during the rebuilding phase, which ended when Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh dedicated the new church in August 1962. About 55 parishioners composed the church family at the time.

Having arduously served as a multipurpose building, the rectory had become nearly uninhabitable by the mid-1960s. A new rectory was purchased in 1967.

Growth has been steady since then, with parish organizations and programs having been founded and developed during the past few decades. The Altar Guild, which was already well-established by the mid-1940s, is the longest-running committee in the parish and remains a staple of church life today, along with a variety of groups and commissions whose primary purpose is to increase parish connection with adults, children and the community.

With a continued increase in the Catholic population — thanks to the continued migration of northern Catholics as well as developments in roads leading to the mountains — the St. John Church congregation numbered 130 in 1973. By the mid-'80s, the figure had reached 300.

The St. John community celebrated its 75th anniversary in October 1986. As part of the jubilee, a church bell, donated by parishioners including the senior youth group, was placed into the bell tower that had been built along with the church in 1962.

Father Lawrence Heiney has served as pastor at St. John since July 1995. In an effort to provide the opportunity for parishioners to ask questions and make suggestions about the parish, Father Heiney has begun a series of town meetings. During a recent meeting the parish council, whose members represent a variety of commissions, explained their groups' roles in the parish. In addition, they discussed plans for the present and future of St. John the Baptist Church, the only Catholic church in Polk County and one with the tradition of a faith-filled community.

Holocaust Survivor Thanks Vatican Official For Nuns Who Hid Her

By JUDITH SUDILOVSKY

JERUSALEM (CNS) — A Jewish woman hidden by nuns during the Nazi Holocaust thanked a Vatican official who met with Holocaust survivors saved by Catholics.

Lilianne Levitt and her twin sister were hidden by the Sisters of the Immaculate Conception in a cloistered convent in Belgium from the age of 2 until they were 11 years old.

Their mother had committed suicide, and their father went into hiding with the Dominican brothers nearby, she told Cardinal Edward Cassidy, president of the Vatican Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews.

"There was a sister who was like a mother to us. She was not only beautiful on the outside, but also on the inside. We called her Mimi," Levitt told the cardinal Feb. 11 in Jerusalem.

"I wanted to tell you how much I thank you because they saved me and my sister," she said. "We owe them a lot, and I thank you."

Cardinal Cassidy met with the survivors while he was in Jerusalem for a two-day symposium on the future of Jewish-Catholic relations.

"We see how complex it is to speak about the relationship of the Church with the Holocaust," the cardinal said. "Some people certainly did not live up to the ideals which the Gospel placed before them, but we see here there were others who did live up to the ideals and were willing to put their own lives at risk to help people."

Some 300,000 Holocaust survivors live in Israel; of that number, some 100,000 were children during World War II, said Benny Navon. He is chairman of the board of the Amcha Center, which organized the meeting between the cardinal and the Holocaust survivors.

Amcha is a Hebrew word that means "God's people" and was used as a code word by Jews during the Holocaust. The center provides support to survivors and their children.

Some Jewish children were spared the fate of their parents by hiding with Christian families or religious orders, said Navon.

"They had a saving relationship with Catholics not as the Catholic Church, but as individual people," he said. "We want to show our gratitude to the people of moral courage."

Cardinal Cassidy has been president of the Commission for Relations With the Jews since 1989 and has helped coordinate meetings and cooperative ventures involving Catholic and Jewish leaders.

He also was instrumental in organizing a 1994 Vatican memorial concert, where some 100 survivors of the Holocaust met with Pope John Paul II.

Pope Pius XII has been criticized by Jews as not having spoken out forcefully enough against the Nazi atrocities during World War II.

In predominantly Catholic countries such as Poland, almost the entire Jewish population was exterminated. Some Jews believe that many of the teachings of the Church at the time, including that Jews were guilty of deicide, fed into anti-Semitic Nazi propaganda. Some parish priests, instead of opposing the Nazis, supported their actions against the Jews.

Research of declassified information from the war by U.S. Jesuit Father Robert Graham on the Vatican's response to mass deportations and killings of Jews shows repeated appeals by Pope Pius XII to end the persecution.

Faith Formation Journeying with Jesus

Mark Wilson, 9, of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point was the winner of the Office of Faith Formation's poster contest. The contest was held in conjunction with the Diocese of Charlotte's celebration of Faith Formation Week March 2-9. For a related story, see page 3.

Seniors Discuss Plan To Address Needs

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

This is the second in a series of articles focusing on the concerns and needs of the elderly in the Diocese of Charlotte, and how the Church is addressing this very important issue.

HICKORY — Count Kay and Ray Cuzzone among those who would consider living in a diocesan-operated retirement facility if one were available to Catholic seniors in the area.

"We'd be very interested," says Mrs. Cuzzone, 71, "if the Church opened a nursing home, assisted living or retirement center. A facility that could meet any or all three of those needs would be excellent."

The Cuzzones moved to Hickory 19 years ago. A design engineer, Mr. Cuzzone worked for General Electric for more than 38 years before retiring in 1982. The couple currently live in a townhouse, but the St. Aloysius parishioners know the day may come when they have to turn to others for assistance.

"I don't know if we'll always be able to manage for ourselves," Mrs. Cuzzone said. "If something happened to me, I could see a definite need for Ray."

Mr. Cuzzone was diagnosed with rheumatoid arthritis at age 29. It has prevented him from golfing, bowling and enjoying other activities. Now 74, he no longer is able to drive. "The last couple years, it's been harder. Ray can't bend his fingers as well, or bend down to tie his shoes," Mrs. Cuzzone explained. "The body just doesn't work like it used to."

"It's something we have to live with," she added.

Mrs. Cuzzone has been involved with the diocese's CRISM (Catholic Retirees in Special Ministries) program since its inception, and sees many needs for the diocese's more than 20,000 Catholic seniors. "One of the greatest (needs) is housing. What kind of housing are we offering the elderly?" she asked.

There are other wants and needs as well. "Many older people don't drive at night, so they would like Mass and other church activities to be during the day if possible," she added.

"I also know one couple that has inquired about getting Mass on TV here. Their elderly mother lives with them, and that is something she really enjoyed up North," Mrs. Cuzzone noted. "We've talked to the cable company about that."

Like many other seniors, the Cuzzones are content in western North Carolina and want to stay in the region. "We've made good friends, and are familiar with the area," Mrs. Cuzzone said. "This is home."

Mary Finlayson admits she doesn't fit the mold. At 77, she is as active today as she was 20 years ago.

The Our Lady of Assumption parishioner in Charlotte is always on the go, splitting her time between church and volunteer activities. "I'm the organist at 8:30 a.m. Mass on Sunday, and organist on-call too. I also work with both the youth and adult choirs," she says.

One day a week Finlayson can also be found playing the piano and leading sing-a-longs for seniors at the Little Flower Assisted Living Facility, while another day she performs at Selwyn Daycare. She is also renowned for leading the entertainment at CRISM activi-

Cloning Of Sheep Raises Ethical Concerns

By LOU PANARALE

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Recent reports about successful cloning in mammals have rightly raised ethical concerns about cloning humans, said Richard Doerflinger, associate director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

Doerflinger's Feb. 25 statement came after news broke worldwide about the first-ever cloning of an adult animal at the Roslin Institute near Edinburgh, Scotland.

The achievement, long thought to be biologically impossible, was accomplished with sheep. A total of nine cloned lambs have been born so far. The first, named Dolly, was born in July.

Genetic scientists who have observed the results of the recent clonings generally agree that the relatively simple procedure means the ability to clone human beings is not far behind.

"Catholic teaching rejects the cloning of human beings because this is not a worthy way to bring a human being into the world," Doerflinger said. "Children have a right to have real parents, and to be conceived as the fruit of marital love between husband and wife."

Children "are not products we can manufacture to our specifications," Doerflinger said. "Least of all should they be produced as deliberate 'copies' of other people to ensure that they have certain desired features."

Doerflinger referred to "Donum Vitae," a document released 10 years ago by the Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

Titled "Instruction on Respect for Human Life in its Origin and on the Dignity of Procreation," the Vatican document emphasized that "what is technically possible is not for that very reason morally admissible."

Although at the time cloning was not feasible, the instructions examined such procedures as "in vitro" fertilization involving a man and a woman not married to one another, as well as within marriage; experimentation on human embryos; surrogate motherhood; prenatal diagnosis and therapeutic procedures for the human embryo; infertility in marriage; and legislation related to procreation.

A fundamental concern of the Vatican instruction was that human life be respected; the embryo must be treated as a person and defended in its integrity, it said.

Moreover, the instruction emphasized

Faith Formation Week: March 2-9

Faith Formation Has Impact Throughout The Diocese Of Charlotte

The faith formation efforts of the Diocese of Charlotte have tremendous impact on the formation of our diocese.

This work is led by parish catechetical leaders and volunteer catechists in each of the parishes. Their efforts are assisted by the four regional coordinators of the Office of Faith Formation.

There are parish programs in sacrament preparation which include Baptism parent programs, Pre-Cana programs, Reconciliation and First Eucharist preparation programs. Other programs include formation for grades K-12, youth ministry, RCIA, RCIA for children, family education, adult education and many others.

The efforts of faith formation touch many. Nearly 3,300 dedicated catechists teach the truths of the Catholic faith and share the Good News throughout the diocese. It is because of them that we celebrate Faith Formation Week.

Faith Formation Efforts Emphasize Spiritual Support In Western Region

Eighteen parishes and missions compose Catholic community life and worship in the Asheville area and west.

Ranging in size from the nearly 1,000-family Immaculate Conception Parish in Hendersonville to the intimate 12-15 member "winter" community at Prince of Peace Church in Robbinsville, each parish has unique strengths and charisms. Many parishes experience attendance that swells to nearly double during summer and vacation months. With Catholics from all over the country choosing a second-home parish in these mountain resort areas, faith formation programs are both blessed and challenged.

Because many parishes are composed mainly of elders in different stages of retirement, faith formation emphasis turns to spiritual support and companionship, adult catechesis and social issues. And because these same parishes also have some children, teens, young adults and young families, attention often turns to parish-wide catechesis. This means that leaders pay attention to the overall health of parish life, community and service in addition to offering specific faith formation programs. The smaller the community, the more easily "intergenerational" catechesis — formation in faith for people of all ages — happens naturally.

Many smaller parishes and missions are also beginning to offer what is called "Lectionary-Based" catechesis. This is a way of connecting a class-type experience with the Scripture readings from Sunday Mass. The children or youth learn a doctrine and explore a life experience as it relates to the context of the readings. This approach involves parents and encourages informal follow-up conversation at home.

Other larger parishes have classroom programs that follow a curriculum that pays special attention to the seasons of the Church year.

Central Region Catechists Spread The Faith

The central region cuts a path from the border of South Carolina to the northern border of Tennessee and Virginia down the center of the Charlotte Diocese. The 21 parishes of the central region range in size from 50 to 900 families. These communities of faith live out the Good News in sacrament, liturgy, catechesis, youth ministry and family programming. The majority of the faith formation in these parishes is coordinated by part-time ministers putting forth full-time efforts to bring Christ to the people.

While Sunday morning catechetical hour is the norm, there are Wednesday night catechist meetings, Tuesday morning Bible study, Thursday evening youth groups, Saturday morning workshops, weekend retreats, Monday Education Commission meetings and Friday RCIA training. Many volunteers enable this ministry to be carried out.

Parishes are celebrating Faith Formation Week with receptions, children's Masses, bulletin announcements, art displays, family retreats, certificates signed by the bishop, presentations, a parish community night, catechist recognition, bulletin boards in the parish hall, banners on the church lawn and an open house for all to walk the "Journey with Jesus."

Families

Southern Region Blessed With Dedicated Catechists

All 19 parishes that compose the southern region will celebrate the dedication and generosity of catechists during Faith Formation Week. Some parishes will offer open houses; others special dinners or recognition and prayers at liturgy.

In this region there are 1,400 catechists. That means there are more than 14,000 persons growing in faith through the conscientious dedication of volunteers who take time out of their busy schedules to prepare, study, and pray in order to teach the truths of the Catholic faith to children, teen-agers, adults and inquirers from other faith traditions.

The directors of faith formation in each of the parishes are exceptional persons who coordinate programs, and train and empower catechists. They wear many hats and do many tasks. "To be all things to all men" so as "to bring all to Christ" is the daily task of these leaders.

Variety aptly describes the kinds of catechesis being provided for the sake of diverse needs. In one parish, the Montessori-based "Catechesis of the Good Shepherd" is presented to children beginning at a very young age. In another, in addition to the usual forms of catechesis, there is a "Wednesday Night Gathering" at which a family meal is often served, followed by a range of programs to meet the needs of each family member. In other parishes, there are family-based catechetical programs in which the family both learns and teaches the faith as a unit. Parish catechetical leaders provide guidance to parents involved.

Many parishes in the region provide weekly courses or adult education forums. They address the growing thirst adults have to know more about their faith in order to answer their questions, their children's questions, and their neighbors' questions.

Much is being done, much more needs to be done. Still, the 1,400 catechists strive to bring a greater understanding of the Good News.

Perpetua and Felicity

Perpetua, a young married woman, was arrested in Carthage in the year 203. With her were Felicity, a pregnant slave girl, and other catechumens. They were baptized while under arrest and refused to renounce their faith. The wild beasts of the amphitheater failed to kill the women, so they were beheaded. The feast of these martyrs is March 7.

Northern Region Served By 1,200 Catechists

The northern region of the Diocese of Charlotte is composed of 19 parishes and three missions within the Greensboro and Winston-Salem vicariates. The Faith Formation Ministry is led by 44 parish catechetical leaders and approximately 1,200 catechists.

These leaders work with the support of the Diocesan Office of Faith Formation through the services of a regional coordinator. Parish faith formation efforts vary widely, each meeting the range of needs in their respective parishes. Efforts include formation for children in kindergarten through grade 12, youth ministry, adult education, baptism, marriage and other sacrament preparation, RCIA, family education, and young adult ministry. Parishes range in size from 50 to 1,500 families.

Many programs and support activities are offered as a means to develop the connection to the larger Church as well as insure the effectiveness and orthodoxy of the catechetical mission of the diocese within each respective parish. The northern region offers a regional day of formation in the Fall in order to train catechists in their mission. Tracks for this training are also offered for Hispanic and youth ministry.

A regional resource room which contains materials and support information for catechetical leaders is located at Our Lady of the Highways parish in Thomasville. The region also sponsors a diocesan young adult retreat each Fall in Asheboro in collaboration with the Raleigh Diocese.

Parishes of the northern region are hosting a variety of events to celebrate Faith Formation Week. Most parishioners believe the connection to the diocese is made through the services of faith formation programs, parish catechetical leaders and catechists who live out the mission of Jesus in their teaching of the Good News.

Education Vicar Discusses Religious Education

CHARLOTTE — Father James Hawker, vicar for education in the Diocese of Charlotte, sees faith formation as a far-reaching entity that continually enriches the faith lives of believers. In a recent conversation with The Catholic News & Herald, Father Hawker explained one of faith formation's key elements: catechetics, or religious education. The following are excerpts from the discussion.

What is meant by the term faith formation?

From one perspective, it refers to those experiences whereby the maturing believer is assisted to grow in his or her relationship with the risen Lord. The Scriptures, the Mass, the sacraments and the witness of believers are all directed to helping the person grow in faith. Another essential component of this mosaic is catechetics or religious education. Its role is to share the teachings of Jesus Christ and the Church in a systematic and complete manner and in relation to one's daily life.

What is the purpose of catechetics or religious education in the process of continuing faith formation?

Pope John Paul II in his apostolic exhortation entitled On Catechesis in Our Time states that "the definitive aim of catechesis is to put people not only in touch but in communion, in intimacy with Jesus Christ" (paragraph 5). The Holy Father continues, "everything else is taught with reference to Him" (paragraph 6). If the person, according to his or her ability, has not been motivated to appropriate, assimilate and live the vision, values and virtues taught and exemplified by Jesus Himself, the purpose of catechetics has not been achieved.

Catechetics, then, is a sacred and serious enterprise. It is a grace-filled moment within which the child, youngster or adult is invited to meet and respond to the person and message of Jesus. Those who serve as catechists should never become discouraged if their labors do not always bear fruit; rather, they must continue to speak in the name of the Lord and in the power of His Spirit with patience and persistence.

Father James Hawker

How has the approach to catechetics or religious education changed in the Church during the past several decades?

In 1979, Pope John Paul II addressed the subject directly when he wrote, "catechesis needs to be continually reviewed by a certain broadening of its concept, by the revision of its methods, by the search for suitable language and by the utilization of new means of transmitting the message" (On Catechesis in Our Time, paragraph 17). This statement of the Holy Father has validated the appropriate adaptations apparent in contemporary catechetics. He is not overlooking the responsibility of the catechists to share the teachings of Jesus Christ and His Church in a complete and systematic manner. However, he does not presume or expect that the goal would be realized after a year or two of catechetical involvement on the part of the maturing believer.

Although in the past there was a tendency on the part of catechists simply to share information, today there is a conscious, connected effort to do so in relation to the pope's statement regarding the continual renewal of the catechetical concept. You may recall that the teachings of the Church were once presented in a question-and-answer format. Definitions were shared and memorized. Today there is an emphasis on description as well as definition so that the meaning and relevance of the message might be apparent to those being catechized.

This approach is a response, at least

Immaculate Heart Of Mary Parishioner Wins Poster Contest

Students in faith formation programs throughout the diocese submitted drawings of their interpretation of the theme for the first Faith Formation Week celebration, "Journeying With Jesus."

More than 300 entries were received. The winner of the competition was Mark Wilson, 9, from Immaculate Heart of Mary parish in High Point. His interpretation depicted a school bus full of people journeying to heaven with Jesus as their bus driver. The winning drawing is featured on Faith Formation Week posters at each parish.

Honorable mentions were awarded to: Marie Forney, Immaculate Heart of Mary; Juliana Dirco, Cristo Rey; Ryan Kelly, Our Lady of the Angels; Cristen Nimmons and Markitta Harmon, Our Lady of Consolation; Jennie Guan and Kristina Singleton, Our Lady of Lourdes; Tracey Wilson, St. Helen; Sarah Wolfe and Gabrielle Saluta, St. Leo; and Dave Roberts, St. Therese.

Dear Friends in Christ:

As Christian stewards, we are called to share our time, talent and treasure with those in need. The American Bishops' Overseas Appeal gives us an opportunity to reach out to our brothers and sisters throughout the world, as well as in our own country. This year's collection will be taken in our diocese on the weekend of March 8-9.

During his 1995 visit to the U.S., the Holy Father, in a message to Catholic Relief Services, said, in part: "The splendor of Christ's glory is reflected in the face of every human being and is even more so when that face is emaciated by hunger, saddened by exile, or oppressed by poverty and misery.... Christians must be ever attentive to the cry of the poor, serving the Lord who is present in their suffering."

Last year, Catholics in parishes nationwide responded by contributing more than $12 million to support self-help programs for families and communities; to aid victims of natural and human disasters; to provide agricultural assistance, health care and to resettle newcomers to the United States. Our contributions allow the Holy Father to respond to emergencies around the globe.

Thanking you for your generous response to the American Bishops' Overseas Appeal and wishing you and yours God's blessings, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Asks For Church, Regional Cooperation In Jubilee Preparations

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — One day before the distribution of the Gospel of Mark to families throughout Rome, Pope John Paul II gave copies to the members of the Latium regional council.

In his annual meeting with the politicians and administrators responsible for the region surrounding Rome Feb. 15, the pope asked for a cooperative effort between the church and the regional government in preparing for the year 2000.

The Gospel distribution, which will take place during home visits, is part of an effort by the Catholic Church in Rome.

After long delays, the Italian government released almost $2.2 billion Feb. 14 for public works projects in Rome and for Latium to get roads, parking lots, the subway system and lodging ready for the estimated 20 million pilgrims expected in the year 2000.

"A pilgrimage is, by its nature, a double experience: spiritual, with deep and strong religious motivations; and practical, insofar as it requires concrete realization such as the journey, the stops, the visits, transfers and meetings," the pope said.

"I deeply hope that the regional administration and the church community will work with respect for each other's competence and in a spirit of great collaboration to create a welcoming and efficient context around Rome," he said.

Piero Badaloni, president of the regional council, told the pope that a variety of the regional government's offices are working on projects for the jubilee year.

"They are works which have been judged necessary to make pilgrims' stay in Rome more comfortable," he said. In addition, they provide an opportunity "not only to improve the image of the city and the territory, but also the quality of life of those who live here ordinarily."

On Feb. 15, church and government officials appeared at a round-table discussion on preparations for the jubilee.

Paolo Costa, Italian public works minister, acknowledged that the funding of projects was far behind schedule.

"I hope that in the remaining 1,000 days we can make up time," Costa said at the discussion sponsored by La Civiltà Cattolica, a Jesuit-run journal.

Archbishop Sergio Sebastiani, secretary of the Vatican's central committee for the jubilee, said people must keep in mind the fact that the Holy Year is a spiritual event and a pastoral opportunity.

The Holy Year is not a business, nor a tourism project, nor an expression of millenarianism — the expectation of a cataclysmic event in connection with the year 2000 — nor, he said, is it "a misfortune" for Romans who will find their city filled with tourists.

"To those apathetic and distrustful Christians I would respond, 'Open your ears not to the shrill voices, but to the whispers of the Holy Spirit,'" the archbishop said.

Reflections On The Fourth Sunday Of Lent: From Death to Life

The readings today call attention to a paradox of human living — that signs of death are so very frequently signs of healing and life.

The first reading, from the second book of Chronicles (36:14-23), was the original ending of the Hebrew Scriptures. But it did not seem right to close with the sad memory of the exile. So a later editor added the concluding verses about the liberation of the exiles, thus adding a note of promise and hope for the future.

Here we have that same paradox: Life comes through death. Was it truly possible that God could restore His chosen people, the nation of Israel, at the hand of Cyrus, the first king of Persia? We do not usually look to the enemy for healing and integrity. But God is always breaking through human expectations, and He raised up Cyrus, who allowed deported peoples to return to their homeland.

The second reading (Eph. 2:4-10) emphasizes that we cannot save ourselves. Whenever we begin to think that healing is wrought by our own hands, then we are thinking in very restricted categories. But if healing and wholeness are God's work, then the possibilities are as limitless as they are undeserved. Salvation is a gift we accept by faith. God saves us by raising us with Christ through death to life. We are already, the author writes, "citizens of heaven."

The Gospel reading (John 3:14-21) begins with an allusion to a legend of Moses lifting up a bronze serpent in the wilderness to cure those bitten by poisonous snakes. A comparison is then drawn with the crucifixion, which for the author was an act of exaltation. Just as the serpent Moses exalted in the desert was a symbol of healing, so is the Son of Man, exalted upon the cross, a sign of healing for all who look upon Him. New birth is possible only when Jesus makes the transit to His Father through death, resurrection, and glorification. Death becomes a symbol of new life.

Here again is the paradox of human nature, in which death to selfishness and sin is the way to new life. And in the Christian view, it is precisely through the mystery of the death and resurrection of Christ that we attain new birth. Passage from death to life depends not just on Jesus' objective achievement but on our subjective reaction, our response, our appropriation, through faith.

This is followed by the best-known verse in the Bible, John 3:16, chosen by the British and Foreign Bible Society as the pilot verse to be translated into every newly discovered language because it distills the essence of the New Testament: "For God so loved the world that He gave (gave as a gift and gave up to death) His only Son, so that everyone who believes in Him might not perish but might have eternal life."

The author then spells out the consequences in his view: Whoever believes in Jesus will not be judged adversely, but the person who rejects Jesus and His message has already brought about his own condemnation. Eternal life, for this author, is not something that one simply hopes for in the future; it is a deliberate choice here and now.

May the eucharistic liturgy we celebrate in memory of the death and resurrection of our Savior lead us also through death to eternal life.

Jesuit Father Francis T. Gignac is a professor at The Catholic University of America in Washington.

Does Your Heart Need Work?

Traditionally, the Season of Lent invites us to concentrate attention on Prayer, Fasting and Almsgiving. I suspect that many of us just grit our teeth and look upon this effort as "penance" to be endured. But a look at Jesus' own actions give a different perspective.

After Jesus was baptized in the river by John, He immediately went into the desert for 40 days to pray and fast. He had to discover how He was to live His life. To do so, He had to enter the heart of His Father. As the fruit of this intense experience, He was ultimately confronted with three tests. Jesus' response to these temptations would determine His future.

This is how I hear the words of that ancient and ageless struggle. The devil, in essence, said to Jesus: "You're hungry! You could turn these stones into bread if You wish." The gist of Jesus' answer was: "I refuse to live my life according to the principle of PLEASURE!"

Then the devil tried another tack. Taking Jesus to a high mountain, he intimated: "If you worship me, I'll give you dominion over all the kingdoms of the world." Jesus' reply was: "I refuse to live my life according to the principle of POWER!"

Finally, the devil took Jesus to the tower of the temple and challenged Him: "Throw yourself down from this high place for it is written that the Lord's angels will rescue you and keep you from harm." Jesus responded: "I refuse to abdicate my RESPONSIBILITY FOR MY OWN ACTIONS and thereby depend upon others to rescue me!"

Thus Jesus made a decision not just for one moment, but for His life. He would refuse inordinate Pleasure, Power and Self-seeking. Just as He needed tools to be a carpenter, He needed tools to build His kingdom; Prayer which created union with God's heart, Fasting to curb His own desires and Almsgiving to show concern for and sharing with others.

We are no more exempt that Jesus was. When we look at ourselves honestly, we discover that the spirit of the world gradually and imperceptibly eats away at our good intentions. Most fortunately for us, the early members of our Church, in harmony with the spirit of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the other faithful followers of Yahweh, recognized that we too need regular periods of reflection and renewed effort if we are to imitate Jesus. So they gradually developed the Season of Lent. It too lasted for 40 days as a clear reminder of Jesus' time in the desert. As Jesus needed to bind His heart with the Father's, we too are constantly called to be in touch with Christ's heart — to see as Christ sees, to love as Christ loves.

Our hearts become shopworn by constant involvement with the cares and self-centered spirit of the world. Lent is a marvelous opportunity to find once again that intimacy with God. The wisdom of the ages invites us to use this period in serious and prolonged efforts to renew ourselves as God's people through the proven spiritual exercises of Prayer, Fasting and Almsgiving.

Make the Lenten journey and the Spirit of God will kindle in your heart the fire of His divine Love.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Protestants and the Stations of the Cross

Q. I am doing some Lenten study on the Stations of the Cross. Why were they not carried over to the Protestant churches if they originated before the Reformation?

Is there a connection between the stations and the path to Calvary followed by modern visitors to Jerusalem?

A. The devotion we know as the Stations (or Way) of the Cross was one of many forms of devotion developed during the very late Middle Ages, generally the 1200s or 1300s.

Politically, culturally and religiously those were tumultuous and painful times for the vast majority of ordinary people. Practicing and passing on any faith was enormously difficult.

Into this picture came, among others, St. Francis of Assisi and St. Dominic and their followers, who helped popularize such expressions of faith and prayer as the Christmas creche (St. Francis) and the rosary (Dominicans).

The Stations were one of these devotions, serving both as prayer and a sort of catechism about the sufferings of the Lord.

Various Franciscan communities, who already held responsibility for the holy places in Jerusalem for Latin Rite Catholics, helped popularize the devotion.

The Stations once included seven falls under the cross. Another form had a total of 43 separate stations. But the 14 stations as we know them became fairly stabilized by Pope Clement XII in 1731.

For some years now most publications of the Stations of the Cross have included a 15th station or meditation, calling to mind Christ's victory over death in the resurrection.

The entire city of Jerusalem was leveled by the Roman armies about 40 years after the death of Jesus. Thus, locating precisely, for example, the falls of Jesus on the way to Calvary is next to impossible.

At any rate, the markings of the 14 stations along the Via Dolorosa (Sorrowful Way) in old Jerusalem are comparatively recent. The accuracy and even historical validity of some of them are open to considerable question.

Nevertheless, the Stations of the Cross remain one of the richest ways in our tradition to reflect on our Lord's suffering and death.

The reasons Protestantism did not continue many devotional traditions such as the Stations are complicated.

Several Reformed churches mistrusted the use of pictures or other images in worship and prayer. This may be part of the answer.

Another could be that the Stations have always included incidents which come out of Christian tradition but are not found in the Gospels.

Our fourth station, for example, commemorates Jesus meeting His mother. Luke notes that Jesus stopped along the way to speak to "many women who mourned and lamented him," but he doesn't say Mary was among them. John places her at the foot of the cross, but not on the road.

With the Protestants' heavy emphasis on Scripture as the rule of faith, it is perhaps understandable that some of these popular devotions would not be picked up in their spirituality.

The story of Veronica wiping the face of Jesus is also not in the Gospels.

A free brochure outlining basic Catholic prayers, beliefs and morals is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Task Force Offers Hope For Seniors And Their Care-Givers

To the Editor,

Until I read the article "Diocese Working to Address Needs of Seniors" in the Feb. 14th edition of The Catholic News & Herald, I thought I was the only person in the state of North Carolina with direct care responsibilities of an elder.

I have in the last six months seen my 84-year-old mother move to Asheville from Illinois. She initially cared for herself, but due to a back fracture, has developed many needs.

I am the only offspring and friend she can rely on, and the situation is difficult because I have a family and work nights.

Trying to seek help through community resources has been very frustrating. I have thought about the new assisted living care facility in Charlotte, but that is too far away.

After reading your article, I thought of the many parishioners in my own church who could benefit from a retirement center in our area.

I pray the task force will be successful in their meeting the needs of our elders and their caregivers.

I look forward to future updates in "Corner on CRISM."

Asheville

Faulty Translation

To the Editor,

In the special edition of the newspaper honoring Bishop Begley's Silver Jubilee, you translate the Bishop's motto, "Diligimus Fratres," as "We have loved the Brethren." Your translation is faulty as "Diligimus" is present tense. The correction translation: "We love the Brethren."

On this occasion charged with historicity, I felt it should also be adorned with accuracy, especially since Bishop Begley still "loves" (present tense) us, the Brethren.

Telecommunications Office Promotes Media Literacy

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — When considering the cultural landscape of America, Gail Hunt Violette is amazed at the power of television and other media in the lives of children and adults alike. With that realization, the director of the Office of Telecommunications and the Media Resource Center emphasizes the need for constant, ongoing education.

"Our mission is to bring people to Christ through the understanding of telecommunications and the written word," says Violette, whose office is funded entirely through the Diocesan Support Appeal. "The purpose of the Office of Telecommunications is three-fold: to present media that's already produced, to produce video for religious education, and to provide media literacy education."

By definition, telecommunications involves the technology of relaying information through such vehicles as telephone, radio and television. Noting that the latter pervades the American lifestyle at extraordinary levels, Violette says catechists, religious educators and especially parents must strive to keep apprised of pop culture — which most certainly includes the ever-growing field of media.

"Young people today are so in tune with media," she says. "Now they have computers in their classrooms, and many have televisions in their classrooms, too. The media is a good teaching tool, but we have to recognize the fact that communication about its message is the key."

The diocesan telecommunications director, along with Associate Director Loretta Wnetrzak, is a facilitator of media literacy education at programs throughout the diocese and beyond. From their weekend retreat, "The Gospel According to the Media," to monthly newsletters, from parenting classes in parishes to an upcoming national teleconference, Violette and Wnetrzak, both certified catechists, strive to effect an understanding of media from a Christian perspective in a variety of ways.

A continual reality in their efforts is the need for parents to dialogue with their kids about the media. "As Catholics, we have to communicate with our children about what they see," Violette says. "We have to talk about the values that are being presented, discuss them openly and make it a lesson."

In order for parents to be able to have that dialogue, Violette suggests that media literacy education — which she calls a "grassroots" movement — is an invaluable tool. To make available resources a greater reality, the Telecommunications Office offers 1,500 videos, hundreds of audio cassettes and a small book collection through its media lending library, located at the Catholic Center in Charlotte. Resources include an extensive range of topics intended to enhance the faith lives of all age groups. "Everything we have in the library is catechetical," says Violette. "Items can be used for personal enrichment, and most of the time they are used in religious education programs."

Violette also produces videos for religious education purposes. Again, the variety of subject matter is wide, ranging from a series on the sacraments to lecturing to vocations.

In addition to operations at the Catholic Center and presenting an average of two to three media literacy education classes each month to a diversity of age groups and religious denominations, the telecommunications directors appreciate the relationship they have with everyone interested in analyzing media in light of Christian values.

Violette notes that sharing information between catechists, parents, pastors and parishioners most certainly assists the directors in their work. "We are a service department, and we want to help them in their life of religious education," Violette says of the collaborative effort.

First Faith Formation Week Celebrates Gifts Of Catechists

By DR. CRIS VILLAPANDO

Join us for a first time celebration in the Diocese of Charlotte as we pay tribute to the dedicated service of 3,300 catechists who diligently serve our parishes and missions. March 2-9 has been set aside in honor of these selfless volunteers for their abilities to nurture the faith of children, youth and adults in the regular religious education, RCIA, youth ministry, sacramental preparation and service to small faith communities throughout the 46 counties of our diocese.

In short, it's about the unsung heroes and heroines who respond to the call of the Spirit to continue forming disciples for Christ in our contemporary society. Moreover, we toast this catechetical leadership. Our celebration is one of awe as these laborers in the vineyard cultivate the spirit of Christ to those thirsting for faith.

Their jobs are not easy tasks; nurturing of faith involves more than the delivery of cognitive doctrinal packages. It takes the human touch of people in relationships exploring their commitment to Christ. This could be a teen-ager finding Christ, an individual exploring the riches of our traditions through the RCIA, or simply a young child discovering that Jesus loves him or her just the way they are.

When we salute these catechists, we celebrate one of the contemporary gifts we can give to the Church — the time portion of the stewardship trilogy of time, talent and treasure. Without this gift of the spirit of helping our brothers and sisters, the Faith Formation Ministry would surely suffer.

Dr. Cris Villapando

This is a celebration of thanksgiving. We identify what is good in ourselves but try to recognize its source itself — that of God, Himself. Thus, thanksgiving which eu + charistein in its root meaning becomes for us a Eucharistic experience.

Thank you, parish catechetical leaders and the 3,300 catechists. The diocese is eternally grateful to you for the countless hours of lesson planning and classroom teaching. Thank you for this gift, and especially for your gift of faith.

Mothers Make Use Of Movie Newsletter, Toll-Free Number

By MARK PATTISON
WASHINGTON (CNS) — If necessity is the mother of invention, then mothers may be the greatest inventors of all.

One Catholic mother in Texas is finding new uses for the toll-free movie review phone line offered through the Catholic Communications Campaign.

And another Catholic mother in Mexico is doing the same with Catholic News Service's weekly TV & Movie Guide newsletter.

Laura Adaauto, assistant principal of St. Patrick Elementary School in El Paso, Texas, uses the CCC's movie review line for guidance for her three teenage children.

And not only does Adaauto listen. She puts the reviews on the speaker phone and makes her children listen.

"We all laugh because they all think I'm pretty square on that," she told CNS during a recent visit to Washington. Sometimes, she added, they imitate her: "Let's go listen to the movie line." "But they do listen," Adaauto said.

"For me, it's not just an issue of the sex" but violence and banality of modern movies, she said. On occasion, she asks her children, "Why are you stuffing your mind with the stupidity of some of these pictures?"

Incurring Adaauto's personal thumbs-down is any movie featuring martial arts actor Jean-Claude Van Damme and the recent "Beavis and Butt-head Do America" movie. Garnering a thumbs-up is the "Star Wars: Special Edition" reissue.

"My 18-year-old says it's a spiritual experience," Adaauto said. "I have to question his choice of words."

CCC director Ramon Rodriguez said in a statement that he is "proud to see that the movie review line which our bishops' Communications Committee had the vision to establish is hitting home, right where it is needed."

"This is a wonderful legacy for the Catholic Communication campaign to leave the generation that will lead us into the third millennium," he added.

The toll-free number — (800) 311-4222 — receives an average of 15,000 calls monthly. Enough funding is in place to assure its operation through 1997.

Meanwhile, Lupita Cantu of Monterrey, Mexico, subscribes to CNS' TV & Movie Guide, a weekly digest of TV, movie and video reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting.

Cantu pays the $47 annual subscription price, plus an extra $50 a year for reproduction rights. She then translates the newsletter's contents and distributes her Spanish-language version to about 3,000 households in her parish.

Cantu told CNS in a phone interview the work is not tiresome. In fact, she said, she would like to see ratings of movies shown on the HBO and Cinemax cable channels for still more translation and distribution.

"Courage Under Fire" (1996)

Returning from the Gulf War, an Army commander (Denzel Washington) feeling guilty over his part in a friendly fire incident doggedly pursues discrepancies in the recommendation of a posthumous medal of honor for a Medevac helicopter pilot (Meg Ryan). Director Edward Zwick blends the differing versions of the pilot's actions under fire with compelling character studies as a series of flashbacks gradually reveal how all concerned behaved under the stress of mortal combat. Intense battlefield violence, a suicide, substance abuse and frequent rough language as well as profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Grass Harp" (1996)

Screen version of Truman Capote's 1951 novel about an orphaned boy (Edward Furlong) growing up in a small Southern town during the Depression, looked after by two spinster sisters (Piper Laurie and Sissy Spacek) whose tranquil home is suddenly shattered in a terrible dispute between them, forcing him and the rest of the town to take sides.

Directed by Charles Matthau, the result is a lovely little movie re-creating the charms of a past era without sentimentalizing its account of the boy's encounters with the adult world and odd behavior of his quirky elders (including retired judge Walter Matthau, swindler Jack Lemmon, servant Nell Carter and barber Roddy McDowall). Some violence and strong domestic tension. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"That Thing You Do!" (1996)

Warmhearted comedy in which four clean-cut teens from Erie, Pa., form a rock 'n' roll band in 1964, then briefly rocket toward the top of the pop charts under the savvy guidance of their business manager (Tom Hanks). Also written and directed by Hanks, the thin story brims with youthful exuberance in a vivid picture of a more innocent era. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Nicholson Stars In Cat-And-Mouse Tale Of Blood And Wine

NEW YORK (CNS) — A dysfunctional family goes from bad to worse in the serpentine film noir, "Blood and Wine."

Relations seem strained between mom (Judy Davis), who is recovering from a drunken fall, and her two-faced husband Alex (Jack Nicholson), whose Miami wine business is going south.

Sullenly working for Alex is stepson Jason (Stephen Dorff), who wishes mom would just up and leave her duplicitous husband. When the two men visit the mansion of a rich customer Jason is immediately drawn to the alluring Cuban nanny Gabrielle (Jennifer Lopez).

Unbeknownst to him, she is sleeping with his stepdad, hoping he will marry her. But Alex is mostly using her in a scheme with a safecracker (Michael Caine) to return to the mansion and steal a million-dollar necklace from its vault.

Once that is accomplished, the soup thickens because fed-up mom attacks her abusive husband and storms out, unaware the bag she hastily packed is precisely where Alex hid the necklace in preparation for fencing it. Jason impulsively joins mom in driving off to Key Largo; Alex and his partner in crime want the ice back — and God help whomever gets in the way, namely Gabrielle.

Director Bob Rafelson builds on the growing cat-and-mouse tactics between stepdad and stepson once the younger man realizes he has what Alex wants.

Gabrielle is the complicating factor, but the resolution of the twisty melodrama is a far-fetched disappointment.

At least the characters (except ex-con Caine) do struggle with their consciences over shattered relationships and ill-gotten goods, even if they usually fail to make the most honorable choices.

The characterizations are colorful as well: The safecracker, nearly done in by emphysema, can still cough up massive contempt for bungler Alex; seething mom gives Alex the benefit of the doubt until she boils over; well-meaning Jason and Gabrielle end up morally compromised as all the while Alex desperately and vainly tries to hold it all together.

Visually its tropical south Florida suits the semi-potboiler aspects of the story and the pacing carries the narrative along with a steady flow of incidents. The performances are generally well-crafted too, so it is too bad the script goes into overdrive in the final act with crazed confrontations.

And, with less blood there would also be less to whine about in the flawed "Blood and Wine."

Due to some violence and sexual innuendo, intermittent rough language and recurring profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Jon Voight stars in "Rosewood," a drama about American race relations based on a real story. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

The great balancing act: Caring for self and others

"Juggling your need to take care of yourself with your responsibilities toward others can be quite an act."

Catholic News Service

Juggling your need to take care of yourself with your responsibilities toward others can be quite an act. I can illustrate just how involving an act this is by describing my own recent schedule.

For several weeks I worked with a few other people planning a pastoral meeting which we hope may have some good, long-term effects in our area.

But, as with preparing for a wedding, there is a point where you have to stop thinking about what you might do and actually make the decisions — about reservations, guest lists, deposits, time and place.

Simultaneously, I was undergoing some medical tests that are important and time-consuming. They are important because I want to stay active and healthy as long as I can.

As I write this, I have just spent part of the past two days stretched out, immobile and radioactive on a hospital table, locked into high-tech imaging equipment, but with my mind at work on the details of our upcoming meeting.

While anything high-tech sounds dramatic, what I was doing really wasn't that different from what most people do every day: going in two directions at the same time.

—We know that we should take care of ourselves, better care than many of us do.

—We also all have responsibilities that demand so much of us. Work, family, church, marriage, school, friends, organizations — you name it.

All these responsibilities make claims on our time, and we know that the claims are legitimate.

If we ever are tempted to slack off — either in our care for ourselves or in our care for others — there are reports in the news every day to remind us first to take better care of our schools, and our poor, and our communities at large.

Those reports are followed by others reminding us to take better care of ourselves. Sleep sounder, eat better, cut the stress, relax and have more fun. And then, for good measure, lose 20 pounds and flatten out our middles.

How are we supposed to juggle all this? Needless to say, we all must make our own decisions.

Two principles, however, can be put to good use by anyone.

The first principle is to recognize that taking care of oneself, both physically and spiritually, is an important moral obligation, one we have to take seriously.

As St. Paul once said, and as religious writers have repeated ever since, our bodies are not our own; they are God-given. As such, they deserve good care and respect.

The second principle is to recognize that we are social creatures. Society, meaning the people we live and work with, also holds a claim on our talents, time and energy.

As citizens we owe something to society, but not just because society possesses power to drag it out of us. No, it's more than that. Society has a claim in justice on a fair share of who we are and what we have. And it has this right, philosophers and our own religious tradition tell us, because we are social creatures.

Especially in the area of health care, where we all benefit so much from the research and talents of others, as I did the other day, we need to be aware of how much we owe others.

This traditional view isn't all that popular nowadays. Many tell us to take what we can get and use it to take care of Numero Uno.

In California, where I live, I see numerous people who are "into," as they say, taking care of themselves. In some cases it seems to be their No. 1 occupation. The other day a young man told me how he chose his current juice bar.

"You know, I think I checked out seven or eight before I chose my new one. It took me a week," he said proudly. Not that concern for good health is bad. But there can be too much of a good thing.

I think that our Catholic tradition would say that someone who has the kind of leisure and good health he and many of us have ought to think of sharing some of it in a useful way with others — not giving it all up, but sharing it in a way that helps others benefit from it as we have.

Can we do this all and do it well? Of course not. It's too big a demand for anyone. But we can recognize that we have two sides: our individual side and our social side.

Our individuality is gifted and unique. It is a gift that should be given the care it deserves.

But why? So that we alone, as individuals, can benefit from this self-care? No. Rather, because in nurturing ourselves we prepare ourselves to nurture others.

(Father O'Rourke is in residence at St. Mary Magdalen Church in Berkeley, Calif., and a free-lance writer.)

In a Nutshell

- Taking care of oneself physically and spiritually is a moral obligation.
- But does the care we give ourselves isolate us or help us to be present to others in a more meaningful way?
- Self-absorption and self-care aren't the same.

How to disconnect self-care from self-absorption

By Dan Luby
Catholic News Service

A friend has a dilemma and needs your counsel. It seems that this couch potato you knew so well now has become a fitness seeker seriously committed to exercise, spiritual direction, wellness and personal time. The dilemma lies in the reaction of family and friends.

"They say I'm too busy with these —First, how do our efforts at self-care affect us internally?

Authentic Christian self-care is a kind of stewardship. It recognizes that our bodies, minds and spirits are God's gifts. So if we neglect the disciplines and pleasures needed to make the best of our gifts, we discount our responsibility as stewards.

On the other hand, concentrating on our own needs can seduce us into the illusion that we are more important than we are. If we can't recognize our impulse to self-inflation and laugh at ourselves once in a while, we've gone too far in the other direction.

—Second is the need to take account of our relationship with God.

Does the way we take care of ourselves acknowledge God's place in our lives? Does it make prayer more or less possible? Does it help us to understand ourselves and the rest of the world as resting ultimately in God's hands?

An investment in personal growth robs us if it doesn't invite God's presence into every aspect of life. Cultivating health without cultivating a sense of gratitude to God flirts with a form of self-idolatry.

—Third, we ought to look at how taking care of ourselves affects the other relationships that shape and sustain our lives, and through which God becomes known to us.

Does a commitment to sound nutri-

"Does a commitment to sound nutrition, for example, incline us to greater generosity to the hungry?"

tion, for example, incline us to greater generosity to the hungry?

Does a thirst for self-knowledge enable us to be more compassionate and patient with others?

What does our calendar tell us about how we spend our time? Do the things we do for ourselves isolate us, or make us more free to be present to others in a meaningful way?

Self-absorption leads inward. It shrinks our world, tightens our focus, makes our lives one-dimensional.

Self-care leads outward. It broadens our horizons and nourishes our lives as a kind of sacrament of God's love, which reaches out.

things to have time for them. But I made all these changes because people I love encouraged me to grow. Now they want me to stop," he says, asking: "What if they're right? Is it that I'm finally taking care of myself after all these years, or am I just self-absorbed?"

Self-absorption and self-care aren't the same, but they can sometimes look alike.

Not surprisingly, many Christians live a double bind on the issue of self-care. The piety they grew up in may have created an impression that being aware of one's own needs and attending to them was selfish, while culture today proclaims that our primary allegiance is to ourselves; concern for others becomes mere co-dependency in disguise.

How do we examine our lives to make sure that the care we give ourselves is neither too little nor too much?

An age-old spiritual principle will help here: Judge the tree by its fruits. What are the fruits of our attempts to take care of ourselves? What story do our actual lives tell?

We need to take account of three important factors in our lives here:

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A news report this winter told of a noted neuroscientist who envisions a day when the healthy brain of someone dying from multiorgan failure could be transplanted to the body of someone already brain-dead, but whose other organs still work, thus allowing a healthy brain to survive.

My own brain began to wander — and wonder what kind of body it might inhabit if it were transplanted. A taller one? Younger? Better?

I'm not mocking the neuroscientist, whose other work is highly recognized. But for me this vision of a newly combined body and brain shortchanges my body's meaning.

The report said the neuroscientist views the brain as the container of human identity and the soul. But I consider my body essential to my identity.

And I think I have a God-given responsibility to give myself good care in order to foster my development as someone uniquely created by God, body and spirit.

When focusing on "spirit-uality," it is easy to overlook the body's worth. Recalling the importance of Christ's body in the church's liturgy might redirect us. After all, isn't it "the body of Christ" that eucharistic ministers clearly announce at Communion time?

Reconciling self-love with self-denial

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

If we are to love God as ourselves, we need to love ourselves.

Yet, Jesus says that to be authentic disciples we have to deny our very selves (Mark 8:34).

How can denial of self be reconciled with love of self?

Well, in the first place, to deny ourselves does not mean to annihilate ourselves. Jesus asks us to curb our selfishness — to rein in the preoccupation with self-fulfillment and self-promotion that makes us insensitive to others' needs.

In the second place, remember that love of others does not diminish us but increases us as human beings. We actually grow in stature and maturity and understanding by helping others to grow.

In fact, love of self can be alleged as a criterion for love of others. It is a proven axiom in psychology that people who do not esteem themselves experience difficulty esteeming or loving others. They'd do well to learn to respect and love themselves.

But balance is called for on our parts when it comes to self-love and love for others. It is not a question of either/or but of both/and. We aren't asked to love either ourselves or others, but to love ourselves and others.

We shouldn't be so self-absorbed as to ignore others, especially those in need. And we must not be so concerned with others' well-being as to neglect ourselves.

Does love of self really call upon us to give much care to our bodies? I would say it involves reasonable care for our bodies. Our bodies are essential components of "self"; we are not disembodied spirits.

It is significant in this regard that Jesus never reprimanded people who cried out to him for bodily cures. He respected their legitimate desires for wholeness, for integrity, and he healed them.

Again, when the hungry crowd pressed about Jesus, his reaction was, "My heart is moved with pity for the crowd, because they have been with me now for three days and have nothing to eat" (Mark 8:2). He did not reprove them for seeking bodily nourishment, but fed them.

And notice that the author of Ephesians urged husbands to love their wives and went on to say, "For no one hates his own flesh but rather nourishes and cherishes it, even as Christ does the church" (Ephesians 5:28-29).

We are destined — body and spirit — for glory. Remember this:

"The body ... is ... for the Lord, and the Lord is for the body; God raised the Lord and will also raise us by his power.... Therefore glorify God in your body" (1 Corinthians 6:13-14,20).

People In The News

Public Events Could Hinder Romero's Canonization

By MIKE LANCHIN

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Public celebrations of the 17th anniversary of the murder of Archbishop Oscar Romero could "interfere" with the process for his beatification currently under way in Rome, warned Archbishop Fernando Saenz Lacalle of San Salvador.

"Parishioners should be careful, since public demonstrations could slow down the canonization process," Archbishop Saenz told reporters in mid-February.

According to Archbishop Saenz, "While the Vatican hasn't declared (Romero's) beatification, there can be no public celebrations. Instead, we must try to offer private prayers for him."

Religious and civic groups have traditionally paraded through the streets of the capital, San Salvador, each March 24 to commemorate the anniversary of Archbishop Romero's death.

In Rome, Jesuit Father Peter Gumpel, a former official at the Congregation for Sainthood Causes and an official postulator of Jesuit causes, said Feb. 19, "It is wise to take all precautions" to ensure that any commemoration of a sainthood candidate is not confused with an official liturgical veneration of the person, as if he or she has already been beatified or canonized.

"These things can degenerate into (a) public cult, public liturgical celebrations" if care is not taken, the priest said.

"However, it is quite another thing to remember the person on the anniversary of his death with private devotions, visits to his grave and other commemorations. That is common," Father Gumpel said.

"It is strictly forbidden to attribute an official liturgical cult to someone who has not yet been beatified," he said.

The key difference is that in Masses for blessed and saints, prayers are addressed to the person; in all other cases prayers are said for the person.

The canonization process of Archbishop Romero, who was gunned down by rightist killers while saying Mass in March 1980, began six years ago and is currently under consideration by the Vatican.

Last November, the Archdiocese of San Salvador officially terminated the diocesan stage of the process, initiated in 1993, and sent all of its relevant documentation on the archbishop to Rome.

During the diocesan process the Ecclesiastical Tribunal in San Salvador, which was appointed to oversee the process, studied manuscripts of Archbishop Romero's homilies, writings and even personal letters.

The tribunal also received testimonies from people who knew the efforts of Archbishop Romero during his time as San Salvador's fourth archbishop.

Although endorsed by Pope John Paul II, the process of Archbishop Romero's beatification is expected to be lengthy. For him to be declared a martyr, it would have to be proven that Archbishop Romero's faith, not his political position, was the primary motivation for his murder.

Former Hostage Still Working To Forgive

By TONY STALEY

DE PERE, Wis. (CNS) — Former hostage Terry Anderson says he does not hate the men who held him captive for nearly seven years in Lebanon.

Nor is he angry or bitter toward them, though he doesn't like them or have any desire to see them again.

"I am working to forgive them," the former Associated Press bureau chief in Beirut said Feb. 6 at St. Norbert College. "But I don't wish them any harm."

Anderson, who was kidnapped on March 16, 1985, and released on Dec. 4, 1991, said the Bible was an important aid in helping him survive captivity.

His captors gave him a new copy of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible when he asked for it after enduring his first three-and-a-half weeks of captivity which included being spit on by the guards, who sat on his chest and stuck a gun in his ear.

"Finally I broke. I told them I am not an animal and asked for a Bible," Anderson said. They not only gave him the Bible, they lengthened his chain and gave him a blanket to put over his head so he could read the Bible without seeing his captors' faces.

Over the next six-and-a-half years, Anderson, who is a Catholic, read the entire Bible 50 times and parts of it more often than that. Anderson said he most enjoyed Paul's letter to the Philippians and the Psalms, "but I had a lot of problems with Job."

He said the people in the Bible came alive for him and that he thinks "Paul was a difficult man. I don't know if he could have been my friend, but I would follow him."

During his captivity, Anderson said, he was fortunate to spend less than a year in solitary confinement. The rest of the time he was with other hostages, who were linked together at the ankle by six inches of chain.

Not that they always got along well, said Anderson, who singled out some of the hostages for what they meant to him, including Servite Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, who he called "the holiest man I ever met." The priest, who died last July of cancer, had been held in captivity from Jan. 8, 1985, to July 26, 1986.

Anderson emphasized that the way they were treated was not in keeping with Islam; many Muslims have since told him they deplored the kidnappings, which violated the Koran. He said he found it a mystery how his captors could treat them as they did and still pray five times a day. But, he noted, they are not the only people who misuse religion.

Some people say the hostages were courageous, but he disagrees. "Courage involves making hard choices. We had no choices. Our families here, they were the ones who were courageous."

It just shows that "we each are capable of enormously more than we think we can do," said Anderson, who thanked all those who prayed for him and the other hostages during their captivity.

Anderson encouraged people not to give up, even though the world may seem out of control.

Asian Immigrant Women Advocates Leader Wins CHD Award

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Young Shin, executive director of Asian Immigrant Women Advocates and a longtime grass-roots leader for improved working conditions for garment workers, has been named winner of the Development of People Award given each year by the Campaign for Human Development. Shin, herself a Korean immigrant, was to receive the award Feb. 23, at the beginning of the annual Catholic social ministry gathering in Washington. A co-founder of the Asian women's advocacy group, also known as AIWA, Shin has been working to organize and develop leadership of low-income Asian immigrant women in the garment, hotel, restaurant, electronics and nursing home industries in the San Francisco Bay area and California's "Silicon Valley."

Sulpician Father Robert Eno, Scholar, Ecumenist, Dies At 60

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A funeral Mass was celebrated Feb. 17 for Sulpician Father Robert Bryan Eno, a patristics scholar at The Catholic University of America and longtime participant in the Lutheran-Roman Catholic dialogue, who died Feb. 13. Father Eno, who was also a professor of Church history at the university, suffered a fatal heart attack and died in his room at Theological College in Washington. The priest, who was 60, had been under a doctor's care for a heart condition for the past few years.

Vocations Update

Father Frank O'Rourke

Why are we afraid to talk about vocations? "I think my son would make a good priest," a mother confided to me recently. "He's sensitive, he cares about people and he's a good leader."

"Have you ever told him that?" I said. She laughed. "Are you joking?" How do you talk to kids about things like that? I mean, you don't sit down with a teen-age son and say, 'Now, let's talk about you becoming a priest.'

This dialogue is reported by Dolores Curran, a Catholic parent and popular writer in an article titled "Why are we afraid to talk about vocations?" for Catholic Update. It expresses what I believe to be a typical Catholic parent's response to discussing the possibility of a vocation to priesthood or religious life with their children. I hope that parents will join me in taking a more open approach and invite their children to consider generously sharing their lives in service to God's people as a priest, sister or brother.

I am a priest today because of the wonderful example of men and women, priests and nuns, whose lives spoke of their love for God and their caring deeply for others. I am a priest today because my parents, my school and parish community saw priesthood as a special way to live the Gospel mandate to love God and neighbor. I hope you will join me in doing your part to create a healthy open climate in our parishes and institutions for discussions within our families.

Dolores Curran ends her reflection on vocations in this way: "If we parents, side by side with our daughters and sons, alert ourselves to the indications of a vocation, capture spontaneous members into the future, evidence an authentic faith life, and create opportunities for idealism and contact with those in religious life, we may be opening up for many the gift of a rich and rewarding religious life. Although they may not choose this life, we can put that in God's hands. At least we will all have done our part."

For information on vocations in the Diocese of Charlotte, contact Father O'Rourke, Diocesan Director of Vocations, (910) 766-1882.

Argument In Religious Rights Case Focuses On Congress-Court Battle

A statue of St. Peter stands outside St. Peter's Catholic Church in Boerne, Texas. The church is at the center of a religious freedom case being considered by the Supreme Court. The case arose after the city of Boerne denied a permit to expand the church, which is located in a historical district.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The unrecurrent of oral arguments at the Supreme Court in a case involving a Texas Catholic parish Feb. 19 had less to do with the constitutionality of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act than with a turf battle between the court and Congress.

Question after question from several of the justices as they heard arguments in Boerne vs. Flores seemed to indicate they consider Congress's passage of the 1993 law, known as RFRA, to be an attack on their authority to interpret the Constitution.

Justices Antonin Scalia and Sandra Day O'Connor in particular seemed inclined to agree with Marci A. Hamilton, the attorney for the town of Boerne, who said, "This case is not about religious liberty. This case is about federal power."

Scalia and O'Connor questioned how far Congress could go in writing laws that effectively overrule the Supreme Court's decisions. For instance, O'Connor asked, could Congress say all laws pertaining to abortion have only to pass one new, stricter standard of scrutiny, despite the court's record of rulings on abortion under various standards?

Douglas Laycock, arguing on behalf of the Archdiocese of San Antonio, which represents the interests of St. Peter's Parish in the case, said Congress has the authority to expand upon rights but not to legislate in ways that restrict rights the court has established.

"To do one thing removes liberty, to do the other expands a liberty," said Laycock.

The constitutional challenge arose from the question of whether the town of Boerne, Texas, has the legal authority to stop St. Peter the Apostle Parish from tearing down the 73-year-old church building to construct a bigger one that can accommodate its 1,000 families.

The town refused to issue permits for the project because the church lies within a historic preservation district. The parish offered to build the new church behind the original mission-style facade of the old building.

But preservationists have insisted that the interests of the historic district supersede the congregation's need to change that specific part of the six-acre parish property.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed lower court rulings and said RFRA protects the church's right to do what it needs to in the interest of religious freedom. Both the town and the archdiocese urged the Supreme Court to use the case to review the constitutionality of RFRA.

The archdiocese was joined in arguing that the law is constitutional by acting U.S. Solicitor General Walter Dellinger. He said RFRA was a permissible step by Congress to head off conflicts that would arise as states tried to figure out whether local laws were too restrictive of religious liberty.

The town of Boerne was joined by a coalition of states led by Ohio state solicitor Jeffrey S. Sutton, who said Congress had no right to impose on states a standard that is "totally global in nature," requiring review of every local and state law in light of RFRA.

The case has attracted huge interest from churches, states and civil liberty organizations because of its implications for everything from operation of prisons to parental authority.

But based on the questioning at the oral arguments, the judicial fate of RFRA may rest in whether a majority of justices share Scalia's and O'Connor's implied hostility toward Congress for legislating a way around their earlier ruling.

RFRA was unanimously approved by Congress after a massive interfaith and bipartisan effort. Its clearly stated goal was to shift back to religious interests the benefit of the doubt when weighing whether laws inappropriately infringe on religious rights.

It was passed in response to the court's 1990 ruling in Smith vs. Employment Division that the state of Oregon's right to classify peyote as an illegal drug outweighed an employee's right to use it as part of a Native American religious ceremony.

Ruling OKs Fixed Clinic Protest Buffer Zones

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Supreme Court Feb. 19 upheld part and rejected part of an injunction limiting where abortion opponents may protest at an abortion clinic.

In a fragmented ruling, all but one of the justices agreed with Chief Justice William Rehnquist that at least part of an injunction establishing "buffer zones" for protests at clinics in western New York is unconstitutional.

The majority upheld the U.S. District Court's imposition of a 15-foot zone around the clinics that protesters must remain outside. But they struck down the injunction's requirement that protesters stay outside a "floating" 15-foot zone around patients or employees of the clinic as they approach the building.

Rehnquist wrote that fixed buffer zones around doorways, driveways and driveway entrances also are necessary to ensure that people entering or leaving the clinic can do so. The restriction does not impose a burden on protesters' free speech rights, he said.

However, he said the "floating" buffer zones that follow along with patients or employees as they approach or leave the clinics "burden more speech than is necessary."

The restriction was imposed to keep "sidewalk counselors" from approaching women to try to talk them out of having abortions.

"The 15-foot floating buffer zones would restrict the speech of those who simply line the sidewalk or curb in an effort to chant, shout or hold signs peacefully," Rehnquist wrote. He was joined in striking down parts of the injunction by justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia, Anthony Kennedy, David Souter, Clarence Thomas and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

The parts of his opinion upholding the fixed buffer zones were joined by Justice Stephen Breyer, O'Connor, Stevens, Souter and Ginsburg.

Scalia, joined by Thomas and Kennedy, filed a separate opinion that concurred with Rehnquist in overruling the floating buffer zone, but saying the entire lower court ruling should have been rejected.

"Today's opinion makes a destructive inroad upon First Amendment law in holding that the validity of an injunction against speech is to be determined by an appellate court on the basis of what the issuing court might reasonably have found as to necessity, rather than on the basis of what it in fact found," Scalia wrote. "It makes a destructive inroad upon the separation of powers in holding that an injunction may contain measures justified by the public interest apart from remediation of the legal wrong that is the subject of the complaint."

The case arose from a challenge by the Rev. Paul Schenck, an Assemblies of God minister, and attorney Dwight Saunders, who argued that the buffer zone injunction restricted their free speech rights more than necessary.

Former Christophers Head Launches Own Radio Evangelization Effort

By TRACY EARLY

NEW YORK (CNS) — The former director of The Christophers, which uses media to promote its conviction that it is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness, has drawn on his past experience to launch a new media ministry.

Father John T. Catoir, who returned to his home diocese of Paterson, N.J., in 1995, is now broadcasting 30-second spot messages on radio and engaging in a pastoral correspondence with the many listeners who accept his invitation to write him.

The priest is director of communications and evangelism for his diocese and an assistant pastor at St. Mary's Assumption Parish in Passaic.

In his radio spots he tells listeners, "If you've been away from church, maybe it's time to come home, to open yourself to God's healing love and to receive Jesus into your life once again."

In an interview with Catholic News Service in New York, Father Catoir said he began broadcasting the spots in December 1995, and has received letters from nearly 500 listeners.

"People in advertising say that for every letter you get, there will be more than 400 people who feel the same way but do not write," he said. "But if I never got a letter, just knowing that there are tens of thousands who have heard the message would justify it."

Father Catoir, whose newspaper column is distributed by CNS every other week, said he placed his radio spots through a network called Westwood One, which broadcast them on 567 stations in 179 markets with a potential audience of 1.3 million. During a designated week each month, his message is broadcast 12 times on each station.

He signed up to put the spots on during the early morning hours between midnight and 6 a.m.

"The people I want to reach are not sleeping," he said. "They are in a disposition to listen."

The service costs $1,750 per month, and he has had help to cover the expense from one major donor and hundreds of people who have given smaller amounts.

Father Catoir said half the people who write him were asking for guidance. And others were seeking spiritual direction, or just wanting to tell a priest about their lives.

"To keep it personal," he added, "I answer all the letters in my own hand." Sometimes he writes letters and many times he responds with cards carrying various spiritual messages oriented to people's problems. He chooses the one he feels is most appropriate and personalizes it with a brief message directed at the heart of the person's need.

"What I want to do is awaken hope," Father Catoir said. "Hope is what makes things happen. I believe it's going to happen because I'm going to pray for it to happen."

He said that early in his priesthood he worked in a parish that had regular novenas to St. Jude, and came to have his own special devotion to St. Jude. "I saw miracle after miracle," he said. "St. Jude was a strong source of help for people who needed help."

So when he left The Christophers and undertook his new radio outreach, he did it under the name St. Jude Media.

His goal, he said, was to reach out to people in need of help, particularly lapsed Catholics who now might welcome an invitation to see the Church as "a port in the storm of life."

St. Jude Media is central to his ministry, he said. "This is what I'm going to do for the rest of my life."

ties throughout the year. All this despite the fact she has osteoporosis and does not drive.

"I'm very fortunate. There's not a pain in my body," Finlayson noted. "I also have a network of chauffeurs to call on."

A widow, Finlayson moved to Charlotte in 1986. She has lived in the same apartment for 11 years, but like the Cuzzones, admits the day will come when she will have to think about other alternatives. "Housing will be an issue I have to consider," she said. "I'm quite comfortable now, but I can see the need for different living accommodations down the road."

Finlayson also sees other needs for Catholics over age 60 in the diocese. "Transportation is an issue," she says. "Many seniors are transplants and no longer drive, and they want to go Mass on Sunday, if not every day. If I don't go to Mass, I don't feel like doing anything else. That is a part of our generation."

Although senior citizens are "very independent," the majority will need assistance sometime in the future, she added. "We are living longer, and our needs are changing," Finlayson said.

The diocese is continuing to conduct listening sessions in each vicariate to get input from seniors on their wants and needs. That information, plus survey results and recommendations from a diocesan task force, will be used to help plan new programs for elders.

that "the procreation of a new person, whereby the man and the woman collaborate with the power of the Creator, must be the fruit and the sign of the mutual self-giving of the spouses, of their love and their fidelity."

Doerflinger added that technologies such as cloning "should prompt us once again to appreciate a basic truth: The fact that it is technically possible to do something doesn't mean it ought to be done."

In 1994, a scientist at the University of Wisconsin in Madison was the first to clone cattle, but he did it by using cells from cattle embryos — a method used before to clone mice and other animals. The experiment with sheep used a technique long thought to be impossible by scientists.

The Scottish team took unfertilized eggs from the sheep and removed all of the DNA from them, leaving behind only nutrients and the machinery to foster embryo growth.

The geneticists added to the egg complete genetic material from a single mature cell obtained from the udder of an adult sheep. Then a spark of electricity started the egg dividing into an embryo. It was put into a culture dish and then transplanted into the wombs of surrogate sheep.

The Joy in Loving: A Guide To Daily Living With Mother Teresa

Mother Teresa is known throughout the world for her lifetime commitment to helping the poor and needy. Her life has been rich with achievement. Born Agnes Bojaxiu in Yugoslavia in 1910 she left home at the age of eighteen to become a novice at a mission in Ireland. Arriving in India in 1929, she soon took religious vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, and after several years of teaching the poor in Calcutta, began the Congregation of the Missionaries of Charity, which has since expanded to include over 600 homes in as many as 136 countries.

The Joy in Loving: A Guide to Daily Living with Mother Teresa, compiled by Java Chalina and Edward LeJoly, (Viking, March 10, 1997, $19.95), is a collection of 365 of Mother Teresa's meditations, prayers and reflections for every day of the year, which will prove to be a constant source of guidance, comfort and peace for readers. First published by Penguin India in August 1996, The Joy in Loving contains ideas and insights which spring from Mother Teresa's own life, and include intimate testimony on her life's work. She writes of men and women who have died uncomplainingly, even in the midst of great poverty and deprivation; of people whose indifference has given way to compassion and of her incredible encounters with people and governments across the globe. Drawing on over 70 years of selfless service to the poor, Mother Teresa discussed the importance of work, prayer, charity, service and above all, the need to love—unconditionally and absolutely.

Vicar Discusses Role Of Faith Formation,

in part, to Pope John Paul II's directive that there be "a revision of its methods." After the second Vatican Council, catechetical materials have incorporated the perspective of the Council in relation to the teachings of the Church. It is also essential that those being catechized hear the message in words that are respectful of their age, experience and ability to understand.

It is not surprising, then, that the Holy Father would stress the importance of searching for "suitable language." It should be apparent that the contemporary approach to catechetics must respond to the directive enunciated by Pope John Paul II. This is a need within which the timeless message of Jesus Christ is to be shared in a timely manner.

How would you evaluate catechetics or religious education in the Diocese of Charlotte?

I have been impressed and inspired by the dedication of those involved in the catechetical mission within the diocese. The staff at the Office of Faith Formation have labored selflessly to serve parishes responsibly. The priests and catechetical leaders have been committed to formulating and implementing noble programs in the parishes. The catechists have exercised a particularly beautiful ministry in fulfilling their role. By their words and deeds they have striven to be both teachers and witnesses.

Nonetheless, it is always necessary that timely programs of continuing formation be made available for catechetical leaders and catechists. It is essential that diocesan programs of certification be implemented to ensure that the catechists understand the meaning and significance of the message they are commissioned to share with others. It is imperative that the catechetical programs in parishes be evaluated annually in order to ensure that they will include cognitive, affective and behavioral objectives in relation to the content being shared. It is vital that the perspective on Church teachings presented in the Catechism of the Catholic Church be incorporated appropriately in programs directed to children, youth and adults. It is presumed that catechetical programs for adults are available in every parish or within parish clusters inasmuch as the catechetics must be directed to believers at every stage of life.

Although there is always a need for improvement as far as the exercise of the catechetical mission is concerned in this and every other diocese, it is apparent that those involved in the fulfillment of this ministry, whether on the diocesan or parish level, are striving to be faithful to their calling as witnesses of Christ and the Church.

THE DOMINICAN SISTERS OF HAWTHORNE

Share a Great Compassion

"Even though I was very happy, I felt that God was calling me to a different life. The emphasis on community, prayer, sacrifice, obedience to the Holy Father, a unified apostolate based on radical trust in God and loving care of His beloved children, and the visible witness of a religious habit, drew my mind and heart to the Hawthorne Dominicans. In God's Will is our peace; I wish no other life than the one God has offered me in the precious gift of my vocation."

We seek women who are growing in their love of God, and desire to join a community with a strong spiritual, apostolic and community life.

Living our vows and participating in the life of the Church by prayer and sacraments, gives us the ability to serve God in this apostolate.

We nurse incurable cancer patients in our seven free, modern nursing homes, located in Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Massachusetts, and Minnesota.

Many who enter our community have no prior nursing experience, but we all share a great compassion for the suffering poor and delight at being able to help them.

Archdiocese Plans Memorial For Victims Of Bombing

OKLAHOMA CITY (CNS) — Archbishop Eusebius J. Beltran of Oklahoma City has announced plans for a monument to the victims of the April 1995 bombing that demolished the federal building in Oklahoma City and took 168 lives. "The monument will help us recall the bombing tragedy so that we, the people of Oklahoma City, will remember to pray for the victims of the bombing and for their families and all those who were injured," the archbishop told the Sooner Catholic, newspaper of the archdiocese. Designed by Meyer Architects of Oklahoma City, the monument will be erected on the site of the rectory at St. Joseph's Old Cathedral, which sits directly across from where the Alfred P. Murrah federal building stood. The dedication is planned for August.

Legislature To Take Up Bill To Repeal Assisted Suicide Law

PORTLAND, Ore. (CNS) — Oregon's law allowing physician-assisted suicide would be repealed under the terms of a bill introduced in the state Legislature by the House Judiciary Committee. The repeal measure would also create a state-level office to provide information on topics such as hospice care and pain management. Oregon's assisted suicide law, known as the Oregon Death With Dignity Act, was approved by a statewide referendum in November 1994. Its implementation was blocked by a court challenge Dec. 7, 1994, the day before it was to take effect.

Catholic Common Ground Members To Meet

NEW YORK (CNS) — About 40 U.S. Catholic leaders are to meet in Mundelein, Ill., March 7-9 for a dialogue on "The United States Culture and the Challenge of Discipleship." The invitation-only meeting, to be held at the Chicago archdiocesan Center for Development in Ministry, is the first Cardinal Bernardin Conference of the Catholic Common Ground Initiative. The initiative is a Catholic reconciliation movement launched last year by the late Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago. Following the meeting, four of its participants will form a panel for an hour-long interactive national teleconference to be carried on cable television systems by the Odyssey Channel and on Channel 83 of PrimeStar satellite transmission. That program will run from noon to 1 p.m. EST March 10.

Proposed Housing Project Divides Netanyahu, Likud Party Members

JERUSALEM (CNS) — The proposed Har Hooma housing project has caused serious division between Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his Likud government coalition partners. Seventeen coalition members threatened to leave the coalition in mid-February if work on the project was not started within one week, reacting to reports that Netanyahu had decided not to begin construction immediately. The planned 6,500 unit project is to be built on a hill southeast of Jerusalem, known as Jabal Abu-Gneim in Arabic and Har Hooma in Hebrew. The hill belonged to residents of the Christian village of Beit Tsahur, as well as to residents of the Muslim village of Umm-Tuba and a Jewish land developer. The area is close to the northern edge of Bethlehem.

Embryos Deserve Protection, Says Pontifical Academy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The only scientifically and morally logical place to draw the line between what is and is not human life is at the moment of conception, said members of the Pontifical Academy for Life. "From the biological point of view, human formation and development appear as a continuous, coordinated and gradual process from the moment of fertilization," the academy members said. The moment of fertilization marks the constitution of "a new human organism equipped with an intrinsic capacity to develop itself autonomously into an individual adult," the members said in a statement released Feb. 20 at the Vatican.

WCC Says Cuts Will Occur

ROME (CNS) — The financially troubled World Council of Churches reported that its fiscal picture had brightened in the last half-year, but that it needed to cut staff and restructure in response to diminished income. The WCC executive committee learned at its meeting in late February that a recent appeal for more support from member Churches had produced results, and that economic circumstances had created a more favorable operating climate for the Geneva-based organization. "Signs are more encouraging than a year ago," said a WCC statement on the subject. "Investment performances have been good and exchange rates against the Swiss franc (have) improved greatly in the last three months."

Clinton Attends Dialogue On Church Role In Welfare Effort

NEW YORK (CNS) — President Clinton visited the Riverside Church in New York Feb. 18 for an hour of dialogue on ways that churches and other nongovernmental groups can help move people from welfare to work. He expressed confidence that "this is a manageable problem," but said that "we have to have your help." Riverside is a prominent interdenominational church affiliated with the American Baptist Churches and the United Church of Christ. At the church, Clinton informally discussed the welfare situation and responded to about a dozen people who had been chosen to make brief statements to him.

St. Bernadette Church

LINVILLE — While the mission church in Linville placed under the patronage of St. Bernadette is not yet 10 years old, its lineage dates back decades thanks to a growing Catholic presence in the area during the 1930s.

In 1935, a chapel dedicated as St. Bernadette was established in Spruce Pine, less than 15 miles to the southwest. A new church was built on the site beginning in 1938, and was renamed St. Lucien in memory of the principal benefactors' deceased daughter. The church and rectory were dedicated and blessed in August 1940.

Back in Linville, Bishop Eugene McGuinness of Raleigh had founded a mission in June 1940 to serve the Catholics in Avery County. L.W. and Marion Driscoll of New York, who owned a chapel in the Linville township, donated the structure to the diocese. Dedicated to the service of God and named St. Patricia by Bishop McGuinness, the little church opened its doors to area Catholics for more than 40 years, all the while as a mission of St. Lucien parish.

By the late 1970s, the North Carolina mountains had become a popular summer vacation spot, and the 30-seat St. Patricia chapel could no longer accommodate the number of Catholics — both resident and visiting — coming to worship. Masses were added, but that too became inadequate. Priests began celebrating weekend Masses in a Beech Mountain restaurant, at Lees McRae College, in Linville Episcopal Church and finally in a Presbyterian church in Banner Elk, while daily Mass continued to be celebrated at St. Patricia, which in November 1987 was returned to the Driscoll family by the diocese.

A building fund was established in 1977 by Father Henry Becker, and the priest began searching out a location for a new Catholic church. One of his successors, Father John Pagel, took charge of the building project and in November 1984, the Diocese of Charlotte purchased a 10-acre tract of land facing Grandfather Mountain. Fund-raising efforts continued for three years within the Catholic community in Linville.

In 1987, Bishop John F. Donoghue gave his approval for building to begin. Special emphasis was placed on capturing the beauty of the Carolina mountains in and at the church. The exterior was created in part with stone from the Linville area, and the sanctuary's rear wall was fashioned of glass so as to allow a view of Grandfather Mountain and its famous mile-high swinging bridge. The altar, built by local craftsman Paul Pritchard, is a larger version of the one he created for St. Lucien Church.

The first Mass was celebrated in the new St. Bernadette Church on Dec. 31, 1988. Bishop Donoghue dedicated the building in June 1989. Father Richard McCue, a retired Navy chaplain and present pastor of St. Francis of Assisi parish in Franklin, was pastor at the time.

Father Aloysius D'Silva was installed as pastor of St. Lucien and its mission, St. Bernadette, in November 1994. In addition to local parishioners who call St. Bernadette Church their spiritual home, Father D'Silva celebrates Mass with hundreds of vacationers who frequent the area year-round, especially in summer months. Plans to expand parking at the church are underway.

As members of the faithful, parishioners not only worship in the mountain church, but also serve as stewards through such efforts as a local ecumenical group that tends to area citizens' needs, be they financial, social or spiritual. Community outreach includes visits and sacramental distribution at local life-care centers as well.

On New Year's Eve, 1998, the community of St. Bernadette Church will celebrate its 10th anniversary together as a family of faith. Meanwhile, the church serves as testimony of the evangelical spirit of Catholicism in the North Carolina mountains.

Economic Conference Promotes Ecumenism

ASHEVILLE — An ecumenical conference, Economic Initiatives: Issues of Justice and Faith, will be held on March 15 from 9:30 a.m.-4:15 p.m. at Trinity Episcopal Church in Asheville. The event is being sponsored jointly by the Diocese of Charlotte's Office of Justice and Peace, and the Task Force on Economic Justice of the Episcopal Diocese of Western North Carolina. Several area Catholic and Episcopal churches have been instrumental in spearheading the conference, and invitations are being extended to representatives of all faith traditions.

Designed for church and community leaders, educators and any persons interested in exploring ways the church and society might collaborate to address economic injustices in western North Carolina, the event will help participants begin to understand economics from a faith perspective and to initiate efforts to bring about change.

Featured speakers are Kimberly Bobo, executive director of the National Interfaith Committee for Worker Justice from Chicago, and June Jackson Christmas, M.D., community psychiatrist and health policy planner from New York.

Bobo is the founder of the National Interfaith Committee, which seeks to educate and mobilize the U.S. religious community on issues and campaigns to improve wages, benefits, and working conditions for workers, especially low-wage workers. Since it began in early 1996, the organization has developed a poultry workers' justice project, helped organize new interfaith committees, developed a newsletter on religion and labor issues and involved seminaries in justice for workers. Bobo is the author of Lives Matter: A Handbook for Christian Organizing and co-author of Organizing for Social Change: A Manual for Activists in the 1990s.

Dr. Christmas, who received her

M.D. from Boston University School of Medicine, is the founder of the Harlem Rehabilitation Center and the first African-American woman elected president of the American Public Health Association. For President Jimmy Carter, she headed a transition planning group to develop policy guidelines for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Christmas has published extensively and served as lecturer and consultant nationally and internationally on mental health services, urban and minority affairs and health policy.

In addition to keynote speakers, state, regional and denominational experts will lead workshops on issues such as welfare reform, housing, living wage and employment, immigration, racism and health care. Liturgists from the Catholic and Episcopal Dioceses are cooperating to plan prayer services which support a Christian response to economic injustice. Educational resources, both free and for purchase, will be available to participants.

Conference planners advocate "creative economics," suggesting that the efforts of the church on behalf of the economically disenfranchised should serve as catalysts, helping people improve their economic conditions and break into the mainstream economy. The aim of this conference is to enlist the active involvement of people of faith to change unjust economic situations in their own communities.

The registration fee for the conference is $10, which includes lunch. Registrations must be received no later than Friday, March 7. Checks should be payable to "Office of Justice and Peace — Catholic Diocese" and mailed to the Episcopal Diocese of WNC, P.O. Box 369, Black Mountain, N.C. 28711. For further information, call Joanne Frazer at the Office of Justice and Peace, (704) 331-1736.

Shamrock Tournament A Catholic Schools Tradition

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — Marly Josephson looked like she'd come up on the short end of a prize fight.

On Monday, the point guard for Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School's varsity basketball team sported a small cut and black eye after accidentally getting jabbed during Sunday's Shamrock Tournament Division I girls championship game.

The mishap sent the 8th grader to the locker room for most of the second quarter, but Josephson returned to the floor in the second half, helping her teammates deliver the knockout punch against St. Jude School of Atlanta, 33-22.

"Marly's a very tenacious athlete. She fought her way back (after the injury)," said Holy Trinity Coach Bill Lewis.

The Lady Bulldogs' victory earned Holy Trinity — in its second year of existence — its first-ever Shamrock Tournament title.

"We're very proud of the girls," Lewis said. "They worked hard all year, and their skills kept improving. We could see the team was getting better going into the tourney. We peaked at the right time."

The Shamrock championship was the icing on the cake for the Lady Bulldogs, who ended the year with a 21-3 record after also securing their conference championship. The Holy Trinity boys fared equally well, placing third in the Division I bracket of the Shamrock Tournament.

Josephson's grittiness on the court is nothing new to the Shamrock invitational, a Catholic schools tradition since 1962. According to Holy Trinity Principal Jerry Healy, the Shamrock was started by former Charlotte Catholic High School Coach Tom Brennan and is one of the oldest running basketball tournaments on any level in the state. Brennan coached at Charlotte Catholic from 1956-66. Healy worked closely with the tournament from 1970-89 and continues to assist.

Hosted by St. Patrick School, the 7th and 8th grade invitational brings teams from the Southeast and is a season highlight for many schools. This year, 52 teams competed.

Catholics, Methodists Discuss Papacy, Sacraments

WASHINGTON (CNS) — At their winter meeting, members of the U.S. United Methodist-Roman Catholic Dialogue discussed the papacy, church authority and their churches' understanding of baptism and confirmation.

They also worshiped together, celebrating a baptismal renewal service and a Love-feast — a noneucharistic community meal — as part of their Feb. 27-March 1 meeting at St. Paul's College in Washington.

In a departure from usual practice in ecumenical dialogues, they invited reporters from Catholic News Service and the United Methodist News Service to sit in on part of their discussions.

In a lively 90-minute discussion of confirmation, based on a paper by the Rev. Diedra H. Kriewald of Wesley Theological Seminary in Washington, participants on both sides acknowledged widely differing theological and pastoral views within their own churches on the meaning, practice and purpose of confirmation.

Dr. Kriewald attributed much of the confusion to the historical separation of baptism and confirmation in the West from about the fifth century on, and to the West's adoption of the term "confirmation," as opposed to the more ancient term "chrismation," still used in the churches of the East. Chrismation means anointing.

In an earlier discussion of papacy and church authority, Methodist Bishop William Boyd Grove said he believes that "the point of view of contemporary Methodists toward the authority of the bishop of Rome is far more positive than was the case a generation ago."

Bishop Grove, ecumenical officer of the Council of Bishops and Methodist co-chairman of the dialogue, said Pope John XXIII's "expansive and generous spirit" and Pope John Paul II's "style of itineracy" — reminiscent of the making the rounds of congregations expected of Methodist bishops — are among factors that have contributed to a more sympathetic view by Methodists.

Msgr. John Strykowski of Holy Cross Parish in Maspeth, N.Y., outlined the history behind Roman Catholic understanding of papal primacy and authority.

"If the papacy is to be less of an obstacle to church unity in the next millennium," he said, "then — it seems to me — we must recover more of the collegial style of governance of the first millennium to balance the monarchical style of the second millennium."

The group's discussion of the papacy was prompted in part by Pope John Paul's request for a dialogue with other churches on how the papacy might better serve Christian unity.

At a press briefing between dialogue sessions, Mercy Sister Mary Aquin O'Neill said the aim of the current round of U.S. dialogue is to translate the results of three decades of national and world dialogue "into forms that can engage congregations and parishes."

Sister O'Neill, a theologian from Mount St. Agnes Theological Center for Women in Baltimore, said, "We've tried to identify topics that we thought would capture what is on the minds of Catholics and Methodists ... that will draw people in the congregations into discussion and dialogue."

Bishop Grove said it has become an important part of the dialogue to pray and worship together and reflect on that.

"We want our life together as members of the dialogue to be not only intellectual and doctrinal, but experiential," he said.

At last fall's dialogue session, after reflecting on their experience of division when Methodist participants were unable to receive Communion at a Catholic Mass and the Catholics could not receive at the Methodist service, the dialogue members agreed not to try to celebrate a eucharistic liturgy together this time.

Bishop Grove said that in contrast to their "painful" experience of division in eucharistic worship last fall, the shared renewal of baptismal vows was "a very rich experience."

Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., Catholic co-chairman of the dialogue, said the service "was a uniquely written rite" for that occasion.

But the rituals of the two churches for renewal of baptismal vows "are really quite similar, and I think we all noted a great deal of convergence," he said.

The Love-feast the group celebrated was based on the common practice in John Wesley's lifetime rather than the order currently recommended in the United Methodist Book of Worship.

A community meal based on the agape meals recorded in the New Testament, the Love-feast played a major role in the early years when Methodism was a reform movement within the Anglican Church and Methodists usually celebrated the Eucharist in their Anglican parishes, not in their Methodist chapels.

Participants agreed that their next meeting to be held in Washington Oct. 16-18, will include an open forum to help expand the awareness and experience of the dialogue to others.

Abortion Supporter Says He Lied About Partial-Birth Procedure

By NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The executive director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers has admitted that he and other supporters of keeping abortion legal lied about the partial-birth abortion procedure during debate over legislation to ban it.

Ron Fitzsimmons, whose organization represents more than 200 independently owned abortion clinics, said in an interview in the March 3 issue of American Medical News that abortion supporters used "spins" and "half-truths" in the debate that ultimately led Congress to fail to override President Clinton's veto of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act.

Fitzsimmons said he personally lied when he said in a November 1995 interview on "Nightline" that women have partial-birth abortions only in cases of danger to the mother's life or severe fetal abnormalities.

"It was not a shining moment for me personally," said Fitzsimmons, who said he stayed out of the partial-birth debate after that.

The legislation vetoed by Clinton would have banned a procedure used in late-term abortions in which the unborn child is partially delivered, feet first, before surgical scissors are stabbed into the base of the infant's head. The child's brain is then removed by suction, allowing for easier delivery of the collapsed head.

Fitzsimmons told the American Medical News, published by the American Medical Association, that the vast majority of partial-birth abortions are performed in the second trimester on healthy fetuses and healthy mothers.

"The abortion rights folks know it, the anti-abortion folks know it, and so, probably, does everyone else," he said.

When the debate began over the partial-birth abortion procedure, Fitzsimmons said, "I learned right away that this was being done for the most part in cases that did not involve those extreme circumstances" cited by opponents of the ban.

He also said he thought a ban on partial-birth abortions "wasn't worth going to the mat on" because it would have little effect on doctors or patients. "The real world impact on doctors and patients is virtually nil," he said, adding that doctors would just use another abortion method.

The biggest problem arising from the debate over partial-birth abortion has been a loss of credibility for those who want to keep abortion legal, Fitzsimmons said.

"The pro-choice movement has lost a lot of credibility during this debate, not just with the general public, but with our pro-choice friends in Congress," he said. "Even the White House is now questioning the accuracy of some of the information given to it on this issue."

"We're fighting a bill that has the support of, what, 78 percent of the public?" Fitzsimmons added. "That tells me that we have a PR problem."

He said the abortion supporters themselves "did serious harm" to those who perform partial-birth abortions by lying that they were only performed in extreme circumstances.

"When you're a doctor who does these abortions and the leaders of your movement appear before Congress and go on network news and say these procedures are done in only the most tragic of circumstances, how do you think it makes them feel?" Fitzsimmons said. "You know they're primarily done on healthy women and healthy fetuses, and it makes you feel like a dirty little abortionist with a dirty little secret."

If the legislation is reintroduced in Congress, as Rep. Charles Canady, R-Fla., plans to do, "I think we should tell them the truth, let them vote and move on," Fitzsimmons said.

Rep. Chris Smith, R-N.J., chairman of the House Pro-Life Caucus, said Fitzsimmons' comments showed that "even those who have defended this method of child abuse eventually have their consciences catch up to them."

"Partial-birth abortion is child abuse. It is murder. It is infanticide," he added. "And now it's clear to even those who call themselves 'pro-choice' that partial-birth abortion is grotesquely inhumane."

A separate article in the same issue of American Medical News reported on reaction to an opinion issued in January by the executive board of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists on partial-birth abortion.

The board said that it could identify "no circumstances under which this procedure would be the only option to save the life of the mother or preserve the health of the woman."

However, it said the procedure "may be the best or most appropriate procedure in a particular circumstance to save the life or preserve the health of a woman, and only the doctor, in consultation with the patient, based upon the woman's particular circumstances, can make this decision."

Cleansing the Temple

"He found in the temple area those who sold oxen, sheep and doves, as well as the money-changers seated there. He made a whip out of cords and drove them all out of the temple area, with the sheep and oxen, and spilled the coins of the money-changers and overturned their tables.... He said, 'Take those out of here, and stop making my Father's house a marketplace.'" (John 2:14-17)

Lay Ministry

An Opportunity For Service

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — "I beg you to have the mind of Christ," Bishop William G. Curlin told 115 newly certified lay ministers upon completing their training last year. "I also ask you one thing: Have the love, tenderness, generosity and joy of Jesus Christ in your ministry."

That May 1996 ceremony at St. Gabriel Church celebrated the addition of individuals to a growing ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte, one which Mercy Sister Mary Timothy Warren calls a way for Catholics to fulfill their baptismal obligations.

"We are all called to ministry through our baptism," says Sister Mary Timothy, diocesan director of lay ministry, who helped launch the ministry in the Charlotte Diocese in 1990.

"Most of us will not be called to do a lot of church ministry — we're too large in number. But we can minister every day right where we are."

Sister Mary Timothy says lay ministry serves as an enriching program of Catholic adult education. With the training they receive during the two-year certification process, participants often venture on to other ministries, such as RCIA, permanent diaconate and religious education. Others enter simply for personal enrichment.

Joanna Jackson, parishioner and former director of religious education at Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville, became certified in the diocesan lay ministry training program in 1995. She says the experience left her with a greater awareness of how to minister at the parish level in an ongoing sense.

"Besides being a DRE, I really felt adult education in the parish is important," she adds.

"We put a lot of material from the training program into adult meetings in our parish. Now, we have an adult group that meets each Sunday, and we also have periodic six-week sessions on various topics. Lay ministry is such a good, basic program; you can spin off into a lot of other areas."

At Immaculate Conception, where about 15 parishioners joined Jackson during the 1994-95 training session, those areas include lecturing, working with the home-bound and assisting the bereavement ministry.

"We were really encouraged," adds Jackson. "A few of the people who came into the Church through RCIA last year are entering lay ministry this year. I think that's just wonderful."

Sister Mary Timothy agrees that lay ministry can help better incorporate tenets of the faith into other forms of ministry. Overall, she says, the intent of the ministry is to yield a deeper comprehension and appreciation — both academically and spiritually — of the Catholic faith.

A native North Carolinian, Sister Mary Timothy has witnessed much growth of the Catholic faith in the diocese over the years. She says programs such as lay ministry provide Catholics with an opportunity to educate and evangelize, not only within their parish communities, but among their brothers and sisters of all faiths.

"Our goal is helping people come to a better understanding that we don't have to argue our faith," she explains. "We have to talk it and walk it, and I think that's part of what our program does. Hopefully, it helps people be comfortable in their faith and keeps them more apprised of what it means to be Catholic today."

At Immaculate Conception Church, Jackson sees a direct link between lay ministry and ongoing education, evangelization and enrichment of parish life. For Sister Mary Timothy, examples like those of the Hendersonville parish serve as reminders of the value of lay ministry in the Diocese of Charlotte. "I would surely say that when we are preparing qualified coordinators of religious education, for instance, then we are certainly preparing the Church of tomorrow," she says.

In the Diocese of Charlotte, the lay ministry program is funded through the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

Pope Says Nature Must Not Be Manipulated For Power

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Because all creation belongs to God, it must not be manipulated for business purposes, Pope John Paul II said.

In an apparent reference to cloning, the pope said "dangerous experiments" which show a lack of respect for life are modern signs of people turning their desire for power or money into a god.

During his March 2 midday Angelus address, Pope John Paul spoke about that day's Gospel reading at Mass of

"It is the whole world which belongs to God and must not be profaned."

Christ driving the sellers and money changers out of the temple.

"The zeal and love of Jesus for His Father's house certainly is not limited to a temple of stone," the pope said. "It is the whole world which belongs to God and must not be profaned."

Making a whip out of cords and chasing out those who were doing business in the temple, "Christ puts us on the guard against the temptation to 'market' even religion.

"Christ raises His voice also against the 'temple merchants' of our time, against those who make the market their 'religion,' going so far as to trample — in the name of the 'power god' or the 'money god' — the dignity of the human person with abuses of every type," the pope said.

Respect for life is sacrificed to money or power in modern experiments, ecological pollution, the marketing of sex, drug pushing and in the exploitation of the poor and of children, he said.

After the cloning of an adult sheep in Scotland, a Vatican official strongly warned against any attempt to duplicate the experiment on a human.

Bishop Elio Sgreccia, the Vatican's leading expert on medical ethics, said even animal cloning should be subject to strict ethical guidelines to maintain respect for the integrity of the various species created by God.

Basketball Tournament Is Catholic School Season Highlight, from page 1

"Our kids look forward to it every year," said Bob Cannon, boys head coach of St. James School in Savannah, Ga., whose school has been making the 500-mile round trip to play in the tournament since 1992.

"We got spoiled early on," he added. "Our girls team won the tourney our first year here, and the second year, our boys team won it."

Tim Henning, boys head coach and athletic director of Sacred Heart School in Salisbury, has brought teams to the Shamrock for the past five years. The coach views the invitational as more than competition. "It teaches the kids about spirit, teamwork, and sportsmanship," he said.

Like other schools participating, the invitational ended Sacred Heart's season. With a 19-8 mark, Henning was pleased with his team's effort this year. "You could see how the kids came together as a group," he said.

The Shamrock Tournament is always held in March and includes both school (Division I) and parish (Division II) teams. It begins on Thursday, and culminates with four championship games on Sunday. Besides Holy Trinity, other winners this year included Sts. Peter and Paul School of Atlanta (Division I, boys), Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro (Division II, boys), and Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Raleigh (Division II, girls). St. Patrick's parish team was the runner-up in the Division II boys bracket.

The weekend includes much more than basketball: It is also a time of fellowship for participants and their families. A Mass is celebrated on Saturday evening, followed by a dance for the students in the Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School gymnasium. Father Dennis Kuhn, Msgr. Richard Allen, and Father John Hanic are among the priests who have celebrated the liturgy. Msgr. Allen, pastor of St. Ann Church, helped oversee the invitational in the mid-1960's with St. Patrick parishioner Joe Mosca.

"In the beginning, the main emphasis was to bring the Catholic community (of Charlotte) together, and it still is,"

Players from Sacred Heart School, Salisbury, and St. James School, Savannah, battle for a rebound.

Msgr. Allen explained. "The tournament was built around our Catholic faith."

The Shamrock's early years were a labor of love for organizers. "Back then, we didn't have a lot of money so we handled everything," Msgr. Allen recalled. "We cooked all the meals and fed everybody."

"We also housed the kids in the school," he added. "They'd sleep in the classrooms at St. Patrick's. That was part of the excitement of the experience for them."

Although the majority of the teams are of the faith, non-

Catholic squads are also invited to participate. In years past, the Jewish Center in Charlotte was among the competitors. "Several years ago, we had the Cherokee Indian reservation students come down and play," added Msgr. Allen. "We looked for teams that didn't have anywhere else to play." Teams from Tampa, Fla., and Washington, D.C., have also made the trip to Charlotte to take part in the tournament.

The event continues to mature and is now a fund-raiser for the St. Patrick School Athletic Association. "We use the proceeds for various things," explained Tom Hennessy, athletic association president. "We've purchased uniforms, new lights for the gym, and used monies for other improvements."

According to Msgr. Allen, the early days of the tourney were as exciting as they are today. "I have never felt electricity like I did at some of those games," he said.

The packed gyms last weekend at St. Patrick, St. Ann, St. Gabriel, and Holy Trinity verify one thing: Catholic Schools' version of March Madness is alive and well.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says At Cana, Jesus Asked Mary To Show Faith Of Disciple

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider the wedding feast at Cana, when Jesus performed His first miracle, turning water into wine. St. John’s account emphasizes Mary’s concern for the bride and bridegroom and her complete confidence in her son. Mary precedes the disciples in faith, for, as the Gospel tells us, it was only after Jesus had performed the miracle that His disciples believed in Him (cf. Jn 2:11).

Mary’s faith does not falter, even when Jesus seems to refuse her request and says that His hour has not yet come (Jn 2:4). But Mary immediately says to the servants: “Do whatever He tells you” (v.5). These words reveal three things: Mary’s great faith, the power of her prayer and her cooperation in the saving mission of her son. They invite Christians in every age to trust the Lord fully and to submit obediently to His will, with confidence that His words will be fulfilled: “Ask, and it will be given you” (Mt 7:7, Lk 11:9).

I extend special greetings to the representatives of the BBC and to the viewers of the “Songs of Praise” telecast from the Basilica of St. Mary Major: May God fill your hearts with sentiments of joy and gratitude toward our Creator. To all the English-speaking visitors, especially those from Great Britain, Thailand, Hong Kong and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Jesus Christ our Savior.

Church Media Must Spread ‘True Meaning’ Of Year 2000, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Catholic Church must improve the way it communicates the Gospel to a world in need of its message of hope, love and transformation, Pope John Paul II said. The message “must be broadcast with increasing effectiveness in order to help the people of our time to escape or shake off the spiritual emptiness which weighs heavily on the hearts of so many,” the pope said Feb. 28. In a speech to the Pontifical Council for Social Communications, Pope John Paul focused particularly on the role of the media in the preparations for the year 2000.

Guest Column

Rev. Francis T. Gignac, S.J.

Reflections On The Fifth Sunday Of Lent: Resurrection and New Life

Today’s liturgy invites us to reflect on the universal significance of the death and resurrection of Christ.

The author of the fourth gospel concluded his story of Jesus’ entry into Jerusalem with an ironical statement put on the lips of the Pharisees, “Look, the whole world has gone after Him.” To illustrate this, he tells a story of some Greeks coming to see Jesus (John 12:20-33). Far from being incidental extras, these Greeks, like the magi in the infancy narrative of Matthew’s gospel, symbolize the Gentile world in search of the truth of God. Their approach to Jesus is made through Philip and Andrew, signifying that access to Jesus has to be mediated to the world at large through His disciples.

The author then develops the point that all who would truly “see” Jesus must see Him through His paschal mystery, i.e., in his death and resurrection. Only through His crucifixion will Jesus be accessible to all; only after His death can the Gospel encompass both Jew and Gentile. It is an hour of paradox, when all realities change meaning: To die is to live and to lose is to find. In order to bear fruit, a grain must decompose in the earth.

Hence He adds a saying about regeneration, “Unless a grain of wheat dies, it remains just a grain of wheat,” and a saying of Jesus found in other forms in the synoptic Gospels, “Whoever loves his life will lose it, and whoever hates his life in this world will preserve it for eternal life.” Then by analogy he extends this principle of life through death to all wouldbe followers of Jesus, “If anyone would serve me, let that person follow me,” i.e., along my way of life through death.

The Old Testament reading is the famous new covenant passage of Jeremiah 31:31-34. This is an oracle, written about 587 B.C., predicting the ultimate restoration of Israel after the exile. The prophet has Yahweh, the God of Israel, taking the initiative, as at Sinai. This new covenant will fulfill the original intention of the old; it will be expressed in personal response.

The prophet pictures Yahweh himself forming a new community, “I will be their God, and they shall be my people.” The new covenant will rest on divine forgiveness; but this pardon must be preceded by Yahweh’s discipline, the Babylonian exile. But in the time of restoration, Yahweh will give each Israelite a new heart.

In the second reading from the Letter to the Hebrews (5:7-9), we have Jesus portrayed as a compassionate high priest called by God, one who can sympathize with sinners, because in the time of His mortal life, “He offered prayers to God, who was able to save Him from death.” Jesus was heard, not because He did not die, but because God raised Him from death. Then, availing himself of the learning-through-suffering motif common in Greek literature, he writes that Jesus, “Son though He was, learned obedience and so became the source of eternal salvation” for all who believe in Him.

This is the paschal mystery that we are preparing to relive these next two weeks. When we are baptized into Christ, we are baptized into His death — we are called to die to sin in order to rise with Him to live a new life. When we partake of the Eucharist, we celebrate the death and resurrection of our Lord and we try, as we encounter Him in His sacramental presence, to be open to receive His Spirit.

Our Christian vocation is to be conformed more and more to the image of Him whom we proclaim as God’s Son. And the same spirit of Christ that enlivens us for holiness of life is the source of eternal life for all of us who believe in Him and for all who seek God in truth and sincerity of heart.

Happiness: A Ticklish Subject

Do the words Tickle Me Elmo sound familiar to you?

They do if you were one of the thousands — millions if you believed some of the news stories — of moms, dads, grandmothers, grandfathers, aunts, or uncles who tried to buy that particular battery-operated chatty toy this last Christmas season.

And "tried" appears to have been the key word. Advertising and whatever other mix of circumstance combined to make the fuzzy orange doll The-Toy-of-the-Year for the nation's pre-school set. The economics of supply and demanding little ones did the rest: too few Elmos and too many adults trying to be in the right store at the right time to snap it up, wrap it up and get it under the tree in time for Santa to get the credit.

For those grown-ups not caught up in the crisis, it is still easy to sympathize with those waiting for hours for a store to open or driving all over town on the chance of finding one, just one, left on a shelf.

But the whole phenomenon really got unnerving when we started hearing about ads in newspapers, on the Internet and neighborhood bulletin boards offering to sell the $20-something doll for up to $1,000.

While some little recipients will drag the toy around for months, adoring every "Hee-hee-hee," many more will play with it for a far shorter time. And their parents, grandparents, et al. take for granted that it is impossible to predict whether the object of desire, named Elmo, Barbie, Barney, or G.I. Joe, will be treasured or discarded. These grown-ups — in spite of this uncertainty and with all the trouble and aggravation — still do their best to get and give their beloved children what they want.

You have realistic expectations about a toy for a child because you know that in the end it is the thought that counts, the love you put into all your gifts over the years that matters. Not one single box on one single day. You do your best and let that be enough.

The thing is, we want people we love to be happy. If they want something and we can deliver it, we do. Just because.

However, we can't coerce happiness. What we can do is create a climate through our good actions where our loved ones can find their own happiness.

"The grand essentials to happiness in this life, wrote the great man of letters Joseph Addison, "are something to do, something to love, and something to hope for."

When you stop to think about it, we all know a great deal about happiness. We know that the more we worry about it or the more we chase it the more elusive it becomes. We know happiness depends more on what we are than what we have. And we also know that we cannot force anyone to be happy. And that includes us.

That desirable state of joy and contentment that we call happiness, that sense of being at peace with God, at peace with ourselves and with each other, that happiness grows not by concentrating on how we feel — but on what we do and how we give.

And you don't have to wait until December 25th.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

The Wedding Feast in the Gospel of Matthew

Q. Would you please tell us what is meant by the story of the wedding feast in the Gospel of Matthew? My husband seems to think it means only certain people are called to be saved.

He is 64 years old, but wasn't baptized until he was 20. He is a good Catholic, but this seems to concern him a great deal.

How could a good king condemn people for coming improperly dressed to a wedding feast they didn't even know about?

A. The passage to which you refer (Mt 22:1-14) was the Sunday Gospel some weeks ago. It has puzzled others besides your husband.

A few thoughts may help our understanding. This passage relates the last of three stories Jesus tells in answer to a challenge put to Him by Jewish leaders:

"On what authority are you doing these things?" and to their rejection of Him and His teachings (Mt 21:23).

As Matthew constructs the situation, Jesus responds with three stories. God sent you prophets, he affirms, including John the Baptist, and a whole stream of emissaries, including His own Son, but you refused to hear God's voice in any of them.

Therefore, others from outside the "chosen people," new or old, are being called to take a place in the kingdom of God.

Comparing God's reign to a rich banquet is of course a common theme throughout the Scriptures, one which Matthew makes good use of here.

Many elements of this climax story stretch the imagination beyond all credibility. What king, for example, leaves a banquet waiting, goes off to war, kills enemies and burns cities, and then comes back to finish the party?

In other words, we're dealing here with a parable which is clearly an allegory. It relates through these images the history of God's saving work on earth, concluding with the universal invitation to fill the banquet hall with everyone, "the bad as well as the good."

Understood this way, the concern about wedding garments is easily solved. In early Christianity, conversion to faith in Jesus Christ was commonly referred to as putting on a new set of clothes.

We have several examples of this in the New Testament. St. Paul, for example, says that all who have been baptized into Christ have clothed themselves with him. (Gal 3:27)

This was a symbolic way of stating that those who identify themselves with Christ in baptism accept the responsibility to "wear" His way of living, to authenticate their relationship with the Lord by their deeds.

Just as with parables, it is fruitless and usually misleading to look for specific spiritual meanings in every detail of an allegory.

The central meaning of this one is not hard to find. Now, in the new and final covenant between God and the human family, we are invited to clothe ourselves in the patience, meekness, kindness and compassion of God (Col 3:12).

Our condition at the end will depend on how faithfully we have worn that clothing.

My Favorite Things

From the back seat of our van, the sweet and melodic voice of my five-year-old daughter Teresa, sings along to The Sound Of Music, which is playing on the tape deck. We're taking an unexpected trip to see my mother and I'm trying hard to simply think of "My Favorite Things," but Teresa is having much more success at the moment than I am.

Many of my favorite things originate with my mother, and it's difficult to think of her at the moment because I'm worried about her. The day before my father called me with some upsetting news. My mother fell on some black ice in her driveway, she broke her hip and had surgery. Teresa and I are on our way to the hospital where she'll be for the next four or five days. It's such an unusual feeling to think of mom in the hospital. My mother is never sick; she's only been in the hospital to have her six children.

My mother will be the first to say, "It's not that bad; this can be fixed." But for the rest of us who marvel at her boundless energy, her zest for life, her enthusiasm for teaching and her remarkable health, it's almost impossible to contemplate my mother keeping still. I'm accustomed to having a mother in motion. And as I listen to Teresa sing, it occurs to me that Mother Superior's song about her young novice, Maria, succinctly captures my concerns about my mother's recovery: "How do you keep a wave upon the sand?"

My mother is a giver. Long before volunteerism was "in" my mother was the spark for her own "thousand points of lights program" in her family, church and community. She taught English as a second language in a church basement and as a Red Cross volunteer, she taught thousands of children to swim and dive at the township lake. Mom's special concern for senior citizens led her to volunteer at her town's "Dial-A-Ride" program and for the Little Sisters of the Poor.

When I look at my mother I see so clearly the person that Jesus asks each of us to be. Without any fanfare or fuss, but always with a happy heart and a childlike spirit, my mother lives out the Gospel every day of her life. She sees a need, and using the talents and gifts she's been blessed with, she reaches out and makes a difference to hearts in need of healing and souls in need of soothing.

One of the ways my mother has made an extraordinary difference is through her 20-year involvement with the Christian Service Program (CSP) at De Paul Diocesan High School in Wayne, N.J. For nine years my mother worked as a volunteer in this program and for the past 11 years she has served as the program's director. In the CSP program, every high school senior is required to give one-and-a-half hours of Christian Service each week. The students visit the elderly at nursing homes, tutor children at elementary schools, play and read to children at day care centers and offer assistance to

Sister Mary Thomas Burke To Receive 1997 Beatty Award

CHARLOTTE — Catholic Social Services will present the Sixth Annual Colonel Francis J. Beatty Award to Mercy Sister Mary Thomas Burke at a reception and award dinner March 19 at the Westin Hotel.

The award was established in 1991 and named for the late Colonel Beatty, a Catholic layman whose strong religious faith prompted effective church-related and public service in Charlotte/Mecklenburg and its larger region. In every area of life, he set exemplary standards: in the military, the cotton textile industry, the trucking business, through Rotary, Johnson C. Smith University, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the Boy Scouts and various hospital boards.

Past recipients of the award include James W. Babb, Jr.; Charles L. "Chuck" Grace; Ray S. Farris, Jr.; John C. Engler; and Peter Keber.

"Sister Mary Thomas Burke embodies all those rich, selfless qualities exemplified by the late Col. Beatty, through her effective leadership, inspiring commitment to her faith, and high principles of volunteerism for the benefit of diverse communities," said CSS Board of Advisors Chairman Paul Franz in making the announcement.

A member of the Sisters of Mercy in Belmont where she is presently a member of the governing body, Sister Burke has been on the faculty at UNC-Charlotte since 1970 in the department of Counseling, Special Education and Child Development. In addition to her work at UNCC, she has been very active in community service on local, state and national levels. This includes Mercy Hospital; St. Joseph's Hospital, Asheville; Holy Angels Center; Metrolina AIDS Project; Child Care Resources; and Mecklenburg Ministries, among others.

For outstanding service to the community, the annual Spirit Award will be presented in recognition of outstanding volunteer service to CSS. Receiving the award on behalf of the Adoption Auxiliary, a core group of adoptive families, will be Valerie Smith, Gail Timmes and Sidney Stewart.

CSS in Charlotte is a professional social service agency providing services without regard to religious affiliation since 1948. Assistance is provided in pregnancy support, individual and marriage counseling, substance abuse prevention and adoption.

Media personality Mike Collins will serve as the evening's master of ceremonies.

Cost is $60 per person. For reservations or information, call CSS, (704) 343-9954, weekdays from 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m.

Bishop Visits With Student Fellowship

GREENSBORO — Bishop William G. Curlin recently visited with the Catholic Student Fellowship of Greensboro, which comprises students attending the University of North Carolina-Greensboro, Guilford College and Greensboro College. Bishop Curlin celebrated Mass with the students and their campus minister, Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father John Gilvey. The bishop also blessed and dedicated the group's fellowship house, and spent time sharing with the students about concerns college-aged Catholics face.

"We're now facing a culture that says, 'Go to your churches, but don't take things too seriously,'" Bishop Curlin said during his homily. "But if we truly believe that God fills our lives with His presence through the Eucharist, then nothing can conquer us. I urge you not to go through life with emptiness. Fill it with Christ. If you fill your lives with Christ, you will be the happiest people on earth."

Videos

"Adventures from the Book of Virtues" (1996)

PBS series of six animated half-hour programs based on William J. Bennett's anthology of classic stories from around the world, each episode grouping the tales on one of the following themes — honesty, courage, work, responsibility, compassion and self-discipline. The episodes center on Zach, 11, and Annie, 10, who listen to their wise animal friends tell stories which have lasted through the centuries in Saturday morning cartoon fashion and with emphasis on the moral of each tale. Entertainment the whole family can enjoy and learn from.

"Godspell" (1973)

Sparkling screen version of a musical based loosely on the Gospel according to Matthew, featuring an off-Broadway cast with Victor Garber as the Christ figure and David Haskell as both John the Baptist and Judas. What makes the movie so high-spirited is director David Greene's turning the entire city of New York into a giant stage which is used strikingly for presenting the parables in imaginative skits, many of which serve as springboards for irresistible tunes, such as "Day by Day" and "God Save the People!" The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences. (Videos with Values, (800) 233-4692, $14.99)

"Jesus of Nazareth" (1977)

Award-winning television dramatization of the life of Christ from the Nativity through the Resurrection, with British actor Robert Powell giving an appropriately intense performance as Jesus. Directed by Franco Zeffirelli, the 371-minute production is mounted on an epic scale in a realistic setting rich in period detail that enhances the drama's credibility while being entirely faithful to the Gospel account. The result achieves a spiritual dimension uncommon in most such works. For all members of the family. (Videos with Values, (800) 233-4692, $49.99)

"Miracle of Saint Therese" (1959)

Engrossing French production dramatizing the life of the saint known as the Little Flower who entered the Carmelite cloister at Lisieux at the age of 14, died of tuberculosis in 1897 at age 24 and was canonized in 1925. Director Andre Haguët makes a serious, largely successful attempt to picture the saint's life within her religious community and the meaning of her "little way" to spiritual perfection, with a winning performance by France Descaut in the title role and fine use of the visuals to convey the period and the interior life of a young girl who became a saint. Dubbed. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America. (Ivy Classics, $29.95)

Gangster Movie Has An Emphasis On Character

NEW YORK (CNS) — An undercover agent's odyssey into mob life exacts a daunting personal price in the fact-based crime film, "Donnie Brasco."

FBI Special Agent Joseph Pistone (Johnny Depp) gets his entree into a New York mob family in 1978 when he impresses lifelong mob soldier Lefty Ruggiero (Al Pacino) with his smarts and toughness in dealing with someone who tried to cheat Lefty.

Taking the younger man who calls himself Donnie Brasco under his wing, Lefty vouches for him to his boss Sonny Black (Michael Madsen) and fellow soldiers Nicky (Bruno Kirby) and Paulie (James Russo). Soon Donnie is witnessing their assorted brutal crimes, including murder, and all the time he's wearing a wire.

This proves nearly fatal for Donnie when he goes with the wiseguys to a Japanese restaurant where the maitre d' insists he remove his shoes, which would expose his recorder. Only Donnie's quick thinking saves his neck by bringing out the gangsters' racial prejudice and pleasure in beating up anyone who dared to order any of them to do anything.

With time, the world-weary Lefty comes to love Donnie like a son, even as Donnie's own sense of identity as a husband, father and G-man is retreating further and further into his psyche. He's had to make the mob his family to do the job.

Donnie's closeness to Lefty only makes the fact that he is betraying him a bitter pill to swallow. His personal conflict is intensified since the FBI is starting to suspect the agent is in too deep and has lost his perspective. After years of posing as a single loner, Donnie's wife (Anne Heche) is fed up with only sporadic night visits from her husband, whose three little daughters scarcely know their dad.

All comes to a head when Sonny and his underlings slay a trio of rivals. Donnie is ordered to make his first hit by killing one rival's vengeance-crazed son, and Lefty joins him to ensure he makes the hit — but hints that he now has good reason to suspect his trusted surrogate son.

With the emphasis solidly on character as opposed to shootouts, director Mike Newell's account of Agent Pistone's double life is never less than engrossing.

Gangster films are commonplace, but this one sharply delineates three characters: Donnie, veteran soldier Lefty, and Donnie's long-neglected wife, Maggie.

Pacino, of course, has done this kind of role before and he makes Lefty a real person, someone bitter that he never rose into the mob hierarchy but with a soft side for Donnie, who gives him more attention and respect than his junkie son or his fellow hoods.

Yet Newell never sentimentalizes or glamorizes any of the wiseguys; they are always seen as lowlives who only succeed by virtue of brutal brawn and bloodshed. Pacino has the talent to make the pathetic Lefty rather likable, but never glosses over the fact that he has nearly 30 kills under his belt — and viewers will be left repulsed when he shows his true nature by mercilessly executing a lifelong friend.

Giving a heart-rending performance is Heche's long-suffering Maggie, a woman deeply in love with her good-guy husband, but furious that he puts the job before any responsibility to his children and their marriage.

The audience is made to imagine what it must be like to have to be both mother and father to three little girls for seven long years, with no apologies from a stoic husband who is internalizing all his feelings and treating her as someone who must simply obey and never question him.

Depp does a stretch with this role into a fully adult persona whose moral dilemma is very much at the center of the story. Pacino has the showy role, but Depp's character must keep all his cards to himself for sheer survival — and he keeps us wondering what he will do next as he becomes more and more conflicted — and confides in no one.

This uncertainty as to what he will do next helps maintain a level of suspense throughout the story, which is based on Pistone's book, written with Richard Woodley.

Newell captures the seedy Brooklyn settings and the minutiae of daily life in a mob hangout quite realistically — the boring down-time, punctuated by sudden violence at a moment's notice that is frightening to watch. Madsen is a good choice as the rising crime boss who never lets any personal feeling cloud his nose for money and power.

A section of the film recounts the hoods' aborted attempt to set up shop in Miami, where once again Donnie's cover is nearly blown by a district attorney who greets his fellow law enforcement officer by his real name and is pained by Donnie's lightning-fast reaction. Rocco Sisto plays a Florida undercover agent whose hammy eagerness to do the job is in deliciously sharp contrast to how Donnie approached it.

The violence is at times shocking, but not overindulged in, and the film is most satisfying in its examination of what doing a noble and dangerous job can do to an individual's priorities and own sense of identity.

Because of brief, graphic violence, a flash of nudity, intermittent profanity and much rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

I once read an old folk story about a young girl tormented by a wicked aunt. The aunt's goal is to get possession of the girl's inheritance.

As the story unfolds, the village elder agrees that if the girl can do one task right, she will get the legacy; if not, it goes to the aunt.

from a mountaintop, across a river, through a forest, over a canyon and up the side of a second mountain to save himself and his kingdom. One might think he would be transported magically to the second mountain by an eagle or something, but this tale is different.

The prince begins his adventure by praying for God's help and protection. Then the prince meets a man who teaches him to swim, and thus

A young person runs away, gets involved with drugs, prostitution. Somewhere there is a parent or grandparent praying for God's protection for this lost child.

God doesn't whisk the child home, but God inspires people to give to Covenant House, or the Youth Hotline or some other agency. And the youth ultimately finds a refuge with people who care, who bring life back to him or her.

Or again, as a difficult pregnancy comes to term, many prayers are offered for God's protection for mother and child.

God does not lift the child from the womb by magic. Rather, God has for years guided into medicine men and women who are competent and caring, and who work in a hospital committed to the Gospel. The couple deliberately have chosen a particular medical center because of its life values, and there the child the feast of the Ascension of the Lord. This feast reminds us that while Jesus left us, we should realize he is still here with us as we work with and help each other.

I admit there is part of me that sometimes wishes God would protect me as in the story of the girl and the wool — that God would just come and wonderfully fulfill my wishes exactly as I express them.

"Outside of folk stories it is rare that God directly manipulates events for our advantage and protection.... God gives us graces through situations and people."

But most of the time I appreciate God's way of wanting us to be ennobled, given our dignity, honored for our gifts and talents, complimented for our intelligence. For

The task is to take a bundle of dirty wool to the river and clean it. But the aunt substitutes wool from a black sheep for the dirty wool.

Naturally, no matter how much the girl works, the wool remains black.

Finally, the girl prays for God's help and protection. Then God appears, exchanges the black wool for wool white as sparkling crystal, and the girl is saved.

In another folk story, a young Russian prince must make his way he crosses the river. He meets a man who teaches him to find his way through the dense forest. He meets a man who teaches him to make a bridge from logs, and so he makes it over the mountain. Finally he meets a man who teaches him to ride a mountain goat, and he makes it up the mountain and saves everyone.

Both these folk stories are about how God protects people. In the first story God simply takes over and does what needs to be done. This is the simple, often erroneous image we have of God as our protector.

Much more often God responds to our call for protection by giving us guides, mentors, opportunities to help ourselves.

Outside of folk stories it is rare that God directly manipulates events for our advantage and protection. The old theological maxim that "grace builds on nature" teaches us that God gives us graces through situations and people. In them we then find the help we need. God is usually very subtle.

Look at a few examples.

is born safely.

These are examples of how God usually protects us. God uses the opportunities we have to learn, love, grow, develop, mature. God uses the people around us, the occasions for goodness, the decisions we make.

Church theology recognizes the hand of God in the people around us. Coupled with God's presence in the sacraments and in Scripture, this reinforces our belief that God is present in the everyday things of our lives.

We do not believe in a God of magic; we believe in a God of love and community.

We even celebrate this reality on that is what God does in using nature and people and experience and life as means of responding to our prayers.

God "graces" us. And God's grace comes to us through the sacraments, the Scriptures, the community, the world in which we live.

What we have to do is learn to recognize grace when it comes to us. We are well protected by God in thousands of ways, though we are often not aware what those ways are.

God is not a great order catalogue in the sky

By Mary Miller Pedersen
Catholic News Service

I remember an old TV commercial in which a child walked around the house with an "invisible shield" magically placed around him by the toothpaste he used that morning. I thought that was what God is like for us: a shield.

For a child, it was a comforting thought. It lasted until my first skiing experience when I shooshed down from a Colorado mountaintop with the words, "Oh God, help me."

I'd never been on skis and rode up listening to friends who advised: "It's easy. You don't need a lesson." Within a quarter mile, I crashed. I made the rest of the trip down on a sled escorted by ski-patrol medics.

Years later when my children did risky things, I began to understand what kind of protection God provides us. No, God hadn't been on vacation when I spoke my prayer on that mountaintop. But I realized that much of the harm that had come to me in life or was coming to my children resulted from our own choices:

- God protects us, and
  - God gives us the gift of free will.
- In many instances, we bring on our own catastrophes, though not always willfully. Deciding what seems best or a tornado wipes out our business; someone else gets the job we were in line for.

Once we abandon the childhood notion that God is the great Sears catalogue in the sky from which we can order whatever we want, we enter the mystery of how evil can exist in the face of God's power.

This is one of the great quandaries for every believer.

Every Sunday stories are heard at Mass about God's faithful protection.

—God crushes the Philistines, drowns the Egyptians, saves Jonah from the whale's belly.

—Jesus cures the leper, restores sight to the blind.

—Jesus' Father actually raises him from the dead.

No wonder we proclaim that nothing is impossible with God!

No wonder we pray for God's protection.

We pray because we fear for the safety or welfare of those we love.

We pray because we reach the limits of our understanding and may be confused.

In such prayer we assume the posture of a creature totally dependent on the Creator — a very wise posture to assume. As Christians who inherited the Scriptures and the church's rich teachings, we know that God loves us and cares for us unconditionally. More than 100 times Scripture tells us not to be afraid; God is with us. The words "with us" do not guarantee that sickness and ill fortune will avoid us. But whatever happens, we will not need to face it alone.

Despair would be a great enemy when facing dangers and uncertainties. We certainly need protection from it.

So remember that the words "with us" mean Jesus walks alongside us when we're distressed. Darkness will be transformed into light.

Jesus' life proves that. The Father raised Jesus up. God turns death into new life. That fuels our prayer.

The song "Be Not Afraid" sums it up simply: "If you stand before the power of hell and death is at your side, know that I am with you through it all.... Be not afraid!"

You can't get a better protection plan than that anywhere!

Getting a handle on fear

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

Fear is a built-in warning system, alerting people to danger and moving them to avoid it or resist it. So fear can be good. But if not controlled, fear can defeat its purpose and paralyze people.

In some circumstances fear degenerates into paranoia, an irrational state in which danger is perceived as lurking around every corner.

How do Christians control fear so that it doesn't get out of hand?

In biblical times people's confidence in divine help sprang from their repeated experience of God's saving help. God had demonstrated practical concern for them in so many ways!

Our confidence in divine help also can grow if we learn to recognize the ways God has helped us in the past.

People in biblical times looked to God for protection almost instinctively. Listen to this cry for God's help in what was a frightening situation. "Look down from heaven and regard us from your holy and glorious palace!... You, Lord, are our father, our redeemer you are named forever" (Isaiah 63:15-16).

It would be hard to read the book of Psalms without remarking that it is replete with calls for rescue from personal and societal dangers. Actually, the psalm writers often were frightened by events: national calamities; blood-thirsty enemies; religious persecution.

What if a situation feels hopeless and God seems unconcerned? Then Scripture reassures us, saying: "Can a mother forget her infant, be without tenderness for the child of her womb? Even should she forget, I will never for-

When have you turned to God for "protection"? How was your prayer answered?

"Being a principal in an elementary school, I am very careful in how I handle people, and I pray constantly that God will protect me from misunderstanding so that the problem I'm trying to solve will be handled in the best interest of all concerned. And God always answers my prayers." — Evelyn Bernier, Manchester, N.H.

"Last Thursday, I prayed for safety on a cross-state trip, and during the drive I hit an ice slip and went into a 360-degree turn, spinning across four lanes of rush-hour traffic before I came to a stop without hitting anyone or anything. I believe I was protected." — Sister Betty Dunkel, D.C., Gallup, N.M.

"Recently, our community has gone through devastating floods, and we turned to God for protection.... Our prayers were answered and we were grateful to return safely to our homes after being stranded for six days." — Megan Overgaard, Weiser, Idaho

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A woman prayed during Mass recently for her daughter, who was taking a test that day. I told her afterward that she had given voice to precisely what was in my mind.

I always have in mind one of my children who is taking a test, driving a car somewhere or making an important decision. Often my prayer is that she will be protected — from harm or pain or unhappiness.

What can I say?! I'm a father. In part, I'm in the protection business. But I need help.

Is there anyone who doesn't pray sometimes for God's protection?

Yes, I know God doesn't take the child's test or eliminate all suffering from a child's life.

But God will support the child, invite out the best in the child in risky situations, hold hope out to the child when things look bleak, help the child find her way to trustworthy, caring people when problems seem insoluble.

And what if God sometimes works through others to protect my child (or, when one door closes, to open another)? Then part of my prayer should be that, when asked, I will return the favor by giving support or offering good reasons for hope to another child.

Curley Will Retire As Head Of Catholic Health Association

ST. LOUIS (CNS) — John E. Curley Jr. has announced his intention to retire as president and CEO of the Catholic Health Association of the United States, effective June 1998. "It is with mixed emotions that I choose to retire," said Curley. He said he and his wife, Terry, both natives of Sacramento, Calif., look forward to retirement as "a happy event" and to returning to their home state. But his role with CHA has been "more than a career," he said. "It's been my vocation." He has been president of CHA since 1979.

Cardinal Poletti died Feb. 25 shortly after entering Rome's Gemelli Hospital for tests.

Pope, Buddhist Leader Discuss Catholic-Buddhist Ties

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The leader of a global Buddhist organization headquartered in Taiwan had a first-ever audience with the pope in late February to discuss Catholic-Buddhist ties. Venerable Master Hsing Yun said he and Pope John Paul II prayed together and traded ideas about how the two religions can work more closely to promote world peace. The school of Buddhism which the master represents, the Fokuangshan Buddhist Order, has branches worldwide and frequently arranges high-profile events with globally recognized figures and heads of state. It gained notoriety in the United States recently because of a scandal over inappropriate campaign contributions to the Democratic Party.

Empire State Shooting Victim Calls For Forgiveness Of Attacker

By STEPHEN STEELE

NEW YORK (CNS) — A man severely injured in the Feb. 23 shooting at the Empire State Building that killed one person and injured six others called for the forgiveness of his attacker, while another victim said he harbored no bad feelings toward the shooter.

Patric Demange, a 44-year-old French tourist who was injured along with his wife, Virginie, said in a statement: "I am a Catholic and it is important to forgive."

Demange and his wife were in intensive care at St. Vincent's Hospital and Medical Center after the gunman opened fire on the 86th floor observation deck of the landmark skyscraper. The couple had been among about 100 tourists and sightseers from different states and countries who had been admiring the view that Hector Mendez of the Bronx describes his ordeal as one of the victims of a Feb. 23 attack on tourists at the Empire State Building.

Sunday afternoon.

After opening fire, Ali Abu Kamal, a 69-year-old Palestinian from Ramallah, West Bank, fatally shot himself in the head on the crowded floor.

In the chaos of the shooting, at least six people were injured from trampling, including an 18-month-old girl and her 5-month-old brother.

Hector Mendez, from St. Nicholas of Tolentine Parish in the Bronx, was shot in the thigh while running from the gunman.

Sitting in a wheelchair during the Feb. 24 press conference at St. Vincent's, Mendez told reporters that he bore no hard feelings for the gunman.

"I don't hate him," he said. "I mean, he shouldn't have hurt innocent people because we didn't do anything to him."

Mendez said he was shot while trying to save his 9-year-old daughter who was in the gunman's firing line. Seeing that she was near an exit door, he yelled for her to escape.

"She started to run to me, but I yelled, 'No, go inside. Go inside,'" he said. Once the girl appeared safe, he started running. He then felt a sharp, burning pain in his thigh and ducked into another exit. His daughter ran to him screaming, "Daddy, you've been shot." Mendez limped down three floors and pounded on a door where he was let in by a security guard, unaware of the mayhem occurring upstairs.

Mendez was visiting the Empire State Building with his wife, Iris, and daughter, Iriana. It was the first and last time he'll visit the tower, he said.

The patience and serenity of the three shooting victims who were rushed to St. Vincent's impressed Sister Margaretta Brock, a Sister of Charity and patient representative who was assisting in the emergency room on the night of the shooting.

"I was taken by their goodness and their cooperation," Sister Brock told Catholic New York, the archdiocesan newspaper.

This prayer card, featuring an icon of Mary and Jesus by Jesuit Father Marko Ivan Rupnik, will be distributed for World Youth Day 1997. The priest said he calls the piece "Holy Mother of Yes" because "love is a yes."

Vatican To Issue Limited Editions Of Gold Coins For Millennium

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — For at least one Vatican department, the year 2000 is to be a golden jubilee.

The Vatican City Numismatic Office is issuing a series of gold coins to commemorate the millennium, officials announced Feb. 21.

Ten coins, to be released in pairs each year starting in the coming months, will be issued in numbers no greater than 6,000 per coin. They are to be made available singly and as a set.

On only a handful of occasions has the Vatican produced gold coins; the last time was in 1959.

"And we don't know whether this practice will continue," said Cardinal Rosalio Castillo Lara, president of the Pontifical Commission for Vatican City State. "There is no guarantee. Maybe it will continue, maybe not."

Regardless, the cardinal added, the collection is bound to increase in value because it marks a singular historic event.

At least one coin each year is to feature a view of one of the four major basilicas of Rome, traditional stops for pilgrims to the Eternal City. An additional pair of coins to be issued in the year 2000 is to depict a religious theme. Each coin is to bear a picture of Pope John Paul II. On one of the first two in the series is an image of the door the pope is to open to mark the start of the Holy Year.

The coins' face value will be 50,000 lire and 100,000 lire, currently about $30 and $60, but their price is higher: $182 and $364, respectively, for the first two.

Collectors who opt to purchase the entire set of 10 also receive a box in which to display them and a limited-edition, annual publication describing all the coins, stamps, envelopes and mail-grams the Vatican produces for the coming four years. The brochure mentions no financial incentive for buying the set.

Pier Paolo Francini, head of the Numismatic Office, said true collectors will need no additional incentive, explaining, "It is clear that this unique and splendid presentation will be attractive for anyone who understands coins."

Sex Education:

The Bible can be our guide in a country that sometimes seems obsessed with casual and uncommitted sex.

By MSGR. JAMES A. CARTER

Late last summer, our country was witness to a sorry spectacle. One of the chief political advisors to the president of the United States was alleged to have been involved intimately with a woman other than his wife. Furthermore, he was alleged to have shared with her national secrets. He later publicly apologized on national television. Was what he did so wrong? Is it a sin to be involved in such an affair, such a relationship?

I am convinced that people do not know the answers to these questions. Our society is a morally confused society with no national consensus as to what is right and what is wrong. Yet, we wonder why our families are falling apart, why more than one-third of our children are growing up in single family homes, and why our children are sexually active at younger and younger ages.

We seem to have a national obsession with unhealthy approaches to sex. Turn on your television, open up national magazines, listen to the latest popular song. Casual and uncommitted sex is a constant theme.

Sex is one of God's most beautiful gifts. There is nothing inherently bad about it. We don't have to be prudish but we have lost our perspective about this part of our humanity.

The biblical answer to the question of sex is one man committed to one woman for a lifetime. We need to teach this to our children. A teen-ager and his grandfather were discussing the facts of life. The younger man said, "Gee, Granddad, your generation didn't have all these social diseases. What did you wear to have safe sex?" The wise old gentleman replied, "a wedding ring."

It's disheartening that some of our young people will never know the joy of a special and exclusive sexual relationship with a member of the opposite sex. No amount of playing the field can substitute for that. The best oral contraceptive when you are young and unmarried is the word, "No."

Unfortunately, our young people are not the only ones who need to be taught the one man/one woman rule. Some of our adults need to be reminded of this principle as well. The old cliché, "Don't do as I do, do as I say I do," is dishonest and doesn't cut it.

There was a letter in Ann Landers sometime back that went like this:

"Dear Ann: I have been sleeping with three women for several months. Until a few days ago, none of them knew that the others existed, and things were going fine. By chance, two of them met each other, compared notes, and found me out. Now they are furious with me. What am I going to do? P.S. Please don't give me any of your moral junk. Signed: Trapped."

Ann Landers answered like this:

"Dear Trapped: The one thing that separates the human race from animals is a God-given sense of morality. Since you don't have one, I strongly suggest you consult a veterinarian."

Surveys show that attitudes among church members are not much different from those of the world at large. Sex for many people has become just another recreational tool — not a gift from God for the uniting of one man to one woman for the building up of the human family. The consequences of that former attitude are taking a toll on our society.

I'm not suggesting that we go back to the old days when sex was something people whispered about behind closed doors. The genie of sexual openness is out of the bottle. It is doubtful that it will ever be contained again. So be it.

There is much that is healthy about a more open attitude toward our approach to sex. If parents will seize the opportunity, they can have much franker and more fruitful discussions with their children and can help them put sex into a healthier perspective. While there are young people who have a healthy, Christian sense of their sexuality, we should fear for our society as a whole.

Our sexual nature is interrelated with our spiritual nature; the two cannot be separated. There is no moral or biblical ground for the person who says, "It's my body, and I can do with it as I please." Think about it for a moment. No one says, "This is my environment. If I want to dump toxic wastes, it's my own business." No one says, "This is my workplace. I will harass whomever I please." The wrongness of both positions is self-evident. Why then can we not see through the argument that, "This is my body; I will use it however I choose?"

No, our bodies are gifts for God. As followers of Jesus Christ, we are to honor God with our bodies — vessels through which we offer God praise. They are to be kept pure and wholesome as a fit dwelling place for that which is Divine.

St. Paul answers my original question: Did the president's advisor do anything all that wrong when he consorted with a prostitute? In first Corinthians, St. Paul writes: "Do you not know that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I therefore take the members of Christ and make them members of a prostitute? Never! Do you not know that he who joins himself to a prostitute becomes one body with her? For, as it is written, 'The two shall become one flesh.' But he who is united to the Lord becomes one spirit with him.... Do you not know that your body is the temple to the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God? You are not your own; you were bought for a price. So glorify God in your body."

There it is — the truth that contradicts our popular obsession with unhealthy and unwholesome sex: "You are not your own; you have been purchased, and at what a price! So glorify God in your body."

Mercy Foundation Awards Grants To Area Organizations

BELMONT — Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina Foundation recently announced grant awards totalling nearly $535,000 to 13 non-profit organizations serving Mecklenburg, Gaston, Union and Iredell Counties in North Carolina. These awards are being made following the close of the Foundation's first regular grant-making cycle.

The grant funds will be used for a wide variety of purposes by the organizations. Supported programs include services for women, children, disabled and homeless persons, support for educational programs for the disadvantaged, affordable housing, and the implementation and expansion of dental clinics for underserved populations.

The Sisters of Mercy Foundation was established in 1995 and now operates from a mission to support non-profit healthcare, educational and social service organizations in the Charlotte metropolitan area and in North and South Carolina. Its program focus is on services benefitting women, children, the elderly and the poor. The Foundation is particularly interested in promoting systemic change and the quality of life for underserved and underserved populations.

"The Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina see the grantmaking activities of the Foundation as an extension of our mission to serve those in need" said Mercy Sister Mary Jerome Spradley, president of the Foundation.

The 13 organizations that will benefit from the Foundation's grantmaking activities are as follows:

Alexander Children's Home, Charlotte, will receive $10,000. Alexander Children's Home operates a nationally accredited child care development center and seven behavioral health programs for emotionally troubled children ages 6-12. The grant will help provide for the renovation of an existing campus building to be used as a residential cottage for children.

Catherine's House, Belmont, will receive $6,000. Catherine's House provides transitional housing for homeless women and homeless women with children in a safe, Christian environment.

Charlotte Emergency Housing, Charlotte, will receive $68,360 over a three-year period. This organization provides homeless women and families with secure transitional housing and services. The monies are intended to provide funding for a Children's Services Specialist who will assess client children, work to strengthen client parenting skills and follow-up with client children.

Communities in Schools of Charlotte-Mecklenburg, Charlotte, will receive $95,000 over a three-year period. In partnership with agencies, businesses, volunteers and schools, Communities in Schools helps students who are most at risk of academic and social failure to learn successfully, stay in school and prepare for life. The grant monies will be used to fund a position supporting the Think College program.

Crisis Assistance Ministry, Charlotte, will receive $50,000 over a two-year period. This grant will assist the "Partners in Hope" program which pairs individuals or groups from local churches as mentors with disadvantaged persons for a period of at least one year.

Diakonos, Inc., Statesville, will receive $25,000. This grant will help provide for a dental clinic in The Open Door Clinic, which provides primary medical and dental care to indigent and underserved persons.

Family Center, Charlotte, will receive $10,000. Family Center was established for the purpose of treating and preventing child abuse and neglect. The grant will be used to provide operating funds for Arosa House, a residential facility and treatment program for victims of extreme child abuse and neglect ages 18 months to 10 years.

Florence Crittenton Services, Inc., Charlotte, will receive $90,000 over a three-year period. This organization provides shelter, comprehensive health, educational and social services for single, pregnant young women.

Gaston Family Health Service, Gastonia, will receive $102,413 to be paid over a three-year period. This grant will help expand their Dental Clinic which was established in 1995.

Interagency Resource Project, Gastonia, will receive $10,000. Interagency Resource Project provides housing and employment services to low-income individuals.

Union County Habitat for Humanity, Monroe, will receive $38,000. An ecumenical housing ministry, this organization collaborates with area churches, civic groups, schools and corporations to build simple, decent, affordable housing for people who have limited financial resources.

United Cerebral Palsy of N.C., Charlotte, will receive $25,000. This grant will assist with start-up costs to open Copymatic, a supported employment enterprise (a quick copy business) in Charlotte to will train and employ adults with disabilities.

Youth Homes, Inc., Charlotte, will receive $5,000. Youth Homes, Inc. provides therapeutic group and foster care to at-risk children ages 8-18 who have emotional and behavioral problems.

Since announcing in October, 1996 that it was receiving grant applications, the Foundation has awarded grants totalling nearly $756,000 to area organizations. The Foundation's next grant application deadline is April 1, 1997 with decisions being made in June, 1997.

young people with emotional and physical disabilities. A dedicated group of 17 parent volunteers serve as discussion leaders with the students as they talk about their experiences in CSP. My mother often comments that one of the most rewarding aspects of CSP is that students who are struggling at school or at home seem to shine as they reach out to help others in need through this program of Christian service.

When Teresa and I pulled into the hospital parking lot, I wondered if my mother, who has given so much of herself over the years, will be able to receive from others during her recovery. As we entered the hospital, I was also concerned that she may be in pain or even look different. Not to worry. For the next three hours, my mother held court in her hospital room as my father, a group of wonderful friends, teachers and her principal gathered around her. I'm so grateful to my father and my parents' friends who brought so much love and humor, champagne and doughnuts to her bedside. My sister-in-law, Allison, who came to take care of mom for a week, said what was in all our hearts: "It makes me so happy to give this little bit back to your mother after all she's done for us."

The following day my husband, Joe, arrived with my son, Bobby, and "Grandma" played a wild game of Bingo with the kids from her hospital bed. That visit from her grandchildren worked much better than any of the pain medication.

After the first night of visiting Mom in the hospital, I headed back to my parents' home with Teresa. I felt anxious as I moved through the house without her there. I looked at her chair expecting to see her working on her student's papers, completing the Times crossword puzzle or knitting a new sweater for one of her grandchildren. Knowing my mother's extraordinary good health and her positive attitude about life, I believe she will enjoy many more years of health and happiness. God will continue to work through such a faithful follower.

Still, I couldn't shake the thought that for the first time ever, I saw a chink in the armor. It's the realization that nobody is on earth forever, not even my mother. This of course leads me to the unpleasant thought that I won't be here forever, either. But I feel grateful and blessed that I have a master teacher who has shown me in word and example that our faith in God, love of family and service to our neighbor is what's important during our time on earth.

I talked to my mother this morning. Less than three weeks after her fall, she has graduated to a cane. The walker is history. She was driving yesterday and this week she'll be back at school. The doctor is amazed at her rapid recovery but the rest of us know better. Later that morning, Teresa and I headed out to the post office to mail my mother a care package. As we drove along, I silently reached back for Teresa's hands and waited until I felt her fingers squeeze mine. And I held on tightly to one of my favorite things.

Bishops' Ecumenical Dialogue Includes Session for Lay Leaders

HICKORY — The annual Bishops' Ecumenical Dialogue, also known as the LARCUM conference, is scheduled for May 6-7 at the Catholic Conference Center and for the first time will include a special session for lay leaders.

The conference theme is "Clergy Stress — Its Implications for the Church," directed by Conventual Father Canice Connors, former pastor of Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem and former president and CEO of the St. Luke Institute in Suitland, Md. Father Connors, who holds a Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Pittsburgh, travels nationally to serve as a resource person at retreats, workshops, conferences and lectures. He speaks and writes articles on human sexuality, sexual abuse and pedophilia and has served as a consultant for the U.S. Catholic Bishops' Conference.

The clergy conference includes three presentations: "Naming the Issues and Sources," "Reflecting on the Issues and Sources in a Faith Context," and "Planning Effective Supports and Interventions." Small-group discussions and worship services are also included.

The session for lay leaders is May 7 from 7-9 p.m. Father Connors will focus on stresses of clergy and ways to help congregations assist their clergy.

The Bishops' Ecumenical Dialogue is jointly sponsored by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, the Episcopal Diocese of Western North Carolina, the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and the Western N.C. Conference of the United Methodist Church. The bishops of their respective denominations will host the conference.

The registration fee for the clergy conference is $10 per person plus meals and lodging. For the lay leaders session, the cost is $5 per person. For information and registration, contact St. Stephen Lutheran Church, 1406 Harper Ave. NW, Lenoir, N.C. 28645.

Celebrate Christ's love with a unique gift of The Nativity Cross
At its center, a stone from the birthplace of Jesus Christ!

Ricardo Montalban who introduced the Nativity Cross on television reveals its remarkable story...

"This is the Nativity Cross, the most unique cross in history. In 1963, renovations were made to the Cave of the Nativity in Bethlehem -- the recognized birthplace of Jesus Christ. The Mayor of Bethlehem approved the shipment of excavated stones from the Cave to the United States. Documented by both the Mayor and the Israel Museum, these sacred relics have been in safekeeping for many years.

Now you can share these sacred relics through the Nativity Cross. My devout wish is that when you receive the Nativity Cross for yourself or to give to a loved one, it will help you draw closer to the only true answer in these uncertain times, our Lord Jesus Christ."

-- Ricardo Montalban

A Cherished Gift

What better way to share Christ's love than with a Nativity Stone that was present at His very birth. A gift every Christian would cherish, The Nativity Cross adds special significance to any occasion:

- Easter, to celebrate His love for us
- Birthdays, as a joyous reminder of Christ's birth as well
- Weddings, as a loving exchange between bride & groom or a unique "thank you" for the wedding party
- Anniversaries, to celebrate love for each other in Christ
- Baptism or Christening, to celebrate the newborn's birth and that of the Lord
- Mother's Day and Father's Day, to thank them for your life
- First Communion and Confirmation, as a special reminder of commitment to Christ

Available in sterling silver, 22K gold finish and 14K solid gold, and in two sizes: Classic (1-3/4" high) and Petite (1-1/4" high).

Each Cross comes in an inscribed display box with a registered and numbered Certificate of Authenticity, plus a free video telling the story of the Nativity Stones.

This sacred heirloom will be cherished for generations to come. But remember, the supply of Nativity Stones is limited. Once they're gone, they're gone forever.

Bishop McGuinness High School Wins Awards at Harvard Model Congress

On February 19-23 a delegate of 30 Bishop McGuinness High School students traveled to Boston to compete in the Harvard Model Congress. Coordinated by students and faculty of Harvard University, the Harvard Model Congress is the nation's best government simulation for high school students.

Students from all over the country attend the Congress and through role playing gain extensive knowledge about the United States government. The keynote speaker this year was humorist Al Franken.

Harvard Model Congress Awards were presented to three BMHS students. Derek Show received the Outstanding Achievement Award as a Senator on the Finance Committee. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gregory Show of Winston-Salem. Tim Roche received the Outstanding Achievement Award as a Representative on the House Science Committee. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Roche of Greensboro. Tracy Phelan received the Outstanding Achievement Award as a Lobbyist for the ACLU. She is the daughter of Kathy Klein and Kevin Phelan, both of Clemmons.

Bishop McGuinness High School has attended the Harvard Model Congress for 10 years and was the only high school from North Carolina to participate in this year's event.

CRS Looking At Gender Impact Of Aid Programs

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Catholic Relief Services has begun to analyze its overseas aid programs in terms of their gender impact, CRS global relations director Geraldine Sicola said Feb. 26. Sicola was one of three panelists leading a seminar on women and poverty during the 1997 Catholic Social Ministry Gathering, an annual meeting in Washington of U.S. Catholic social ministry leaders. She said that while working for CRS in Africa through the 1970s, "I never once thought about a gender issue in what we were doing." "We were trying to lift all people up.... Our well-intended programs were gender-blind," she said. "Sixteen years later, going through India and Pakistan, I saw everything through gender eyes." The difference, she said, is in the growing realization of how pervasively discrimination against women affects health and education, home and family life, economic status and development.

Industry Indicates Willingness To Tinker With TV Rating System

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Television industry representatives, while insisting the new TV ratings system needs more than two months before people judge it, indicated at a Feb. 27 Senate committee hearing they would be willing to bend a little on it. Most witnesses at the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee hearing on the TV ratings plan came down hard on it, with some witnesses calling them worse than no system at all. Jack Valenti backed down from a remark he made in December that he would go to court "in a nano-second" to defend any federal challenge to the ratings system. "I have changed my mind," he said. "So far, I've seen really nothing that violates constitutional rights" in recent proposals to rework the ratings system. Valenti is head of the Motion Picture Association of America.

Court Sends Clinic Buffer Zone Cases Back For Reconsideration

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In light of its Feb. 19 ruling on restrictions on abortion clinic protests, the Supreme Court sent back to lower courts two similar cases involving a Colorado law and a Phoenix ordinance. In a Feb. 24 order, the court told the Colorado Supreme Court and the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, whose jurisdiction includes Arizona, to reconsider rulings on laws restricting the type of protest that can occur within a specified distance of abortion clinics. The previous week the Supreme Court had upheld part of a federal judge's injunction limiting protests to outside a "buffer zone" 15 feet away from abortion clinics, their entrances and driveways. But the court overturned a part of the injunction in Schenck vs. Pro-Choice Network that also required protesters to stay 15 feet away from people as they approached the clinics. The court said the "floating buffer zones" was a violation of free speech rights.

Rural Women Too Often Pulling A "Third Shift," Researcher Says

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Working women in metropolitan areas are all too familiar with the "second shift" syndrome — taking on a full-time job, yet still responsible for most household duties. Rural women, suggests researcher Julia Kleinschmitt-Rembert, have a "third shift," not only running the home and working on the farm, but taking a job off the farm to make ends meet. Rural housework was divided more evenly "when men had full-time jobs off the farm, not when women had full-time jobs off the farm," she said.

Critical Juncture Seen For Arms Control Initiatives

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Several world arms control issues are nearing critical decision points in the United States, speakers told a gathering of Catholic peace and justice leaders Feb. 25. Among key issues needing attention they cited: the Chemical Weapons Convention, which will take effect without U.S. participation if the Senate does not ratify it by April 29; the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, which also requires Senate ratification; the Canadian initiative for an international treaty by December to ban all anti-personnel land mines; and Congressional legislation for a four-point Code of Conduct on Arms Transfers that nations wishing to purchase U.S.-made weapons would have to meet.

Common Ground Leader Suggest Parish Dialogue Groups

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Msgr. Philip J. Murnion suggested Feb. 26 that local Catholic leaders concerned about Catholic divisions could form dialogue groups in their parishes using materials from the Catholic Common Ground Initiative. Such groups could bring selected parish leaders and representatives of various viewpoints and concerns together for sustained, constructive reflection on their Catholic identity and mission, he said. Msgr. Murnion is director of the National Pastoral Life Center in New York, which is providing staff support for the initiative, inaugurated by Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago shortly before his death last year.

Catholic Nurses Conference

LISLE, Ill. — The National Association of Catholic Nurses, U.S.A. annual conference is April 25-27 at the Lisle/Naperville, Ill., Hilton Hotel. This year's conference, "Meeting the Future Changes in Catholic Health Care," features speakers from the medical profession. Topics include Catholic values in a health care system, caregiver-patient relationships, nursing education in the 21st century, and nurturing the spirituality of nurses. For information, contact Eula Sforza, 1229 Reading Ct., Wheaton, Ill., 60187 or send faxes to (630) 682-0592.

Bishop's Conference Head Condemns Firebombing

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — The head of the Polish bishops' conference condemned a firebomb attack that damaged Warsaw's only functioning Jewish synagogue. Bishop Tadeusz Pieronek, secretary-general of the bishops' conference, said, "We extend regret and sympathy to the Jewish community. This kind of attack cannot have the approval of any honest person." "Violence has now been directed against a synagogue. We should mobilize to stop the groups who do such things," the bishop said after the attack. The main door and hall of Warsaw's Twarda Street synagogue, built in 1902, were destroyed by fire shortly after midnight Feb. 26.

Palestinian At Vatican Foresees Problems With Israeli Settlement

ROME (CNS) — The Palestinian representative to the Vatican denounced Israel's plans to build a major Jewish settlement in the eastern part of Jerusalem, saying it would strangle the Palestinian economy and spur the exodus of local Christians. Afif Safieh, head of the Palestinian delegation to the Holy See, said the settlement would be built on stolen land, in violation of international law. He made the comments in a statement faxed to Catholic News Service from his London office. Israel announced Feb. 26 that it intended to press ahead with construction of a new neighborhood for about 30,000 Jews in the Arab sector. Palestinians called the move unacceptable and warned that it could prompt new clashes.

Bishops Seek To Clarify Situation In Zaire During Visit

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Bishops from Zaire on their "ad limina" visits to the Vatican tried to correct false impressions about Zaire's problems and their causes, said the head of the country's bishops' conference. Bishop Faustin Ngabu of Goma, Zaire, was to address Pope John Paul II on behalf of the bishops when they met with the pontiff during their stay in Rome Feb. 22-March 4. But in the meantime, he said, he would be speaking with representatives of Vatican departments "to clarify our situation." The principal point was to underscore that much of Zaire was not at war, but parts of it were under siege by rebel groups who got a foothold in the region during civil war in 1993.

Vatican, Utrecht Union Agree On Norms For Priests Who Switch

ROME (CNS) — The Vatican's top ecumenist and the head of the Utrecht Union of Old Catholic churches have agreed on norms needed to regulate cases in which a priest changes from one church to another. The guidelines call for a waiting period of at least three months before a priest who has changed churches begins active ministry, and they stipulate that he not be appointed to a pastoral position in the territory where he ministered in the other church. "The changing of members of the clergy creates problems for both sides," said guidelines sent in December to the member churches of the Union of Utrecht and to the heads of Catholic bishops' conferences in corresponding countries.

Pope To Spend Two Days In Sarajevo; Caller Makes Threat

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II has decided to extend his visit to Sarajevo to two days, and now plans to spend April 12-13 in the Bosnian capital, the Vatican said. The announcement on Feb. 28 came the day after an anonymous telephone caller threatened to kill the pope if he goes to Sarajevo. The call was received by a church information center in Sarajevo, which was closed for security reasons shortly afterward. The Vatican had no official comment on the threat, but it pointed out that the invitation to visit Sarajevo had been extended by religious and civil authorities.

CHARLOTTE — In 1997, the St. Gabriel church community celebrates 40 years of existence, a time frame during which the parish has grown from 175 families to the largest parish in the Carolinas, with 3,600 households.

Twelve acres of land — then located one mile from Charlotte's southeastern city limits — were purchased by Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh in 1955 to establish the new parish. A 250-seat chapel was built, and Father Paul Byron, St. Gabriel Church's founding pastor, celebrated the first Mass in the church in September 1957, thereby beginning a pastorate highlighted by significant growth and change. Bishop Waters dedicated and blessed it in November 1957, placing the church under the patronage of the Archangel Gabriel.

Under Father Byron's direction, a kindergarten was begun in 1958, followed by a grade school staffed by Sisters of Mercy from Belmont in 1960. The school opened with 150 students; within a few years, the enrollment had climbed to 350, and a two-story gymnasium and cafeteria had been built.

By the mid-1960s parish membership included more than 500 families. Msgr. Michael J. O'Keefe, pastor, directed a major parish renovation when in 1970-71 he began an expansion project which would accommodate more parishioners at the increasingly crowded weekend Masses. When groundbreaking ceremonies took place in 1973 — a year after the founding of the Diocese of Charlotte — St. Gabriel's was already North Carolina's largest parish, with a registered family count of 690.

During the mid- to late-1970s, parish membership continued to grow quickly and steadily. Membership included more than 1,000 families in 1977 when Msgr. Hugh Dolan, pastor, introduced expansion ideas which led to implementation of the "Master Plan." The plan — developed over a number of years, especially during the early 1980s — consisted of parish surveys, parishioner input, committee meetings and, finally, expansion and building designs that included improvements to the church, school, administrative and recreational facilities.

A fund-raising campaign began in 1983, which led to the purchase of additional property on Providence Road and Sharon Lane. Construction of a new 1,100-seat sanctuary ensued in 1985. In September 1986, Bishop John F. Donoghue, along with retired Bishop Michael J. Begley and present and former pastors of St. Gabriel's, dedicated the facility, which includes a day chapel, fellowship hall, meditation chapel, family room and music room.

Expansion continued into the 1990s, both in the number of registered families and in physical growth. In May 1990 present pastor Father Edward Sheridan began an extensive capital campaign. The result: a 79,000 square-foot parish center, which Bishop Donoghue dedicated in December 1992. The building became the new home for the school, the faith development center offices, a gymnasium and a cafeteria.

Plans are currently underway for a new three-story ministry center, which will house the parish's faith formation offices, meeting space, nursery and ministry offices. Ministry outreach highlights parish life at St. Gabriel Church, with groups such as the disABILITY ministry and health care ministry joining a host of other teams that address specific and common needs of St. Gabriel's parishioners.

Father Sheridan notes with appreciation that the growing pastoral council tremendously assists the operation of the parish, both on the practical and spiritual level. With more than 10,000 registered parishioners and a 545-student grade school, St. Gabriel's parish, as conveyed in its mission statement, strives to "know and love Christ through His Church and our faith community by our liturgical, spiritual and educational efforts."

Deacons Recommit Themselves In Ministry To Church

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — On March 8, deacons and candidates for the permanent diaconate joined together during a Day of Retreat and Recommitment at the Catholic Conference Center to say "yes" to Christ in a ministry which requires them "to be Christ" to others.

In his message, Bishop William G. Curlin appealed to the deacons and candidates to be loyal servants of the Church. "I am not going to ask you to do impossible things," the bishop said. "It is important to go to your assignments with faith, and to faithfully preach the Church's official teachings."

Bishop Curlin also recognized the vital role of deacons' wives in their service to the Church. "It is your love and the presence of Jesus in your marriage which helps empower your husbands to answer Christ's call to ministry," he said.

The annual event began with fellowship, providing an opportunity to fortify old friendships and make new ones. It also gave the candidates and their wives a chance to get acquainted with the ever-growing permanent diaconate family in the Charlotte Diocese.

Veteran deacons like Rev. Mr. Hugo May of St. Aloysius Church in Hickory — from the permanent diaconate's first graduating class of 1983 — offered spiritual advice to candidates like Judge Alec Lyerly of St. Elizabeth Church in Boone. "If you don't find time for Mass, Liturgy of the Hours, and prayers, you will be destined to fail," Rev. Mr. May gently warned.

A Mass was concelebrated by Bishop

Curlin and the Very Rev. Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor. During the service, deacons made a recommitment to serve the Church.

Afterward, Father West, director of the permanent diaconate, praised the deacons. "I would like to thank you for your excellent ministry throughout the diocese," he said. He also recognized the 14 permanent diaconate candidates and their wives.

Mary Langsdorf, wife of Rev. Mr. Mike Langsdorf of Holy Family Church in Clemmons, stated that she has personally witnessed the special graces that come with this ministry. She was thankful for the positive impact it has had on her entire family.

In closing, Bishop Curlin asked the deacons to support one another. Paraphrasing Pope Paul VI, he said their genuine trust in the Lord is a transparency for their parishes. "Seeing the joyful lives you lead, our young people are able to understand the ever-present appeal that a life in Christ has for us."

Cardinals Ask Clinton To Approve Partial-Birth Abortion Ban

Based on recent admissions from one chief supporter of the procedure that he had lied about the need to retain partial-birth abortions, U.S. cardinals urged President Clinton in a letter to "seize the opportunity to explain that he was misled, as were most Americans," and sign a new bill to ban the procedure.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The seven active U.S. cardinals, in a letter to President Clinton, asked the president to sign a new bill introduced in Congress to ban the partial-birth abortion procedure.

Based on recent admissions from one chief supporter of the procedure that he had lied about the need to retain partial-birth abortions, the cardinals said in their March 7 letter, "We urge you to seize the opportunity before you to explain that you were misled, as were most Americans."

They asked Clinton to "ask Congress to pass a bill banning partial-birth abortions, and let it be known that you will sign it into law." A bill was introduced March 5 in the House to ban the procedure except when the mother's life is in danger.

The cardinals cited the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, which said that partial-birth abortion "is never the only procedure that will preserve a woman's health or fertility in any situation."

"The public has learned that partial-birth abortions are performed not a few hundred times a year, but thousands of times each year," the cardinals said.

"It has learned that partial-birth abortion is used primarily in the fifth and sixth months of pregnancy, and that restrictions confined to the third trimester would therefore be inadequate. The public has also learned that the vast majority of these procedures are performed on the healthy babies of healthy women."

The cardinals also cited the remarks of "hundreds of doctors, most specialists in maternal and fetal medicine," who say that partial birth abortion "poses, not avoids, significant risks to women's health and future fertility. Clearly, any claim that partial-birth abortion must be available to protect a woman's health has no basis in fact."

The letter was to be read during Masses March 9 at the cardinals' home cathedrals.

Signing the letter were Cardinals Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia, James A. Hickey of Washington, William H. Keeler of Baltimore, Bernard F. Law of Boston, Roger M. Mahony of Los Angeles, Adam J. Maida of Detroit, and John J. O'Connor of New York. Also signing was Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, president of the U.S. bishops.

At a March 7 press conference, Clinton said that he believes "it would be a mistake for us to pass this bill one more time without taking care of those folks" who believe their future fertility would be threatened if unable to procure a partial-birth abortion.

"They're the people I'm concerned about," he said, "and they're the people I'm going to try to protect right down to the end."

The cardinals said they would urge Congress to pass a partial-birth abortion ban "with sufficient votes to ensure that it will become the law of the land."

Last year's Clinton veto of the ban was overridden in the House but failed to get the two-thirds majority required in the Senate. The bishops, led by the cardinals, mounted an unprecedented effort to override the veto.

Here is the text of the letter on partial-birth abortion sent March 7 to President Clinton by the seven active U.S. cardinals and the president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops:

Dear Mr. President,

We write to you again about one of the most urgent moral issues of this day — partial-birth abortion. We do so in the wake of recent revelations corroborating the arguments of those who seek a ban on this practice and contradicting the arguments of its proponents. Fortunately, the public has learned a great deal through these disclosures.

The public has learned that partial-birth abortions are performed not a few hundred times a year, but thousands of times each year. It has learned that partial-birth abortion is used primarily in the fifth and sixth months of pregnancy and that restrictions confined to the third trimester would therefore be inadequate. The public has also learned that the vast majority of these procedures are performed on the healthy babies of healthy women.

Disclosures have also made clear, as those who seek to ban this practice have testified, that there are no published data to support a claim that partial-birth abortions may ever be necessary to preserve a woman's life, health or future fertility. To the contrary, hundreds of doctors, most specialists in maternal and fetal medicine, have explained why partial-birth abortion itself poses, not avoids, significant risks to women's health and future fertility. Clearly, any claim that partial-birth abortion must be available to protect a woman's health has no basis in fact.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists recently reversed itself in this regard. ACOG had said that partial-birth abortion "may be" the safest procedure in a particular circumstance, but one of its spokespersons now says "it may not be." The college is clear in saying that partial-birth abortion is never the only procedure that will preserve a woman's health or fertility in any situation.

Mr. President, you are in a unique position to ensure respect for all human rights, including the right to life which is denied to infants who are brutally killed in partial-birth abortion. We urge you to seize the opportunity before you to explain that you were misled, as were most Americans. We urge you to ask Congress to pass a bill banning partial-birth abortions and let it be known that you will sign it into law. For our part, we will continue to urge that such a bill is passed in both houses of Congress with sufficient votes to ensure that it will become the law of the land.

Youth Ministry Addresses Needs of Tomorrow's Church

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

HIGH POINT — In order to ensure that Catholic youth will go on to become leaders of tomorrow's Church, opportunities for social service must be made available to them today.

So notes Robin Connolly, youth minister for Immaculate Heart of Mary Church. Not only do she and a volunteer corps of 20 try to give the youth chances for social interaction in light of Catholic ideals; they hope to form the foundation of the future Church.

"The idea is to teach the youth and expose them to the different missions and ministries of the Catholic Church," says Connolly of the program, which in this High Point parish ministers to 100 youth in grades 6-12. "If we provide them the ways and means to serve the Church, then they can later choose which ones they want to pursue as an adult."

At Immaculate Heart of Mary, those ways and means include service projects like "Share God's Love," a Catholic missionary effort assisting people in such war-torn regions as Albania and Romania for which the youth ministry raises funds and awareness, and "Friendly Visitors," a program in Greensboro providing outreach to area elderly.

A host of parish and ecumenical activities — both social and service — continues as well. Connolly says that such undertakings make a positive introduction to an adult faith life for young Catholics. "What we're trying to do is build a microcosm for them of the actual Church," she explains.

Connolly appreciates the youth for their zeal, especially when considering that youth ministry is not a mandated element of Catholic catechesis. "The reason our program works is because youth ministry is not something they have to do. It's something they're choosing to do," she says. 1997

Connolly Diocesan Support Appeal

experiences joy when she sees youth choose in favor of the ministry. "Their commitment is great, because it's their decision," she adds.

By regularly meeting with the pre-teens and high-schoolers, Connolly and the ministry team share concerns that every generation of young people faces. Through providing an environment that is "stress-free" to discuss a variety of stressors — drugs, prejudice, family problems especially among them — the facilitators hope to enable the youth to better function in a largely secular world.

Connolly realizes that youth ministry holds a special place within the educational mission of the Church. While the Faith Formation program educates and provides a foundation of knowledge, youth ministry allows the young people to put their faith into action. And, she adds, while operating around different models, the two programs work together to address matters of faith. The bottom line: "Between (Faith Formation) and youth ministry, we try to integrate a program that will help the youth feel more comfortable in their faith," she says.

That comfort level can lead to rewarding relationships between youth and minister, relationships that in Connolly's view can become Christ-like. "Jesus was always a gentle teacher, and that's what we want to do," she says. "We're trying to show them ways to go and help them along those ways in whatever decisions they make."

That interrelated journey of faith, says Connolly, is epitomized in the parish youth ministry's Scriptural motto, based on Psalm 32:8: "I will instruct you and teach you in the way that you should go; I will counsel you and watch over you."

In the Diocese of Charlotte, youth ministry is one of the 37 ministries and agencies funded by the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

Parish Youth Save Up Pennies For A Worthy Cause

THOMASVILLE — The Our Lady of the Highways Parish youth have started fund raising efforts to help needy families within the parish community. The project, "A Mile of Pennies," began in November and endeavors to raise $844.80, which is exactly one mile of pennies.

The youth have been bringing their pennies to their faith formation classes each week. Each class tracks their weekly collections, which are recorded and posted for the parish on the church bulletin board. The program will conclude March 30 when the winning class will be rewarded with a pizza party.

"One of our goals is to get our youth involved within the parish and the community," says Ofelia Reddick, Stewardship Committee chairperson. "I think the children feel a sense of pride and responsibility when they are given goals and ways to achieve them."

Church Viewed As Integral Provider For Seniors

By MIKE KROKOS

The following is the third in a series focusing on the Church and the elderly in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Mercy Sister Jeanne Marie Kienast may not reveal her age, but the St. Matthew Church pastoral associate is quick to point out she is a senior citizen.

"I've been a Sister of Mercy for 50 years and have great concern and empathy for all seniors," she said.

As a member of the CRISM (Catholic Retirees in Special Ministries) task force formed to assess the needs of those over age 60 in the Diocese of Charlotte, Sister Jeanne Marie is eager to see the Church assist the diocese's more than 20,000 Catholic elders.

"This is an important issue because of the rapidly increasing population of seniors. Also, the fact that the baby boomers are right behind means in another few years we will really have an increase in the (elderly) population," Sister Jeanne Marie noted.

Although housing and transportation have been the most discussed issues during listening sessions, Sister Jeanne Marie feels pastoral care for seniors is a serious concern. "The Church needs to provide pastoral care," she said. "I am interested in providing training for lay ministers to visit nursing homes, assisted living facilities, and seniors who are homebound."

The need for pastoral care, according to Sister Jeanne Marie, is evident to the St. Matthew Church community. "We have two retirement centers and three nursing homes nearby, and they all have Catholic residents."

Issues like housing and transportation may be things the Church cannot address alone. "I feel we need to collaborate with other groups. If we could get other church groups interested, possibly something could be done," Sister Jeanne Marie said.

With seniors moving to the area to be closer to their children, families would be well served by an elderly day care facility, she added. "Having some kind of senior center would be a wonderful help," Sister Jeanne Marie noted. "Many people do not require full-time supervision, but they need someone around to remind them of things like taking medication."

Like Sister Jean Marie, Msgr. Richard Allen has a sincere interest in how the diocese addresses the needs of Catholic elders.

"My concern is for both senior citizens and senior priests," said the pastor of St. Ann Church. "We tend to want to stereotype retirement and old age as though they are no longer useful parts of our lives."

"It shouldn't be called retirement. It is another step in life's progression," he added.

At St. Ann, seniors are invited to take part in workshops, art classes, ceramics and exercise classes. Although he feels his parish does a good job of providing for the elderly, the pastor sees areas where seniors need more.

"Their spiritual life takes on a whole new venue. We need to extend ourselves to seniors in a more active way, and in what we offer them sacramentally and spiritually," Msgr. Allen said.

"We're responding to the age as best we can, but we're somewhat out on a limb doing it by ourselves without any input," he added. "It would be nice to have priests or sisters give retreats (for elders)."

Msgr. Allen feels the Church should assist priests who want to continue ministry once they retire. "I know many priests who would like to help, but we have not come up with ideas of what they can do," he said. "Part of our parish ministry is taking care of our elderly priests."

In discussing clergy, Msgr. Allen points to insight shared by Msgr. Charles Fahey, director of The Third Age Center at Fordham University. Msgr. Fahey's paper, "The Graying of Clergy," was the topic of discussion at a recent conference Msgr. Allen attended.

"His paper outlines a program addressing the priestly retirement issue," Msgr. Allen said.

Both Msgr. Allen and Sister Jean Marie agree the Church has an obligation to address the elderly's wants and needs. "These are the people who built the Catholic schools and churches," Sister Jeanne Marie said. "They need to know the Church is there for them."

"We've devoted tremendous energies to other projects in the diocese. Equal amounts need to be put into things that will benefit our senior citizens," Msgr. Allen said. "We've talked about it. Now we need to do something."

"Elders have filled out plenty of sur-

Albanian Archbishop Says Masses Unaffected By State Of Emergency

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — The head of Albania's Catholic bishops conference has urged a peaceful end to the country's turmoil and said that Masses and religious gatherings would not be affected by the government-declared state of emergency. Archbishop Rrok Mirdita of Tirana said in a Catholic News Service telephone interview March 3 that he had learned of the state of emergency through Albanian media the night of March 2 and had not received notification of any accompanying curbs on religious activities. "As far as we can tell, the Catholic Church's liturgical events will not be affected, since the measures are intended only to control suspicious anti-government meetings," said Archbishop Mirdita.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Miracle At Cana Indicated Mary's Role In Jesus' Mission, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's remarks in English at his weekly general audience March 5.

Dear brothers and sisters,

At the wedding feast at Cana Jesus performed his first miracle at the request of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Mary's request is a form of cooperation in the beginning of her son's messianic mission, a cooperation which would continue to the foot of the Cross.

The miracle at Cana was the first of the "signs" which manifested Jesus' glory (cf. Jn 2:11). For the fathers of the church, the water turned into wine was a symbol of the passage from the Old Testament to the new, from the ritual prescriptions of the law to their fulfillment in the new kingdom, symbolized in the wedding feast. The miracle of the new wine, while it shows Christ's concern for married couples, also foreshadows the Eucharist.

As St. John's account of the miracle of Cana makes clear, Mary was the first to believe in her son. In every age Mary precedes the Lord's disciples on their pilgrimage of faith, and she invites us all to place our hope in God's mercy and goodness.

I am pleased to welcome the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrim groups from the United States of America. My special greeting goes to the students from the Bologna Center of Johns Hopkins University. I also thank the choirs for their praise of God in song. Upon all of you I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Says Global Economy Must Not Eclipse Important Values

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II called on business leaders to help make sure the increasing globalization of the economy does not eclipse important values like sharing and cooperation. While the Church supports creative business enterprise as a right, it also feels compelled to remind people that commercial operations should have a community aspect that goes beyond profit-making, he said March 7. The pope's remarks came in a speech to an Italian union of Christian businessmen. He praised the organization for bringing Gospel values to bear against business practices that "mortify human dignity, such as various forms of central state control, the excessive search for profit and forms of discrimination."

Pope Meets U.S. Group That Promotes Christian-Jewish Relations

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A Boston-based group promoting Jewish-Christian relations met Pope John Paul II and received his blessing in early March. "We were thrilled to have this opportunity, and we think it means a lot to what we are trying to accomplish," said Rabbi Richard Yellin, a Boston native now living in Israel and one of the leaders of the Netanya Foundation. Twenty-eight members of the group attended the papal audience March 6. The rabbi said he placed his hands on Pope John Paul's head and blessed him; the pontiff blessed the group and its activities in return.

Palm Sunday: Hail to Our King!

On this day the Church celebrates the entry of Jesus into the holy city of Jerusalem to accomplish our salvation. A memorial of this entry is included in every Mass, with a solemn procession before the principal Mass. This procession is not meant to be an historical reenactment; it is a liturgical action designed to open the celebration of the Christian Passover.

After the blessing of palms, an account of the Lord's entrance is proclaimed from one of the three synoptic Gospels according to the cycle; this year it is from either Mark (11:1-10) or John (12: 12-16).

The Johannine story differs from the synoptic versions by being shorter and following the anointing at Bethany, not preceding it. And it is the crowd, not the disciples, who are responsible for the triumphant procession. Of course, it is not followed by the cleansing of the temple episode because the author of this Gospel moved that up to the beginning of Jesus' ministry in order to portray him as fulfilling the role of Elijah the fiery reformer.

Along with Matthew's Gospel, John's uses an Old Testament quotation from Zechariah 9:9 referring to a king coming to Jerusalem riding upon an ass, a symbol of peace (as opposed to horses used in war), although he does not have the synoptics' preliminary story of Jesus sending two of his disciples to find it.

While Mark's mentions leafy branches people had cut from the fields, and Matthew's their cutting branches from the trees (both of which may be related to the twig bundles used at the festival of Tabernacles), John's version introduces palm branches (not native to Palestine), used to welcome great conquerors.

All four Gospels have the crowds shout "Hosanna" (which means "God save us!" or, in Matthew, "God save the son of David") and then quote Psalm 118:26, the verse that pilgrims sang on their final ascent to the Temple: "Blessed is He (the pilgrim) who comes in the name of the Lord (Yahweh)." Here John's version, with Luke's, explicitly applies this to Jesus as king of Israel.

The author of John's Gospel concludes his story with the reflection that his disciples did not understand all this at first, but when Jesus had been glorified through his death and resurrection they realized the significance of these events.

We now begin the most solemn week of the liturgical year, the Christian Passover. This eight-day religious ceremony commemorates the mystery of our salvation. We believe that it is through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ that we are saved. With readings from the passion accounts and the celebration of the Easter vigil, the liturgy of Holy Week urges us to appropriate to ourselves Christ's victory over sin and death and to allow it to exercise its effect upon us more and more.

Of Saints And Civilization

If you are Irish — and in case you hadn't noticed, I am — you can't help feeling a jolt of pride after reading Tom Cahill's best selling How The Irish Saved Civilization. The title is quite a boast, which itself says something of the Irish character. But the claim stands up to the tests of scholarship.

And Cahill helps his readers with a vivid writing style that guides the reader through much of the myth and legend surrounding the Ireland of St. Patrick and the Book of Kells. In the matter of Patrick, one finds the unexaggerated story of how a young kidnapped Roman citizen enslaved by an Irish chieftain came to consider himself Irish and in time emerge as the beloved bishop of a once pagan land.

The author observes: "In becoming an Irishman, Patrick welded his Christian faith to their life. He found a way of swimming down to the depths of the Irish psyche and warming and transforming Irish imagination — making it more humane and noble while keeping it Irish."

There are no snakes or shamrocks in this account. What we discover are facts that are far more compelling. Patrick was born of Christian Roman-British parents in 389 AD. His father was a deacon and municipal officer and one grandfather was a priest. Celibacy was not required in that era. In his six years of captivity in a land well beyond the reach of Roman law, Patrick came to understand the Irish character as loyal, courageous and generous. This even though the Irish engaged unceasingly in tribal wars and practiced pagan rituals that included human sacrifice. Outside of Ireland, the Irish were considered hopelessly barbaric.

Patrick escaped back to his family in Britain, was ordained a priest in 432 AD, and returned to Ireland as a missionary. He was arguably the first missionary anywhere since St. Paul traveled through Greece.

Most notably, St. Patrick was the first anti-slavery voice heard before the 17th century. When Britain raiders snatched Patrick's converts by the thousands from Northern Ireland, he begged Britain to stop: "Can it be that they do not believe that we have received one baptism or that we have one God and Father? Is it a shameful thing in their eyes that we have been born in Ireland?" Clearly Patrick had found his Irish voice.

In a stunning challenge, Patrick argued that the chalice of the Sacrifice of the Mass nullified the use of the pagan cups used in human sacrifice, for "God no longer demands that we nourish Him, He offers Himself to us as our Heavenly Nourishment." Soon, human sacrifice ended altogether. Murder and intertribal warfare decreased dramatically. And that is how the Irish became Christians.

Dead at the age of 72 Patrick was buried in County Down, the site of his first church. By this time he had built a network of local churches and established a Cathedral at Armagh — a center of education and evangelization that sent hundreds of missionaries back into Europe to revitalize the people of God. It still goes on. In 1961 the Christians of Nigeria claimed Patrick as their patron.

What is the rest of the legacy of the historical Patrick? Once there was an island people that other Christians felt were beyond redemption, and one brave man had faith enough to demonstrate in their midst that the sword was not the only instrument for structuring society. To be sure, there are corners of society yet in need of great-hearted people committed to loving outcasts in such an extraordinary way.

If today's civilization is to be saved — a civilization, which, as Patrick would say, "may pass in a moment like a cloud of smoke that is scattered by the wind" — it would be by such unlikely saints as this.

Evolution: Serious Questions Require Serious Study

Q. I am a CCD instructor and need some answers. You are probably tired of the subject of evolution, but I have taught and wrote that an ape cannot be in the image and likeness of God.

The Bible speaks so often about the story of creation I don't see how it can be wrong. When the pope came out with his statement on evolution, I was left virtually defenseless.

Why don't we read the Bible literally as do fundamentalists? The first remark of some Protestant recruiters is that we don't believe in the Bible so we cannot be Christians. Are there books and journals on these subjects?

A. An adequate response to any of your questions would require many columns. Over the years I have devoted this space to each of them more than once.

One reason I'm printing your questions, which are much abbreviated, is that they seem to reflect the current feelings of many Catholics and other Christians. I want to suggest at least two important facts that deserve your serious and reflective consideration.

Tons of material have been written on the subject, very much of it from a solid base of Catholic/Christian philosophy and theology.

For whatever reasons, not a few otherwise intelligent people seem to think that any question, any searching, no matter how complicated or profound, should have answers they can absorb and understand in 30 or 60 minutes, just about the length of an "in-depth" TV program.

That simply is not true. If we wish to ask serious questions, then we must be willing to do considerable study to find answers that will satisfy us.

This is especially desirable before we start to condemn or accuse others of error because they disagree with what we "know" to be the fact.

I have previously referred readers to the introductions and textual notes in the New American Bible (especially the St. Joseph edition), published under the auspices of the bishops of the United States.

A thoughtful, careful study of these alone would give at least a good start toward resolving your concerns about how the Catholic Church interprets Scripture.

Second, your problems with evolution prove again how we need to take great thought before we build religious doctrines on matters that pertain primarily to the natural sciences.

Some months ago, the journal First Things (a monthly "Journal of Religion and Public Life") printed an intriguing dialogue on some relationships of modern physics to theology.

One participant noted perceptively that "we had better not base our theology on a desperate hope for continued ignorance" of matters of nature we cannot at present explain.

He makes a good point. In spite of painful experience, many have still not learned that lesson. For 15 centuries,

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Making A Subdivision A Neighborhood

Our children are growing up in a world much different from that in which we grew up. Our ethic of upward mobility demands that we provide easier access to the things we were denied because of racism and economic hardships. They go to better schools, a little "safer" environment, dress better, eat better, and are economically better off than we were growing up. Yet there is something in our middle-class life that eludes our children — something we both had in abundance...community.

Andrew grew up in a public housing project on Chicago's near Southside. His community fit every contemporary definition of a "bad neighborhood." However, in the seven-story high rise he lived in were families who found their identity in the community they lived. Elders were revered. Parents were respected. Children were accountable to more than their own parents. There seemed to be monitors of bad behavior and language everywhere. Andrew remembers believing that his parents could see everything because they always were up on anything he did.

Terri grew up in the community of Englewood farther south. Among her experiences of community were block parties and jumping rope while somebody's mother kept an eye out from the front porch. While playing outside as a preschooler, she choked on a piece of candy. The watchful eye and quick response of Mrs. Mingo saved her life. The connectedness she experienced in Englewood has helped her maintain lasting friendships to this day.

In both communities there were dangerous elements, such as gang and domestic violence, and much of the perils that pervade our society today. Yet the permeable boundaries of family allowed connection with other families and resulted in a sense of safety within the community.

Today, family boundaries are much less permeable. Personal autonomy and self-sufficiency make community connections much more difficult. Our American ethic of "rugged individualism" has come back to bite us. It is one of the big lies that has eroded our connectedness and sense of well-being.

It really does take a village. We don't long for "the good-ole-days" or our old neighborhoods that exist only in our memories. Nor do we believe that our modern, technological lifestyle precludes true community. It's really about going beyond our comfort zones to be connected. It's allowing ourselves to be reliant and (yes) dependent on our neighbors for things of which we have the means to be self-sufficient: A human connection between families that will add to our sense of community.

Perhaps we call turn our subdivision into a neighborhood, after all.

John Winthrop, the first governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony in the 18th century, said in a sermon. "We must de-

Catholic Distance University Offers Correspondence Study

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

PAEONIAN SPRINGS, Va. — Responding to Pope John Paul II's ongoing plea for Catholics to deepen their understanding of the faith as the Jubilee Year 2000 approaches, a university dedicated to correspondence education offers that chance through a unique resource called distance learning.

The Catholic Distance University is the first non-profit catechetical institute in the United States to be approved for distance learning by the Vatican Congregation for the Clergy. Since its founding in 1983, more than 6,000 lay persons, priests and religious have taken college-level courses through CDU, formerly known as the Catholic Home Study Institute.

"The Holy Father strongly encourages everyone to become familiar with the teachings of the Church in light of Vatican II, and that was one of the inspirations for the establishment of CDU," said Marianne Evans Mount, executive vice president of the school. A long-time catechist, she is one of several Catholic educators who under the leadership of Bishop Thomas J. Welsh — then of the Diocese of Arlington, Va., and from March 1983 to the present of the Diocese of Allentown, Pa. — established the adult education program.

Since 1987, students have been able to receive undergraduate college credit through CDU by later transferring to a degree-granting school such as the Franciscan University of Steubenville in Ohio and Regis University in Denver, Colo. Participants can pursue the work at their own pace, and have up to nine months to complete a class. Textbooks, manuals, Church documents and other materials are provided with the courses.

From its start, CDU has also granted catechetical diplomas to students who successfully complete a special 12-course program. College credit is an option through these courses, and the diploma is an accredited ecclesiastical teaching certificate. In the United States, CDU is its only distance-education provider.

The school also offers inexpensive, non-credit mini-courses and cassette programs featuring commentaries and studies on Church documents and Scripture.

In 1988, CDU introduced the Parish Plan Program, whereby coordinators such as pastors, deacons or catechists direct learning sessions using the school's course work. While no academic credit is earned through this program, rates are reduced significantly and participants can enjoy growing in their faith in a group setting.

Most recently, CDU has entered the field of graduate-level education by introducing two master's degree curriculums in religious studies. Unlike the baccalaureate classes, which must be forwarded to other institutions to earn degrees, graduate courses of the Master's in Religious Studies program at CDU can directly lead to religious degrees. The institute is seeking approval from the Council of Higher Education of the Commonwealth of Virginia to offer its Master of Arts in Religious Studies program.

Bishop Welsh remains as president and chairman of the board of CDU. Noting that the institute covers disciplines in doctrine, Scripture, spirituality, ethics, history and catechetics, he added that CDU welcomes people from all walks of life to enroll in courses that will spiritually, professionally and personally enrich them. Like Mount, the bishop agrees that resources must be made available to cultivate the educational aims of the Church.

"Our mission goes back to Pope Paul VI, who said that we must first evangelize the evangelizer," said Bishop Welsh. "If we want to be good teachers, then we have to know our topics. For us the goal is not just knowledge, but faith that we are trying to impart."

The bishop added that courses are designed, directed and at times taken by people at various levels of the teaching and evangelical movements in the Church. "From the very beginning," he said, "we've had a lot of church involvement — from bishops, theologians and teachers to people such as Mother Teresa, who have been very happy to use the program."

Bishop William G. Curlin, who before arriving to Charlotte in 1994 ministered as auxiliary bishop of the Archdiocese of Washington, D.C., is an enthusiastic supporter of CDU and its vision. His past work as the director of the permanent diaconate in Washington, through which many deacons proceeded in their religious studies and were enabled to earn degrees thanks to CDU, allowed the bishop a first-hand insight into the benefits of distance education.

As a former vice president of CDU, Bishop Curlin has also seen a "wide mosaic" of students served by the institute. "I know of hundreds of people who have taken these courses to continue or enhance their religious education and their knowledge of the faith," he said. "There is a great variety among the students — not just priests and religious, but lay teachers, converts, catechists and people looking for spiritual nourishment."

Indeed, 75 percent of enrolled students represent the laity. That figure, said Mount, reflects the ever-growing importance of that population in today's Church. "For the lay person to be able to fulfill the role that God calls each of us to achieve, we have to understand what the Church teaches," she added. "Our lives are really a pilgrimage throughout which we're called to deepen our faith."

Bishop Curlin noted that the rewards of distance education are there for the taking for anyone interested in strengthening their comprehension of Catholicism. "I hope that people in the Diocese of Charlotte who want to advance their study of the faith — and perhaps even seek a master's degree in religious education — will realize that there is a golden opportunity to achieve this," the bishop said.

For Bishop Welsh, the past 14 years have yielded a great number of positive experiences of replying to the pope's call to energetically partake in the faith. "People have responded over the years that this is something good for the Church," the bishop said of CDU. "It truly seems to be answering a need that is increasingly present in our world."

Semana Santa

Cuando el hombre deja de cuestionarse sobre lo que es, lo que quiere y lo que hace, está empezando a dar síntomas de muerte. Así, sería bueno que no pasara una Semana Santa más sin que nos preguntáramos seriamente, si ella es para nosotros algo más que ir a la Iglesia a llenar bancos o a buscar el guano y el agua, que bendice el sacerdote en las celebraciones correspondientes. Si hoy nos hacemos esta pregunta, estamos dando señales de vitalidad.

La Iglesia ha concebido la Semana Santa como celebración de la Historia, celebración de la vida e invitación para la vida. De esta forma, en los días de la Semana Mayor —como se llamó en otro tiempo—, al celebrar los últimos acontecimientos que protagonizó Jesucristo, estamos celebrando lo que ellos mismos nos invitan a realizar a todas horas.

El Domingo de Ramos aclamamos a Jesús, que entra victorioso en Jerusalén, como soberano de un reino distinto al de los hombres. Que al salir del templo los guanos no se conviertan en espadas y los ¡Hosannas! en ofensas; y esto no sólo el domingo, todos los días de nuestra vida. Esa es la mejor forma de recibir al Mesías.

Agradecemos al Jueves Santo lo que tantas manos temblorosas realizan a diario en el mundo entero; Cristo vuelve a ser Alimento para los suyos. Es repartido por manos del hombre, que nos son "santas y venerables" como las del Maestro, pero escogidas por El. También sustituye los 613 preceptos judíos por el mandato de AMAR. ¿Quién lo cumple cada día?

La celebración del Viernes Santo está centrada en la Pasión y la cruz, donde culmina la vida terrena de Jesús. Su obediencia a la Palabra de Dios llega a su perfección en la muerte. Ella está adornada por esa indescriptible satisfacción, que nace del corazón después de haber cumplido toda la misión. Estamos invitados a hacer "locuras", si fuera necesario, por obedecer a Dios que está "antes que todos los hombres" (Hch 5,29).

El Sábado Santo está cuajado de ese silencio precursor de los grandes acontecimientos. La sepultura de Jesús nos habla de su muerte real y no aparente. Nos está invitando a la oración y al compromiso con el momento presente. Que estas actitudes nos preparen a celebrar "el día en que actuó el Señor (Sal 117), el momento en que el silencio se convierte en gritos de júbilo, la noche en luz y la muerte quedó definitivamente vencida por la VIDA.

¿Realmente esto significa la Semana Santa para nosotros? Bueno, al menos ya dimos el primer paso: preguntarnos. Sabemos que estamos vivos, pero no podemos contentarnos con eso. Tenemos que ponerle más vida a nuestra vida. Hagamos vida las celebraciones de estos días.

(Tomado de "Vida Cristiana", boletín dominical de la Iglesia Católica Cubana)

Cumplir con la voluntad de Dios

Dentro de unos días vamos a celebrar la Semana más importante del año. En nuestro corazón se acumulan los sentimientos más conmovedores y no es para menos pues vamos a vivir con Jesús aquellos acontecimientos, tan extraordinariamente dolorosos para El, que fueron el precio que El pagó por nuestro rescate. Lo vemos maltratado, lo vemos insultado, lo vemos golpeado, condenado a muerte y, finalmente agonizando clavado en una cruz y derramando hasta la última gota de su sangre, en medio de dolores físicos y morales increíbles. No habrán faltado las ocasiones en nuestra vida en las que nos habremos preguntado si para redimirnos era necesario tanto dolor y tanto abandono. Año tras año revivimos este misterio, cuya explicación puede ser una sola: la voluntad del Padre y el amor infinito que nos tiene Jesús.

Cristo se hizo por amor a nosotros, obediente al Padre hasta la muerte y una muerte en la cruz. Como humilde siervo de Dios, Jesús, el Mesías, acepta valerosamente los dolores y la muerte. Se abandona a la voluntad del Padre que le dará una victoria definitiva y gloriosísima. Hijo de Dios, el Señor se somete a una muerte ignominiosa en obediencia a la voluntad del Padre y para reparar nuestra desobediencia y rebeldía. Por esa obediencia, el Padre lo exalta dándole pleno señorío sobre toda la creación.

A este señorío pertenecen todos los rescatados y redimidos. Para salvarnos, el Señor padeció y murió en la cruz. Su sacrificio nos dio la vida sobrenatural y cambió nuestra historia. Su obediencia heroica, sus sufrimientos, la deshonra, la gran soledad de su pasión y muerte nos devolvieron el gozo y la nobleza de ser nuevamente hijo e hijas de Dios.

Pero no olvidemos que participarán en la gloria del Señor únicamente los que tienen el valor de seguirlo por el camino de la Cruz.

Presentation Del Anuario Pontificio 1997

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).- El 22 de febrero el Cardenal Secretario de Estado Angelo Sodano presentó al Santo Padre la edición del Anuario Pontificio de 1997, en presencia del Arzobispo Giovanni Battista Re, Sustituto para los Asuntos Generales, y de los que han colaborado en la elaboración e impresión del volumen.

En una nota sobre la presentación se muestran algunos datos acerca de los cambios y las variaciones del año pasado. La Santa Sede estableció relaciones diplomáticas con las Repúblicas de Tadjikistan, de Turkmenistan y de Sierra Leona, llegando a 163 los Estados con los que mantiene actualmente relaciones diplomáticas.

Además, se crearon una sede metropolitana, una archieparquía, 17 nuevas sedes episcopales, tres eparquías, un exarcado apostólico, un ordinariato militar y dos vicariatos apostólicos.

En 1996, continúa la nota, se nombraron 161 obispos, siendo el número total de 4,224. Ese mismo año, el número de sacerdotes era de 404,750 (262,418 del clero diocesano), 289 más respecto a 1995. El aumento corresponde íntegramente a los sacerdotes diocesanos, ya que los sacerdotes religiosos disminuyeron en 593. Las 8,800 ordenaciones sacerdotales de 1996 superaron en casi 800 el número de sacerdotes fallecidos ese año. Los diáconos permanentes aumentaron un 5.3% respecto al año precedente.

Por vigésimo año consecutivo, concluye la nota, se incrementó el número de seminaristas inscritos en cursos de filosofía y de teología; el aumento fue del 1.2%, pasando de 105,075 a 106,307.

Mensaje del Padre

Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M.

Hermanos y hermanas en Cristo, este mes les quiero ofrecer unas reflexiones acerca del Jueves Santo.

Jueves Santo es el día en que la Iglesia nos invita a reflexionar sobre la Eucaristía, el Sacerdocio y el Mandamiento Nuevo de la Caridad, asuntos que también fueron objetos de la reflexión de Jesús.

Si cada día nos imagináramos a Cristo lavándonos los pies y perdonándonos los pecados, nos costaría poco el cumplir cualquier cosa que El nos mandará. El mandamiento del amor es tan exigente que a veces nos desconcierta. San Pablo nos recuerda que "Dios entregó a su Hijo a la muerte por nosotros cuando éramos sus enemigos". Al entregarse por amor a nosotros, Jesús nos ha hecho amigos íntimos del Padre.

A menudo sufrimos en la familia o con otros miembros de la Comunidad cristiana porque todos o casi todos nos hemos formado de la Comunidad cristiana una idea que no responde a la realidad: sufrimos cuando estamos en comunidad o en familia pensando más en nuestros derechos que en nuestros compromisos; sufrimos cuando pensamos que todos deben ser como nosotros quisiéramos y no lo son; sufrimos cuando pensamos en que recibimos menos que lo que damos.

Tal vez este Jueves Santo valdría la pena recordar y rezar por todas las personas que nos han hecho sufrir o nos están haciendo sufrir en la familia o en la comunidad.

La felicidad de las personas que han hecho una opción de servicio tien, con frecuencia, la posibilidad de servir a quienes no lo agradecen, a quienes son egoístas, a quienes no tienen detalles. Quien logra hacer esto, logra liberarse de su propio egoísmo, logra apoyarse en su humildad y en la fuerza de Dios y logra ser feliz.

A veces, decimos, quien menos cumple, exige más. O exige de manera más imperativa a los demás. Quien se siente profundamente necesitado de Dios y del perdón de todos, tiene también una capacidad de perdón y comprensión casi ilimitada.

Hermanos y hermanas, que en este Jueves Santo, nos acerquemos a Jesús con un corazón nuevo, un corazón hecho con el dolor de Cristo, hecho con el perdón de Cristo, hecho con el amor de Cristo. El nos lava los pies y nos perdona una y mil veces. ¿Para qué queremos tanta generosidad? ¿No seremos capaces de sentir en lo profundo del corazón un sentimiento generoso de perdón a todo el mundo, en especial a las personas que más nos hacen sufrir?

Intentémoslo. Sentiremos que se nos quita un gran peso del corazón. Cuesta, pero después de sentir el amor de Cristo nos cuesta mucho menos.

Cardenal Obando sometido a cirugía con éxito en la Florida

MIAMI (CNS) — El Cardenal Miguel Obando Bravo, de Managua, Nicaragua, fue dado de alta el 13 de febrero del Hospital Bautista de Miami, después de someterse con éxito a la cirugía laparoscópica para extirparle cálculos biliares.

Según la portavoz del hospital, Anne Streeter, el Cardenal se hallaba en buen estado a continuación de la operación del 12 de febrero, y se esperaba que regresara a Managua en el transcurso de unos días. El médico personal del Cardenal forma parte del personal del hospital, ubicado en la zona de Kendall, en Miami.

En una declaración publicada por la Arquidiócesis de Managua, Monseñor Eddy Montenegro, Vicario General, dijo que al prelado de 71 años de edad se le había dicho unas semanas antes que tenía cálculos biliares, y había decidido viajar al sur de la Florida para someterse a la cirugía. El Cardenal es un visitante frecuente de Miami, donde residen miembros de su familia.

El Cardenal Obando fue ordenado sacerdote en 1958 y ha sido el Arzobispo de Managua desde 1970. Se le nombró Cardenal en 1985.

Curso de formación cristiana

YADKINVILLE — El pasado 22 de febrero comenzó un curso de formación cristiana en la Iglesia Cristo Rey de Yadkinville. Este curso continuará durante los próximos sábados de 7:00 PM a 9:00 PM, y está dirigido a todas las personas que tengan interés en acercarse más a Dios, quieran profundizar su fe y aprender más sobre Dios, la Misa, los sacramentos y otras enseñanzas de la Iglesia Católica.

Este curso se está dando en Dobson cada otro viernes de 7:00 PM a 9:00 PM. Para más información llamar al padre Fidel al (910) 463-5533 o (910) 766-8133.

Primer Mandamiento:

"Amarás al Señor tu Dios y a El sólo servirás"

Este Mandamiento nos ordena adorar y servir al solo único y verdadero Dios, creador y supremo Señor nuestro y de todas las cosas, cuyas huellas encontramos en la misma creación y en nuestra conciencia, y cuya manifestación plena, clara y directa resulta de toda la maravillosa historia de nuestra salvación.

A esta adoración y a esta servicio está llamada, sin excepción, toda persona, y constituye su máxima y fundamental responsabilidad. El primer Mandamiento implica que nuestra relación con Dios sea como El la quiere: una relación de fe en El, una relación de esperanza en El y una relación de amistad y de amor con El.

Actitudes equivocadas. Comprenden todos esos gravísimos errores que directa o indirectamente nos desvían de la adoración y del servicio debidos a Dios. Además del ateísmo, que es la explícita negación de Dios y la indiferencia religiosa, que en concreto es una actitud atea, recordemos la idolatría, que consiste en divinizar lo que no es Dios, trátase de los varios ídolos, de los demonios, del poder, del placer, de la raza de los antepasados, del dinero, etc. La irreligión que es la falta de respeto a Dios o a realidades sagradas, como acontece con el sacrilegio, la profanación y la simonía (comercio ilícito de las cosas espirituales). La superstición, que es la peor corrupción de la verdadera fe, llámese hechicería o adivinación. La apostasía en la que caen los que abandonan la verdadera iglesia. La herejía que consiste en la negación de una o varias verdades fundamentales de la fe. La duda voluntaria, con la cual uno cree posible que la Iglesia se equivoque en la enseñanza del dogma, de la moral y del culto sagrado.

Actitud cristiana. Consiste en dar a Dios lo que le debemos como criaturas e hijos suyos: creer en El, como se nos ha revelado; confiar en El, tal cual como El lo espera; amarlo con todo nuestro corazón, con toda el alma y con todas nuestras fuerzas, tal como nos ha enseñado Jesucristo (Mt. 22,37 - Lc. 10, 27). El primer Mandamiento se relaciona con la virtud de la religión, que debe impulsarnos a alabar a Dios, a agradecerle cuanto hace por nosotros, a invocarlo, a pedirle perdón por nuestros pecados, a cumplir con fidelidad y generosidad las promesas y votos que le hemos hechos. ## Mensaje para el día de Hispanoamérica en España

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS) — El 28 de febrero se hizo público el Mensaje de la Pontificia Comisión para América Latina con motivo del Día de Hispanoamérica, que se celebrará en las diócesis de España el domingo 2 de marzo de 1997.

El mensaje está fechado el 6 de enero, Solemnidad de la Epifanía del Señor, y lleva la firma del Presidente y del Vicepresidente de la Comisión, Cardenal Bernardin Gantin y Obispo Cipriano Calderón, respectivamente.

En éste se lee: «La Iglesia ha realizado -como insinúa el Papa- una labor evangelizadora de tan amplias proporciones y de tan patente eficacia que, al comienzo del tercer milenio, en América Latina -según se puede calcular ahora- estará la mitad de los católicos de todo el mundo, con más de 1.100 obispos.

«Esto indica el protagonismo que la Iglesia latinoamericana está llamada a tener en el futuro y representa al mismo tiempo una responsabilidad muy singular, con enormes exigencias».

«El más grande evangelizador que han tenido los pueblos iberoamericanos en nuestros tiempos ha sido Juan Pablo II», continúa el mensaje.

España «ha de cooperar a la Nueva Evangelización de Hispanoamérica, con el mismo ardor y la misma generosidad con que contribuyó a la primera evangelización». Imitando a «Jesucristo 'Evangelizador'», concluye, «aprenderemos también a suscitar esos evangelizadores según el corazón de Cristo, de los que tanta necesidad tiene Hispanoamérica».

Prelado peruano espera que rebeldes se conviertan y liberen rehenes

Foto CNS de Reuters

Una mujer toca una estatua de la Virgen María el 16 de febrero en un santuario improvisado, establecido cerca de la residencia del embajador japonés en Lima, Perú, donde los rehenes han estado retenidos por los rebeldes durante más de dos meses. Mientras los negociadores se reúnen para poner fin al estancamiento de la situación de los rehenes, muchos residentes continúan ofreciendo oraciones por un arreglo pacífico.

LIMA, Perú (CNS) — El Cardenal Augusto Vargas Alzamora, de Lima, dijo que esperaba que los rebeldes que retienen a los rehenes en la residencia del embajador japonés experimentarían la conversión durante la temporada de Cuaresma y pusieran en libertad a sus cautivos.

Los miembros del Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru, conocido por sus iniciales MRTA en español, tomaron en rehenes a cerca de 500 personas el 17 de diciembre cuando se apoderaron de la residencia durante una recepción. Cientos de rehenes han sido puestos en libertad desde entonces, pero quedaban 72 personas dentro de la residencia el 14 de febrero.

“Esta declaración puede sonar a ingenua, pero la historia de la Iglesia ha mostrado que todo cristiano, todo ser humano, es capaz de los cambios más dramáticos y sorprendentes si abre su corazón a la gracia de Dios”, dijo el Cardenal.

El Cardenal Vargas recordó que, cuando él visitó la residencia con Monseñor Juan Luis Cipriani Thorne, Arzobispo de Ayacucho, a fines de enero, él se reunió con rebeldes del Tupac Amaru que alegaban ser católicos.

“Esto significa que ellos están abiertos a la posibilidad de la clase de conversión que la Iglesia pide de todos nosotros en esta temporada”, dijo el Cardenal.

“Los miembros del MRTA deben cambiar, pero todos nosotros debemos cambiar y convertirnos también, porque todos tenemos algo por lo que debemos pedir la misericordia de Dios”, agregó el Cardenal Vargas.

El dijo también que ha presenciado las conversiones de varios miembros del Sendero Luminoso, el grupo terrorista maoísta del Perú, a quienes se considera mucho más agresivos y violentos que a los rebeldes del Tupac Amaru.

El Cardenal dijo a los periodistas que un grupo de conversos del Sendero Luminoso le había pedido que celebrara una Misa por ellos y que los consagrara a la Virgen María. “Fue una celebración intensa, dramática y bella”, recordó el Cardenal.

“Aunque esperamos por su conversión, las conversaciones que se realizan entre el MRTA y el gobierno son una luz de esperanza por la cual tenemos que orar”, terminó diciendo el Cardenal.

Encuesta de universidad muestra contienda congresional bipartidista

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Según dice una encuesta de una universidad católica, las elecciones congresionales próximas en El Salvador están pareciendo cada vez más como una contienda entre dos partidos.

“La contienda está demasiado apretada como para poder pronosticar los resultados”, agregó él. “No está aún del todo claro quién ganará”.

Una encuesta publicada el 19 de febrero por el Instituto de Opinión Pública en la Universidad Centro-Americana revelaba la parte de los ex-guerrilleros, el FMLN, superando al partido ARENA derechista por 21 contra 17 por ciento respectivamente en la preferencia de los electores para el Congreso.

El Partido Demócrata Cristiano, en tercer lugar, iba a la zaga con el 4 por ciento de la encuesta.

La encuesta reveló cifras semejantes para la intención de los electores para alcaldes; 20 por ciento para el FMLN; 18 por ciento para ARENA y 5 por ciento para los demócratas cristianos.

ARENA, que ha estado en el poder desde 1989, va detrás de los ex-rebeldes por primera vez en su historia.

Los 2,400,000 electores de El Salvador saldrán a votar el 16 de marzo por 84 miembros del Congreso y 262 alcaldes, por segunda vez desde la terminación de la guerra civil en 1992.

Aunque inusualmente libre de violencia, la campaña electoral ha estado llena de enfrentamientos verbales entre los políticos, así como de una serie de anuncios anónimos televisados que advierten de los “peligros” de votar por los ex-guerrilleros.

Las tensiones surgieron a fines de febrero, a continuación de las acusaciones públicas — incluyendo las de miembros inconformes del FMLN — de que los ex-guerrilleros estaban financiando su campaña con la venta de armas. Los dirigentes del FMLN han negado las acusaciones y han culpado de ellas a la “propaganda gubernamental”.

Arzobispo dice que acontecimientos podrían retrasar canonización

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — Monseñor Fernando Sáenz Lacalle, Arzobispo de San Salvador, advirtió que las celebraciones públicas del decimoséptimo aniversario de la muerte del Arzobispo Oscar Romero podrían “interferir” con el trámite de su beatificación que se realiza actualmente en Roma.

“Los feligreses deberían ser cuidadosos, ya que las manifestaciones públicas podrían hacer más lento el trámite de la canonización”, dijo Monseñor Sáenz a los reporteros a mediados de febrero.

Según dijo Monseñor Sáenz, “mientras que el Vaticano no haya declarado la beatificación de Romero, no puede haber celebraciones públicas. En vez de eso, debemos tratar de ofrecer oraciones privadas por él”.

Los grupos religiosos y cívicos han desfilado tradicionalmente a través de las calles de la capital, San Salvador, cada día 24 de marzo, para conmemorar el aniversario de la muerte de Monseñor Romero.

En Roma, el Padre Peter Gumpel S.J., que fue anteriormente un funcionario de la Congregación para las Causas de Santidad y postulador oficial de las causas jesuitas, dijo el 19 de febrero: “Es sensato el adoptar todas las precauciones” para asegurarse de que cualquier conmemoración de un candidato a la canonización no sea confundida con una veneración litúrgica oficial de la persona, como si ésta ya hubiera sido beatificada o canonizada”.

“Estas cosas pueden degenerar en un culto público o celebraciones litúrgicas públicas” si no se tiene cuidado, dijo el sacerdote.

“No obstante, es otra cosa distinta el recordar a la persona en el aniversario de su muerte con devociones privadas, visitas a su tumba y otras conmemoraciones. Eso es común”, dijo el Padre Gumpel. “Se halla estrictamente prohibido el atribuir un culto litúrgico oficial a alguien que no haya sido beatificado aún”, dijo él.

La diferencia principal es que en las Misas por los bienaventurados y los santos, las oraciones se dirigen a la persona; en todos los otros casos, las oraciones se dicen por la persona.

El trámite de canonización de Monseñor Romero, que fue abatido por disparos de armas de fuego mientras decía Misa en marzo de 1980, empezó hace seis años y se halla actualmente bajo consideración por parte del Vaticano.

Aunque está respaldado por el Papa Juan Pablo II, se espera que el trámite de beatificación del Arzobispo Romero sea extenso. Para que él sea declarado mártir, tendría que comprobarse que la fe del Arzobispo Romero, y no su postura política, fue el motivo primordial para su asesinato.

Vaticano dice que 1996 vio aumento de muertes de misioneros

Foto CNS de Reuters

Funeral Del Obispo De Jesus — Dirigentes católicos presentan sus respetos al obispo filipino Benjamín de Jesús antes de su entierro el 14 de febrero en la isla filipina de Jolo. El obispo fue asesinado a balazos en las afueras de la catedral el 4 de febrero.

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS) — Por lo menos 46 misioneros fueron muertos en 1996 — un aumento sobre la cifra del año anterior, según el servicio de noticias sobre las misiones del Vaticano, que publicó el informe a mediados de febrero.

Cuarenta y una de las víctimas estaban trabajando en África, 19 de ellas en Zaire, decía un informe en la edición para el 20 de febrero del International Fides Service.

“La Iglesia ha tenido siempre hijos valerosos que han dado sus vidas a fin de llevar la luz de la fe a las naciones, pero los 12 meses recientes han visto una cantidad excepcionalmente alta de misioneros muertos en acción”, decía el informe.

El servicio de noticias anunció el año pasado que, en 1995, 32 misioneros fueron muertos mientras se hallaban en el extranjero.

En su resumen para 1996, Fides nombró a los 46 sacerdotes, religiosos y trabajadores laicos, dando sus países de origen y los lugares y las fechas en que murieron. El conteo incluyó a tres obispos, 18 sacerdotes, ocho religiosos, trece monjas y otras cuatro personas.

Larelación comenzó por la Hermana de la Presentación Patricia McAleese, estadounidense, muerta a machetazos en una playa de Ghana el 8 de enero, y terminó por un sacerdote diocesano de Zaire, el Padre Pascal Kanyamanza, que murió en la Víspera de Navidad.

Fides hizo notar que la cantidad real de víctimas podría ser mayor, porque la lista no incluye a aquéllos desaparecidos de quienes se teme que estén muertos. Entre los desaparecidos hay un obispo africano.

El informe abarcaba sin comentarios a los cuatro misioneros que se sabe resultaron muertos en las primeras semanas de 1997, incluyendo a Monseñor Benjamín de Jesús, Obispo de Jolo, en las Filipinas. Fides señaló que todos los misioneros perdieron sus vidas en el curso de la evangelización y el fomento del desarrollo.

Our commitment grows as our children do.

*F*or more than 40 years, Holy Angels has continued to be a joyous, inspiring place of loving, living, and learning for children with disabilities and severe mental retardation. Children who were given little hope for the future are now becoming adults even as a new generation of children seek our help.

*I*n a very real sense, our remarkable success has brought new challenges as the children of Holy Angels grow and thrive. Their success and ours is only possible thanks to the generous support of people like you. Today, we're caring for more than a single generation of "children" with disabilities. The challenge to provide exceptional care is greater than ever — particularly for our young adult residents and their families who have nowhere else to turn. We know that with the help of "angels" like you, we can still say "yes" when parents ask, "Will you take care of my child?"

Teens Examine God's Plan At Respect Life Retreat

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — Jonathan Karcher's bumper sticker shares a simple yet powerful message: Kiss Me, I'm Pro-Life.

The slogan was created by the Basilica of St. Lawrence youth as part of activities during the diocesan Respect Life Retreat, "God's Plan for Love and Life," held Feb. 28 and March 1 at St. Aloysius Church.

Led by Catholic educator Barbara McGuigan, the retreat for Catholic and non-Catholic parents and children focused on ways to reach the heart and soul of youth on issues as delicate as chastity and as fundamental as the sanctity of every life.

"We didn't want her (McGuigan) to stop talking. She has so much energy and has such a wonderful gift for proclaiming God's truth," said Anthony Braun, parent and St. Aloysius parishioner.

McGuigan's effectiveness was put to the test Saturday when she stood before rows of youth for the better part of the day. The group listened intently as McGuigan challenged them.

Speaking against violence in any form, she described how every human being deserves respect and love. "Because we are made in the image and likeness of God, we cannot kill through abortion, infanticide or euthanasia," McGuigan said, explaining how it violates God's plan for life. There was also discussion on the second victims of abortion and how "no sin is too great for God to forgive."

Later McGuigan applied the "Golden truth" concerning a person's dignity to God's plan for love. McGuigan explained the proper way to express love with practical advice. She emphasized how the sacraments help people stay close to God and give them strength to love each other. When asked what one should look for in a spouse, she replied, "Make sure he or she loves God more than you."

During the session, the youth worked on pro-life or pro-chastity poems, bumper stickers and letters. The sacrament of Reconciliation was also made available by Father Anthony Marcaccio, who later celebrated Mass.

The success of the day was reflected in the inspired works done by the youth which proved McGuigan's motto, "If you want to be used by God, by God, you'll be used." Some of the works are featured below:

I am special as I am told.
I am American Gold.
I am my mother's pride and joy.
I may be a girl, I may be a boy, or may be named Jay or Troy.
I am my mother's pride and joy.
I am a human being.
I can be kind, I can be mean.
Can't you hear those little bells ring?
I am a human being.*

"First Memories," by Katie Spear, Basilica of St. Lawrence.

The first smile; the first tear; the first birthday; the first word; the first Christmas; the first day of school; the first sleep-over; the first drivers license; the first date; the first summer job; the first "I love you."

All these are ended before they can begin, if you choose abortion. And it leaves you wondering what could have been.

Christians built their Scripture interpretations and theology of creation on the assumption that we would never know more about the universe and our solar system than what we read in the Bible.

Along came Galileo, proving our assumptions were wrong, and it took decades, even centuries, before we could theologically adapt to the fact that there is far more out there than human beings ever dreamed or could imagine.

The same thing happened, and continues to happen, with evolution. We assumed that human knowledge about the origins of life would never go beyond the Bible stories. So we built a theology and philosophy of creation on that assumption of continued ignorance.

Then came the totally unprepared for converging discoveries of many natural sciences. As Pope John Paul II said last fall, that convergence "of the results of work that was conducted independently is in itself a significant argument in favor of this theory" of evolution.

We are free, of course, to refute that science if we do it on scientific grounds.

But to frantically attempt to shore up our religious convictions by refusing to recognize observable facts is ultimately fruitless.

It is to deny that truth is one, as our Holy Father reminded us. One truth can never contradict another truth.

Similarly, good science can never contradict good theology, with the emphasis on "good" in both instances. For some reason, that seems a particularly difficult and painful lesson to learn.

Cardinal Bevilacqua Calls For Ban On Clone Research

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — Philadelphia's cardinal has called upon scientists, ethicists, legislators and political leaders to ban research on human cloning and regulate animal cloning, saying that "destructive practices of the past have already shown us the fragility of the planet." "Scientific manipulation of the most basic structures of life itself cannot avoid opening even greater risks to human survival," Cardinal Anthony J. Bevilacqua wrote in an op-ed article in The Philadelphia Inquirer daily newspaper. "The moral issues go far beyond the cloning of one sheep," he said in reference to the recent announcement from Scotland that scientists had cloned a sheep from a single cell.

Catholic Campaign Praises Catholic Charities, Santorum

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Catholic Charities agencies are an "important part" of the church's service to the poor, and "there are thousands of Catholics who participate in the work of this good organization," the Catholic Campaign for America said in a March 4 statement. The statement, issued from the campaign's Washington headquarters, came in response to remarks by U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., who said at a campaign-sponsored dinner Feb. 20 that Catholic Charities USA "shouldn't be called Catholic" because its agencies give their clients only food and material assistance but not the teachings and support of Catholic faith. Santorum, a Catholic who led the Senate floor battle to pass the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act last year, received the Catholic American of the Year Award from the campaign during the dinner.

Philippine Cardinal Praises Ramos, Warns Of 'Threat To Democracy'

MANILA, Philippines (CNS) — Cardinal Jaime Sin of Manila praised President Fidel Ramos for declaring that he will end his presidency in 1998 as scheduled, but warned against persistent "threats to democracy" in the Philippines. "(Ramos) has openly chosen to concentrate his energies on consolidating the considerable gains of his administration, both in healing our economy as well as in social reform," Cardinal Sin told some 10,000 people at a Mass, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

GENOCIDE SUSPECTS AT PRAYER — Prisoners in the Kigali Central Prison pray during a Feb. 28 service. The population of mostly Hutus at the prison in Rwanda has swelled to at least 99,000 people accused of participating in the 1994 genocide. A dozen people have received death sentences in ongoing trials.

Vatican Official Details Church Norms On Divorce, Remarriage

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Divorced and civilly remarried Catholics must either return to their original spouse or refrain from sexual relations with their new partner in order to receive the sacraments of penance and the Eucharist, a Vatican official said. "Divorced and remarried faithful must be inclined toward a form of life which is not in contradiction with the evangelical norm of the indissolubility of marriage," said Msgr. Francesco Di Felice, undersecretary of the Pontifical Council for the Family. He also said priests should help people apply for an annulment when they are convinced that their first marriage was invalid. Msgr. Di Felice made his comments in a March 4 article in the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano.

BELMONT — Queen of the Apostles Church was dedicated in March 1965, five years after Gaston County had been incorporated into the Diocese of Raleigh. From 1944 until 1960, Gaston remained the last county composing the "nullius" of Belmont Abbey. And while Queen of the Apostles Church was founded as a parish of the diocese rather than that of the abbey — which to this day falls under no diocesan jurisdiction — its parishioners can thank the Benedictines for their assistance in indirectly getting the parish started.

In the 1870s, a Benedictine monk named J.J. O'Connell purchased a 500-acre estate near what today is the town of Belmont. Offering Cardinal James Gibbons, vicar apostolic of North Carolina, the estate for religious and educational uses, the Rev. Dr. O'Connell played the key role in the establishment of a Benedictine monastery and school, later to become Belmont Abbey and College.

Pope Pius X in 1910 granted the status of "nullius" to the Benedictines, meaning they existed as an entity subject only to the pope himself. While the "nullius" originally comprised eight counties, the Benedictines carried on missionary work throughout western North Carolina and beyond.

Much of that work went on in Gaston County itself, where Benedictine Father Joseph Keller founded Mary, Help of Christians Church on the estate grounds during the late 1870s. Catholics in the Belmont area worshipped as parishioners of the new church until 1892, when the cathedral at Belmont Abbey — still canonically known as Mary, Help of Christians — was built.

The abbey cathedral remained the only active church for Belmont Catholics until 1965, when plans to establish a diocesan parish came to fruition. Named Queen of the Apostles, the church was a converted gymnasium of a boarding school for boys, while an addition was built to include a sacristy, rectory and office. The parish took St. Helen Church in Spencer Mountain on as a mission as well. That church was built in the late 1910s thanks to donated land and evangelical efforts of one Robert Gardin, a former Baptist whose example, according to local lore, brought more than 1,000 people into the Catholic Church.

In Belmont, the main structure of the former boarding school, St. Leo's, was renovated in 1979-80 for use by Queen of the Apostles parish. Dedicated to the memory of the late Father Edward Malloy, pastor from 1977-80, the building served as the parish's activity and education center.

Parish development continued during the 1980s. Classroom and meeting space became a special concern. By decade's end, a building steering committee was formed and plans were developed for a new education and activity facility.

Meanwhile, Queen of the Apostles parish was given a duty of significant historical value: Custodial care of the Church of Sts. Joseph and Mary in nearby Mt. Holly. St. Joseph's joins St.

Paul Church in New Bern as the oldest Catholic churches in the state, both having been dedicated in 1844. Although ceremonies had been discontinued in the small church since the late 1800s, St. Joseph's was restored in the mid-1970s under the direction of Bishop Michael J. Begley of the recently created Diocese of Charlotte. The U.S. Department of the Interior and the State of North Carolina declared the church a national historical site in 1979.

Back in Belmont, Bishop John F. Donoghue in July 1991 granted permission for construction on Queen of the Apostles' parish center to begin. The two new buildings — a parish family center and a classroom center — were dedicated in February 1992.

Father Peter Jugis was appointed pastor of Queen of the Apostles parish and St. Helen mission in March 1996. He sees continued extension of service in Belmont, with a Knights of Columbus council, a food bank, youth ministry, two children's choirs and a St. Vincent de Paul Society chapter having been formed to join the parish ministry that pervades the community. Two former Queen of the Apostles pastors, Msgr. Thomas Burke and Msgr. Anthony Kovacic, are actively involved in various aspects of that ministry in Belmont as well. In addition, a number of parishioners commit themselves to spending time in the presence of Jesus at the Perpetual Adoration Chapel on the grounds of Belmont Abbey.

Ecumenical bonds are also formed, through such efforts as the Gaston County Nutritional Program, which uses the parish's family center on a daily basis to provide and deliver meals to those in need. With Catholic outreach an ever-present source in the parish, Queen of the Apostles stands as testimony of the enterprising evangelical spirit of Catholicism in North Carolina's history — and its present.

Volume 6 Number 28 • March 21, 1997

CRISM Coordinator Suzanne Bach and Eddice Martin of St. Benedict the Moor Church in Winston-Salem discuss healthcare issues at last week's meeting of the diocesan Task Force on Aging.

Task Force On Aging Holds Initial Meeting

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

This is the fourth in a series of articles focusing on the concerns and needs of the elderly in the Diocese of Charlotte, and how the Church is addressing this very important issue.

HICKORY — Should each parish establish a transportation committee to assist the needs of the elderly? What kind of housing are seniors interested in once they retire? What can the Church and community reasonably provide to address the aging issue that is facing many Catholics in the Diocese of Charlotte? Those were some of the questions raised at the first meeting of the diocesan Task Force on Aging March 13 at the Catholic Conference Center.

Citing a passage from the book Our Greatest Gift by the late Jesuit Father Henri Nouwen, CRISM (Catholic Retirees in Special Ministries) Coordinator Suzanne Bach said all people fear being alone as they age. "It's basic to our human nature," she noted.

The session focused on task force members taking initial steps to address their mission: to provide the diocese with recommendations to address the wants and needs of Catholics over age 60. The task force consists of senior citizens, priests and other religious, adults with elder caregiving responsibilities, and professionals with expertise in healthcare, direct services, pastoral care, the social sciences, and housing. The group's diversity can be seen among senior Kathy Kruckel, a parishioner at Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury who is also caregiver for her 92-year-old father; and George Mundle, a senior housing developer and former director of the Council on Aging in Charlotte.

"We have a tremendous power in this room," said Gerry Carter, director of Family Life and Special Ministries for Catholic Social Services, who along with Bach is helping spearhead the effort. "With your expertise, we can address this very important issue and set a plan in place for the diocese for the next 5-10 years."

The group's recommendations, which will take into account the needs of seniors, adult caregivers, and those who minister with seniors, will focus on short and long goals and lead toward development of new outreach and ministries.

The recommendations will consider key areas of ministry and/or service typically addressed in similar action plans: transportation; healthcare and direct services; pastoral care; housing; and general and psychological well-being. They will take into account the geographic realities of the diocese when offering a plan of action. While financial considerations need to be included, the possible sources of financing short- and long-term goals should not be the sole criterion for determining the appropriateness of a particular recommendation, Carter noted.

The results of separate surveys distributed to elders, adults with elder caregiving responsibilities, and priests, deacons and religious sisters, and listening sessions held in each vicariate will also be taken into account when the group makes recommendations.

Bach asked task force members to encourage seniors to attend remaining listening sessions. "Elders need to take the opportunity to share their vision and needs," she said.

"The ultimate task of the task force is to provide the diocese with a plan of action to guide our ministries to those who so faithfully served

Sister Nirmala Looks To Mother Teresa For Guidance, Prayers

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — The Missionaries of Charity have elected a Hindu convert as Mother Teresa's successor.

Sister Nirmala, 63, was unanimously elected by 123 Missionaries of Charity electors March 12, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

At a March 14 news conference Sister Nirmala told journalists crowded into the courtyard of the Missionaries of Charity headquarters that she would be relying on Mother Teresa's guidance and prayers.

"If God prays for me, if Mother prays for me and if you pray for me, I think I'll prove myself," she said, flanked by Mother Teresa as she stood on a balcony above the courtyard. "Mother is there to guide us."

Mother Teresa, speaking softly into a small microphone, bantered with reporters. "I have plenty of work to do and I will be here until my last breath," she said. "We have to pull on. We have 568 homes all over the world in 120 countries. We will continue God's work." She added that the order would next set up a base in China.

The new superior, an Indian of Nepalese origin, currently heads the congregation's contemplative wing. She once was a missionary in the United States.

"Now I am happy," Mother Teresa said after her successor was announced. Even though health problems forced Mother Teresa to resign in 1990, her order re-elected her.

"Mother Teresa remains as Mother and foundress," the Missionaries of Charity said in a statement. "Sister Nirmala is the new superior general."

After her election, Sister Nirmala said: "I am in a dreamland right now. It's a big responsibility. If you look at it from myself, I am afraid. But looking at God, and depending on prayer, I think I will be able to continue God's work."

Sister Nirmala is "a very fit person for carrying on the inspiration of Mother Teresa," said Archbishop Henry D'Souza of Calcutta, who conducted an eight-day retreat that preceded the congregation's chapter.

Sister Nirmala accompanied Mother Teresa when she visited China in 1993 and Vietnam in 1995, from which time she began to appear in press reports as a possible successor to the Nobel laureate founder of the Missionaries of Charity.

However, India Today, a leading fortnightly in India, and Asiaweek recently described Sister Nirmala as "the dark horse" among the likely successors.

Sister Nirmala is a graduate of Patna Women's College, managed by Apostolic Carmel nuns in the eastern Indian state of Bihar.

The Missionaries of Charity chapter, in session since Jan. 16, has also elected Sisters Frederick Lewis and Priscilla Lewis as councilors general. Two more councilors were to be elected.

Report Says Cuban Spies Infiltrating Church Groups

By JOHN THAVIS

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — With the Cuban church gaining popularity and the government losing it, authorities there have begun infiltrating church groups with spies, a Vatican report said.

The report said the Cuban bishops themselves were surprised and pleased at the increased sympathy toward the Church, but were also concerned that the church's mission could take an overly political turn.

The report was issued in mid-March by Fides, an information agency of the Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples. It outlined the growing enthusiasm among Catholics and non-Catholics as Pope John Paul II prepares to visit the island nation early next year.

Young people in particular are packing churches on Sunday, motivated in part by curiosity and in part by respect for and interest in the pontiff, who is seen by Cubans as a strong defender of human rights, it said.

"The growing sympathy toward the church and the increasingly open criticism (of the government) worries the police, who have decided to re-establish controls and the infiltration of spies and informers in church groups," the report said.

It quoted an unidentified Cuban university student as saying the government had been stung by the general mistrust among the population, but was trying everything to retain its old power. The Vatican report added a criticism of President Fidel Castro, who met the pope in November.

"Castro himself, who during his visit to Italy sounded open toward the possibility of installing democracy and freeing political prisoners, upon his return to Havana has repeated his loyalty to Marxist-Leninist principles," the report said.

It said there was increasingly frank discussion among Cubans of the country's problems and harsher criticism of the government, which "in the name of a dictatorship, has produced only economic and human failures."

It cited a worsening food and medical situation on the island. According to hospital workers, there is an increase in blindness, related to vitamin deficiency, and in a form of paralysis caused by malnutrition. Even common medicines like aspirin have become rare, it said.

Sexuality Awareness Seminar

WINSTON-SALEM — A Father/Son-Mother/Daughter Sexuality Awareness Seminar is April 13 from 12-3 p.m. at St. Leo the Great Church. Females report to the activity center, males to the gym. Cost is $5 per family. Bring a bag lunch. Drinks and dessert provided. Call the church, (910) 724-0561, to register.

Mother Teresa Gives Blessing

NIRMALA BLESSING — Mother Teresa blesses Sister Nirmala, new superior of the Missionaries of Charity, March 14 in Calcutta. Mother Teresa had held the post since she founded the order in 1950.

*'Do small things

*Mother Teresa often repeated simple slogans or quotes.
Here is a sampling of her more famous words.*

"The greatest destroyer of peace and love is abortion."

"Love begins at home. The family that prays together stays together."

"Give until it hurts — with a smile."

"The greatest evil is the lack of love and charity."

"When we all come face to face with God, we are going to be judged on how much we have loved."

Task Force On Elderly Meets, from page 1

the Church and now look towards the Church in their old age," Carter added.

The task force spent the majority of the first meeting in subcommittees discussing key areas of ministry. Questions intended to help guide initial discussions of elder needs in transportation, healthcare and direct services, pastoral care, housing, and general and psychological well-being were discussed.

"There is no possibility of us ever having enough clergy to address the pastoral care issue, but it shouldn't be just clergy; it is the responsibility of the entire faith community," said Mercy Sister Jeanne Marie Kienast, pastoral associate at St. Matthew Church, who feels each parish should implement a pastoral ministry training program.

"All elders do not think, feel or react alike," noted Kruckel. "The psychological needs of the aging vary widely and should be addressed."

The task force will meet three more times (in April, May and June). Final recommendations will be made to the diocese in the fall. Task force members include Delores Aherns; Stephanie Biggers; Sandra Breakfield; Kathryn Brown; Kay Cuzzzone; B.J. Dengler; Lola Holt; Peter Hubicki; Don and Hope Irmiter; Mercy Sister Jeanne Marie Kienast; Betty and Verne King; Gloria King; Kathy Kruckel; Father Andy Latsko; Father Anthony Marcaccio; Eddice Martin; Sharon Mayfield; Louise McMurry; Father Fidel Melo; George Mundle; Alma Mungo; Frances Nunziata; Matthias Propst; Alberta Raysinger; Anna Rounds; Al and Jo Santoro; Ray Schmitt; Father Ed Sheridan; Joy Shilan; Mary and Dick Ward; and Gayla Woody.

Pope Appeals For Peace In Albania; Church Aids Refugees In Italy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II appealed to Albanians to stop the spread of violence which had sent thousands fleeing in panic, while church aid workers in neighboring Italy tried to accommodate the refugees.

In his Angelus address March 16, the pontiff asked people to pray for peace in the Balkan country engulfed in anarchy after anti-government protests turned to widespread looting, gunfire and destruction. The pope urged those who had seized weapons to put them down.

"Destructive violence certainly is not an adequate means to resolve social problems," Pope John Paul said. "On the contrary, everyone should feel compelled to collaborate, out of respect for people and for rights, in the re-establishment of trust between the citizens and their authorities. None of that can be realized without public order."

The pope said Europe must help the Albanian government and its people "to construct their country on the basis of democracy and political and social dialogue."

On the same day, the 15-member European Union agreed to send civilian and military advisers to Albania, but stopped short of the armed intervention for which Albanian President Sali Berisha had appealed during the previous week. EU ministers did not rule out a wider intervention, but they decided to wait for the report of a diplomatic team sent to Tirana for talks with the government and opposition groups.

Day and night, meanwhile, refugees on boats from Albania continued to arrive on the shores of southern Italy. The port city of Brindisi was "completely saturated," Mayor Lorenzo Maggi said before a meeting with Italian Prime Minister Romano Prodi March 16. The prime minister, in turn, said Italy would do what it could to handle the influx of refugees, adding, "We can't throw them into the sea."

The Archdiocese of Lecce, just south of Brindisi, was housing refugees in churches, where volunteers brought food, clothing and blankets "constantly, but it is still not enough," said Father Cesare Lodesserto, who was coordinating the relief effort.

Caritas Italiana, relief agency of the Italian bishops, called on other church agencies in Europe to solicit donations to help meet the needs of Albanians "because we do not know how long this humanitarian action will have to last," said spokesman Ferruccio Ferrante.

"The immediate problem now is the arrival of masses of refugees in Italy," a statement from the organization said, "but at the same time there is a concrete and unceasing need for the international community to cope with the destabilization of all of Albania and with the risk ... of grave repercussions in the whole Balkan region."

Dear Friends in Christ,

At Easter, we ask your generous support and response to the second collection which will be taken in all parishes of our diocese to help meet the needs of our Vocation and Seminarian program to provide support for the continuing education of our priests.

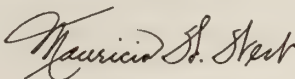

Like most other dioceses, we are in need of men who feel called to the priesthood, to serve the spiritual needs of our growing Catholic population. Presently, we have 23 men in various seminaries, and we look to the day when they will be ordained and begin their service to the Church in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Also, the diocese regularly sponsors workshops and other programs to keep our priests abreast of development in theology and pastoral practices. This theological updating is important and will help our priests in serving the needs of all the faithful.

The cost of education continues to rise and it is only through your kindness and generosity that we are able to meet these escalating expenses. Please know of our gratitude and appreciation for your generous response to the Seminary and Priests' Continuing Education Collection to be taken the weekend of March 29-30.

Wishing you the blessing of this holy Easter Season, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

Very Rev. Mauricio W. West, V.G.

Dear Friends in Christ,

The Holy Land, Christ's homeland, is our spiritual home, as well. Over the years, the shrines marking the great events of His life and death have been cherished and protected from harm by the kind support of Christians the world over.

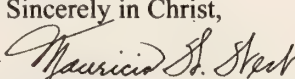

Your generosity is what keeps alive the caring spirit of Jesus in the Holy Places. Your generosity also supports the work of the Franciscan Missioners who serve the people there...pilgrims, native Christians and the poor of every faith who are in need.

Your donation this year may mean another meal for a refugee child, a candle for a dark shrine, a bit of spruce-up paint on a door, a warm place to sleep for once-in-a-lifetime young pilgrims, the very bread and wine for our daily Eucharist.

Please be as generous as you can to our less fortunate sisters and brothers in the Holy Land when the collection is taken in our parishes on Good Friday, March 8.

Wishing you God's blessing, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Mary Cooperated In Christ's Saving Work, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's remarks in English at his weekly general audience March 12.

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider Mary's place in the public ministry of Jesus. According to the Second Vatican Council, Mary fully accepted the Lord's teaching about the Kingdom of God and the sacrifices which it entails (cf. "Lumen Gentium," 58). Jesus deliberately chose to be separated from all family ties in order to emphasize the need for complete fidelity to God's will. Although this separation must have troubled Mary, she continued to follow her son spiritually and to embrace his teaching. The Gospels tell us that Mary was present on a number of occasions when her son preached. Jesus' statement that His mother and brothers are those who hear the word of God and keep it (cf. Lk 8:21) is to be applied above all to Mary. As a faithful disciple, she shared in Christ's rejection and His sufferings, and co-operated in His saving work. Her example of fidelity inspires us to persevere in faith and in union with Christ, confident that His word transforms and renews our lives.

I warmly welcome the Ecumenical Commission of the Diocese of Stockholm. With fond memories of my visit to Sweden, I encourage you to persevere in your work for the unity of all Christians in your country.

Pope Tells Children He Likes To Watch Sunrise

ROME (CNS) — Pope John Paul II, a perennial early riser, told a group of young people he likes to start his day by watching the sun come up over Rome.

"Every day I always try to see the rising of the sun," the pope said during a parish visit in downtown Rome March 16. He informed the children that it had risen at about 6:30 a.m. that morning.

The pope normally gets up even earlier, between 5:30 a.m. and 6 a.m., and spends time praying alone in his private chapel before celebrating Mass at 7 a.m. Weather permitting, he sometimes meditates on his private terrace above his apartment, where he had the stations of the cross installed a few years ago.

The 76-year-old pontiff ad-libbed with the children at the church of San Salvatore in Lauro, just across the Tiber River from the Vatican. He reminded them that Easter was coming, a day that is "more important than Christmas, because on that day Christ rose from the dead."

The pope quickly added: "But maybe for children, Christmas is more important."

The pope noted that the wealthy Roman neighborhood was known for its antique stores and an annual evening trade fair. He suggested that the churches of the zone remain open until late at night, too, so that visitors can stop in at any hour.

What's Funny And What's Not

What do you do for entertainment in your spare time?

A group of teen-age boys recently described what amused them to a teacher friend of mine.

Throwing things played a central role in the story, but they weren't tossing baseballs. And despite their protestations, what these guys do is certainly not a game.

"Skaters. I can't stand 'em," one boy declared. "When they're going around the lake, we throw pennies and stuff at them when we drive by."

"I've thrown raw meat at people walking by the lake," another added. The listener's eyebrows rose. "Once I got a lady walking with her kids with a steak." The eyebrows rose another centimeter. "It was a cheap cut," she was reassured.

Fruit is a popular projectile. These adolescent males, every one of them from an upper-middle-class background with all the privileges such a life provides, laughed heartily as they recounted tale after tale of heaving oranges and grapefruit at pedestrians and passing vehicles. Just for variety, they added driving into full trash cans and tormenting animals.

"But," a young man hastily added, lest the listener draw the wrong conclusion, "there are some kids who pick on homeless guys downtown. We don't do that."

Well good for you. What a bunch of humanitarians!

What these young men were doing was treating other human beings as objects. They were causing pain and discomfort to others for the purpose of entertainment.

"It's funny," they responded to objections, "and nobody really gets hurt."

Both points are highly questionable. If these are your friends you should be very concerned.

Treating others today as objects lays a foundation for using people in the future as stepping stones to power and success; as sources of pleasure; as cogs in a machine that will make you profit.

The day after this discussion, the same group sat in their same seats, taking a quiz.

The teacher collected the quizzes, graded them quickly and returned them.

The students, both the boys who had bragged of their vandalism and the girls who had presented only mild objections, stared at their papers in disbelief.

"What did you get?" they whispered to each other.

"Zero."

"Zero."

All were zeroes except one boy whose paper had been handed in virtually blank. He had A+ scrawled across the top.

"What's going on?"

The teacher shrugged. "I'm bored. I just wanted to see the look on your faces. I thought it would be funny."

A couple of boys studied their papers, brows deeply furrowed. One girl put her head down.

Next the teacher whipped out a box of Girl Scout cookies and gave cookies to five students at random.

"Hey, why don't you give one to us?"

The teacher smirked rather cruelly. "It's really funny to see you guys so mad. This day was really dull until this class came in. I'll laugh about this all night. Maybe I'll even tell some people about it tomorrow."

At this point, the light began to dawn. "I get it," one of the previous day's braggarts announced, "You're doing to us what we said we did to other people."

The teacher nodded and asked how it felt to be treated this way. Not good, the boys answered.

Perhaps this lesson in the Golden Rule helped one or two of them re-evaluate their treatment of other people, reminded them of what it feels like to be treated like an object.

Could you use a little refresher in that lesson?

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

Betrayal: Why Did Judas Do It?

Leonardo Da Vinci's portrayal of the Last Supper is, perhaps, the most famous religious painting of all time. Why did he choose the instant when Jesus announced, "One of you will betray Me," for his painting?

He could have picked from other moments that took place during that Pass-over meal, but he didn't. Da Vinci chose to capture that second of indignation and anger and disbelief. The disciples reel back in horror, saying, "Is it I, Lord? Is it I?" Soon Judas will slip out to make his final arrangements and later that night will stand with the mob and soldiers who arrest Jesus. Jesus will be crucified and in another few hours Judas, too, will be dead — a suicide.

Yet, why did he betray Jesus? The most familiar theory is that he did it for money. But would Judas have "sold out" for a mere twenty dollars, which is the value of those 30 pieces of silver? I think not.

The money was more likely a bargain-sealer, a kind of token expression of a meeting-of-the-minds. And that is why, when Judas changed his mind, he threw the money back at the chief priests saying, "I have sinned by betraying innocent blood."

To understand Judas we need some background. Suppose as a little boy or girl your mother and father and teachers told you, over and over again, that God loved your country, God loved your people so much that He was going to send a mighty leader. He would be an even grander hero than King David.

Oh, to be a part of this great moment, to be close to this great leader! Then Jesus comes and you believe He is the Messiah, the Promised One. And Judas gave up everything, throwing in his lot to follow Him. But, as the months went by, it became clear that Jesus was talking about another kind of kingdom. He was not going to start a revolution. At least, not the kind Judas expected. So Judas, with his stubborn self-will, made some decisions.

He would force Jesus to do what he knew was best. If he had Him arrested, backed Him against the wall, Jesus would have to start a revolution. For his own good and the good of the people, Judas turned in Jesus to the enemy.

Self-will strikes close to home for each of us. I'm asking you to be honest. Be honest about your own self-will and the things you do to people because of it. Each one of us can look into our hearts and find something of Judas there. Like him, we are free to decide that we know better, better than God knows what is best. We are free to say "Yes" or "No" to God's will.

There is a very beautiful legend about what will happen on the Last Day. In Paradise everyone is celebrating, dancing and singing with great jubilation. Ev-everyone except Jesus. He stands very quietly in the shadows of the Gates. Someone asks Him what He is doing, in the midst of all this festivity. Jesus answers, "I am waiting here for Judas."

I like that story because it symbolizes to me the infinite quality of God's forgiving love which He offers even to Judas Iscariot. But the question still remains: Will Judas use his freedom to accept it or reject it?

And that is the question we must ask about the bit of Judas in ourselves.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Medically, What Caused Jesus' Death On The Cross?

Q. I am not a physician, but through my profession I do have some medical knowledge. We are told that Jesus suffered much in the scourging and carrying of the cross, and while He was on the cross.

This may be a stupid question, but what did He actually die of? I realize there were no doctors or scientists there to report what happened.

Since even Pontius Pilate was surprised He died so soon, there must have been something different about His death.

A. First, let me assure you there may be a lot of stupid answers around, but there is no such thing as a stupid honest question.

Yours has been addressed often through the centuries. Usually, of course, the response reflected the state of scientific information at the time.

To my knowledge, the best study of the subject in light of modern medical science was produced by two members of the medical staff of the Mayo Clinic with two Methodist clergymen. It appeared in the March 21, 1986, issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Their study deals with the entire passion story, starting with Gethsemane. The final section speaks directly to your question and is the source of most of what follows.

As you note, that Jesus' death occurred in so few hours amazed Pilate himself (Mk. 15:44). The process of dying by crucifixion could continue for many hours, even days.

This fact, coupled with the loud cry (reported by Matthew and Mark) just before He died, suggests that some sort of catastrophic event caused His death.

It may have been a rupture of the heart. The massive physical and emotional traumas of the previous 24 hours may have caused "non-infective thrombotic vegetations" to form on the mitral or aortic valves. These could dislodge into the heart's blood supply system, causing a rupture in the cardiac muscle wall, and nearly immediate death.

Perhaps a more likely explanation is simple terminal exhaustion, resulting from loss of blood and severe shock during the scourging a few hours before and from the painful struggle to breathe as His body weakened on the cross.

This would cause Him to die relatively quickly, too exhausted to even take

Letters

Many Are "Unorthodox"

I would like to respond to Father Edgar Holden's letter of Feb. 21.

Since the definition of "orthodox" is to be sound or correct in opinion or doctrine, I would suggest that there are many in the Church, unfortunately, who are rather unorthodox. The list of those who would fall into this latter category is quite long. Permit me just to identify a few:

- Those who refer to themselves as "Catholics for Free Choice."
- Those promoting the "We are Church" referendum.
- The "Call to Action" group.
- Those who think of themselves as sedevacantists.
- All those writers, theologians, liturgists, educators and others who promote ideas, programs, liturgical events that are misleading or openly antagonistic to the Magisterium of the Roman Catholic Church.

I would agree with the statement that Scott Hahn is a "zealous and balanced communicator of contemporary orthodox Catholicism."

Rev. Mr. Thomas O'Connell
Winston-Salem

Difference Lies In Practice

I would like to comment on Father Edgar Holden's letter which appeared in the The Catholic & Herald Feb. 21.

Father Holden is right to correct the implication that there is more than one type of Catholicism. However, there are different kinds of people who call themselves Catholic followers. Some who adhere strictly to Church teaching and others who disregard most or all of the teachings. With such radical differences, in practice, it could easily appear that there is more than one type of Catholicism.

Let's face it, sooner or later, one has to decide if they want to be in the Church or not.

Catholic Schools Are Impossible Dream For Many

This letter is in response to Dr. Skube's recent column regarding Catholic Schools Week. There are a few statistics that were not in his analysis:

1. The number of Catholic students who apply and are denied (placed on "the waiting list");
2. The number of Catholic families that do not apply because there is not a Catholic school close enough in location to make a Catholic education feasible;
3. The number of Catholic families that are discouraged from ever applying because the admission policies are unfairly skewed;
4. The number of families per parish who prefer sending their child to public vs. private education;
5. The number of families per parish who are currently sending their child to private, non-Catholic schools;
6. The distances parents who have children enrolled in Catholic Schools travel per week (which also includes after-school activities, special events and meetings).

7. The demographic analysis of the growth of counties within our diocese since 1990;
8. What analyses indicate regionalization;

Catholics are directed to "Go and make disciples" and share the message of truth which is found only in the Catholic Church.

What a denial of faith to not provide our communities with this great tool of evangelization and faith formation, especially in an area that is filled with misconceptions of the Catholic Church.

Maybe the motto for Catholic Schools Week should be: "Catholic Schools — Schools You Wish You Had"; And the theme for 1998: "Catholic Schools — Schools You Can Only Dream Of."

Put Your Assets To Work

By JIM KELLEY

There's no mystery to estate planning. It covers the process of accumulating, managing and distributing property over the course of a lifetime. Creating a sound estate plan and keeping it up-to-date expresses your desires regarding who receives your assets and under what circumstances; helps eliminate unnecessary administration expenses; and gives you control of what happens to your resources.

Should you fail to make your own plans, the state of North Carolina has provisions to distribute your assets, yet possibly not as you would prefer. Under rigid and impersonal "state-wide" wills, your friends and charitable interests cannot receive any benefits from your estate.

Make Your Wishes Known

Voicing your wishes through a well-planned will, revocable living trust, or other valid legal arrangement can enable you to conserve more property for heirs, save you taxes both now and in the future, and reduce your estate settlement expenses. Let your attorney incorporate your wishes into the proper legal form so that your assets go to work for you while you control what happens to them.

As grateful stewards of their resources, many thoughtful Catholics in the Diocese of Charlotte also use their estate plans as vehicles to make charitable gifts to Catholic causes, their parish, the diocesan Foundation, or the Diocese of Charlotte that strengthen the foundation of Catholicism. This can be done without diminishing the security of your spouse, children, or other loved ones.

Selecting The Right Property

Have you considered funding your gift with something other than cash? Perhaps you invest in mutual funds or stocks or receive shares from a company stock option plan.

Whatever the form, appreciated property that you have owned for longer than a year and a day make advantageous gifts and bring you favorable tax treatment. You usually deduct the current fair market value of the asset you give instead of the lower price you probably paid originally and you do not pay capital gains tax on a charitable gift the way you would if you sold it instead.

Honoring A Loved One Now

Our thoughts naturally turn to family during Easter, Mother's Day, and Father's Day. A wonderful spouse, cherished children and grandchildren, beloved parents, treasured brothers and sisters all bring reasons to celebrate.

It's such a blessed season — and reason — for special memorial gifts to your parish, Catholic causes, or this diocese that combine your love for someone special with God's great love for us.

An effective real estate plan helps assure that your wishes for your family and your Church are carried out in welcome ways. Balancing your hopes for the future with realistic plans for today can be very satisfying.

I look forward to the opportunity to discuss your long-range estate and financial plans in confidence and without obligation when you contact me at the Development Office, Diocese of Charlotte, 1524 East Morehead Street, Charlotte, NC 28207, (704) 331-1709 or 377-6871.

Economic Initiatives Addressed At Ecumenical Conference

By PAUL FREDETTE

Correspondent

ASHEVILLE — Stirring beneath the quiet decorum at Trinity Episcopal Church one could feel genuine excitement among the more than 150 participants gathered March 15 for a groundbreaking ecumenical conference addressing social justice. Economic Initiatives: Issues of Justice and Faith was a daylong event co-sponsored by the Justice and Peace Office of the Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, and the Task Force on Economic Justice of the Episcopal Diocese of Western North Carolina.

The purpose of the conference was to generate deeper commitment among local church workers and their respective religious communities to greater involvement in addressing issues of economic injustice in the broader community. Dee Williams of Asheville, responding to the keynote speakers, voiced a concern widely shared among participants. Those who would benefit most from this gathering, she pointed out, could not afford the time nor would they devote an entire day to "talking the talk without a determination to walk the walk right here in the Asheville community."

Keynote speakers Kimberly Bobo, executive director of the recently established National Interfaith Committee for Worker Justice based in Chicago, and Dr. June Jackson Christmas, psychiatrist and health policy planner from New York, both stressed the importance of cultivating faith that is satisfied only in the doing of justice.

"Doing justice," asserted Bobo, "is not the same as doing good things." In her view, running soup kitchens does not suffice when the need for a living wage, or the need for collective bargaining are the real issues. Bobo stated unequivocally that loving one's neighbor as oneself means helping your neighbor to have what you have, even at some cost to yourself. Whether the issue is welfare reform, furthering local living wage ordinances, or developing resources for low-income housing, Bobo insists a faith that does justice must operate in two critical areas: Advocating public policies and supporting the right of workers to organize.

Speaking from her considerable experience in public policy at all levels of government, Christmas reminded everyone — with an eye on the current economic scene — that "a rising tide does not lift all boats." On behalf of groups "whose race and class make them expendable from the word 'go,'" Christmas argued for a four-fold approach requiring awareness, advocacy, action and accountability to deal effectively with a national mood of "let me get mine first."

Without absolving government of its responsibilities to cooperate with private and religious groups, Christmas concluded her remarks by affirming the crucial role of faith-based groups, saying "it is not just for others, but for all of us that we must act."

Responding to the keynote speakers, Dr. Barney Offerman, director of the Campaign for Human Development in the Charlotte diocese, said he welcomed their affirmations of the connection between a strong labor movement and the advancement of economic justice, noting the legislative accomplishments of the 1960s and early '70s in the area of civil rights, housing and health care.

Other participants like Trinitarian Sister Marie Frechette, director of the western regional office of Catholic Social Services, felt personally challenged to examine some aspect of their commitment to social justice. "I'm being pushed to grow," she admitted.

Throughout the afternoon, regional and local leaders facilitated seven workshops that focused on housing and homelessness, welfare reform, immigration law, rural communities, institutionalized racism, employment ethics and living wage, and opportunities to promote economic justice in local communities.

What Catholic Schools Can Mean To Your Children

Mecklenburg Area
Catholic Schools

MACS... A Dream Come True

by C. Charles LeBlanc, Regional Superintendent

I have been gainfully employed by Catholic schools since 1967. In those 30 years I have either participated in or witnessed various schooling styles of parochial, inter-parochial and/or diocesan educational programs. Regardless of the offering there always appeared some degree of internal competition that did not address the vision and mission of the Catholic Church as I understand it.

Somehow, the message of Jesus ("Look at these Christians and see how they love one another") seemed difficult. Maybe what I was seeing was schooling that was narrow in scope. In some areas I observed buildings being built that were the envy of many and in other areas I saw that there were not even enough desks for each child to have a seat.

MACS has taken to heart the vision of the Christian dimension of Catholic education.

MACS is refreshing in that all schools in the system are like family. Parish contributions to the tuition assistance program are system-driven and not parochial supported. What a difference when I meditate on the Scripture — look at these Christians and see how they love one another. Positives are present. Equality is present in all arenas of the service community.

In 1988 the Congregation for Catholic education said, "While the Catholic school is like any other school in this complex variety of events that make up the life of the school, there is one essential difference: it draws its inspiration and its strength from the Gospel in which it is rooted." The gospel is not limited. My experience in Catholic schools has been one in which there were seeming limitations based on parochial boundaries. MACS reaches farther. MACS, by its very nature serves Mecklenburg County.

There is discussion to make that service more readily available. MACS is providing a service that can eventually become a model for other communities to copy and expand.

Knowing that the system is only five years old, we are indebted to those who have gone before us with the vision of education that is collaborative with the mission of the Church. Simply stated that mission is, "Go, therefore, and make disciples of all nations; baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, and teach them to observe all the commands I gave you. And know that I am with you always; yes, even to the end of time," (Mt. 28:19-20). I pray that God's blessings continue to lead and direct the efforts of MACS so that the system may more strongly evangelize.

Mission

The mission of the Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools regional system is to provide Catholic children in the Mecklenburg Area the opportunity for a quality education in the Catholic tradition. We are committed to the development of our students spiritually, intellectually, emotionally, physically and socially to prepare them to live and serve in a changing society as self-respecting and responsible citizens. We strive to maintain an environment in which the teachings of Jesus are promoted and proclaimed as the basis of the values taught and upheld. We recognize that this mission is a shared responsibility with our parishes and parents.

Constructive Learning Environment

by Joan Stretch, member, Board of Education

The uniqueness of our Catholic school system is reflected daily by the young voices raised in prayers of thanks and prayers of petition at the opening and close of every school day. Our schools are communities of Christians empowered by the Spirit which endeavors to develop the spiritual, intellectual, emotional, social and physical dimensions of each student. MACS faculty and staff strive to proclaim and witness Gospel values by creating an environment built on mutual respect and love.

An indispensable element in the Catholic school environment is the support and involvement of parents. The home and school working hand in hand creates an environment that encourages each child to develop a personal relationship with Christ through knowledge of the Catholic faith.

The learning environment in every Catholic school strives to foster in each student a positive self image that will inspire him or her to develop a personal sense of initiative, responsibility and respect. It fosters a sensitivity to cultural and aesthetic values and a desire to acquire the qualities of heart and mind necessary for effective service to others.

Further, each student is encouraged in the daily practice of social graces through refinement in manners, speech and dress. We expect our children to live up to our highest expectations academically and behaviorally. Discipline is administered with firmness, kindness, concern and always in the best interest of the child and school community.

MACS Experiences Incredible Growth

by Jennifer Wheeler, Director of Development

During the 1991-92 school year, more than 400 students were on waiting lists, and Our Lady of the Assumption Catholic School was thought to be closing in three years due to the widening of Independence Boulevard. Total student capacity for all five Catholic schools was 2,420. To accommodate rising enrollment, MACS was created and the Catholic schools in Charlotte increased from five to seven schools with the addition of an elementary and middle school. The MACS system now has the capacity to serve 4,300 students, an increase of 1,880.

All Saints Catholic School was a newly created elementary school, built to serve the growing southeast Charlotte area. Within a year, the building was expanded due to the ever increasing number of Catholic students in that area. The school now has the capacity to serve 640 students.

A new Charlotte Catholic High School was built to accommodate up to 1,200 students, almost double the number of students it was able to house in the previous location.

The building of the new CCHS allowed for a new middle school at the previous CCHS location, accommodating 6th, 7th and 8th grade students. The move to the new Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School provided more space for additional students in all the elementary schools. The capacity at is currently 850 students, with work beginning on the campus this summer to increase the number of seats to 1,100.

OLA, forced to move due to the widening of Independence Boulevard, built a new school on Shamrock Drive. Currently the school can serve 306 children.

St. Ann's Parish built a Parish Activity Center where the St. Ann Catholic School students now enjoy lunch, physical education classes and other activities. A kindergarten classroom was added to the existing school structure and the former school cafeteria was converted into a multipurpose room. The current capacity for St. Ann Catholic School is 386.

St. Gabriel Parish built a new Community Center for both the Parish and St. Gabriel Catholic School to use. The new facility includes a gymnasium, cafeteria, stage and classrooms to serve 546 students, an increase of 176 over the previous school.

St. Patrick Catholic School, the oldest Catholic school in Charlotte, received extensive renovations including a new gym floor, masonry repairs, new bathrooms and repairs to the cafeteria. Present capacity is 365.

Admissions Procedure Offers MACS Families Many Options

by Virginia Bond, Admissions Director

Families new to the Charlotte-Mecklenburg area often express surprise and then interest in the MACS concept of regionalization. Prior to regionalization, more than 400 students were on waiting lists in many area

Parish Catholic schools in Charlotte. When the Catholic schools in Charlotte joined forces, families were given access to all seven schools in MACS; therefore increasing their chances of enrolling their children in one of the schools. The current admissions procedure enables families the greatest opportunities for securing a seat for their child in MACS.

Families applying for admissions for their elementary aged children are offered five different campus locations. They are asked to indicate their first four school choices by preference on their admissions form.

Many inquiring families express relief to know that MACS will make every effort to place their elementary child in one of the five parochial schools within the Mecklenburg Area Catholic School system. As one new family applying for admissions for the 1997-98 school year wrote on their application, "We were equally impressed with all the schools, therefore we are very flexible in our choices and just want our children in a Catholic school." All five elementary schools, Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School and Charlotte Catholic High School offer a quality education in the Catholic tradition.

MACS Buses Off and Rolling

by John Eichorn, Transportation Chair

In August of 1995, seven big yellow buses with Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools printed in bold lettering on their sides, rolled across Charlotte/Mecklenburg, inaugurating MACS' new transportation system. This service has been a boon for the parents of the 400-plus students who utilize the system, allowing more convenient access to all seven schools in the MACS system.

With every year the fleet has grown. During the school day the buses are used for school field trips, transporting the students to cultural enrichment programs and class retreats. In addition, a 22-passenger bus is planned for the use of smaller athletic teams like tennis and golf for transportation to and from tournaments.

Convenience and increased accessibility are the purpose of the transportation system. The safety and welfare of the students is our greatest consideration. All bus drivers possess the mandatory Commercial Driver's License and are state trained as well as CPR certified.

Learning Enrichment Activities Program Begins at MACS

by Karen Mann, Director of Learning Support

All children can learn, but the rate in which learning takes place varies from student to student. For several years, the MACS Learning Support Program has helped students who needed a little extra support. LEAP (Learning Enrichment Activities Program), which MACS will pilot at Our Lady of the Assumption Catholic School in the 1997-98 school year, offers enrichment opportunities to all children while allowing students who master concepts faster than classmates an opportunity during the school day to explore topics of interest and create projects to show what they have learned. The program is based on the nationally acclaimed Renzulli Schoolwide Enrichment Model.

Teachers are able to use curriculum compacting to shorten the time a student spends learning a concept. As students compact curriculum, the teacher will move to helping students learn more about special interest topics, do higher thinking skill activities, and create products to be shared with other students, the school or even the community. One elementary student in another school system learned the historic district of his town and developed a brochure which included a map and information on the historic places. His work was shared with the town's Chamber of Commerce and is now available to visitors. This kind of real-life-product is encouraged.

After a year, the program will be expanded to at least one other school in the MACS system. If the program succeeds, then MACS will consider implementing the Learning Enrichment Activities Program in other MACS schools.

CCHS Offers An Enriching Experience to Students

by Jennifer Sheely
CCHS Director of Development

Charlotte Catholic High School, a four year coeducational facility, has a long tradition of spiritual and academic excellence that has served the Charlotte Catholic community for over 50 years. The central aspect of the CCHS program is the Faith Development of the students. CCHS works hard to create an environment where the members of the CCHS community are able to fully explore and develop their faith.

All students take Religion classes which are designed to give the students a firm foundation in Catholicism and help them to apply their faith to every aspect of their life. The service program is another major component of this faith development. It affords students the opportunity to take these lessons of faith and love learned in class and apply them to the outside community.

The students of CCHS are not only challenged in their faith development but also in their academic knowledge. The facility provides the students and the faculty with the best available educational resources, including fully equipped science labs and a Media Center which boasts an Integrated Communications System.

The excellence that is seen in CCHS academics goes much further than its facilities; it also lies in the distinguished faculty at CCHS. The faculty consists of over 50 fully qualified individuals, many of whom have their Masters degree. There is currently a 17:1 student to teacher ratio with a maximum of 25 students per classroom. Guidance and learning support counselors help students with any needed additional academic attention, college and career preparation, and personal issues.

The students at CCHS do succeed academically. They consistently score significantly higher on the SAT exam than the state and national averages. The graduation rate is 100%, with 98% of the students historically proceeding to four year colleges and institutions. The Class of 1996 was awarded an incredible $1.6 million in scholarships, with 25% of the seniors receiving these scholarships.

CCHS realizes that the growth of a young person is not limited to what is learned inside a classroom. Students are encouraged to participate in the many extracurricular and fine arts activities that the school offers. There are over 25 clubs that students can join.

Drama, music, choral, dance, band and art classes are all offered at CCHS. All students, regardless of their participation in these activities, are exposed to a variety of cultural events, presented by both their fellow students and guests from the larger community.

CCHS fields 26 teams in 13 different sports. The CCHS Cougars pride themselves most on their constant display of true sportsmanship on the athletic fields.

In all important areas from service to academic, from religious to social, Charlotte Catholic High School has worked hard to instill in its students strong Christian, Catholic values that they can use throughout their lifetime. The young adults who graduate from CCHS continue to make positive contributions to both the Church and society. CCHS is truly a school you can believe in!

Education Foundation Enhances Schools Through Grants

by Jennifer Wheeler, Director of Development

The MACS Education Foundation, the fundraising arm of MACS, was established in 1993 to augment support of educational programs in the MACS system. Monies raised through the Annual Giving Campaign support projects and programs beyond what tuition and fees cover. These needs include additional computers for the classroom, tuition assistance for families in need, development for teachers and an endowment fund, to ensure the future needs of the students are met. Since its inception, nearly $500,000 in donations have been raised for use in Charlotte's Catholic schools, enriching the learning environment for all involved.

The newest endeavor by the Foundation is the "Grants for Educational Excellence" program. Teachers apply for Foundation grants for projects which combine new teaching techniques with creative projects for the classroom. Grants for the 1997-98 school year are being increased from $300 to $500 per project.

Beatitudes of Catholic Education

by C. Charles LeBlanc, Regional Superintendent

1. Blessed are the students whose schools have a clear Catholic identity.
2. Blessed are the students whose teachers acknowledge that all students can learn.
3. Blessed are the students who receive a quality education.
4. Blessed are the students who have a supportive and challenging learning environment.
5. Blessed are the students who are educated in all areas of life.
6. Blessed are the students when the school is a community of learners.
7. Blessed are the students when schools use multiple resources.
8. Blessed are the students whose parents play a major role in their learning.

Robert J. Kealey, Ed. D
American Catholic Schools for the 21st Century

Christian living is centered in the Gospel Beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount (Mt. 5, Lk. 6). Each beatitude speaks of a certain unique quality that validates humanity. Experiencing school by sharing each of the Beatitudes of Catholic Education is chief to the unique identity of Catholic schooling. Catholic education participates in the "beatitudinal" dialogue by incorporating religious identity and quality education and thus effecting and affecting the growth of personhood. Thus we quote Dr. Kealey's Beatitudes of Catholic Education as we discuss Catholic identity of the MACS schools.

Recognize the beauty of Beatitudes. In the Gospel each one speaks of human sentiment; in the Beatitudes of Catholic Education, each one begins, "Blessed are the students..." Catholic education is a student-centered process of scholarship, maturity, growth. Blessed are the students is the focus of education, especially education that is steeped in religious value — education that fosters identity.

Blessed are the students is also the focus that gives status and dignity to teaching. Teachers are professional because teachers interact with people "on the way." A true professional is one who shares learned skills and/or talents in relationship with people. People to people: that's what it's all about.

Thank God for the Beatitudes of the Gospel. They provide us a suggested style of living. Thank God for Catholic schools. They provide us the avenue for learning how to best experience life.

Technology in the MACS System

by Joe Fiato, MACS Board of Education Technology Co-Chair

"The Mecklenburg Area Catholic School system technology program will create, maintain and perpetuate an environment in which students, teachers, administrators and the support community utilize technology as a tool for living and learning."

—Mission statement from the current five-year MACS Strategic Technology Plan

Within the MACS mission of providing a quality education in the Catholic tradition is engendered the need to prepare our children to meet the challenges present in the world today. As MACS enters the 21st century, our children must be prepared to leverage the Technology available to them, especially as Technology is fast becoming an integral part of their everyday lives. The use of Technology that supports the development of skills such as flexibility, adaptability, critical thinking, problem solving and collaboration are being implemented.

Additionally, not only is Technology essential to our student's success, but it is also fast becoming a requirement to effectively manage our school system. Therefore, Technology has become not only an integral part of our curriculum and physical environment, but also a necessary part to provide the Technological infrastructure for our teachers and administrators that will enable them to work and communicate more effectively and productively within MACS.

Jungle 2 Jungle

Culture Clash Comedy Is Mildly Amusing, Highly Contrived

NEW YORK (CNS) — A boy raised in a rainforest visits his father in New York in the frail clash-of-cultures comedy, "Jungle 2 Jungle."

The movie is actually based on a 1994 French comedy, which Disney released here in a poorly dubbed version entitled "Little Indian, Big City." It instantly vanished from the big screen. This time around, the identical story has a somewhat better chance owing to the presence of hugely popular sitcom star Tim Allen playing a workaholic Wall Street trader off to Venezuela to get his long-estranged wife (JoBeth Williams) to sign divorce papers.

But there is a complication before he can jet back to his bimbo bride-to-be (Lolita Davidovich): Once in the rainforest he discovers his wife was pregnant when she left him and he is the father of 13-year-old Mimi-Siku (Sam Huntington), who insists on returning with his dad (whom he affectionately calls Baboon) to see the Big Apple.

Naturally the lad is a fish out of water there, who, speaking of fish, manages to roast and devour the rare aquarium fish of dad's frenzied partner (Martin Short) and generally unnerve everyone with his bow and arrow and giant pet spider. Limp subplots have dad and his partner in very hot water with the Russian mafia over coffee futures, dad's partner afraid that Mimi-Siku will seduce his smitten 12-year-old daughter, and dad and his fiancée bickering while an obnoxious video crew follows them around everywhere.

Despite the theme of dad learning to stop and smell the roses while coming to care for his son, the comic aspects of the movie, as directed by John Pasquin, are blandly realized and look highly contrived.

The cinematography of the real jungle and the city jungle is quite handsome and the many sitcom-type situations keeps the story dredging onwards, but the final result is a loose stitching together of only mildly amusing scenes up to the easily-guessed ending.

Due to an implied pre-marital relationship, comic violence and some coarse humor, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Celestial Clockwork" (1996)

Giddy French comedy in which a would-be opera singer (Ariadna Gil) leaves Venezuela for Paris where her attempts to audition for the lead in the Rossini opera, "Cinderella," is thwarted by a series of comic complications, eccentric characters and whimsical situations. Though writer-director Fina Torres tries to set the absurd proceedings in the grander context of the foolish nature of mortals, the lightweight result proves little more than a hit-or-miss mixture of good-natured frivolity and general silliness. Subtitles. Some sexual inferences, a few coarse words and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Dawning" (1988)

Sensitive coming-of-age drama set in the political troubles of 1920 Ireland, where an Anglo-Irish girl (Rebecca Pidgeon), being raised by an affluent aunt (Jean Simmons), turns 18 and drops her crush on a local stockbroker (Hugh Grant) after meeting a mysterious stranger (Anthony Hopkins) hiding in an abandoned beach house. Directed by Robert Knights, viewers know long before the girl does that the stranger is an IRA gunman planning a ruthless terrorist action which will unleash an equally ruthless response, with traumatic results for the innocent teen-ager. Brief gory violence and menacing situations. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Hear My Song" (1992)

Jaunty comedy follows a conniving London concert promoter (Adrian Dunbar) back to Ireland to lure a famous tenor (Ned Beatty) out of retirement for a reunion with his old flame (Shirley-Anne Field). Director Peter Chelsom's scenic joyride across Ireland is littered with plucky characters, romantic sentiment and broad humor that's as silly as it is charming. Fleeting bedroom scene with nudity, momentary violence and occasional rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"High School High" (1996)

Dopey comedy in which an affable high school history teacher (Jon Lovitz) tries to motivate his rowdy inner-city class and winds up infiltrating a neighborhood crime ring preying on the students. Director Hart Bochner gleams limited humor from a feeble script and cartoon-like characters. Comic violence, sexual innuendo, fleeting rear nudity, intermittent crude expressions and minimal profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Horseman on the Roof" (1996)

While fleeing Austrian bounty hunters in 1832, an Italian nationalist (Olivier Martinez) makes his way through cholera-ravaged southern France alongside a beautiful, mysterious noblewoman (Juliette Binoche) he is determined to deliver to the safety of her family. Directed by Jean-Paul Rappeneau from the Jean Giono novel, the result is a visually splendid romantic adventure awash in danger, mystery and the selfless hero's incredible gallantry. Subtitles. Sporadic brief violence and fleeting nudity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Into the West" (1993)

When a magnificent white horse wanders into their Dublin slum, two motherless waifs (Ruaidhri Conroy and Ciaran Fitzgerald) ride off into the countryside, pretending to be Wild West cowboys with their sobered father (Gabriel Byrne) and the police in hot pursuit. Director Mike Newell presents a sensitive yet rousing tale of emotionally neglected children whose imaginations help them transcend an impoverished home. Fleeting violence, children in jeopardy and a few profanities. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Supercop" (1996)

Bone-crunching pulp adventure follows a Hong Kong policeman (Jackie Chan) teamed with a mainland Chinese policewoman (Michelle Khan) as they go undercover to nab a top drug lord (Ken Tsang). Directed by Stanley Tong, the dubbed production revels in the comic-book exploits of its genial, self-deprecating hero in an action fantasy keyed to martial-arts stunt work and special effects destruction, including a wild chase finale. Tongue-in-cheek fantasy violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Former Rebel Leader Surprised To Find Herself Running For Office

GUARJILA, El Salvador (CNS) — Five years after the end of the civil war, former rebel leader Maria Navarette was running for Congress in the country's second post-war congressional and mayoral elections. "We've been seeking power for years, but I never thought I'd be the one actually going for a position," said the plump 47-year-old peasant at her home in this poor rural community of ex-combatants in Chalatenango province, some 50 miles north of the capital, San Salvador. The elections were to be held March 16. Navarette was running for the former leftist guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, which became a political party at the end of the war.

Former Charities Head Now Researching Domestic Social Issues

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As president of Catholic Charities USA from 1982 to 1992, Father Tom Harvey became an expert on the world of human services. Now, after three years as pastor of two parishes in his native Pittsburgh, Father Harvey is back on the national scene, researching domestic social issues in Washington. He is the first holder of the Phil Land Chair of Applied Catholic Social Thought at the Center of Concern. He holds a joint appointment as senior policy fellow at the National Assembly of National Voluntary Health and Social Welfare Organizations.

Wisconsin Lawsuit Against Tobacco Companies Called Moral Battle

MILWAUKEE (CNS) — For Capuchin Father Michael Crosby, the legal battle of 21 states against the tobacco industry is also a moral battle. "Citizens, through their taxes, have been paying the burden of health-related costs for smoking," said Father Crosby, but such costs should be paid by "the real culprits — tobacco companies making exorbitant profits from people's ill health." The Milwaukee priest, a onetime smoker, is pleased that Wisconsin has joined the fight. He has battled the tobacco industry for many years as an officer of the New York-based Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility.

Permanent Diaconate Is Ministry Of Service

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — In the 46-county area that is the Diocese of Charlotte, the Catholic faith has flourished throughout 25 years of history. With that growth comes a variety of needs of the more than 104,000 Catholics living in western North Carolina today, needs which in large part are tended to by the Church's ministers of service: permanent deacons.

The permanent diaconate represents one of three ranks in ordained ministry and was restored by Pope Paul VI in 1967-68 to allow men to become deacons for life, rather than going on to the priesthood, as is the case in the transitional diaconate. Consequently, married men may be ordained as permanent deacons. The papal decree completed the hierarchical structure of the Roman-rite Church, and, according to Vatican II's Dogmatic Constitution on the Church, deacons were thereby directed to "serve the people of God in the ministry of the liturgy, of the word, and of charity."

In the Diocese of Charlotte, more than 60 permanent deacons tend to a diversity of duties. "In this diocese, when a deacon is ordained, he is assigned to a parish, and he must have a parish ministry. Also, he may be given additional responsibilities during the course of his career," explains Rev. Mr. Ben Wenning, permanent deacon at St. Gabriel Church and Charlotte regional director of the permanent diaconate.

For this diocese's deacons, those ministerial duties include assisting in the celebration of Mass, administering baptism, leading Eucharistic services outside of Mass, preparing engaged couples for marriage, officiating at weddings and funeral services, and counseling, among a host of other duties.

The ever-increasing congregation of Catholics in the area, Rev. Mr. Wenning adds, is likely to increase those responsibilities. "With this diocese's potential and growth, the deacons' assignments could be far and wide," he said.

Since January 1997, the training for the permanent diaconate in the Charlotte Diocese is a four-year period of formation, preceded by the two-year lay ministry program. Fourteen men are currently pursuing that commitment to service.

As vicar for the Charlotte region's permanent diaconate, Rev. Mr. Wenning assumes the added obligation of listening to and acting upon the concerns of the area's 22 deacons and their families, plus the widows of two deceased deacons. During monthly meetings throughout the diaconate vicariate, he sees and hears first-hand the impact of family life in the ministry.

"A deacon has his life influenced not only by the Church, but by his way of life through matrimony — through exposure to raising and educating children, and nurturing and living with his wife," Rev. Mr. Wenning explains. "A deacon processes whatever he does, be it for himself or for the Church, through the screen of marriage and children and home life."

The commitment can be an extensive one, and whether duties lie at the parish level or in the community, the diaconate becomes a life ministry. Rev. Mr. Wenning has witnessed that ministry reach worldwide proportions. An original board member and the current chaplain of the Charlotte Douglas International Airport Chaplaincy, he directs three other Charlotte-area deacons along with a multi-faith volunteer staff to provide a tranquil resource in a sprawling metropolitan business.

"It's an interfaith chapel, open 24 hours a day, seven days a week," Rev. Mr. Wenning explains. Bibles and books of prayer are furnished in a number of languages, and the chaplaincy personnel offer outreach to people of all faiths. The volunteer staff members, whether Catholic or Protestant, are required to be trained through lay ministry-related programs before joining the chaplaincy team.

In his experience, Rev. Mr. Wenning has converted conference rooms into sanctuaries for Mass, arranged for Jewish religious services, assisted ministers in meeting families of deceased relatives for counseling and a host of other instances. "At the airport there are 17,000 employees, and 21 million travelers go through there every year," Rev. Mr. Wenning adds. "At any given time, day or night, we're always dealing with people (and their needs)."

Like those who minister at Charlotte Douglas International Airport, members of the permanent diaconate have been answering Christ's call to spiritual and charitable assistance throughout the diocese since 1983. It was in that year that Bishop Michael J. Begley ordained the first group of diocesan deacons, men dedicated to cultivating the faith through service.

In the Diocese of Charlotte, the permanent diaconate program is one of the 37 ministries and agencies funded by the annual Diocesan Support Appeal.

So apparently, as modern medicine analyzes it, either cardiac rupture or cardiorespiratory failure finally killed our Lord, bringing Him to the moment when, in John's powerful words, "He handed over the spirit," and died (Jn. 19:30).

Assisted Suicide Is Not A Patient's Right, Says Ethicist

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Proponents of physician-assisted suicide argue that legalizing it would recognize a patient's right to self-determination, but in reality doctors determine that course of action, not the patient, said a prominent ethicist March 7. "You tell me how autonomous a patient is who is suffering, who is depressed?" Dr. Edmund Pellegrino asked participants at a conference at The Catholic University of America in Washington. "Does one make autonomous decisions when one feels guilty (for burdening family)? Who makes the decision?" he continued. "The physician decides when you're terminal."

Tennessee Catholics Debate State School Prayer Bill

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (CNS) — A bill to enforce the religious rights of public school students has stirred up old questions for Catholics in this heavily Protestant state. The Tennessee Religious Liberty Act of 1997 is intended to erase confusion about students' religious rights, but doesn't seek to establish new rights or amend the Constitution, says its sponsor, state Sen. Roy Herron, a lawyer, teacher and a United Methodist minister. The bill, now awaiting hearings, is a "consensus" between groups who "normally don't even agree on what month we're in," Herron told the Tennessee Register, newspaper of the Diocese of Nashville.

Alzheimer's Research Involving Women Religious Moves Forward

NEW YORK (CNS) — Cooperation by the School Sisters of Notre Dame in a major, ongoing research project is enabling investigators to bring a message of hope for people prone to Alzheimer's disease, according to the director of the Nun Study project. Dr. David A. Snowden, a professor at the Sanders-Brown Center on Aging at the University of Kentucky College of Medicine in Lexington, said autopsies of deceased nuns have shown that many of them who "never showed the symptoms" were carrying the brain abnormalities associated with Alzheimer's. "Those nuns with strokes were more likely to have the symptoms of Alzheimer's," he said.

Marylanders Take Pro-Life Message To Statehouse

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (CNS) — Almost 2,000 Marylanders marched to their Statehouse March 10 to tell legislators they regard unborn life as precious. The 18th annual March for Life in Annapolis came just days before the state Senate's Judicial Proceedings Committee was to consider legislation banning partial-birth abortions. Under the proposal, doctors who perform partial-birth abortions would be subject to fines up to $1,000 and prison terms up to two years.

Ban On Partial-Birth Abortion Moves Ahead In South Carolina

CHARLESTON, S.C. (CNS) — Now that South Carolina's House of Representatives has voted to ban partial-birth abortions, the next step is to get the Senate to follow suit, said the director of the state's Citizens for Life. "The key is to get the bill through (the Senate) with no amendments," said Holly Gatling. "The only people who want to amend the language are those who favor abortion on demand, legal and unregulated, for all nine months of a woman's pregnancy." A measure before the Senate's Medical Affairs Committee has the same wording as the bill approved by the House Feb. 26 in a 105-4 vote.

U.S. Justice And Peace Activists Make Pilgrimage To Israel

JERUSALEM (CNS) — The situation in Israel is very uncertain right now, said Jesuit Father Drew Christiansen, director of the U.S. bishops' Office of International Justice and Peace, after a nine-day visit to the region. Father Christiansen brought 15 Catholic justice and peace activists, including Catholic Relief Services personnel and staff of the international justice and peace office, on a late-February pilgrimage to get better acquainted with the issues in Israel and the Palestinian territories. "It is very hard to say what will happen, especially with this government being in such a paralyzed and disorganized state right now," he said, alluding to police investigation of alleged unethical political dealings within the Likud Party government and matters of coalition politics with which Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has recently had to contend.

Jesuit Jailings Show 'Low-Intensity War,' Says Mexican Bishop

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (CNS) — Two Jesuits beaten, imprisoned and charged with murder are part of a "low-intensity war" against churches in southern Mexico, said Coadjutor Bishop Raul Vera Lopez of San Cristobal de Las Casas. "We believe that we're dealing with a political question to drain confidence in ... the work of the diocese," Bishop Vera said after visiting the Jesuits in prison March 10. The diocese called the arrest of and charges against the priests "another arbitrary action" against the Church in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas. Jesuit Fathers Jeronimo Hernandez Lopez and Gonzalo Rosas Morales — along with two Mayan Indians, Francisco Gonzalez Gutierrez and Ramon Parcerio Martinez — were dragged out of their vehicles and arrested March 8 in Palenque, Mexico. On March 10, police charged them with "qualified homicide," saying the four were responsible for leading a peasant attack in which two policemen were killed.

HIGH POINT — As the commemoration of its 50th anniversary as a parish continues through 1997, the Immaculate Heart of Mary community celebrates its present, in part, by taking a look at its history.

The first Mass in High Point was celebrated in 1903, when Catholics gathered with a priest in a local's home. When land was donated on which to build a church, the Benedictine Fathers of Belmont Abbey joined fund-raising efforts to begin a construction project. Plans became reality in 1907, when work began. In September Benedictine Bishop-Abbot Leo Haid dedicated the new church, placing it under the patronage of St. Edward. It was that small mission community which would later become Immaculate Heart of Mary parish.

With the Diocese of Raleigh having been established in 1924, St. Edward Church was placed under diocesan administration. A home and property — the site of the present site of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church — were bought in 1928. Father John Manley lived in the home for a short period as St. Edward's first resident pastor.

Another building project began in 1942. Under the direction and with the support of Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh, a new church and school were constructed. Bishop Waters dedicated the new facilities in October 1947, placing them under the patronage of the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

Sisters of St. Joseph of Chesnut Hill, Penn., staffed the school from its founding until 1987. The on-site home that had served as a rectory since the late-1920s was converted for use as a convent. Meanwhile, Father Robert MacMillan — eighth pastor of St. Edward's and founding pastor of Immaculate Heart of Mary — took residence at a newly purchased home on Barbee Street.

The congregation has continued to grow steadily since the new parish came into existence. Periodic additions to and renovations of the church and school have been needed to accommodate that growth, including the construction of an eight-classroom educational wing for the school, and the removal of two meeting room walls to allow more worship space in the church.

In June 1968, the rectory burned, forcing the move of the pastors to the convent. The Sisters relocated to nearby Maryfield Nursing Home's guest house. A new convent was dedicated in 1970, followed by a rectory in 1981.

Diocesan priests ministered to the parish until 1989, when Oblates of St. Francis de Sales priests arrived in High Point. Oblates Father Joseph Zschmidt, pastor, and Oblates Father Thomas Norris, parochial vicar, currently serve the parish.

While the parish reflects on its history during their golden anniversary year, the pastoral staff and parishioners also celebrate their present-day community of faith. The religious educational mission of the parish is a focal point both at the church and school, with programs serving hundreds of children — who attend the parochial school and public schools — and adults. A number of ministries, groups and outreach projects also enrich parish and community life, such as the Bethany Society for women, Young at Heart for senior citizens, Teen Ministry for young adults, the Knight of Columbus, the music ministry, the liturgical commission, Mobile Meals, prison ministry and Habitat for Humanity.

In the spring of 1996, the parish purchased a tract of land on Johnston Street and Skeet Club Road, and a capital campaign was underway by October. Plans are ongoing to construct a new church facility, with a projected occupancy date targeting the beginning of the next decade.

On Oct. 26, 1997, the parish, through a Mass and other celebrations, will take a special moment to recognize 50 years of history. The Immaculate Heart of Mary family will also look ahead, as conveyed in its mission statement, "to continue the work of the Lord Jesus by building up a community of faith in service in which every member is able to grow to the fullness of his or her Christian vocation."

The Bishop's Easter Message

Bishop William G. Curlin

For forty days we have walked with the Lord on the road that leads to Calvary. Holy Week is the culmination of our annual Lenten retreat.

It began Palm Sunday with joyful songs of welcome, yet our joy was tempered by the solemn reading of the Passion and Death of the Lord. For many, daily Mass became their daily food. On Tuesday during Holy Week, your priests gathered together at St. Patrick Cathedral to bless the holy oils used for the sacraments of baptism, confirmation and the anointing of the sick. They also renewed their priestly commitment and their obedience and reverence for their bishop.

On Holy Thursday, parishioners' feet were washed, symbolic of the Lord's humility in washing the feet of His apostles. It was on Holy Thursday that Jesus instituted the Holy Eucharist and commanded His followers to do this in remembrance of Him. Following Mass, the Blessed Sacrament was solemnly carried to the place that welcomed us to "come aside and pray with Him."

Good Friday saw the church's sanctuary stripped of all signs of rejoicing. It was the day of atonement, as we bowed to kiss the cross upon which Jesus paid the ransom price for our sins.

Our Easter celebration begins when the Paschal Candle is lit and its light passed to all within the darkened church. Prophecies that foretold the death and resurrection of the Lord are read. Then, with bells and alleluias filling the church, the Gloria is sung. Christ has risen as He promised! Sin and death have been conquered in His resurrection.

May the Risen Savior bless you and your loved ones with every grace from above. May all who have "died with Christ" rise with Him to a New Life and may that life be a light to all around us.

Oils Consecrated, Priests Recommit To Ministry At Chrism Mass

Bishop Curlin presided at the annual ceremony of the blessing of the holy oils to be used at each parish throughout the diocese, which included the renewal of commitment to priestly service by the ordained.

CHARLOTTE — The observance of Holy Week continued in the Diocese of Charlotte on March 25 with the annual Chrism Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral. Bishop William G. Curlin presided at the ceremony which included the blessing of the holy oils to be used at each parish and mission throughout western North Carolina. The liturgy also comprised the renewal of commitment to priestly service by the ordained. More than 90 priests from throughout the diocese, including Bishop Emeritus Michael J. Begley and Belmont Abbey's Abbot Oscar Burnett, concelebrated the Mass.

"These blessed gifts of God are used to remind us of His presence in our lives," Bishop Curlin said in his homily before the consecration. The Sacred Chrism, the Oil of Catechumens, and the Oil of the Sick are sacramental signs of ministerial outreach through baptism, confirmation, ordination of priests and bishops, dedication of churches, and anointing of the sick.

The Chrism Mass, a commemoration of the vital place of the priesthood and the sacraments in the Church, is a union of solemnity and joy. "When anointed with this oil, the people of God are made temples of His glory, radiant with the goodness of life," the bishop prayed.

As in years past, the ceremony also served as an opportunity for priests to rededicate themselves to the commitment of the priesthood. The diocesan shepherd, who was ordained into the priesthood 40 years ago, profusely thanked the men who will use the sacred oils as symbols of their ministry in various ways. "You're like Jesus, who said, 'I've come to serve, not be served,'" Bishop Curlin told his fellow priests.

Bishop Curlin breathes on the Holy Chrism three times, invoking the Holy Spirit.

He commented on the wonder of the life of a priest, who in his very pledge of faith makes tremendous personal sacrifices. "These men have given up mother and father, sister and brother, the possibility of very successful, productive work in the world, the privilege of a wife and children," the bishop reminded the congregation. "They've given up everything for you." Moments later, the beyond-capacity assembly joined the bishop in applause.

While emphasizing the symbolic grace associated with the holy oils, Bishop Curlin also noted the importance of priests' living in the example of Jesus. "I'm clearly aware that I can impart to them this great gift of the Spirit, the priesthood," he said. "But I cannot give them the heart to live it. Every man must bring that to the priesthood, and that means they must rise every day and be patient and kind, forgiving and generous. Only their love of Jesus Christ can enable them to do that."

Bishop Curlin asked the congregation for their special intentions as well. "My brothers and sisters," he said, "pray for our priests. Ask the Lord to bless them in the fullness of His love, to help them be faithful ministers of Christ, the high priest, so that they will be able to lead you to Him, the fountain of our salvation."

"Today is a special day during which our brother priests once again say 'yes' to God, 'yes' to the priesthood," the bishop said. "This is a day to rejoice, a day of rededication, a day for us to be renewed by the Easter mysteries."

Words Of Consecration Focus Of Pope's Holy Thursday Letter

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — When priests consecrate the bread and wine at Mass, they should read the words as if they were saying them for the first time, Pope John Paul II said. "Let us take care that they are never said out of habit," the pope told his fellow priests in his annual letter for Holy Thursday, the day marking the institution of the Eucharist and of the priesthood. The Holy Thursday letter was released March 21 at the Vatican.

Pope John Paul II prays during Mass on the Feast of the Presentation in St. Peter's Basilica Feb. 2.

Vatican Web Site To Debut, Again, On Easter

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican will resurrect its Internet Web site on Easter Sunday.

Dormant for more than a year, the new and improved site is expected to debut with some 600 documents in six languages, said Joaquin Navarro-Valls, the Vatican spokesman.

While the site will contain more information than the version unveiled on Christmas Day 1995, it will not give Internet users an address for leaving messages.

The first incarnation of "www.vatican.va" was accessed by more than 300,000 people from 70 countries in its first 48 hours of operation, pleasantly exceeding the Vatican's expectations. But the fact that nearly 1,000 of the first electronic visitors left messages created an unforeseen problem: Who would respond to the requests for prayers or information and well wishes for Pope John Paul II?

The site was put into hibernation as Vatican officials and the project's chief technician, Sister Judith Zobelein, a U.S. member of the Franciscan Sisters of the Eucharist, refined their plans and prepared to expand the site.

"Setting up the hardware took a lot of time," Navarro-Valls said. "The site has been conceived as a huge data base containing all of the documents of recent popes."

Eventually more than 12,000 documents from Popes Pius XII, John XXIII, Paul VI, John Paul I and John Paul II will be available, he said.

Unlike most international organizations, including the United Nations, the Vatican web site will provide information and documents in Italian, French, English, Spanish, German and Portuguese, Navarro-Valls said.

However, he said, the Vatican's official language, Latin, is not expected to have much of a presence.

Part of what the new Vatican server offers has been up and running for more than a year: an e-mail service for Vatican congregations, councils and offices.

For the first time, the 1997 Annuario Pontificio — a listing of the world's dioceses and bishops, Vatican offices and officials — includes a sprinkling of e-mail addresses after postal addresses, telephone and fax numbers.

E-mail addresses for the Curia, the church's central administrative offices, end with ".va," the electronic country code for Vatican City State.

Some of the Vatican office's addresses are almost self-explanatory, like "vatio11(at)jubilee.2000.va" for the central committee planning events for the year 2000.

Annuario listings for the Secretariat of State, the Vatican office which coordinates almost everything, include addresses beginning "vatio23," "vatio26" and "vatio32."

CSS Honors Sister Mary Thomas Burke, Presents Spirit Award

CHARLOTTE — Mercy Sister Mary Thomas Burke has touched many lives in her ministry. As a lifelong educator, she is known for her teaching skills. Others see an individual dedicated to helping as a mentor, leader, civic activist, community volunteer, counselor, spiritual advisor and friend. It is the embodiment of these qualities that was honored as Sister Mary Thomas received the Col. Francis J. Beatty Award March 19 at the Westin Hotel.

The honor is presented annually by Catholic Social Services to an individual whose life exemplifies the standards set forth by the late Col. Beatty — faith, dignity, warmth, compassion, and the highest ideals of ecumenism. Sister Mary Thomas is the first woman to receive the award, which was established in 1991.

"Col. Beatty was both a great and humble person who loved and served his country and his God," Sister Mary Thomas told the 450 people in attendance. "He gave witness to the beatitudes, and by his example, we are all challenged to make the world a better place in which to live, to work for peace and justice, and especially, (to work) for equality."

Peter Keber, last year's award recipient, presented an overview of Sister Mary Thomas' life, a journey that began in Westport County Mayo, Ireland, and has been centered in North Carolina for more than 40 years.

Like an aunt she admired, Mary Thomas Burke wanted to be a nun. Her desire to pursue a vocation was also influenced by her brother, Msgr. Thomas Burke. He served as a missionary in Nigeria, and she wanted to follow Father Burke to Africa to do the Lord's work.

Her "mission" in life would change after a meeting with Mercy Sister Mary Benignus Hoban of Belmont, who during a visit to a convent school in Ireland, heard of the high school student's vision to serve the people of Africa.

"Mother Benignus responded by pointing out that in North Carolina, Catholics made up only 1/2 of 1 percent of the population. In terms of needing missionary work, it was the Africa of America," Keber noted. And so, Mary Thomas Burke agreed to study in Belmont and become a Sister of Mercy of the Americas.

A graduate of Belmont Abbey College, Sister Mary Thomas first taught at Our Lady of Mercy School in Winston-Salem and Charlotte Catholic High School. In the mid-60's, she became an instructor in humanities at Sacred Heart College and later academic dean and chair of the education department. During that time, she earned a master's degree in history from Georgetown University and a Ph.D. from UNC-Chapel Hill.

Sister Mary Thomas joined the faculty at UNCC in 1970 in the department of counseling, special education and child development. She was later named head of Support Services and Special Programs, and chaired the school's department of human services from 1982-96. She currently serves as the college's coordinator of counselor education.

Like past winners, Sister Mary Thomas' service to community is second to none. She has had significant board or training involvement with more than 70 agencies, and has made more than 100 presentations to community organizations in student relations, counseling, communications, mental health and adult and child development.

She has served on the board of trustees of Belmont Abbey College, Holy Angels Nursery, and the Metrolina AIDS project. Her volunteer efforts also include working with the Mecklenburg unit of the American Cancer Society, Child Care Resources, and the Life Center, to name a few others.

Sister Mary Thomas' contributions to higher education and the community have been recognized through numerous awards. They include: Humanitarian Award — National Conference of Christians and Jews; Leadership Award — Metrolina AIDS Project; Excellence in Teaching Award, College of Education UNCC; and Community Service Award — UNCC Alumni Association.

"Mary Thomas Burke's relationships and initiatives cross the spectrum of race, gender, culture, and religion, an example that is so badly needed in this era," Keber noted. "In this, she truly exemplifies the values and beliefs of Col. Francis J. Beatty."

Also honored as the recipient of the Spirit Award was the Adoption Auxiliary. The award was established by the Charlotte office of Catholic Social Services to honor persons and organizations that have shared their talents and treasure in an effort to enrich the lives of those who come to CSS for help.

Grateful to Catholic Social Services for allowing them to fulfill their dream of adopting children, several families from the Charlotte CSS office joined together to form the volunteer organization in 1988.

"The mission of the auxiliary is to develop a spirit of family and commitment among CSS adoptive families and to work with CSS in fostering a positive attitude toward adoption," said Geri King, director of the Charlotte office of CSS, who presented the award.

Among the auxiliary's contributions have been fund-raising activities to support agency recreational and educational activities, including a lending library to adoptive families. The first newsletter sponsored by the agency is a product of the auxiliary, King noted.

"The auxiliary members have been true trailblazers for CSS. Through this support and commitment of time and sharing of their many talents and gifts, the members have helped carry out the mission of CSS, reflecting a spirit of caring, compassion, love and sacrifice to better serve children and their families in the community," King added.

Accepting the award on behalf of the auxiliary were past Chairperson Valerie Smith and Sidney Stewart and Gail Timmes, present co-chairs.

"The Lord has blessed all of us through the miracle of adoption," Timmes said.

With 58 full and part-time staff members, more than 230 volunteers, and regional offices in Asheville, Charlotte and Winston-Salem, CSS served more than 10,000 clients during the 1995-96 fiscal year, said Mike Collins, master of ceremonies.

The Adoption Auxiliary received CSS' Spirit Award. Members of the auxiliary are shown with Bishop William G. Curlin.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Church Insists Workers Have Priority Over Profits, Pope Says

Dear brothers and sisters,

Our catechesis for today, the solemnity of St. Joseph, is an invitation to look to Joseph as a man of faith and as the patron and model of workers. In the Church's social teaching, work is considered an expression of our human dignity. As men and women made in the image of God, we are called to exercise dominion over creation and to serve our brothers and sisters in the building up of society. In God's plan, work exists "for man" and not man "for work." The Church teaches that labor has primacy over capital, and she is concerned whenever work is organized in ways that do not serve the true well-being of workers. Today, the Church is especially concerned by the effects of the grave problem of unemployment on individuals, families and society itself.

The figure of St. Joseph also reminds us of the urgent need to rediscover the spiritual meaning of work. May Joseph's example of living faith inspire us to make our work an opportunity for personal growth through the service of others.

I wish to greet the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrim groups from Korea, the Philippines, Canada and the United States. I thank the Catholic Central Concert Choir from Canada for their praise of God in song. Upon all of you I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Jesus Christ our Savior.

Polish Church, Pope Back Workers Protesting Gdansk Closure

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — The head of Poland's Catholic bishops' conference has welcomed a March 16 statement by Pope John Paul II in support of workers protesting the closure of the country's largest shipyard. Meanwhile, Polish clergy have pledged vigorous backing for workers affected by the March 6 closure of the Gdansk shipyard, which eliminated 3,600 jobs. The shipyard, which was declared bankrupt in August, was the scene of labor strikes in 1980 which led to the birth of the independent trade union, Solidarity.

Pope Condemns Child Prostitution, Urges International Action

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II condemned child prostitution as a "horrendous crime" and urged greater international cooperation to stem the practice. "In the face of the painful cry of millions of innocent people, whose dignity has been trampled and whose future has been stolen, no one can remain indifferent and shun their responsibility," the pope said March 21.

An Easter Meditation

In the Liturgy, the truth and grace of Easter come to us through symbols, particularly the abundant richness of the Easter Vigil whose readings place us before the great contrasts and struggles between darkness and light, chaos and order, slavery and freedom, thirst and hunger and drink and food, filth and cleansing, stone and flesh, sin and life, sorrow and joy — and the great one, which all the others serve: death and resurrection.

These are not superficial symbols. Nearly universal in the literature of religious experience, they have deep roots and awaken echoes in our individual psyches and our communal consciousness. While this resonance is the source of their power, perhaps it is also the source of a certain danger as symbols function in Christian faith and life. For us Christians they are not simply universal and deep symbols of dimensions of human experience common to all people; for us they also have their roots in a single, unique moment and event in our human history.

For the wonder of this day — its mystery — is that these many and polyvalent symbols are concentrated in the figure and fate of one of us poor humans, who on one of the days of our long history, many centuries ago breathed his last in pain and descended into that same dark and chaotic, enslaving and barren, cold and dreadful death that awaits us all, but who, by the power of God, was on the day we are now celebrating brought up into light and sense, freedom and joy, movement and life. The universal, deep, powerful symbols focus on him, on Jesus of Nazareth, flesh of our flesh, bone of our bone, a brother of ours.

Perhaps the image that best captures this focused wonder is not verbal but visual — the single flame atop the Easter Candle, which at the Vigil moves ahead of us, alone in the surrounding darkness and chill, a guide and a goal—a flame so rich in its promise that from hundreds of other flames can be lit, the candles we hold, born from that one flame which loses none of its warmth and grace when we borrow from its light to discover our own faces and community and home.

This is what our faith celebrates in the symbols of our Easter Liturgy: that a living flame awoke in the darkness of death 2,000 years ago, a single flame in mankind's long, dark and cold night, that into our too familiar darkness broke something utterly new, known to us before at best as our hope, seen gladly as our guide and promised goal; that that flame has not been lessened for all the lives that we have taken light and fire from it — from him, the eldest of this large family of light-sharers and light-bearers, lights from light, of which we are the newest members.

This is what we as the Church are all about. The candles may be put away after the celebration, and we may move on to different feasts and different symbols. But there is something that should not be put away, a mystery from which we may never move away; that the Lord Jesus Christ, who lives among us and died before and with us now lives beyond death, and that what we saw that single flame do to darkness he himself has done to death — he has destroyed its power, its power over himself and its power over us — and the light of that faith is more than enough for us, however dark the night may sometimes be or distant the morning of our hope. "He is not here," we are told, "he has been raised, he goes before you, and you will see him."

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

Faith: Seeing And Believing

An elderly woman traded in her compact car for a larger model, then headed her long, shiny, new beauty downtown to go shopping. The only parking space she could find required parallel parking. It looked barely longer than the length of her car. But the self-assured woman set about the improbable task.

As she cut the wheel sharply, she noticed two policemen staring at her. Unruffled, she shifted into reverse and parked the car perfectly with her first effort. As she stepped to the parking meter, much to her surprise, one of the policemen inserted a coin. Turning away, he responded to her bewilderment with just two words: "I LOST!" In her most self-satisfied tone, she called after him, "Blessed are those who have not seen and yet believe!"

Jesus' words to Doubting Thomas have echoed for 2,000 years. They are a consolation to people of faith. Our eyes have not seen Jesus as Thomas' eyes saw. Our fingers have not examined Jesus' wounded hands and side as Thomas' finger did. And we believe.

But are we really blessed in quite the way Jesus meant?

Blessed means not just "holy," but "happy." The key to whether or not your faith has made you truly blessed is found in the ways faith makes a difference in the kind of life you live. Only if faith changes you can you be happy!

You have probably had the experience of driving along when one of those huge graders goes to work on a highway repair job. When the machine is operating on a busy road, traffic is halted and the cars lined up in opposite directions are allowed to proceed alternately. A veteran operator of one of those big machines decided to try to relieve the tension that inevitably results from such a traffic backup. On both the front and rear of his grader he put up signs declaring "The Road to Happiness Is Almost Always Under Construction."

True enough. It is not a matter of once-and-for-all professing your faith, allowing it to transform your life, once and for all, and then living happily ever after.

It is a matter of continuing encounter and response, continuing calls for new acts of faith, continuing adjustments in the way you live. To be blessed is to be consciously involved in a process of continuing growth into greater integrity, honesty and purity of heart. This is the only way possible for your life to be fulfilling and, yes, happy.

The philosopher Friedrich

Nietzsche, an atheist, once was talking to a group of Christians who were trying to convert him. He is reported to have said to them, "Show me first that you are redeemed, and then I will listen to your talk about a Redeemer."

We have no way of knowing whether or not he was sincere in what he said. But, assume for a moment that he was sincere. If he had known you, would he be willing to listen to your talk about the Redeemer? Has your Faith in the Risen Christ made that kind of difference in your life?

If so, be assured, others will see, and believe.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Friday Penance

Q. I am puzzled by a recent book on Catholic spirituality which claims Friday "penance" is not merely a suggestion. A Catholic commits sin if he or she allows a Friday to pass without an act of penance.

He refers to Pope Paul VI's constitution on the subject and says a person is guilty of mortal sin by not observing a notable number of Fridays without a proportional grave reason.

We're told we should do some kind of other penance in lieu of abstaining from meat on Friday, but I've never heard the obligation expressed in such terms of sin.

I know the rules about fast and/or abstinence during Lent. My question in a nutshell: Is it really a mortal sin not to do any other kind of penance on the other Fridays of the year? (Indiana)

A. The source you quote has a strange and confusing way of expressing the present discipline of the Church concerning penance on Friday.

In his 1966 document "Poenitemini," changing the regulation about abstinence from meat on Fridays, Pope Paul VI did not replace one kind of "sin" with another. He was pointing out "the implications and importance of the Lord's command to repent," since all members of the Church "are in continuous need of conversion and reform."

He refers to the tradition of Catholic spirituality that this penance takes many forms, from fasting and abstinence to prayer, fulfilling the daily duties of our vocation and patiently bearing the hardships and uncertainties of each day's struggle.

Much depends on one's circumstances, he notes. Richer people will need more self-denial. The poor can offer their suffering to the Father, in union with the suffering of Christ.

In its section on the subject (1427-1439), the Catholic catechism lists numerous other forms of interior and exterior penance.

Habitual failure to observe some kind of regular penance, in the sense given by Pope Paul and the catechism, is surely a sinful violation of the commands given by our Lord in the Gospels. Christian tradition and Pope Paul tell us that.

It is in that context of the Lord's call to a life of penance and conversion that the pope calls "substantial observance" of the designated days of penance a "grave obligation." In that sense your author is correct.

Your concern is also right, however. If an individual is observing even minimally the habitual practice of penance the pope describes, it is hardly conceivable that he or she could go through a whole day without some kind of prayer, patient fidelity to life's obligations, an act of charity or any of the other forms of penance prescribed by Jesus and his Church.

Nine months after "Poenitemini," our bishops made that document's provisions specific for the United States, abrogating the obligation of Friday abstinence from meat, except during Lent.

Without making it a "law," they recommended abstinence from meat on all Fridays as a praiseworthy, voluntary, not obligatory, act of self-denial.

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

God's Love Is Unchanging

During a family visit with relatives this weekend, Andrew' sister pulled out several recently discovered photographs from 20-plus years ago. To our children's amusement the pictures showed their father with "big" hair, bell-bottomed pants and platform shoes. My goodness, how things have changed! Yet, it is amazing how some things haven't.

Musing the photographs became for us a moment of reminiscence, but also a review of an era gone by with a matured hindsight perspective. Much more than having a few good laughs, we found ourselves reveling in what our new purview revealed to be a time of grace.

It's interesting how our evoked images were of happy times. Yet the pictures are from an era of our lives when we were dealing with much difficulty and spiritual drought. We faced then the developmental challenges of individuating and maintaining intimate connections with our families, building an identity as a couple and grasping defiantly for our own identities. It was definitely the "school of hard knocks" as we stepped and misstepped into our future together.

Our images of God were also at a difficult developmental phase of life. Our search for God was a twisted path that often had us feeling lost and distant from God. Church and religion had become irrelevant and replaced by cynicism and self-centeredness, which at times unleashed on each other.

Yet, the pictures evoked such fond memories — a retrospective that benefits from matured insights and historical evidence of a loving and compassionate God who never abandoned us. We can remember our mistakes and our trespasses without the fear, hurt and confusion that were so much part of the lived experiences then. And basking in the glow of God's love for us that we know so clearly today, those errors of the past evoke no pain. Where, O death, is your victory? Where, O death, is your sting? I Cor. 15: 55

Though the photographs were taken at a time of confusion and growing pains, the joyful feelings evoked from them are authentic and the rewards of our lived faith today. And the purged "sting" of the past is more evidence of how gracious and compassionate our God is.

This says much about our rising from the ashes of the past and our confidence for today. Our developmental challenges are much different now. And we continue to step and misstep into our future together. Twenty years from now when we reminisce about our lives today, we are confident that we will find further evidence of the unbroken thread of grace that God continued to weave through our lives. Then we'll say, "How things have changed! Yet it is amazing how God's love never changes!"

Appeal Sunday Weekend To Cap 1997 DSA

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — With the Diocesan Support Appeal (DSA) approaching its close with Appeal Sunday Weekend on April 5-6, organizers of the effort hope to meet their goal of $2,580,000 by reaching out to parishioners in the pews.

The DSA, which tends to a variety of needs throughout the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte, has been met with positive response. "At this point, we're well over 70 percent towards our goal," said Barbara Rohrman, associate director of development and director of the DSA campaign on March 25. "The people of the diocese have been most responsive and most generous."

Appeal Sunday Weekend marks the formal close of the DSA, which began Feb. 2. The campaign's far-reaching impact helps fund 37 social service, multi-cultural, educational and vocations ministries and agencies of the diocese. Since its Jan. 31 issue, The Catholic News & Herald has featured a series of articles illustrating some of the ways the DSA affects people's lives.

On April 5-6, members of the laity will provide congregations a chance to respond with pledge cards to the appeal. "We've had a lot of growth in this diocese, even in the past few months," said Rohrman. "Appeal Sunday is a golden opportunity for those new to the diocese who have not yet registered in a parish, and for those parishioners who have not yet responded."

Each parish and mission is designated with a specific goal for the campaign. If funds exceed the goal, the money is given back to the parish. If not, the parish is responsible for paying the difference.

Through Appeal Sunday Weekend, Rohrman is optimistic that Catholics across western North Carolina will add to the positive support already received. "Participation in the DSA is a real tribute to the stewardship of the people of this diocese," she said. "People truly seem to understand the mission of the Church — the larger Church, the diocesan Church — and they have been reaching out beyond their own parish needs."

Divine Mercy Sunday Celebrates God's Mercy

BELMONT — In devotion to the revelation of Jesus as conveyed by Sister Maria Faustina Kowalska during the 1930s, Divine Mercy Sunday will be celebrated at Belmont Abbey Church on April 6.

It is said that Faustina, a Polish nun, received a message of mercy from Jesus, who told her to spread it throughout the world. The message included a directive of trust in God's mercy, and the practice of that mercy in daily life. In 1934, amidst a continuing series of revelations from Jesus and Mary, she began keeping a diary describing her experiences, thoughts, prayers and insights. Sister Faustina died in 1938 of tuberculosis, leaving behind a plea to extend God's mercy to all.

In Belmont, Divine Mercy Sunday begins with confession and rosary at the at 12:30 p.m. at the Abbey grotto. Participants are asked to bring chairs. Eucharistic adoration is from 1:30-2:30 p.m., with Benediction and the Chaplet of Divine Mercy following. Father Carl Kaltreider, pastor of St. Mary Church in Shelby, will celebrate Mass at 3 p.m. Music will be performed by Schola Cantorum Carolinaean Boralis, directed by Dr. Marc Innis, minister of sacramental music and liturgy at Holy Family Church in Clemmons.

For further details about the Divine Mercy Sunday celebration at Belmont Abbey, call Phil or Terri DeLuca, (704) 888-6050.

Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro will also host a celebration on Divine Mercy Sunday. See page 11 for more information.

Frazer Elected to Roundtable Board

CHARLOTTE — Joanne K. Frazer, director of the Charlotte Diocese's Office of Justice and Peace, was recently elected to the board of the Roundtable, an association of diocesan social action directors.

Frazer joins the board of 15 members and will serve a three-year term.

The Roundtable was founded in 1985 to serve diocesan representatives who seek to link justice and faith in light of Catholic social teaching. The association serves and is an advocate for diocesan social action ministry. Its purpose is to provide professional support and management development, coordinating program planning and issue analysis, and greater access and influence in the forming of church and public policies.

Bishop Calls For Continued Efforts In Ecumenism At Prayer Breakfast

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — Addressing an ecumenical group of nearly 2,000, Bishop William G. Curlin called for continued efforts in faith at the 10th Annual YMCA Prayer Breakfast March 25 at the Charlotte Convention Center.

"We worship in different churches and follow different creeds. Yet, our presence here speaks eloquently of our belief that we are all children of the same Heavenly Father," the bishop said.

Hosted by the YMCA of Greater Charlotte during Holy Week, the event is the second-largest prayer breakfast held in the U.S. — second only to the prayer breakfast held by the president in Washington — according to

Harry Brace, president of the regional YMCA. "The ecumenical gathering was suggested by the Rev. Dr. L. Bevel Jones III (former bishop of the N.C. Conference of the United Methodist Church) to help bring people together in prayer and spirit," he added. "The event has been successful from the word 'go.'"

Bishop Curlin touched on various aspects of his 40 years in priestly ministry, citing two individuals who have inspired him in his vocation to help the least of our brothers and sisters: the late Jesuit Father Horace McKenna and Mother Teresa of Calcutta.

During one of Bishop Curlin's pastoral assignments in Washington, D.C., the Jesuit priest helped him understand and respond to the poverty in the bishop's inner-city parish. "Father McKenna spent his whole life trying to bring God to man and man to God," Bishop Curlin said. "He challenged the community's conscience to recognize the presence of God in every man and woman. He courageously walked the streets of the poor in a city filled with racism and injustice."

Like Father McKenna, Mother Teresa has made a lasting impression on Bishop Curlin by dedicating her life to the poorest of the poor. The Nobel Prize winner became friends with the bishop during a visit to the nation's capital 25 years ago, and traveled to Charlotte two years ago to dedicate a Missionaries of Charity convent in the Cherry region of the city, an area where poverty abounds. "When asked where she finds the strength for her ministry, Mother Teresa often responds, 'I am only a pencil that God uses to write love letters to the poor,'" Bishop Curlin said. "She reminds us that God does not demand that we be a success but that we are faithful to Him."

The bishop also encouraged all Christians to follow the advice of Pope John XXIII and "look beyond the things that divide, and seek those things that unite us as brothers and sisters under the One Father of all."

"I ask that we use this moment to recommit ourselves to live as brothers and sisters — seeing and serving God in one another," Bishop Curlin added. "Easter is the commemoration of the resurrection of Jesus, but let us pledge that we will let Jesus rise in us, that we may think and act like Christ and open our hearts to everyone."

The Quiet Room

Film's Painful Focus Depressing For Some

NEW YORK (CNS) — Increasingly upset by the escalating arguments between her parents, a little girl refuses to speak anymore in "The Quiet Room" (Fine Line).

The camera seldom leaves the apartment, especially the deep blue bedroom of a couple's unnamed 7-year-old only child (Chloe Ferguson), who is so rattled that her parents (Celine O'Leary and Paul Blackwell) have begun to bicker daily in the next room that she mentally retreats to happier days when she was 3 (played by Phoebe Ferguson) and her family seemed one happy threesome.

Soon she has stopped speaking at all and cannot be tricked into vocalizing by her concerned parents who are quick to point the finger of blame at each other, even though they both care deeply for their child. The girl has decided that words are what have brought such disharmony into her once-happy home so she will speak no more of them.

But speak them she does, in abundance, as her thoughts are vocalized on the soundtrack. The film is highly unusual for being shot entirely from the perspective of a youngster — who often thinks she has a much better handle on the world than her grown-up parents.

Writer-director Rolf de Heer's straightforward Australian drama does take viewers inside the psyche of a child and there are insights to be had on how the impending separation of the couple affects the sensitive girl.

Struggling on the inside with anger, fear, and hostility, she also experiences an awful loneliness as she will no longer emotionally admit her parents into her life.

While this might be fascinating for a child psychologist it may be more of a painful experience for the average viewer, what with its depressing nature and sole focus on the child's frazzled emotional state.

However, it does command attention as the child's silence is both a cry for help and an attempt to change her parents' behavior to what it once was.

In a telling scene, the child draws a black cloud over her city apartment building, next to her smiling family in the sunny countryside where they once lived and where she wishes to return. Her mother offers an innocuous compliment about the drawing and the camera pulls back to reveal a whole wall of similar drawings that have gone right over her parents' heads.

Sensing they are consumed with their own problems, the child concludes, "You two are more mixed up than I am." Some may find the filmmaker has imbued the child with a superior attitude that is not justified, but there is no ignoring that this is a rather original film for those willing to look beyond easy entertainment and enter into the confusing world of a troubled childhood.

Because of its serious treatment of marital discord and an instance of profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

Following is a chronological retrospective of the movies of director Fred Zinnemann (1907-97):

"The Search" (1948)

Stationed in post-war Germany, an American soldier (Montgomery Clift) tries to find the relatives of a street urchin (Ivan Jandl) he has befriended while the boy's mother (Jarmila Novotna) desperately searches for her missing child. Director Fred Zinnemann's picture of World War II's displaced persons is entirely credible in its treatment of their problems and genuinely moving in its respect for the human dignity of all involved. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Men" (1950)

Brooding in a Veterans Administration Hospital, a bitter World War II paraplegic (Marlon Brando) resists all attempts at rehabilitation for civilian life until a dedicated doctor (Everett Sloane) and his loving fiancée (Teresa Wright) make him face the future. Directed in semi-documentary style by Fred Zinnemann, the story amply demonstrates the psychological dimensions of devastating injuries but it is Brando's powerful, convincing performance that makes the movie a vivid experience. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"From Here to Eternity" (1953)

Somber picture of life on an Army base in 1941 Hawaii centers on a company whose bugler (Montgomery Clift) is punished for refusing as a matter of conscience to join the unit's boxing team, with only a hapless private (Frank Sinatra) supporting his obstinacy. Directed by Fred Zinnemann from the James Jones novel, the story also involves an affair between the company's top sergeant (Burt Lancaster) and his commander's unhappy wife (Deborah Kerr) as well as the bugler's romance with a club hostess (Donna Reed), all of which gains tragic dimension from the Japanese sneak attack on Pearl Harbor at movie's end. Sexual situations and stylized violence, including a fatal beating and a knife fight. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Oklahoma!" (1955)

Stunning, delightful and surprisingly serious screen version of the classic Rodgers and Hammerstein musical set in the relatively innocent days when Oklahoma was getting ready to join the Union and everything was up-to-date in Kansas City. Shirley Jones is absolutely winsome as the fresh-as-milk farm girl, Gordon MacRae almost outsmarts himself as her cowpoke beau and Rod Steiger is downright malevolent as her would-be suitor. Directed by Fred Zinnemann, the plot is corny as all get-out, the song and dance numbers are zestfully charming but the melodrama tends to be a tad too heavy. Some menace and stylized violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Nun's Story" (1959)

Sent by her community to be a nurse in the Belgian Congo, a young nun (Audrey Hepburn) resists her feelings of love for the doctor (Peter Finch) with whom she works, returns to Belgium and, after struggling with the routine of convent life, leaves for the world beyond the wall. Sensitively directed by Fred Zinnemann, the fact-based story focuses on the interior conflict between the nun's idealism and her growing sense of her own needs as an individual. Convincing portrayal of religious life as a vocation requiring more than good intentions. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Sundowners" (1960)

Excellent story about the joys and hardships of an itinerant Australian shepherd (Robert Mitchum) whose passion for the unencumbered life is in direct conflict with the yearnings of his wife (Deborah Kerr) to settle down. Directed by Fred Zinnemann, the movie's characters and its locale are finely evoked in a story that is part outdoors adventure and part domestic drama. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"A Man for All Seasons" (1966)

Engrossing drama of the last seven years in the life of Thomas More, Henry VIII's chancellor, who met a martyr's death rather than compromise his conscience during a period of religious turmoil. Robert Bolt's script is masterfully directed by Fred Zinnemann, with a standout performance by Paul Scofield in the title role, among other notable performances from a fine cast. The historical dramatization achieves an authentic human dimension that makes its 16th-century events more accessible and its issues more universal. Heavy going for children. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

Action steps that work for families

In the early years of our marriage my husband and I argued a lot. My biggest frustration was when he'd simply walk out of the room just because I told him to leave me alone. What was wrong with the man? Anyone in his right mind knows that "Leave me alone" means "Give me a hug, tell me you love me, tell me everything will be all right."

I was shocked to discover that many people (of a certain gender) can't read between the lines. And my husband was equally shocked that anyone would expect that he could. So, after visiting a counselor, I learned to say what I mean (which still seems silly to me), and he learned to rephrase it and say it back just to be safe. Simple too!

Once we learned a few basic techniques for communicating better, we were amazed, really, that they were so simple. Anyone can master them. It just takes a little practice.

But before I learned the "art" (it's really a skill of communication), here are some things I used to do. I don't recommend them. They don't work:

1. Bringing up an "issue" on Super Bowl Sunday (oh, but it's so tempting).
2. Making statements like, "You always exaggerate — always, always!"
3. Saying, "If you don't change, I'm leaving you."
4. Yelling at your teen-ager: "You took my car where? You're grounded for 10 years!" Careful now. Do you really want to feed that kid when you're on social security?
5. Bringing up the past: "I remember what you said to me in 1967. Did you think I'd forget?"

Now here are some things that do work in a family's favor and that foster a better atmosphere for communication at home.

1. Keep a sense of humor. A knock-down, drag-out fight today could end up being a new family story told around the kitchen table for years to come. It happened to us recently. My husband was going to accompany me to a speaking engagement. He's getting more involved in my work so that when he retires he can be my manager.

I was ready — calm, prepared, prayed-up, when he started: "What time do you speak?... You don't know exactly? You're kidding! What's the agenda? It's not your meeting! You should know these things!"

I was trying to stay cool — I had only done this for years without him — but there I was, right before I was about to give a talk on spirituality, and I could hear my voice rising, getting louder and louder. And I did the only thing I could do.

I fired him!

It was only a few days later that we had a group of people in stitches recounting the story. "Yes," Rick said, "and after she fired me she asks, 'Would you mind just taking my books out to the car for me? And maybe you could drive me out there and get me set up.'"

So do you see what humor can do? When we were driving in stony silence that day, we both knew that tomorrow this was going to make a great story.

2. Be flexible. Perhaps the other person (or you) is not yet capable of making a major change. Have second and third options.

3. Work on your own emotional and spiritual growth. We've heard it a thousand times: "You can't change anybody. The only person you can change" — All together now — "is yourself."

4. Let the other person know you will not walk away. You are committed to working it out. People can thrive when the fear of abandonment is taken away.

5. Respect the other's opinions and

"In the early years of our marriage my husband and I argued a lot.... Once we learned a few basic techniques for communicating better, we were amazed."

feelings, even when they are different from yours. When we gasp or raise our eyebrows, we force others to tell us what they think we want to hear.

Learning about personality types also can help family members learn to communicate better.

For example, extroverts think aloud, and introverts usually don't say anything until they have something to say. This can be extremely frustrating for both. But when we realize our brains are wired differently, then we can be more tolerant.

Yet even when we have new information and have grown, we may still occasionally fall back to "earlier," less mature ways of behaving, because we come to the relationship with separate pasts. Our families of origin have influenced us, often in subtle, unconscious ways. We may have to take a serious look at how we learned to communicate in our childhood homes. If it wasn't healthy and nurturing communication, it may be time to learn a better way.

Finally, of course, forgiveness is everything at home. Laugh and forgive, and let it go, just as God does with us. As believers, we are expected to do no less.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

The assumption is this: Family members can learn to communicate better on difficult topics. Do you think the assumption is well founded?

Actually, people don't always communicate well on the easy stuff. Have you ever found in an ordinary conversation, after determining to listen well to someone, that you did all the talking?

If good communication often seems blocked under ordinary circumstances, the obstacles are much stronger when the matter at hand is serious because:

- The stakes are higher.
- Something about the topic strikes fear; we feel threatened.
- Or the matter calls for shared action, but we're not ready to entrust any part of that action to another person.

To communicate better on an important topic, it couldn't hurt to clarify how important it is. Remember: Important matters are not all equally important.

Try clarifying expectations also. Will you feel disappointed by anything short of total agreement on this matter? Are you certain that full agreement is necessary this time?

Remember that family communication often is blocked because people are not talking about the same thing — although they think they are.

Or, each person considers the topic serious, but not for the same reasons.

Family members in crisis — with each other

By Father David K. O'Rourke, OP
Catholic News Service

What can you do when there is trouble in the family and the trouble gets so bad that the family members can't talk about it?

That fairly common situation is one of the toughest problems families can was permissive. The father was a disciplinarian, more than willing to go head to head with his independence-minded son.

Gary was spotted drinking at a school dance. The police were called, and Gary and two of his buddies went off to juvenile hall.

The father blamed the mother for being too permissive; the mother face. It is particularly difficult because when they're in trouble, the first place most people turn for help is to the family. If the people they normally turn to for help are the ones they're having problems with, then they're in a real bind.

One great family strength is the ability to come together in times of crisis. Every day I see ordinary families mustering the ability to handle unexpected crises, from sickness and death to troubles with the law to disabling emotional illnesses.

Families are our basic structure for dealing with trouble from the outside. But when the trouble is inside the family, the ability to muster needed strengths often is neutralized.

In such situations I believe some help from outside may be needed to get the family's wheels turning again. Let me illustrate with a situation I encountered a few years ago, which I'll disguise enough to preserve confidentiality.

A couple's teen-age son, Gary, was picked up by the police. The family was a well-functioning, productive and generally happy group. But Gary was 15 and was pushing the rules as far as he could, blaming his parents for just about everything and making life for them and his two brothers very difficult.

The parents were divided on how to handle the situation. The mother, always wanting to be reasonable, actually blamed him for being a hard nose; the brothers blamed Gary for making trouble for everyone.

Gary alternated between being terrified at, and delighted by, all the commotion he had caused.

What happened was that the family's usual ability to cope collapsed. They couldn't bring their strengths to bear on the situation because they were fighting with each other.

This is where I came in. A third party, by doing actually very little, can be very helpful. The order of business is simple.

First, get everyone's fingers off the panic button. Set a calmer tone, and reassure them that the family is going to survive.

Second, help the mother and father articulate what they already know: that they are frustrated, angry and disappointed both with Gary's thoughtlessness and their own inability to stay calm. Then help them agree on a way to handle Gary and his brothers.

Finally, the family will have to clear things up with the school, the police and the juvenile court — often an easier task than most parents fear.

The point is that with minimal outside help — one hour for calming down, one hour for putting their heads together — they got their usual strengths going again. But without that help I do not know what might have happened. Ordinary trouble within a marriage and a family can become long-lasting and serious. But it need not.

The rule is simple. When the family system stops working, get help. And if you're a friend looking in, suggest that they get help.

(Father O'Rourke lives at St. Mary Magdalen Church in Berkeley, Calif., and is a free-lance writer.)

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

What step have you taken that improved communication at home?

"Because we're newly married, we merged our finances and needed to improve our communication about how much we were spending. What I did was post our bills that were due or upcoming and what paycheck they needed to come out of on our calendar wall in our music room. That way we both know how to gauge our spending. It works really well!" — Megan Tobin, New Orleans, La.

"Taking time to eliminate distractions. For example, turning off the TV or not answering the phone, and sitting down with family members to talk." — Dawn Giblin, Houston, Texas

"Probably for my wife and myself it's been a common involvement in activities, whether at church or social events. We each have our own interests, but it's important to remember our shared life through sharing our time together too." — Fred Shetz, The Woodlands, Texas

"To reach out to my elderly parents who live at a distance I initiate weekly phone calls. I use to wait for them to call, but when I call them first, they look forward to the calls and feel my love for them more than before." — Barbara Lee, Milwaukee, Wis.

How Jesus conversed with people

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

Jesus didn't have to carry on a long conversation with the woman at the well in Samaria. After all, when he had asked for a drink from the well, she cut him off with a rude reminder of their irreconcilable differences:

He was a Jew, she a Samaritan; he was a man, she a woman. End of conversation. (John 4:9)

However, Jesus did not think their differences were irreconcilable at all. Ignoring her hostility, he kept the conversation going. The fact that they were different didn't mean they couldn't talk. Rather, it was all the more reason they should.

Calm conversation could bridge the chasm that separated them. He acknowledged her as a person with a right to be heard, and he listened. By the time the conversation was over, her hostility had changed to enthusiasm. She couldn't wait to get home and tell the folks all about him.

The fourth Gospel is made up of a whole series of dialogues: with Nicodemus, with the woman at the well, with Jewish leaders, the blind man, the disciples, Pilate. In the other Gospels Jesus taught by telling stories, parables, all invitations to conversation.

A parable was a common way of teaching and an effective one. It was constructed to engage the listener. The parable's element of surprise got the listener wondering and talking.

A parable doesn't just go in one ear and out the other without leaving any lasting impression. A parable makes a person think, ask questions and personalizes a teaching.

When an expert in the law challenged Jesus to define what he meant by "neighbor," Jesus didn't give a definition. He told a story involving two respected religious leaders and a Samaritan, who was the "star."

This was shocking! It made the questioner think. And at the end of the story Jesus didn't just tell the man which of the three was a real neighbor. He asked for his listener's opinion, drew him into the teaching process, invited him to give the answer (Luke 10:29-37).

Jesus respected people as persons with an inherent dignity. And he listened.

Parents often complain that their children don't listen to them. They might well ask how often they listen to their children, really listen.

Simply talking at children can turn them off. They want to know why they should or shouldn't do something. They want to participate in a conversation and be heard — even in cases where parents won't be able, in the end, to endorse the child's view or request.

Patient conversation at home is demanding, but it pays rich dividends and is eminently worth the time and effort involved.

(Father Castelot is a Scripture scholar, author, teacher and lecturer.)

In a Nutshell

• Can family members learn to communicate better?

• Jesus knew how to keep the conversation going, even when the woman at the well felt they were irreconcilably different.

• Commitment, a sense of humor and respect all serve to improve the atmosphere for communication at home.

Priest Says Cloning OK For Ewe But Not For You

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Cloning "is entirely unsuitable for human procreation," a Catholic bioethicist, Dominican Father Albert S. Moraczewski, told the National Bioethics Advisory Commission March 13. Catholic theologian Lisa Sowle Cahill called human cloning "a violation of the essential reality of human family and of the nature of the socially related individual within it." The two Catholic thinkers were joined by representatives of the Protestant, Jewish, Muslim and secular ethical tradition in discussing whether human cloning should be allowed and, if so, under what rules or restrictions. The 18-member commission, appointed by President Clinton, is headed by Harold Shapiro, president of Princeton University. ### Archbishop Asks For Prayers To End Albanian Crisis

NEW YORK (CNS) — An archbishop in Albania who once served as a parish priest in the Bronx has asked New Yorkers to pray for an end to the two months of rebellion and bloodshed that has besieged his country. Speaking by telephone to Catholic New York, newspaper for the Archdiocese of New York, Archbishop Rrok K. Mirdita of Dures-Tirana said he and Albania's other Catholic bishops were backing the government's offer of amnesty to the rebels if they lay down their weapons. "We are hoping for the best, but the situation is still not too good," Archbishop Mirdita said.

Law Students Urged To 'Risk Solidarity' With Poor, Ill

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston urged law students at The Catholic University of America March 20 to "risk solidarity" with the poor, the terminally ill and those in other countries who are harmed by U.S. economic policies. The cardinal, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities, delivered the 29th Pope John XXIII lecture to an audience of about 75 people at the Washington university's Columbus School of Law.

Fan Gives Memorabilia To Catholic School Auction

WASHINGTON (CNS) — What may have been a quixotic quest for a baseball fan to find a new favorite team is going to help a lot of good sports at the Catholic school attended by his sons. Self-professed "free agent fan" Mike Volpe turned over all the goodies and gimcracks offered by teams looking to have him as a fan to St. James School in the Washington suburb of Falls Church, Va. The items will be the centerpiece of an auction to be held in April. All proceeds are going to build a gymnasium for the school, which has seen rapid growth in recent years, according to Immaculate Heart of Mary Sister Janet Regina Dougherty, the principal. In the booty handed over by Volpe are autographed baseballs and pictures, sweatshirts and T-shirts, pennants, hats, jackets, books, media guides — even towels.

Sponsor a child

at a Catholic mission for just $10 a month

This is Conchita. She lives in Guatemala in a one-room house with a tin roof, a dirt floor and no electricity. Only four years old, she must help her mother carry water for cooking and bathing. She gets very tired but finds little comfort on her stiff wooden bed with a straw mattress. Because her father earns only $25 per month as a day laborer, there is no money for playthings, and even basic necessities are a luxury to her family of six.

But there is hope!

You can help one very poor child like Conchita through Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), a Catholic sponsorship program assisting needy children at Catholic mission sites around the world.

For as little as $10 a month, only 33 cents a day, you can help a poor child receive nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

Through CFCA, you can sponsor a child with the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide a child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to do what you can. CFCA works hand-in-hand with dedicated, trusted Catholic missionaries and lay leaders who know their communities and labor tirelessly to improve conditions for needy children and their families. Your sponsorship dollars help them do the work Jesus has called us to do.

When you become a sponsor you receive a photo of your child, their personal family history, a description of the country where your child lives, and the CFCA newsletter. Your new friend will write you — and you may write them as often as you like. But most of all, you have the satisfaction of helping a child in need.

Please don't miss this opportunity to make a difference.

House Passes Partial-Birth Abortion Ban By Veto-Proof Margin

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In a surprise of action taken last year, the House voted March 20 to again ban partial-birth abortions.

The roll-call vote — 295-136 — provides a veto-proof margin of more than two-thirds. It also reflects a slight gain in support for the ban among lawmakers in the House, where last year's vote was 286-129.

The Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 1997 contains the same language as the bill passed a year ago in Congress that subsequently was vetoed by President Clinton.

The legislation would prohibit the controversial procedure — which some, including the U.S. Catholic bishops, have called infanticide — except when it is necessary to save the mother's life.

In the late-term procedure, the unborn child is partially delivered, feet first, before surgical scissors are stabbed into the base of the infant's head. The child's brain is then removed by suction, allowing for easier delivery of the collapsed head.

During the emotional House debate, abortion foes referred to a recent admission by Ron Fitzsimmons, executive director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers in Alexandria, Va., that he had lied when claiming the partial-birth procedure was performed rarely and only to save the mother's life or abort malformed fetuses.

After the vote, Rep. Charles T. Canady, R-Fla., who introduced both House bills, said it is now commonly known that abortion advocates lied about the facts regarding this procedure.

"They tried to cover up the shocking truth that thousands of partial-birth abortions are performed every year on the healthy babies of healthy mothers during the fifth and sixth months of pregnancy," he said in a statement.

"I hope the Senate and President Clinton will join us in condemning this unconscionable procedure," he added, "and support the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act."

Since the veto last April, many pro-life advocates have been working to keep the issue before lawmakers and the public.

The U.S. bishops co-sponsored a nationwide postcard campaign to get Congress to override the veto and also sponsored a national day of fasting and prayer for life.

A coalition of more than 400 physicians, including many ob-gyn practitioners and fetal/maternal specialists, as well as former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, has said "partial-birth abortion is never medically necessary to protect a mother's health or her future fertility."

Legislative action now moves to the Senate, where Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., has said the bill is among the Senate's top 10 priorities. A vote is expected in April or May, but Lott acknowledged March 20 that there still are not enough votes in the Senate to override another veto.

Last September, the House voted successfully to override Clinton's veto, but a similar vote failed in the Senate.

"Godspell" Cast Prepares For April Production

CHARLOTTE — The musical "Godspell" will be presented April 4-6 at the St. Gabriel Parish Center Hall.

The play follows the Gospel of St. Matthew, bringing Jesus into present time to teach His lessons. There are parables, rap music and a bit of vaudeville. It's a post-modern show, updated for the '90s and including such recognizable songs as "Day by Day" and "Prepare Ye."

Members of the 10-member cast range in ages from 13 to 48. Musical accompaniment includes guitars, drums and piano.

Frank Rutowski, a member of St. Gabriel's contemporary ensemble, is the director and plays Jesus. His credits include directing the play in Raleigh.

Performance times are 8 p.m. on April 4 and 5, and 2 p.m. on April 6. Admission cost is $5 per person, and tickets can be purchased at the parish office or by calling (704) 364-5431.

Shroud Of Turin To Undergo New Tests After Public Displays

TURIN, Italy (CNS) — After two brief periods of public display in 1998 and the year 2000, the Shroud of Turin will be subject to new tests, Cardinal Giovanni Saldarini of Turin announced in mid-March.

In 1988, three separate laboratories using carbon 14 testing concluded that there was a 95 percent probability that the cloth, believed by many to have been Christ's burial shroud, actually was made between the years 1260 and 1390.

"We still must make the proper verifications of the results proposed by those laboratories, following new paths which were marked out afterward," Cardinal Saldarini said.

"Besides the determination of the date" of the cloth, the cardinal said, it is still a mystery how the negative image of an apparently crucified man was imprinted on it.

Cardinal Saldarini, the official custodian of the 14-foot-long linen cloth, spoke at a March 17 press conference announcing plans for the 1998 public display of the shroud.

Usually kept rolled and sealed in a silver reliquary in a chapel adjacent to the Turin cathedral, the shroud will be on exhibit April 18-June 14, 1998.

The cloth was last on public display in 1978.

Cardinal Saldarini told reporters that, whether or not the shroud was Christ's burial cloth, it still has religious value as a tangible reminder of Christ's suffering and death.

The 1998 exhibit, he said, will be handled as part of the church's spiritual preparation for the year 2000.

The Archdiocese of Turin has already sent letters to all the dioceses of Italy asking about their plans for pilgrimages to see the shroud, so that lodging, Masses and confessions can be arranged.

In addition, he said, the archdiocese has established an official Internet site — <http://sindone.torino.chiesacattolica.it> — with information about the shroud, its religious significance, its history and the scientific experiments conducted on it.

The site also provides information about the public exhibit and gives potential visitors to Turin ideas for spiritual preparation for their pilgrimage.

Cardinal Saldarini said the archdiocese's web site is the only official shroud page on the Internet.

One consideration regarding the shroud which does not touch on its authenticity is urgent nonetheless, the cardinal said: Church authorities must find a new way to store it.

"Today the real problem is the preservation of the shroud" which should no longer be rolled up, he said. Experts will meet church officials in late April to discuss possible solutions.

Survey: Catholics Differ On Teachings, Prefer Traditional Language

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A majority of adult U.S. Catholics disagree with church teachings on several hot-button issues and overwhelmingly prefer traditional language in biblical and liturgical texts, according to a new survey on religious attitudes. In a random sampling of 1,000 Catholics over the age of 18: 59 percent disagreed that "abortion is never justified"; 58 percent disagreed that "women cannot be ordained into the priesthood"; 73 percent disagreed that "it is morally wrong to use artificial methods of birth control." Regarding the use of gender-sensitive language in Mass prayers and English translations of the Bible, 71 percent disagreed that "terms such as 'man' and 'mankind' ... seem to exclude women," while 69 percent disagreed that those specific terms should be avoided "when referring to people in general."

Court Considers Constitutionality Of Internet Controls

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Federal restriction of indecent material on the Internet may live or die by whether the Supreme Court decides the computer information network is more like the telephone system or a bookstore. In oral arguments March 19 over the constitutionality of portions of the Communications Decency Act, Supreme Court justices questioned whether the legal impact of the 1996 law is more like trying to prohibit teen-agers from talking about their sexual experiences over the telephone or like forbidding pornographers from putting their materials in places minors can find it on the shelves. The court was asked to review provisions of the Communications Decency Act which make it a crime to transmit or display "indecent" or "patently offensive" sexual material to under-age recipients. Provisions of the law which prohibit transmission or display of obscene material were not challenged.

Legislators Work To Bring Suicide Law Flaws To Surface

SALEM, Ore. (CNS) — An appeal made in federal court in mid-March puts Oregon's assisted-suicide law back on the shelf, giving a panel of state legislators time to uncover what they consider the law's multiple defects. Lawyers for the National Right to Life Committee March 13 asked the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals to reverse a Feb. 27 decision that gives assisted suicide the go-ahead in Oregon. The request, though unlikely to succeed, could block implementation of the controversial procedure for months. During that time, suicide foes will lobby the Oregon Legislature, even though votes for repeal are lacking. Legislators may be willing to delay the law pending investigation of its components.

Ancient Gnostic 'Gospel' Unveiled

LAWRENCE, Kan. (CNS) — Two Midwestern scholars are planning to publish a translation of an ancient Coptic manuscript about Jesus that they describe as a long-lost Gnostic gospel. Paul Mirecki, associate professor of religious studies at the University of Kansas in Lawrence, who discovered the fragmentary text in Berlin's Egyptian Museum in 1991, said the calfskin pages date from about the fourth century but contain material apparently written between A.D. 150 and 250. "This newly recovered manuscript presents us with more primary evidence that early Christianity was far more diverse than the medieval church historians would tell us," Mirecki said at a news conference March 14. He said the find is similar to the Gospel of Thomas, a Gnostic scripture discovered near Nag Hammadi, Egypt, in 1945, and to the canonical Gospel of St. John in the New Testament.

Parish Profile

STATESVILLE — The year was 1870 when Father Mark Gross, a Benedictine serving in Greensboro, offered the first Mass in Statesville. That Mass marked the beginning of formal Catholic gatherings in the Iredell County town, and laid the foundation for the establishment of St. Philip the Apostle parish.

Father Gross celebrated those first Masses in the home of J.L.P. Roueche, using a handmade chest of drawers for an altar. Celebrations continued in the home on special occasions until 1898. That year a chapel was built and placed under the patronage of St. Philip in memory of Philip Barton Key, a Catholic Confederate Army officer in the Civil War who became a successful businessman in the 1890s in Statesville. Key's wife, a great-granddaughter of the niece of Martha Washington, decided to build a chapel in tribute to her late husband, himself a relative of "The Star-Spangled Banner" author Francis Scott Key.

Built in 1898, the church was dedicated and blessed in January 1901 by Benedictine Bishop-Abbot Leo Haid of Belmont Abbey. Thus, the 63-year Benedictine pastorate in Statesville continued. Mass was celebrated once a month until 1924, when Mass was offered twice each month.

In 1933, St. Philip Church was placed under the jurisdiction of the Raleigh Diocese. The Order of Franciscan Friars Minor, with priests living in a Lenior priory, was assigned to Statesville. St. Philip had its first resident pastor, Franciscan Father Arnold Waters, in 1940, and a Friary was built and dedicated in Statesville the following year. The St. Philip Church community at that time consisted of 85 registered parishioners.

Parish formation continued through the 1940s. Catechism classes for children began in 1946, when Sisters of Mercy from Salisbury visited once a week, while the resident priests taught the older youth. The Catholic Women's League was founded in January 1948 to serve the church and its altar; it later played a significant role in organizing a variety of parish activities.

The Golden Anniversary of the founding of St. Philip Church was celebrated in October 1948. Abbot Vincent Taylor, second abbot of Belmont Abbey, presided at the jubilee Mass. Franciscan Father Arnold Waters returned for the occasion.

The Franciscan pastorate at St. Philip's lasted through the 1950s and into the '60s. In 1956, a former Lutheran Church in town was purchased and renovated for use by the ever-growing Catholic community in Statesville. In 1965, the pastoral work of St. Philip Church was transferred to diocesan priests. The priesthood of the Diocese of Charlotte assumed the responsibility in 1972 upon formation of the new territory.

A three-phase expansion project for a new multi-purpose parish center, a rectory and a church at a different location were being discussed in the 1970s. Bishop Michael J. Begley approved the plans in 1977. Late the next year, the bishop dedicated the new center, complete with a sanctuary, auditorium, classrooms, educational/recreational rooms, a cry-room, reconciliation room, counseling room, office and kitchen. A rectory was constructed in 1979, thereby completing the second phase.

With the Catholic population still increasing, St. Philip continued the building project, this time in the mid-1990s.

Bishop William G. Curlin dedicated the new church in October 1995 for a thriving Catholic community in Iredell County. The completion of construction — a project spearheaded by former pastors Father Edward Beatty, Father Joseph Waters and Father Paul Gary — also marked the developments in parish and community outreach, which over the years has included a daycare formerly operated by Sisters of the Daughters of the Church, a food closet ministry, and ministerial work to the county's Hispanic population.

Father Peter Fitzgibbons, a former Army chaplain now serving in the National Guard, was appointed pastor of St. Philip in July 1996. Outreach at the parish and community levels continues during his pastorate, with parishioners still actively involved in the food closet ministry; the newly formed altar guild; twice-a-year blood mobiles; and Stop Child Abuse Now (STAN), a community-based advocacy group, among other efforts. The ministry work continues more than a century of Catholic tradition in Iredell County, tradition enriched through years of Benedictine, Franciscan and diocesan pastoral service.

A Child's Struggle Teaches True Faith

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HIGH POINT — It is not just Cain Howard's flawless appearance, disarming blue eyes, hair the color of daffodils or his captivating smile that makes him extraordinary. Cain is special because he is autistic, and in spite of this often devastating neurological disorder, he will not be defeated by the daily challenges he must face. Even the simplest task like making eye contact takes heroic effort on his part. Fighting against the odds, this spunky toddler who will turn three in May inspires anyone who sees his valiant struggle: to be understood and to understand the world around him.

Behind Cain's growing successes in overcoming autism are his parents, Amy and Patrick Howard, members of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point, who from the start would not succumb to despair, self-pity and doubt but instead subscribed to hope, hard work and faith. Through their love and perseverance, Cain, to a casual observer, behaves similarly to his peers, a miracle that would never have been possible without God's loving hand working through them. "If I can't ask God for help and trust His will be done, I won't get through a single day. Because of my faith, I can have peace with whatever happens," said Amy Howard.

When Cain was 18 months old, his parents began to notice that he was not developing properly. "One of the hardest times was not knowing what was wrong with Cain. We thought we were doing something wrong as parents," said Mrs. Howard, viewing the early diagnosis as a kind of blessing. Its timing, however, was unfortunate; the family was preparing for the birth of their second son, Sam.

This joyous occasion was overshadowed, at times, by the crushing news of Cain's autism.

Although Patrick initially suffered when he found out, he now sees Cain's autism as a blessing. "In the past I have always taken things for granted in my life. I didn't appreciate all that I had. If Cain had been perfect, I probably wouldn't have appreciated the little things like I do now," said Patrick.

After the diagnosis, the Howards declared war on Cain's autism with "Intensive Early Behavioral Intervention," a program documented as having "recovered"

CCHS, Community Mourn Loss Of Students

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — Classmates and members of the Catholic community gathered by the hundreds inside and outside of St. Peter and St. Vincent de Paul churches April 8 to say goodbye to two Charlotte Catholic High School students.

Sophomores William Charles Rice Jr. and Catherine Jennifer "Katie" Littrell, both 16, were killed April 4 when their car collided with a fire truck answering a call. The accident occurred in the right southbound lane of Park Road at 8:51 p.m. Rice was driving his father's Honda Accord with Littrell in the passenger's seat. Rice died at the scene. Littrell was taken to Carolinas Medical Center and died shortly thereafter. Students were on spring break at the time of the accident and returned to school April 7, only to have to deal with the tragedy.

"Billy and Katie were lovely, delightful, popular kids," said Mercy Sister Paulette Williams, CCHS principal. "They were full of life, always smiling and very involved. I'm sure they didn't miss any school-sponsored activities."

Counselors were at the school April 7, trying to help the CCHS family cope with the tragedy. Sister Paulette said counselors would be available all week to help students.

Rice, who was a member of St. Peter Church, graduated from St. Patrick elementary and middle school. He played basketball and football at Catholic High. Littrell graduated from St. Ann elementary and middle school and played on CCHS' softball team. She was a member of St. Vincent de Paul Church.

Sophomores Dustin Drake and Mike Duffy spent part of the morning of April 7 near the corner of Park and Seneca roads, taping posters and other remembrances from classmates at a makeshift memorial near the spot of the accident. More than 100 schoolmates attended a candlelight vigil at the memorial that evening.

"I talked to Billy a couple days before spring break, and I figured when we got back we would brag to each other about what a great time we had," Drake said. "He was our best friend."

"I was told of the accident five minutes after I walked in the door from Florida," added Duffy, still showing signs of disbelief.

Drake was a teammate of Rice's on the CCHS football team, and Duffy played football and basketball with Rice. Both classmates said they will honor their friend's memory by wearing Rice's jersey number — 41, Drake in football, Duffy in basketball — next year.

The classmates characterized Littrell as "a sweet person." "She and Billy had been dating about a month," Duffy said. "They complimented each other so well."

School was closed April 8 to allow the CCHS community to attend services for both students. In his homily at Rice's memorial Mass, Jesuit Father Eugene McCreesh of St. Peter Church talked of Billy's last week of life, during which he and his father journeyed to Israel on a "father and son trip" because they "wanted to walk in the footsteps of Jesus."

Father McCreesh also shared a verse from St. Augustine — "Our hearts were made for thee, O God, and cannot rest until they rest in thee" — that Billy held close to his heart.

"There is a saying that some people come into our lives and pass out quickly. Others come and leave their footprints on our hearts, their wisdom to stay forever," Father McCreesh said. "May this (saying) be the footprint of wisdom Billy, this beautiful young teen-ager, leaves on the hearts of all."

Kathleen Murphy, softball coach at Catholic High, called Littrell a competitor who always gave it her all for teammates, family and friends — on and off the field. "Katie was a warm, generous, loving human being. She loved her teammates, she loved her family," Murphy said in a remembrance of Littrell.

Father Dennis Kuhn, in his homily at Littrell's funeral Mass, talked of how the Catholic community comes together to deal with grief. "This is a time to call on faith, a time to renew faith. This is a time to be a community of faith. This is a time to be a faith family," he said.

Father Kuhn also said the Mass was "a moment of thanksgiving for Katie's life, a moment to say 'Thank you, God' even though you don't know the next feeling, don't know the next moment what comes."

"We, are a nurturing wonderful community of faith; we are a people loved by God. We can face anything that happens through the power of the cross," he added.

Students and administrators said putting the tragedy behind them will be difficult. "We're going to miss them. It's going to be hard without them," Drake said.

"The best thing anybody can do for us is pray," Sister Paulette added. "It's going to be a very difficult (school) year to finish out."

Billy Rice is survived by his father, Dr. William Rice of Charlotte; a brother, Brad of Banner Elk, N.C., and a sister, Rennie, of Charlotte. His mother, Jane Rice, died a year ago from cancer.

The family requests that in lieu of flowers, memorials be made to Charlotte Catholic High School, 7702 Pineville-Matthews Road, Charlotte, N.C. 28226, or St. Peter Catholic Church, 507 South Tryon Street, Charlotte, N.C. 28202.

Katie Littrell is survived by her parents, Patrick and Donna Littrell of Charlotte; two sisters, Amy and Julie, both of Charlotte; maternal grandparents, Vertie and Tony Cutrera, W.W. Brooks, Jr., all of Louisville, Ky.; and paternal grandparents, Anne and George Littrell of Bedford, Ky.

Memorials may be made to Camp Care, P.O. Box 35072, Charlotte, N.C. 28235 or to the charity of the donor's choice.

A typical day starts at 9 a.m. Toy-play communication skills and social skills like eye contact are taught in the sessions. Later in the evening, Amy or Patrick will work again on those skills in a more natural setting. Although these activities are spontaneous for most children, autistic children struggle because they do not learn in normal ways such as through imitation. Cain, like most other autistic children, has an extremely short attention span and resists change. Helping him achieve normalcy continues to be physically, emotionally and financially draining on the family. As one behavioral problem is eliminated, new ones emerge. Money concerns continue to mount with little outside help. Although these issues can be discouraging, the Howards remain dedicated and hopeful. "All children deserve a chance. They are all special," said Amy, concerned that some parents might fear raising disabled children. "Even when your child is disabled, they bring so much joy into your life."

In only nine months with limited resources, Cain has already improved, although other health problems may be slowing down his progress. The Howards anticipate at least three more years of intense therapy before Cain is fully functioning on his own age level.

Patrick is concerned for the many autistic children like Cain who do not have access to this program, either because they do not know about it or simply can't afford it. He is actively pursuing grants and other resources to establish a behavior therapy clinic in North Carolina so that others can have the same chance Cain has to live a normal life.

Patrick admits that through it all, he has grown in his faith and has a strong desire to share with Cain a sense of who God is. He learned recently it would take time. "I was looking forward to taking Cain with me to church on Ash Wednesday. I thought about it all day. I just couldn't wait," he recalled. "Unfortunately, Cain made some noises which caused a humiliating pause in the service. I began to wonder if Cain would ever be able to behave during Mass and I wondered if he would ever know God."

Amy shares this same concern for Cain. Yet seeing Cain in his mother's arms affectionately playing with her hair, or on his father's shoulder smiling as if on top of the world, any doubts vanish. Cain certainly knows God because Cain knows love.

If you would like more information on Behavioral Therapy or would like to help through volunteer work, please call Patrick or Amy Howard, (910)869-2408.

some children. Because no behavioral specialists were immediately available and time is crucial to recovery, Patrick and Amy implemented the program by themselves, relying on manuals and occasional consultations. They hired and trained college students, and developed a curriculum for Cain.

To understand the courage of the Howard family, one must understand autism and the toll it takes on family life. This life-long neurological disorder has no known cure and only theories as to what causes it. The symptoms and stereotypic behaviors such as rocking, hand-flapping, fixating on objects, hand-biting and head-banging vary with the individual, and efforts must be made to try to eliminate them. Patience becomes the predominate virtue when the Howards and their therapist battle some of these behavior problems. Coupled with lack of sleep, resulting from Cain's erratic sleep patterns, days can be stressful and long. Without this intervention, frustrations can overwhelm a child as well, and cause a total withdrawal. Fortunately, Cain's fighting spirit keeps him holding on to

Archbishop George Of Portland To Succeed Cardinal Bernardin

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Archbishop Francis E. George of Portland, Ore., has been named archbishop of Chicago by Pope John Paul II.

The appointment was announced in Washington April 8 by Archbishop Agostino Cacciavillan, papal pro-nuncio to the United States.

Archbishop George, 60, will succeed Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin, who died last November. He was appointed to Portland only last April 30 and installed there last May 27.

A member of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, he was named to the hierarchy in 1990 when the pope appointed him bishop of Yakima, Wash.

He is a native of Chicago, entered the Oblates in 1957 and was ordained to the priesthood in 1963 in Chicago.

On the day his appointment was announced, Archbishop George took immediate steps to ease tensions that arose in the city from an attack on a black 13-year-old by three white teen-agers, all students or graduates of a Chicago Catholic high school.

Archbishop George was scheduled to go to the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago for a visit with the black teen, Lenard Clark, whose prognosis was still unclear after the March 21 attack.

Clark, who was in a coma for a week after the incident, has walked down a hospital corridor, can breathe on his own and spoken one word, "mama." But he continued to be fed intravenously.

On April 8, in addition to holding a news conference on his appointment, Archbishop George was scheduled to visit the tomb of Cardinal Bernardin at Mount Carmel Cemetery in Hillside, meet with archdiocesan employees, and pray at Holy Name Cathedral.

Bishop Raymond E. Goedert, who had served as archdiocesan administrator since Cardinal Bernardin's death, welcomed Archbishop George "with a warm heart and an open mind" as the eighth archbishop of Chicago.

"We are confident the Holy Father has chosen an individual who will — through his spiritual leadership and his personal example — guide our local church well as we face the challenges and opportunities of a new millennium of Christianity," he said in a statement.

Francis Eugene George was born in Chicago on Jan. 16, 1937. He entered the novitiate of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate in 1957, and studied theology at the University of Ottawa, Canada. He was ordained a priest on Dec. 21, 1963, in Chicago.

Archbishop George earned a master's degree in philosophy at The Catholic University of America in 1965 and a doctorate at Tulane University in New Orleans in 1970. He taught philosophy at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., and became chairman of the philosophy department.

He has a doctorate in ecclesiology from the Pontifical Urban University in Rome.

Archbishop George served as provincial superior of the Midwestern province of the Oblates in 1973-74 and was elected vicar general for the order in Rome, serving from 1974 to 1986.

The mission of the Oblates, who number about 500 in the United States, is to work among the poor. Their founder, Bishop Eugene de Mazenod, was canonized Dec. 3, 1995.

After then-Father George returned to the United States, he became coordinator of the Cambridge Center for the Study of Faith and Culture, in Cambridge, Mass. He was serving in that post when he was named bishop of Yakima in 1990.

He is one of three Oblate bishops in the United States. The other two are Bishop Michael D. Pfeifer of San Angelo, Texas, and Bishop Roger L. Schwietz of Duluth, Minn.

A delegate to the world Synod of Bishops on consecrated life in 1994, Archbishop George also serves as episcopal moderator of the National Catholic Office for Persons with Disabilities.

NEW YORK: Two nurses have filed suit against the hospital where they had worked until they were fired for refusing to assist in abortions. They were fired for insubordination a few weeks after they filed written notice that they would not do abortions because the procedure violated their religious beliefs. The hospital denies that the nurses were fired for their beliefs.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Consent To Crucifixion Of Jesus An Act Of Love, Pope Says

Dear brothers and sisters,

In our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider her union with Jesus in the events of his passion and death. Mary's presence at the foot of the Cross was the culmination of her lifelong participation in Christ's redemptive mission.

The Second Vatican Council teaches that on Calvary Mary "united herself with a maternal heart to the sacrifice of her Son, and lovingly consented to the immolation of the Victim which she herself had brought forth" (Lumen Gentium, 58). Through the tragic events of the passion, Mary remained at Jesus' side, sustained by faith. By consenting to her son's sacrifice, she had a part in his self-offering to the Father as the saving victim who takes away the sins of the world. At the foot of the cross and like her son, she abandoned herself to the will of the Father and forgave those who put Jesus to death. Mary is thus the radiant model of the Church's faith and hope, which reach beyond the darkness of death to the joy of the Resurrection.

I offer greetings and prayerful good wishes to the bishops, priests and laity taking part in the International Theological Symposium on the Alliance of the Two Hearts of Jesus and Mary. My cordial greeting goes also to the ecumenical delegation led by the moderator of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A.

I likewise welcome the representatives of the Korean Broadcasting System preparing a television program on the Vatican. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrim groups from England, Australia, Norway, Korea, Japan, the Philippines and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Christ our risen savior.

Pope Asks International Community To Curb Use Of Child Soldiers

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II asked the international community to help curb the deployment of children as armed combatants in wars around the world. "These inexperienced and fragile people are themselves the first victims of violence and warfare!" he said April 6. "If we want peace, let's provide an education in peace to those who are preparing to build the society of the future," he said. He made the remarks a few days before the U.N. Human Rights Commission in Geneva was scheduled to hold a special session on juridical protection of children and minors in armed conflicts.

Beam Me Up, Scotty

Recently, 39 men and women, members of the Heaven's Gate cult, committed suicide, apparently believing they would join the crew of a starship.

The news reports make it appear that they "left their containers" through a peaceful ritual, a sad parody of a sacrament.

Reporters and analysts ask two questions: "How could they believe that stuff?" and "How can we protect others from the same fate?"

It's remarkably easy to believe things that couldn't possibly be true.

If one person tells you there are invisible monkeys in the trees trying to steal your good thoughts and replace them with bad thoughts, you'll think he's nuts.

But let's say five other people, all of whom seem relatively level-headed, agree that the monkeys are real, and these people wear yellow caps so their thoughts can't be stolen. That's different.

Try as you might to ignore them, you'll start looking suspiciously up in the branches. You might even consider a yellow hat, "but only as a fashion statement."

Here's how cult recruiting works:

You're new in town, or there's been some major disruption in your life. Things feel out of balance. A really friendly person goes out of his or her way to make you feel comfortable. After a couple of conversations over coffee or lunch, you're invited to dinner, "to meet some great people."

The new group takes you in, shows you around, maybe even provides a place to stay while things settle down.

They seem very happy, "in touch." The group spirit is comforting, especially in your unsettled state. At some point conversation moves toward their "teachings." You've noticed their caution around trees, and you've noticed the yellow caps. It's time for explanations.

You know these people and care about them. At first this stuff about monkeys seems a bit odd, but they're so convinced, so calm, so happy.

Here's the key part: There's nobody else around. Your old friends and family, people who might have said, "That monkey stuff is nuts," aren't there. Everybody you hang out with is in the monkey cult. Pretty soon, you are too.

This is exactly the process followed — carefully, and with planning in advance — by hundreds of cults across the country.

It helps to know how cults work so you can recognize the pattern if you're being recruited.

But your real safety requires a religious answer. Because there are no reliable anchor points for spiritual truth built into our brains, we need outside standards.

As a Christian, there's a simple test. Whenever you're confronted with a new teaching, ask yourself two things. First, is this consistent with the Bible? Second, is this consistent with what I've been taught by the Church?

There are no thought-stealing monkeys in the Bible, and the church has never taught about yellow caps. So this stuff is probably not a solid path.

It's easy to think that the traditions of the church are stuffy and old-fashioned, and lots of us find ourselves wishing they were "more in line with the times."

Yet that's the central value of the church's teaching mission: It isn't in line with the times. If the popularity of yellow-hatted monkey worshipers took over all the TV stations and there was nothing on MTV but monkey chants, the church would still teach the same old stuff — just like it has for 2,000 years.

The best protection against cults is deeper knowledge of your own faith. As you strengthen the foundation of your own faith, you become less likely to end up under a purple shroud waiting for a rendezvous with a spaceship.

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

Living With Mystery

Albert Einstein once said: "The most beautiful experience we can have is the mysterious.... Whoever has not experienced mystery can no longer wonder, no longer marvel, is as good as dead."

There is no single thing on earth about which we have total knowledge because all creation is permeated with the ultimate Mystery which is God. In a story called "The Soul of a Bishop," by H.G. Wells, there is a conversation between a bishop and an angel. The angel tells the bishop that religion is a human way of trying to define truths which men and women don't fully understand.

"But you can tell me the Truth," the bishop exclaims. Whereupon the angel tenderly touches the bishop's head, saying, "Truth! Yes, I could tell you. But could this hold it? Not this little box of brains. You haven't things to hold it with inside this."

What the angel meant, of course, is that mystery is a blessing. In God's mercy, we walk in the shadow of mystery until the divinely appointed time for each of us to understand the blazing light of full Truth. It is expressed in an ancient maxim, "If you cannot face the candle, how can you look at the sun?" More precisely, to embrace the Mystery of God, you must first embrace the small mysteries that unfold within your own life as a blessing.

Consider the mystery of life as it unfolds in a marriage relationship. A good marriage that mellows with time is based on the growing realization by both spouses that complete knowledge of another human being is never attained. Here's another saying; "Married love is a balance uneasy." Meaning, there is always some new discovery to be made. Surprises happen.

The full mystery of the "other" is never solved, yet one learns to accept the other. Indeed, acceptance is the key to a wholesome husband-and-wife relationship and all other human relationships, too. Non-acceptance implies a need to dominate, to program the other. A regimen of mutual programming is not only a sure guarantee of a dull marriage, it is also too often the underlying cause of a disastrous one.

Acceptance is an attitude of expecting the unexpected — a willingness to admit that the way you would like things to be is not necessarily the way things will be, or even should be. If you or I imagine that we really have a corner on the truth behind the beautiful mystery of everyday life, then we may also delude ourselves into thinking that we can program God.

It seems that we are better off simply to relish the daily mysteries in our lives. To face life squarely, in the spirit of acceptance, with all the chanciness and the risk-taking it implies. To treasure the unexpected that comes our way, with all the compassion and patience it may demand.

Because, my friend, if we face the mystery of this life squarely, in the Christian spirit of loving acceptance, we will be ready to embrace the fullness of the Mystery of God at the appointed time.

"If you cannot face the candle, how can you look at the sun?"

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

The Reverence of Outstretched Hands

Q. A member of our parish tells us he has it on good authority that when communion is received standing, liturgical law requires that one genuflect before receiving.

That's news to me. I've only seen it done two or three times, but I said I would find out. Is that now a rule for going to Communion?

A. I don't know who his authority was supposed to be, but there is no such requirement.

The General Instruction on the Roman Missal says only that communicants should "make a suitable reverence" before responding "amen" to the words "the body of Christ." It has the same notation twice (Sections 244 and 245).

This reverence might be a genuflection, of course, but it could also be several other actions, such as a bow.

The point has been made, very fittingly I believe, that the most expressive act of reverence before Communion is the one the vast majority of people already use, holding out their hands.

Outstretched hands are a powerful symbol, for most of the human race, of nearly all those things we want to say to God as we come to receive the body of Christ.

Whether it's a child standing before his parents, a starving mother in Rwanda or ourselves before the eucharistic Lord, open hands held out to someone express our desire and need for what that person has to give.

The open hands also proclaim other feelings in our hearts at that time: our hunger and reverence for the gift we ask, our trust that the giver will give it, humility in acknowledging total dependence on what we will receive, praise and thanks for the generosity of the one who offers the gift and much more.

As a priest, I admit to being deeply moved by this eloquent gesture every time I give Communion.

It's hard to imagine any other action capable of carrying such a weight of spiritual meaning for approaching Communion. As a bonus it is also unobtrusive and does not call attention to oneself.

Some may object that this sounds fine, but how many think of all this every time they receive the Eucharist?

It's true, of course, that we need to be always more conscious of why we do what we do. But one might make that same objection about a kiss or hug. What husband and wife reflect consciously on the deep meanings of these actions every time they say hello or goodbye?

Whether they do or not, however, the meaning remains and inevitably achieves its effect when such acts are done in a context of love and devotion.

It's the same with open hands extended in prayer and hope. This nearly universal gesture in its own way accomplishes what it symbolizes: humbleness and hunger.

A free brochure on ecumenism, including questions on inter-Communion and other ways of sharing worship with people of other faiths, is available by sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Parish, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701. Questions may be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

Spirituality For Today

Father John Catoir

Poetry as Prayer

Poetry is more than language. It transcends what it actually signifies, enabling us to see beyond what is visible. Abstract formulas alone cannot tell us of God. We need the symbolic language of poetry to transport us to new heights.

My favorite poet, Catherine de Vinck, has a new collection of unique meditations titled "A Basket of Bread" (Alba House, 2187 Victory Blvd., Staten Island, N.Y.). In her poem "Bread of Angels" she presents a familiar image:

*"At sunset the world rounds itself into a reed basket
holding five barley loaves two silvered fish pale as the moon:
not enough to feed the tribes reclining on the grassy slopes.
The Master of knowledge stands on the mound:
at his feet seas unfurl their ancient scrolls continents throb like murmuring hives.
I am here, I am here, I am crying out waiting before an empty plate.
Over the bread, over the fish*

*he speaks the eternal blessing.
Now and forever, I,
one among many,
take and eat, the basket never empty the gift never withdrawn."*

You must spend time with a poem to savor it. Here is one titled "Hope":

*"Now that life itself is flattened pierced by nails, wreathed with thorns
now that your own body falls soft and limp into empty space — nothing to catch, no foothold no ledge only white emptiness through which you descend:
the ground comes closer.
Already you imagine*

*your bones broken your life crushed.
Just before you hit rock bottom a small parachute of hope opens a corolla with filaments of light and you are held, you*

swing free from deadly gravity: you float in azure currents through lanes of air through wide avenues of pure ozone and go on living another day."

Thomas Merton said that Catherine de Vinck offers a "wonderful Blake-like response to the sacred world." Sally Cuneen says "her poems spring from a genuine love of simple realities ... suggesting a discipline that turns them into a poetry of joy."

I agree.

THE DOMINICAN SISTERS OF HAWTHORNE

Share a Great Compassion

Even though I was very happy, I felt that God was calling me to a different life. The emphasis on community, prayer, sacrifice, obedience to the Holy Father, a unified apostolate, based on radical trust in God and loving care of His beloved children, and the visible witness of a religious habit drew my mind and heart to the Hawthorne Dominicans. In God's Will is our peace. I wish no other life than the one God has offered me in the precious gift of my vocation.

The Devil's Own

Innocent Family Snared In Imported Struggle

NEW YORK (CNS) — A big-hearted cop finds he has welcomed a wanted criminal into his home in the edgy drama, "The Devil's Own."

Two of Hollywood's leading box-office actors go head to head as strangers who become like father and son, then hunter and hunted as Harrison Ford befriends Brad Pitt, unaware the younger man's violent tendencies represent all that Ford as New York police Sgt. Tom O'Meara abhors.

Pitt plays Frankie McGuire, whose path in life was set from age 8, when he saw his gentle father shot to death at the family dinner table by those opposed to a united Ireland.

Having subsequently shot his share of British soldiers and cops, fugitive Frankie is secreted out of Ireland. Under the alias Rory Devaney, he is to buy Stinger missiles in New York for the IRA from saloon owner-arms dealer Treat Williams.

Frankie's first contact, an Irish sympathizer judge (George Hearn), assures him the safest place to stay is with the apolitical cop who thinks Frankie is a just a poor construction worker eager to settle in America.

Frankie moves in — and is himself moved by the atmosphere of peace and love between the cop, his gracious wife (Margaret Colin) and their three young daughters.

And Tom, ever surrounded by four females, treats Frankie as the son he never had.

Attending one daughter's confirmation, Frankie is clearly conflicted by the priest's words, remembering the commandments he has broken as a terrorist, all in the name of patriotism.

Meanwhile, Tom is having his own moral crisis when his partner (Ruben Blades) rashly shoots a fleeing suspect dead, not realizing the man had already dropped his gun. Tom hates himself for backing his partner's lie that the suspect was still armed.

However, violence invades the sanctity of Tom's home when thugs show up to snatch the IRA money hidden in Frankie's room, but end up nearly taking Tom's wife hostage.

Realizing Frankie must be an IRA operative, the furious Tom sets out to take him in — but also to save his life since the Brits closing in on him would surely nab and execute Frankie on the spot.

Under Alan J. Pakula's well-crafted direction, this Hollywood action movie expands into a character study of two men torn by their loyalties — and the friendship squarely in their way.

Ford and Pitt give commanding performances: Ford as the cop who never shot anyone but is now faced with gunning down the fellow he has loved like a family member, while Pitt must choose between his mission or killing the man who took him in with open arms.

Pakula takes pains to make the two men's contrasting worlds palpable. The scenes shot in Ireland are gripping testaments to instantaneous violence wreaking havoc on simple street scenes — a far cry from the hushed serenity of the neighborhood Tom returns home to each night, and which Frankie knows he can never truly inhabit.

But the film doesn't whitewash the Irishman's murderous streak; when push comes to shove Frankie will kill in cold blood if it furthers his cause, and face the consequences in the hereafter. He has made his choices, but Pitt doesn't rob his character of his humanity — and Ford conveys that he can understand the forces that shaped him into a murderous terrorist.

The cop's conflict with his trigger-happy partner adds another layer of complexity to his soulful examination of his own beliefs and sense of integrity.

This makes the movie more interesting than the cookie-cutter parade of constant action and mayhem often favored in big-budget studio films.

Production values are top-notch both in the Dublin and Gotham locations, with sudden terror time and again keeping the proceedings suspenseful.

A hint of romance between Pitt and Natascha McElhone has no chance to develop but viewers will have plenty of time to decide if Pitt's soft brogue sounds authentic.

Without oversimplifying the Northern Ireland troubles, "The Devil's Own" explores the ramifications of that struggle when it is imported to these shores and snares an innocent family into its clutches.

"Basquiat" (1996)

Hollow dramatization of the short career of Jean-Michel Basquiat (Jeffrey Wright), a black graffiti artist in New York City who achieved international fame as a self-taught painter before dying from a drug overdose in 1988 at the age of 27. Written and directed by Julian Schnabel, the episodic script develops little emotional involvement in the character and lacks insight into his work or the bohemian art group which brought him fame. Frequent scenes of drug abuse, implied sexual encounters, profanity and rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Chamber" (1996)

Somber drama from John Grisham's novel about the dark secrets uncovered by a novice lawyer (Chris O'Donnell) in his stubborn attempt to win a stay of execution in Mississippi for his racist grandfather (Gene Hackman), convicted of murdering twin boys decades earlier. Directed by James Foley, the result is not particularly suspenseful, but offers an absorbing character study of the convicted man coming to terms with the life he has led. Sporadic violence, racial epithets and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The First Wives Club" (1996)

Deserted by wealthy husbands who have callously lined up younger replacements, three irate wives (Bette Midler, Goldie Hawn and Diane Keaton) scheme to humiliate and financially drain their estranged spouses. Directed by Hugh Wilson, the revenge-themed comedy is weighed down by unconvincing plot contrivances, despite spirited performances and caustically funny dialogue. Some sexual innuendo, an off-screen suicide, fleeting comic violence and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Flirting with Disaster" (1996)

Mindless comedy about a young couple (Ben Stiller and Patricia Arquette) on a cross-country search for the husband's biological parents with the help of an adoption agency worker (Tea Leoni) and a homosexual couple they meet along the way. Written and directed by David O. Russell, the journey's disasters are too predictable to be amusing and the sexual byplay between the quirky travelers is too heavy-handed to be comic, though occasional giggles are supplied by veteran performers in supporting roles. Sexual situations and innuendo, tasteless humor, drug jokes and some rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Spitfire Grill" (1996)

Engrossing picture of a troubled young woman (Alison Elliott) coming to a small town in Maine for a fresh start in life which seems possible after she's befriended by a couple of local women (Ellen Burstyn and Marcia Gay Harden) but her growing sense of belonging ends in a tragedy which soberes the community and helps transform it. Written and directed by Lee David Zlotoff, the emotionally involving story is told with realism, the characters are warmly human and, despite some melodramatic turns, the result is heartfelt drama with a genuinely uplifting conclusion. Some menace, a tragic death and a reference to the sexual abuse of a minor resulting in murder. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

What does parenthood mean?

By H. Richard McCord Jr.
Catholic News Service

The strict definition of parenthood — “the state of being a parent” — is not very useful. It’s a static viewpoint.

Instead, we need to ask, What does being a parent mean? This is the dynamic viewpoint and the more relevant question.

More specifically, what does it mean to be a Christian Catholic parent?

There are some generic things we can say about being a parent, regardless of one’s religious background, and there are some dimensions that flow directly from being a Christian and a Catholic believer.

To be a parent is to answer a call to help God create, nurture, sustain new life. It’s a vocation, something which, especially today, can involve risks, create anxiety and fear, and seem daunting. Like any vocation, when it’s embraced in freedom and with trust in the Lord, it will bring much joy, but always some pain and sorrow as well.

The call or vocation to be a Christian parent is a summons to perform the roles and responsibilities that all parents have and to see in this activity a deeper spiritual meaning.

What do parents do? Theologian and educator Maria Harris provides a helpful set of categories.

—Parents protect: keeping children from physical, psychological, emotional, spiritual harm; constructing boundaries around a family or household to screen outside influences.

Parents must be aware, however, that their protection cannot be absolute. Accidents, tragedies will happen; eventually children will suffer some harm.

Parents must be ready to let go of the need to control every aspect of their children’s world. This realization can be a source of great sorrow — and also a new sense of freedom — for parents. It requires faith (trust) in God.

—Parents nourish: feeding, sheltering, clothing, and providing for children’s physical needs. This can be exhausting. For some parents it requires heroic effort and sacrifice. It is where some parents focus all their effort.

That can be short-sighted because there is also the need to nourish children’s human spirits. They must encounter beauty and truth and develop their gifts for creativity and service. Parents “feed” these spiritual hungers too.

—Parents guide: teaching, inspiring, communicating and modeling values and behavior — a progressive task which grows and changes as a child becomes more experienced with making decisions.

love has so many faces. But parental love does not rule out anger, frustration, the need for discipline, the urge to scream and otherwise let off steam.

To be a parent is to have an enduring love for one’s child — the kind of love which “never forgets” this essential relationship that began long ago.

Mothers and fathers will “parent” differently — each bringing a different “Baptism brings all Christians into union with God. Your family life is sacred because family relationships confirm and deepen this union and allow the Lord to work through you. The profound and the ordinary moments of daily life — mealtimes, workdays, vacations, expressions of love and intimacy, household chores, caring for a sick child or elderly parent and even

At some point in a child’s development, it involves greater ability to listen, to pose questions, to outline possible routes to follow, then stepping back.

Parents are the first and most basic teachers, doing so more by giving example, by answering questions and equipping children with skills than by relating concepts and information.

—Parents love: This is what makes all the above roles possible. Parental set of perspectives and skills. Neither is better or more essential than the other; they should not strive to be interchangeable, lest they deprive children of ingredients for healthy development.

The single parent is not someone to despise or pity or blame. Usually people do not intend to parent alone. Most would rather have the assistance of a spouse if the circumstances were different.

The single parent is usually doing the best she or he can with limited resources. Research about resilience in children shows that children can thrive if they at least have the undivided attention, loyalty, love and care of one parent.

What can distinguish a “Catholic” approach to parenting is a sacramental viewpoint. This means that ordinary, everyday realities (like wiping dirty faces, tucking a child into bed, calming a child’s fear) are “doors to the sacred,” ways of discovering God’s presence and encountering God’s love.

The U.S. bishops, in their pastoral message “Follow the Way of Love,” state:

conflicts over things like how to celebrate holidays, discipline children or spend money — all are the threads from which you can weave a pattern of holiness.”

The other thing that could be called distinctively “Catholic” about the role of parent is the understanding — a part of official church teaching — that a Christian family is a “church of the home.” The parents are the leaders or ministers in the church of the home.

Pope John Paul II has said that parents have a ministry of evangelization and catechesis within their own family (“Familiaris Consortio,” 53).

In a Nutshell

The bad news: Parenting is hard work. The good news: It’s worth it.

In the sacramental vision, parenthood’s ordinary actions are doors to the sacred: tucking a child into bed; calming a child’s fear.

Parenthood: It's just divine!

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

To say that God sets parents in a special position in the family is to say that parenthood is a divine vocation, a call to serve a family that is Godlike, as the New Testament Letter to the Ephesians reminds us:

"I kneel before the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named" (3:14-15).

The term "vocation" has taken on a tightly defined meaning for some people. Perhaps when they think of vocations they think exclusively of a call to the priesthood or religious life — greatly important vocations. But St. Paul, speaking of the action of the Spirit in our lives, wrote:

"There are different kinds of spiritual gifts but the same Spirit; there are different forms of service but the same Lord; there are different workings but the same God who produces all of them in everyone. To each individual the manifestation of the Spirit is given for some benefit" (1 Corinthians 12:4-7).

Parents are called to share with God the uniquely divine act of creation. Creation is an ongoing process. And human beings are works in progress, not finished products.

By our every choice we affect our physical and spiritual development and that of others. We are co-creators with God.

In a special way parents participate in this never-ending divine work. They give and nurture life, are given responsibility for human development.

As the initial act of creation was an act of divine love, the birth of every person results from an act of love. Both parents are intimately involved in this sacred process.

The father is a "sacrament" of God's life-giving and continued providence. It is not only in his authority that a father is a God-image. He is so more radically in his act of "pro-creation" — in his reassuring presence and caring support.

The mother is likewise a God-image. From her very substance a human being, a child of God, takes being itself. Her nurturing is an exquisite sharing in God's sustaining love.

In the Book of Isaiah, God exclaims: "Can a mother forget her infant, be without tenderness for the child of her womb? Even should she forget, I will never forget you" (49:15).

Even if we define the term "vocation" as a calling to serve the church, it is good to remember that the church includes the domestic church. Every family is the church in miniature, and parents are called to guide it.

And like all vocations, it is demanding. Like the God with whom they work, parents will know misunderstanding, ingratitude, rebellion. But like God they will be understanding, patient, compassionate.

Parenthood is a truly awesome vocation!

Parenting: Hard work, but worth it

By Dan Luby
Catholic News Service

I've only climbed one mountain, and that was in my car.

Against a brilliant blue sky, the snowy grandeur of Pike's Peak inspired me with awe and an intense desire to get to its top. The road was clear, the car in good shape. I figured half a morning should do it.

Almost all of my expectations were wrong. The road curved fiendishly. Hairpin turns tested my reflexes and my nerve.

My companions grew nervous and critical. Hours later, when we finally reached the top, I was exhausted. Had I known how hard it was going to be, I would probably never have tried it.

Parenthood is like that. On a clear day from a distance, it seems an inspiring and awesome privilege. Parents charge ahead, filled with enthusiasm and utterly unrealistic expectations.

—The bad news: Parenting is hard work.

—The good news: It's worth it. We find it harder than we thought — more work, trickier, more dangerous, more trouble. Our initial confidence often takes a beating.

ergy than we figured. And the downhill side of it can be as tough as the uphill.

The gap between our expectations and reality on the parenthood journey

"To be a parent is to embark on a climb that holds the promise of an inspiring and glorious vision.... That's worth whatever cost we have to pay."

We worry about things we never noticed before. The other passengers on the trip don't often applaud our performance. It always takes more en-may be the toughest thing about it. From a child's point of view, parenting hardly looks like the accumulated experience it is. As children we thought of it, if we thought of it at all, as simply what parents do.

Once we become parents, though, we discover how complicated it is. Decisions our parents apparently made by instinct reveal themselves as Solomonic tests of judgment.

We find that the patience required for interruptions, unanswerable questions and endless challenges to authority is not automatic, but a deliberate and difficult choice.

Obstacles abound. The values parents work to instill are often undermined by those of the culture of which we are a part. The solid givens of child rearing for one generation, like gender roles or norms of etiquette and public behavior, vanish for another. Economic and social demands on parents erode the energy and time they have for their children.

Some barriers are raised simply by human interaction.

Conflict between parents can result

How do you define "parenthood"? Or, identify two of the "essentials" of parenthood.

"Flexibility, because nothing is certain but the unforeseen, especially in parenthood. And a strong sense of self, because you're making thousands of decisions all the time — and if you're second-guessing yourself you'll go crazy." — Gail Koehler, Cleveland Heights, Ohio

"Love and communication. You have to let them know how much they are really loved no matter what happens, and too often, due to working so much, parents don't have time to talk with their kids — and talking with them is essential." — Elaine Koopler, South Milwaukee, Wis.

"Responsibility and dedication. Raising children is a kind of unwritten contract: You agree to provide for their physical, emotional and psychological needs to the best of your ability, and it requires dedication to continue doing those things over the long haul." — Mike Dell, Colonia, N.J.

in inconsistent, confusing messages for kids. Today's children — and therefore their parents — face an unparalleled array of choices (Soccer or football? Dance or gymnastics? Cable or video?), contributing to a sense that every moment or every day must be filled, creating overcrowded schedules and high stress.

The exquisite demands of parenthood are, happily, not visible until it's too late to turn back. Once embarked on the journey, we must go forward in spite of our shocking realization that we aren't certain where the blind turns will show up, that the risks of failure are greater than we imagined.

Had I never attempted to reach the summit, I would have felt less anxiety and fatigue that day in the mountains. I would have had less stress, but my spirit would have been the poorer for missing the vista of the Rockies spreading out to the west as far as the eye could see.

To be a parent is to embark on a climb that holds the promise of an inspiring and glorious vision, a chance to see the world through God's eyes. That's worth whatever cost we have to pay.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

A parent is a work in process. That means that a significant part of a parent's definition of "parenthood" is likely to be based on actual parenting. It boils down to this: Parenthood is a whole lot different than people tend to think going into it.

Now, as I see it, dealing with this reality constructively — being open to the larger dimensions of parenting as they emerge before your eyes — is a mark of adulthood.

Parents are adults who accept the fact that they don't already know everything. As unanticipated, even mind-boggling challenges confront them, parents as adults:

- Respond reflectively, appropriately to what appears negative, and
- Don't overlook the fact that God may be beckoning to them through this very situation, with all its difficulty.

I've only been a parent for 24 years. But already I think I've learned something: Even if a situation involving a child produces high levels of frustration and anxiety for a parent, God is not absent there.

In parenthood, Catholicism's sacramental imagination comes into full view: As children, who are works in process, make works in process of their parents, God remains part of the process.

Date Set To Bless, Break Gound Of New L.A. Cathedral

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — Sept. 21 has been set as the date to bless and break the ground for the new Cathedral of Our Lady of the Angels in Los Angeles. The event will include a formal blessing ceremony plus presentations from cathedral architect Jose Rafael Moneo and others involved in the design and construction process. Cardinal Roger M. Mahony of Los Angeles, in a letter to priests of his archdiocese, asked parishes to send delegations to the ceremonies. "Since the site is some 5.53 acres, we will be able to accommodate a very large number of people," he said.

Cardinal Law To Represent Pope At Antilles Eucharistic Congress

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad and Tobago (CNS) — Cardinal Bernard Law of Boston will represent Pope John Paul II at the Antilles Eucharistic Congress to be held in Trinidad and Tobago. Planning for the April 17-20 congress began nearly two years ago and was officially launched by Archbishop Gordon Anthony Pantin of Port of Spain last year. The congress theme is "We, though many, form one body, because we partake of the one bread" (I Cor. 10:17).

Catholic Student Teacher Sues Over Denial Of Certification

BOSTON (CNS) — A student teacher in Massachusetts has brought a suit in federal court against Salem State College and Melrose public school officials, claiming he was denied teaching certification because of his Catholic religious convictions. Robert Hennessy says he has been unfairly punished for walking out of a fifth-grade art class at Horace Mann Elementary School in Melrose, where he was a student teacher. He left because he objected to the display of a parody of Leonardo da Vinci's "Last Supper" featuring an image of Marilyn Monroe in place of Christ. Following the April 1996 incident, Hennessy received notice from Salem State College, where he was an education major, that he was suspended from school and relieved of his student teaching assignment.

Stanislaus

Stanislaus was born in 1030. He was named bishop of Krakow in 1072. He publicly denounced King Boleslaus II of Poland for his cruel and unjust practices and for carrying off the wife of one of his noblemen. After the king made amends and again returned to his evil ways, Stanislaus excommunicated the leader. In defiance, the king murdered the bishop as he celebrated Mass. St. Stanislaus is patron of Poland. His feast is April 11.

Students Spend Break Working In Mountains

CULLOWHEE — While many college students spent their spring break at the beach or at home with family, groups from Allegheny College, Western Carolina, Lehigh and Duke universities spent their vacation time helping improve the quality of life for many elderly people in the mountains of North Carolina.

Southern Appalachian Building Aid (SABA) was started on WCU's campus in 1991, offering an alternative spring break program to colleges across the country. SABA continues to be supported by the WCU United Campus Ministry Association, an ecumenical group of Catholic, Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist students and campus ministers.

Sam Hale, the Presbyterian campus minister, arranges the work sites through the Jackson County Department on Aging's Project Care. Work activities vary according to the needs of the people. This year, volunteers built two ramps, replaced flooring, repaired roofs and completed other home improvements.

In addition to their labor during the day, the students are afforded leisure time as well. "We also try to expose them to the mountain culture that our area offers," said Gloria Schweizer, Catholic campus minister. "Each night after a hard day's work, the students are entertained by country fiddlers, Appalachian storytellers; they even learn to clog."

Duke University student Leslie Smith spoke highly of her spring break with SABA. "It is a great way to see the mountains, reflect on our gifts from God, meet other college students, and help others in need of safe housing," she said.

For more information about SABA, contact the WCU Catholic Campus Ministry Office, (704) 293-9374.

ocesan event for youth.

The theme was "Journeying in Relationships: Exploring Relationships with Self, God, Parents and Peers." Participation doubled from last year's celebration in Gastonia and included youth from 22 parishes.

"The day was meant (for youth and youth leaders) to gather and celebrate who we are as a Church and people, to build the self-esteem ... their sense of belonging and importance," said Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry, who coordinated the event with area youth leaders Robin Connolly, Kathleen Lewis and Kathy Bombell.

Blending active and interactive sessions, "Spring Fling" consisted of youth workshops on relationship building, games to become acquainted with one another, and youth leader workshops. A youth session led by Kotlowski focused on the importance of peer relationships. For adults, a workshop was available on how to start and expand a middle school youth ministry program.

During the outdoor "extreme games," which provided a break from the indoor workshops, the youth were challenged physically with activities such as walking on stilts, Sumo-styling wrestling and running a Velcro obstacle course.

Missy Taylor, a youth from Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, said the experience was a positive one. "It was a lot of fun. I enjoyed meeting people my age from different places," she said.

"It is wonderful for students to share Christian values," added Peg Ruble, central region faith formation coordinator.

Students Extend Their Hearts To Haiti

WINSTON-SALEM — Echoing the old proverb "charity begins at home," Bishop McGuinness High School sophomores in Mike Streich's World History classes collected almost $200 within five days to cover postage costs in conjunction with the Hearts for Haiti program. The program, sponsored by Our Lady of Mercy parish, involves sending needed goods to a Haitian orphanage.

Sophomores Liz Snow and Mac McCarthy spearheaded the students' participation in the project. Many students gave up lunches, adding the money that they would have spent to the collection drive. Classes began with prayers for the children of Haiti.

Snow and McCarthy recently presented BMHS Principal George Repass with a handmade plaque sent by the Haitian children in thanks. The plaque, portraying two hands clasped in friendship, now adorns the World History classroom as a reminder of what Streich calls the true definition of Catholic-Christian education.

BMHS sophomores Mac McCarthy and Liz Snow with Principal George Repass, center, and project coordinators Kathren O'Connell and Louise Sechler

"We have fun learning about Rousseau and Milton," the teacher said. "But our goal is to apply the lessons of history within the framework of a Christian world view — a universal absolute which governs our values and guides our morals. It is nothing less than following the example of Christ."

"What the kids did for the orphans in Haiti reflects something Bishop Curlin challenged us to do a year ago: 'Go into all the world and preach the Gospel; use words if you have to!'" Streich added.

Padre Pio Presentation

HENDERSONVILLE — Capuchin Father John Aurilia presents "Getting to Know Padre Pio" sponsored by St. Francis of the Hills Fraternity of the secular Franciscan Order. Father Aurilia, a fellow priest and friend of Padre Pio at Our Lady of Grace Monastery in San Giovanni Rotondo, Italy, will share his insight and knowledge.

Recruiting Underway For National Evangelization Team

ST. PAUL, Minn. — The recruiting season for the National Evangelization Teams (NET) is in full swing. The Catholic youth outreach, based in St. Paul, Minn., challenges young Catholics to love Christ and embrace the life of the Church. This year NET is recruiting 108 adults to serve nine months as NET team members.

Team members begin their year in late August with a five-week training program that includes daily prayer and participation in the sacraments, formation in Christian virtue, and instruction in retreat ministry skills. After training, team members are sent out in teams of 10-12 to facilitate evangelistic retreats for junior and high school students. "We're looking for single, Catholic men and women between 18-30 who demonstrate an active faith in Christ and a desire to bring the loving knowledge of Christ to youth," said Charlotte Patros, recruiting director for NET.

During the year each NET team will travel 25,000 miles, serve in seven to eight dioceses and reach out to 9,000 young people with the Good News of Christ. In NET's 15-year history, team members have conducted approximately 15,000 retreats for more than one million youth and hailed from almost every state and province in the United States and Canada, plus 16 foreign countries.

According to Patros, with more than 30 dioceses on the waiting list for an NET team, the challenge is recruiting enough team members to meet the demand. "We would field more teams if we could be assured of team members to fill the positions," Patros said.

For more information about the National Evangelization Teams, contact Charlotte Patros, (612) 450-6833 (phone); (612) 450-9984 (fax); or write to 110 Crusader Ave. W., W. St. Paul, MN 55118-4427.

Local students seeking a master's degree or certificate through Loyola Institute of Ministry (LIMEX) from Loyola University of New Orleans are shown at the conclusion of their first course. The group meets weekly for three hours at Charlotte Catholic High School with facilitators Connie Milligan and Joanna Case. This is the fourth group locally to undertake the arduous three-and-a-half year course of study required for a graduate degree in Religious Education or Pastoral Studies. Those who do not have an undergraduate degree receive a Certificate of Ministry Preparation. The program is sponsored by the Oratory of Rock Hill and promoted by the Charlotte Diocesan Office of Faith Formation. For information about future groups, Connie Milligan, (704) 364-3344 or Case, (704) 362-0013. Middle row: Judie Radovanic (St. Vincent de Paul); Elena Ziegler (St. Ann, Rock Hill); Stephanie Neely (St. Gabriel); Ann Rowe (St. Vincent de Paul); Gretchen Gantzer (St. Ann, Rock Hill). Back row: Clarence Fox (St. Alben, Davidson); Don Allen (St. Peter); Dick O'Donoghue (St. Vincent de Paul); Monica Friedman (St. Matthew); Carl Ross (St. James, Concord).

Dietzen's Q-And-A Book On Catholicism Out In New Edition

PEORIA, Ill. (CNS) — Father John J. Dietzen has collected more of his popular question-and-answer newspaper columns about the Catholic faith in a new edition of his book, "The New Question Box."

Subtitled "Catholic Life in a New Century," the 574-page paperback is the 11th printing and updating of the book since it first appeared in 1981.

An earlier edition won first place as best popular presentation of the Catholic faith in the 1992 Catholic Press Association book awards.

The latest revision was published recently by Guildhall Publishers in Peoria, which also put out the earlier versions.

Albina L. Aspell, founder and head of Guildhall, told Catholic News Service there has been a great deal of interest in the book.

The column, titled "Question Box," first appeared in The Catholic Post, newspaper of the Diocese of Peoria, when Father Dietzen was the paper's editor. Syndicated by CNS since 1975, the column is one of its most popular and is carried today by more than 50 Catholic papers.

In his preface to the new edition, Father Dietzen wrote, "Twenty-five years ago, the heaviest single topic in my mail concerned marriage, divorce and remarriage. Today the predominant subject is Holy Scripture."

The book, which answers more than 600 questions, is divided into 14 chapters.

General topics include: the Bible; the Church; Mass; Holy Communion; baptism and confirmation; marriage and family life; divorce, annulment, remarriage; right and wrong; penance and anointing of the sick; ecumenism; prayer and devotions; saints; and death and burial.

The final chapter, "Etcetera," contains questions on purgatory, the Gregorian calendar, Abraham Lincoln, devil worship, chain letters, and healing on television.

Pastor of Holy Trinity Parish in Bloomington, Ill., since 1983, Father Dietzen also has served the Peoria Diocese as director of the Office of Family Life and chairman of the Respect Life Board.

In addition to his column and pastoral duties, he has been a retreat master, teacher and lecturer.

The book is available at Catholic religious and bookstores. Readers also may order it prepaid for $15.95 plus $2.50 for handling from: Guildhall Publishers, P.O. Box 325, Peoria, IL 61651. Orders may be sent by fax to (309) 688-5985.

Father Dietzen's column appears in each issue of the Catholic News & Herald.

Seminarians Installed In Ministry Of Reader

Seventeen seminarians preparing for the priesthood at Saint Vincent Seminary were installed March 17 in the Ministry of the Reader by the Most Rev. Donald W. Trautman, S.T.D., S.S.L. (third from right), Bishop of the Diocese of Erie, who presided in the Saint Vincent Archabbey Basilica. Assisting him were the Rt. Rev. Douglas Nowicki, O.S.B. (second from right), Saint Vincent archabbot and chancellor; and the Very Rev. Thomas Acklin, O.S.B. (far right), rector of Saint Vincent Seminary. Receiving the ministry from the Diocese of Charlotte were, from left, David T. Brzoska and Luis Salvador Osorio. The primary function of the Reader is to read the Word of God in the liturgical assembly and assist the faithful to prepare for the worthy reception of the sacraments.

Case Helps Plan National Symposium On Christian Initiation

Joanna Case of St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte and Father Michael Clay of St. Thomas More Church in Chapel Hill recently planned a national symposium on Christian Initiation in a Rural Context entitled "Graced is the Land." The conference, held March 19-22 in Richmond, Va., gathered rural and initiation ministers, theologians and sociologists to explore key issues for initiation ministry in a rural context.

Presentations were made by Bishop John McGraith of the Diocese of Owensboro, Ky.; Dr. Gary Burkart, chair, Department of Sociology, Benedictine College, Atchison, Kan.; Brother David Andrews, CSC, executive director of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, Des Moines, Iowa; Sister Eleanor Suther, OSB, author of Seasons of Faith, and scholar on rural catechetics; and Father Clay. Participants included residents of the U.S. and Canada. John Butler, president of John Carroll High School in Washington, D.C., served as facilitator of the symposium sponsored by the North American Forum on the Catechumenate.

Case is a member of the board of directors and a national team presenter for the North American Forum. She has directed the Catechumenate at St. Patrick Cathedral since 1980, and teaches at Charlotte Catholic High School where she chairs the Religious Studies Department. Father Clay recently completed doctoral studies in Initiation in a Rural Context and is also a national team presenter for the North American Forum.

Joanna Case and Father Michael Clay

Case and Father Clay have presented several workshops on Rural and Christian Initiation as well as co-authoring articles for Catechumenate magazine. Case has an article on Rural Initiation in the current issue of Today's Parish magazine.

Their next collaboration will be a workshop at the Third International Convocation of the North American Forum in November.

Speaker Urges Lay Catholics To Recover Stronger Self-Image

MINNEAPOLIS (CNS) — Lay Catholics must recover a stronger self-image if they are to reclaim their role as leaders in the church, said a leader in pastoral ministry. The church is at a turning point that will dramatically alter the current church model, in which a hierarchy of religious leads and the laity follow, Gene Scapanski said during a workshop at the National Catholic Educational Association convention in Minneapolis. The change, that began with the Second Vatican Council, has been slow to progress because lay Catholics are just emerging from centuries of passivity within the church, said Scapanski, associate professor for systematic theology and pastoral ministry at St. Paul Seminary.

Catholic Schools Should Lead Students To Christ, Says Principal

MINNEAPOLIS (CNS) — Catholic high schools should lead students to Jesus Christ or shut their doors, said a principal from a Pennsylvania high school who intends to keep his doors wide open. The school must be committed to the vision of Christ, said Father David Tressler. He surmised that his staff at Bishop Hafey High School in Hazleton probably tires of his oft-repeated questions about the school's identity: "Are we being Christ? What would Jesus do?" Father Tressler told participants in a workshop at the National Catholic Educational Association April 1-4 in Minneapolis that he wrote a letter to the school staff saying, "If we are not being Christ, close it. Public schools do OK educationally."

Up To One-Third Of U.S. Children Sometimes Uninsured

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As many as one-third of the country's children were without health insurance for at least a month in 1995 and 1996, according to a new study by the Families USA Foundation. The Washington-based foundation specializing in health care issues said in a report released March 27 that the number of children who were uninsured and therefore at greater risk of having serious ailments go untreated is higher than usually reported. The report also found that most uninsured children are in two-parent households, with at least one working adult, and the parents also are likely to have no health care coverage for themselves. More than half the uninsured children were white, although Hispanic and black children were, percentage wise, more likely to lack insurance than whites.

Pastoral Planners Asked To Seek Better Preaching

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (CNS) — Improved preaching should be a significant goal of pastoral planning and development, Father James H. Provost told a national gathering of church planners in Las Vegas. "If we do not feed the faith, we will find it difficult to feed the rest of the ecclesial operation," said Father Provost, a professor of canon law at The Catholic University of America in Washington. About 140 diocesan planners and council development leaders attended the 24th annual convention of the Conference for Pastoral Planning and Council Development, held March 18-21 in Las Vegas.

Bishop Brunett Sends Greetings To Buddhists

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Bishop Alexander J. Brunett of Helena, Mont., chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs, has sent greetings to U.S. Buddhists for the feast of Vesakh. "With these heartfelt greetings and good wishes, I encourage Catholics and Buddhists," he said, "to maintain contact in various ways possible for the mutual understanding and respect, growth in our faiths and spiritual practices for the sake of all in need of justice and compassion." Vesakh is a feast honoring the life of Buddha, the name given to Gautama Siddhartha by his followers. Mahayana Buddhists observe it on April 8 and Theravada Buddhists on May 21 this year.

Court Asked To Reverse Stand On Programs In Religious Schools

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In a case to be heard April 16, the Supreme Court is reconsidering its 1985 ruling requiring that federally funded remedial education programs be held away from religious school campuses. The plaintiffs in Agostini vs. Felton and their supporters hope the justices will use the case to reverse their 1985 Aguilar vs. Felton ruling. In "amicus" or friend-of-the-court briefs, several religious groups including the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, the Knights of Columbus and the U.S. Catholic Conference argue that the cost of implementing the 1985 decision actually deprives children of needed remedial programs.

FOREST CITY — A Catholic presence had been established in Rutherford County as early as the 1840s, but the faithful had no church in which to worship together until more than a century later, when Immaculate Conception Church was dedicated in 1950.

Starting in the 1880s, churchgoers could travel to Shelby in Cleveland County to attend Mass in a mission church established by the Benedictines of Mary, Help of Christians Abbey (today commonly known as Belmont Abbey). About six Catholic families made the journey in those early years.

During the 1940s, Belmont Abbey's multi-county "nullius" was reduced to Gaston County itself, and the remaining parishes were placed under diocesan jurisdiction. Consequently, Msgr. Lawrence Newman, pastor of St. Mary Church in Shelby, led an effort to establish a mission in Rutherford County.

Local Catholics, with assistance from the Catholic Extension Society, began construction of a new church and named it in honor of the Immaculate Conception. Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh dedicated the structure in September 1950.

The church would remain a mission for the next 22 years, although the Immaculate Conception community welcomed its first resident priest, Father Kenneth Parker, in 1969. The congregation comprised 25 families at the time. Also, a mission community in Marion — later to establish Our Lady of the Angels Church — was placed under Father Parker's pastoral care.

In January 1972, the Diocese of Charlotte was formed. As such, Immaculate Conception Church became a parish. With continuing growth came the need for enhancements to the church facility. A rectory and parish hall complex was constructed, and Bishop Michael J. Begley dedicated the new building in December 1978. Our Lady of the Angels Church became a mission of St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton in 1981.

Immaculate Conception parish has continued to nurture and grow as a community of faith, through the 1980s and 90s. Father Gabriel Meehan, present pastor, has served in Forest City for much of that time, having been appointed pastor there in 1986.

During Father Meehan's pastorate, a special outreach to the Hispanic community has been developed. A parish goal of offering a Spanish Mass to parishioners was realized in May 1995, and later a CCD program in Spanish was begun as well. Immaculate Conception also serves as the host parish for the Hot Meals ecumenical kitchen ministry, and parishioners and clergy participate in such ministry work and activities as prison ministry, live productions of the Nativity and the Passion at Christmas and Easter, and, most recently, the Clositered Heart Franciscan Fraternity, directed by order member Brother Rufino of the parish.

A building committee has been established, and future plans for the parish include the eventual building of new facilities to accommodate the growing congregation.

With an eye on tomorrow and with memories of the past, Catholics in the Forest City area gather as Immaculate Conception parish, the only Catholic church in Rutherford County.

Serving Catholics in Western North Carolina in the Diocese of Charlotte

Former CCHS Students Meet Pope

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY, Va. — When three former students of Charlotte Catholic High School left their Hampden-Sydney College dorm rooms for spring break, little did they know that a private meeting with Pope John Paul II awaited them.

Thanks in part to Father Joe Metzger, pastor of St. Theresa Church in nearby Farmville, Va., Matt Bloch, Sean Kelly and David Bradin — along with seven other Hampden-Sydney students — met with the pontiff during their seven-day visit to Italy in March. The group was guided by Father Metzger, who attended seminary in Rome and whose friends include several clergy members who work at the Vatican.

The priest visits Rome regularly, and this time invited interested Hampden-Sydney students to join him. In addition to their Vatican visit, the students also toured Assisi and Florence.

Father Metzger arranged with Hampden-Sydney's political science department to grant the travelers one credit hour for presenting a project, "The Vatican as a Nation-State," designed specifically for this trip. Participants interviewed cardinals, archbishops and other Vatican representatives whose focal points — justice and peace, the laity, Christian unity, and education among them — compose the ministerial heart of the Catholic Church. The students will present their observations in late April.

"These cardinals and archbishops gave us quality time," said Father Metzger. "They explained the role of the Church throughout the entire world. It was brilliant. I fully give credit to the Holy Spirit."

Led by Archbishop Claudio Maria Celli, secretary of the Administration of the Patrimony of the Holy See, Father Metzger and the students met privately with Pope John Paul II for about 15 minutes in the apostolic palace. The pope conversed with the group about their studies at Hampden-Sydney, asked whether their visit to Rome was a pleasurable one and offered rosaries to each member as gifts.

The 1995 graduates of CCHS expressed wonder and respect when describing their meeting with the head of the Roman Catholic Church. "I think he is the most powerful man in the world," said Bloch. "His opinion means something to people, even if they're not Catholic or Christian. They listen to what he says."

"It was an unbelievable experience," Kelly added. "I believe we were all a little anxious, waiting for the pope to come out. But once he appeared, the anxiety was gone."

During their journey, the group stood upon the pope's balcony on the facade of the Basilica of St. Peter as well. They also viewed Pope Paul III's chapel, which houses Michelangelo's last two paintings, in addition to other stops not ordinarily seen by visitors. "We were lucky to do what we did," chuckled Kelly. "That's some stuff that you won't see on a tour."

Still, being introduced to the pope in an intimate setting was a central highlight for the students. "It was an extraordinarily small crowd for an audience," said Bradin. "We were in awe, basically. It was just incredible, and the pope seemed really interested to meet with us."

The students have returned to their studies with an awareness that the events of this year's spring break were quite unique. "It was a once-in-a-lifetime thing, what happened there," said Bloch.

Father Metzger conveyed optimism that a lesson of faith was indeed learned by the students. "I hope they realized that from the catholic — little 'c' — perspective, everything we do has global consequences," he said. "Through meeting with these various people, (the students) could see just what the Catholic Church does for all people everywhere. What it showed was just how connected we really are."

Pope Pleads For Forgiveness Among Sarajevo's Ethnic Groups

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (CNS) — In an intense, historic visit to war-shattered Sarajevo, Pope John Paul II beseeched rival ethnic groups to find forgiveness in their hearts and a peace that goes deeper than political accords.

"The time has come to resume a sincere dialogue of brotherhood, accepting and offering forgiveness: The time has come to overcome the hatred and vengeance which still hinder the re-establishment of genuine peace in Bosnia-Herzegovina," the pope said April 13 at a meeting with Muslim representatives.

It was a message he emphasized over and over in talks to civil and religious leaders and to his own flock. He began the visit April 12 with the cry, "Never again war! Never again hatred and intolerance!" and repeated it before departing the city's shell-pocked airport 25 hours later.

Unprecedented security by Bosnian and international forces may have prevented a disaster. A few hours before the pope arrived, police discovered and deactivated 23 mines and a radio-commanded detonator under a bridge along the papal motorcade route.

That prompted security officials to board the papal plane after it touched down and advise the pope to enter the city by helicopter. But the pontiff decided to ride down "Sniper's Alley" in his popemobile, as planned, so people could see him.

In the end, the visit went off without incident, and Sarajevo residents and thousands who had come from across the country greeted the pope warmly. Many said they would not forget his frequent appeals for Sarajevo during the three-year siege of the Bosnian capital.

A 20-year-old Muslim woman who waited outside the cathedral to catch a glimpse of the pontiff, a short distance from where her grandparents were killed by a grenade during the war, said: "I'm here because the pope is a great guy. He is generous and a great humanist."

The highlight of the visit was an outdoor Mass in Sarajevo's sports stadium, celebrated amid snow squalls and a bitter wind that at one point threatened to blow away the papal altar cloth. The pope finished the Mass as an aide held an umbrella against the driving snow.

Few, if any, of the 50,000 in attendance left early, however. They heard the pope deliver an impassioned appeal that linked national reconciliation with the very roots of Christianity.

Pope Calls For Commitment To Peace And Reconciliation During Visit To Sarajevo, from page 1

"The peace that Jesus gives to his disciples is not the peace imposed by conquerors on the conquered, by the stronger on the weaker. It does not receive its legitimacy by force of arms but, on the contrary, is born of love," he said in a sermon.

"Let us forgive and ask for forgiveness," he said. "We cannot fail to take the difficult but necessary pilgrimage of forgiveness, which leads to a profound reconciliation."

The pontiff recalled the many dead of Sarajevo and Bosnia, mourned by mothers, widows and orphaned children. The Mass site was bordered on three sides by cemeteries, where thousands of new, white crosses marked the war's toll.

The pope never explicitly mentioned the Dayton peace accords, which in the view of many Bosnians stopped the fighting but effectively sanctioned the results of ethnic cleansing policies. Instead he urged a careful rebuilding of peace through "the patience of small steps" and the rejection of "unbridled nationalism, the cause of so much sorrow."

Many in the Mass crowd waved Croatian flags, reflecting the fact that most of Bosnia's Catholics are ethnic Croats.

In meetings with representatives of Bosnia's Orthodox, Muslim and Jewish communities, the pope aimed to encourage a spirit of interreligious cooperation that seemed to flicker on and off during recent years. Even for the pontiff, however, the religious leaders did not get together at the same event: Serbian Orthodox Metropolitan Nikolaj of Dabar, Bosnia, citing travel plans, notified the Vatican two days beforehand that he would have to encounter the pontiff separately.

When they did meet, the two embraced warmly and the pope asked about losses to the Orthodox community during the fighting. The metropolitan said his community was shrinking, and he spoke sadly of an increase in suicides among the elderly.

In a prepared speech the pope urged Catholics and Orthodox to "join forces" and offer an example of reconciliation to the international community. Both churches, he said, are well aware that real peace starts with faith and "cannot be given by the world."

To Muslim leaders later in the day, the pope stressed that a true peace is an "active peace which enables people to live and work together."

The point is an important one in Sarajevo, where Catholic leaders have increasingly complained of "Muslimization" of the local culture and their own marginalization in jobs, housing and education.

In an encounter with the three members of Bosnia's ruling council, the pope said that all Bosnian refugees must be guaranteed their right to recover their homes. With several hundred thousand still displaced, that is a crucial issue in postwar Bosnia.

In his pastoral events, the pope encouraged the minority Catholic community to stand up for its rights and its historic place in Bosnia's multiethnic society.

Pope John Paul II waves from his popemobile as he arrives for an outdoor Mass at Sarajevo's Kosevo stadium April 13. The pope, brushing aside an apparent threat to his life in Sarajevo, called for forgiveness among Bosnia's wartime religious foes.

To bishops, he cited their duty to preach respect for everyone and mutual forgiveness of faults. But they must also denounce violence, unmask injustice and "defend with every legitimate means" their communities from anti-Catholic intimidation or attacks, he said. His words were an apparent reference to the bombing of several Catholic church buildings in recent weeks.

At a prayer service at the Sarajevo cathedral, the pope brought a votive lamp of peace that had burned in St. Peter's Basilica at the Vatican since early 1994, when Bosnian fighting raged. A crowd of priests, nuns and seminarians, some with tears in their eyes, cheered the pope and interrupted his talk with frequent applause, especially when he mentioned church martyrs of the war.

"May the blood they shed give renewed vigor to the church, which seeks only to be able freely to preach in Bosnia-Herzegovina the Gospel of eternal salvation, with respect for every human being, every culture and every religion," he said.

He listened as Sarajevo Cardinal Vinko Puljic described the shrinking dimensions of the church in central Bosnia, where some two-thirds of the Catholic population has been displaced by the war. The pope gently encouraged those who have remained to stay and rebuild their religious community.

But he said Catholics should primarily be involved in rebuilding the larger society and must be willing to reflect morally on their own past actions.

"Dear friends, the time has come for a profound examination of conscience. The time has come for a decisive commitment to reconciliation and peace," he said.

Outside the cathedral, the pope plunged into a crowd that had awaited his arrival. Among those who got a handshake was Lynne Robustelli, a San Francisco Catholic who has worked with an Italian relief agency in Sarajevo for several years.

"People here of all religions have an intense interest in the pope's presence, because they believe he can renew the interest of the international community in a multiethnic Bosnia," she said.

Before leaving Bosnia, the pope presented the John XXIII International Peace Prize and gave checks of $50,000 each to four humanitarian organizations run by Catholics, Jews, Muslims and Orthodox in Bosnia.

Eastern N.C. Choir To Sing in Rome

GREENVILLE, N.C. — A choir representing the Catholic community of Greenville, N.C., will present concerts for the city of Rome and Pope John Paul II's papal audience in June.

On June 15, the choir will sing at the Chair Altar in the Basilica of St. Peter during the 10:30 a.m. principal liturgy. At 9 p.m., the group will present a concert of sacred music at St. Ignatius Church.

The choir will also sing for Pope John Paul II's June 18 papal audience at the Vatican. A concert reflecting the pieces to be sung in Rome will be presented at 5 p.m. on May 4 at St. Peter Church in Greenville. The concert is free and open to the public.

While in Italy, the choir will also partake in a pilgrimage for peace. Non-choir individuals are invited to join in the journey, which departs from Raleigh-Durham International Airport on June 12 for an 11-day tour of Rome, Vatican City, Naples, Capri, Assisi, Florence, Milan and Lake Maggiore. Highlights will include celebrating Masses at the Passionists' general motherhouse in Rome, the Basilica of St. Francis of Assisi, and the Church of the Holy Trinity in Florence. The group will return to Raleigh on June 22.

The choir is composed of parishioners from the East Carolina University Catholic Student Center and St. Gabriel, St. Peter and St. Elizabeth churches. Mary Muzzarelli of St. Peter parish is director.

For more information on the Greenville Catholic Community's tour to Italy, call Mary Muzzarelli, (919) 758-5621.

Good Shepherd

"I am the good shepherd. A good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep. A hired man, who is not a shepherd and whose sheep are not his own, sees a wolf coming and leaves the sheep and runs away, and the wolf catches and scatters them. This is because he works for pay and has no concern for the sheep. I am the good shepherd, and I know mine and mine know me." (John 10:11-18)

Immaculate Conception Breaks Ground For New Church

HENDERSONVILLE — Ground was broken April 12 for a new church home for Immaculate Conception parishioners.

The $3-million plus facility will seat more than 750 people and help accommodate the church's growing family into the next century, according to Capuchin Father John Aurilia, pastor.

"We want to house all our parish activities under one roof," said Father Aurilia, who officiated at the groundbreaking ceremony with the Very Reverend Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte. "A family gathering center and additional administrative space will help us better serve our Catholic Church family here in Hendersonville."

The new church, which will be built on the current church's gravel parking lot, will be constructed over the next 18-21 months. Estimated completion date is late 1998.

Parishioners Marsh Caserio and Charlie Mackin are co-chairing the church's Capital Fund Development Committee. Neale Orrok is serving as chairman of the Building Committee.

"The building program began over four years ago, with the initiation of a Capital Funds Campaign of Immaculate Conception parishioners," said Father Aurilia. "We are blessed with the response to date which made the groundbreaking possible."

Details of the design evolved from parishioners' input at a series of meetings in November 1995 and December 1996 which guided the Building Committee to make this new structure a design inspired by church members.

"The new church will have two levels — a worship sanctuary for more than 750 parishioners on the upper level, and our administrative offices and a family center on the lower level," explained Father Aurilia. "We have also planned a much-needed chapel for 100 worshipers on the lower level."

The main sanctuary's exterior roof line will resemble the current soaring roof lines of the 1974 church. A brick exterior will combine with large gracefully arched windows along each side of the church.

The design features of the sanctuary were selected to provide some visual continuity with the present church, features that inspired many parishioner comments during the design program for the new facility.

All church administration functions will be combined in the office suite on the lower level. A family center — the St. Francis Gathering Center — will occupy the center portion of the lower level flanked by a number of meeting rooms and a full-service kitchen. The new facility will also have a second worship space — the St. Mary of the Angel Chapel — designed to accommodate up to 100 worshipers for Mass.

During construction, parishioners and the church's staff will continue to use the existing church on the corner of Church St. and Seventh Avenue and the church's administrative building on Sixth Avenue. When construction is complete and the new building dedicated, the existing 1954 church and its 1974 expansion — as well as the office building — will be razed, and space converted to landscaped parking areas for parishioners.

Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor of the Diocese of Charlotte, officiated as ground was broken for a new church home for Immaculate Conception parishioners April 12. The new facility will house more than 750 worshipers in the sanctuary and will also include offices, a family center, meeting rooms, a kitchen and a 100-seat chapel.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Mary's Cooperation With Christ Unique In Forming Events Leading To Salvation, Pope Says

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we are considering her cooperation in the redemptive sacrifice of Christ. All Christians are called to cooperate with God as his fellow workers (cf. 1 Cor 3:9) in spreading the fruits of the redemption accomplished on Calvary. But the Second Vatican Council reminds us that Mary's cooperation with Christ, unlike that of other Christians, remains "completely unique" ("Lumen Gentium," 61), since it forms a part of the very events by which her son achieved our salvation.

The basis of this unique cooperation is Mary's divine motherhood and her sharing in Jesus' life, culminating in her presence at the foot of the cross. In God's plan, Mary is the "woman" (cf. Jn 2:4, 19:26), the New Eve, united to the New Adam in restoring humanity to its original dignity. Her cooperation with her son continues for all time in the universal motherhood which she enjoys in the order of grace. Trusting in this maternal cooperation, let us turn to Mary, imploring her help in all our needs.

I extend a warm welcome to the English-speaking visitors, especially those from England, Scotland, Australia, Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, Japan, Canada and the United States. My special greeting goes to the international group of novice masters of the Society of the Divine Word. Upon all of you I cordially invoke the joy and peace of the risen Christ.

To Know Christ, Know Jewish Scriptures, Pope Tell Commission

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The full significance of Christ's incarnation can be grasped only with a knowledge of and respect for the Jewish Scriptures, Pope John Paul II said. Ignoring Jesus' Jewish roots and the whole history of God's relationship with the Israelites, "Christ would appear like a meteor which accidentally plunged to earth and lacks a connection with human history," the pope said April 11. Pope John Paul spoke of the importance of the Old Testament for Christians during an audience with members of the Pontifical Biblical Commission.

Dating Isn't Marriage

Over the past four years, four young, unmarried women of my acquaintance became pregnant and had babies.

All four began their pregnancies upset, yet firm in their decisions not to abort.

All four also had unswerving support from their families. All four now are struggling, tired, yet proud and doting mothers.

These young women have one other thing in common. All began their pregnancies on good terms with the fathers of their children, confident about the future of the guys' support and their relationships.

All four are now sorely disappointed. None of the relationships survived. Visitation to the children is rare.

How things change.

This isn't a male-bashing piece. There are many young men who take responsibility for the children they father, although not nearly enough, as every study of teen pregnancy shows.

No, I'm sharing these stories as one more caution against idealism, romanticism and unrealistic expectations in the area of sexual intimacy and romantic relationships.

Being in love is pleasant, to be sure, but it also distorts a person's ability to see reality as it is. Relationships that last may begin as romantic whirlwinds, but they endure beyond that beginning when people decide to love each other as they really are, not as projections of a daydream.

Sexual intimacy just adds to the distortion. The physical pleasure of such intimacy has the uncanny power to trick people into thinking they are also intimate emotionally, spiritually and intellectually with the person they're sleeping with.

This set of feelings is often nothing more than an attractive, addictive cover over an empty shell of a relationship.

These feelings heighten the risk of romantic self-delusion. People think: "We're perfectly suited, our relationship has sprung from eternity and nothing can tear us apart. Nothing bad can happen to us. Breaking up, for example. It can't happen to us."

Relationships that last may begin as romantic whirlwinds, but they endure beyond that beginning when people decide to love each other as they really are, not as projections of a daydream.

physical side of their relationship take over. It becomes the focus of their time together. It might even keep them dating, even though they confide to their friends that they don't like their boyfriend or girlfriend that much.

"Oh, but that can't happen to us," a couple may say. "We really love each other. We can handle anything we do just fine. We're really mature about it."

But are they mature about it? Would they continue seeing the person they're dating if they had a chaste relationship? Think about it.

And then there is pregnancy. One more thing that "will never happen to us."

This brings us full circle. Teen romantic relationships are susceptible to fantasies of effortless bliss. "We won't break up; we'll keep sex under control; we won't get pregnant; he'll always be there for me and the baby." It's amazing how one thing seems to lead to another.

Fantasy can be nice but reality will intrude. It's a lesson the four girls I mentioned had to learn the hard way.

A View From Hallowed Ground

It's been said many times that you never really understand people until you have walked in their shoes.

Sometimes just standing in the same spot, looking at the same scene that someone else has known, can give you a new perspective. I thought about that when I read recently that Robben Island off the coast of Cape Town, South Africa has been opened to visitors. Only gazelles, ostriches and penguins live there now. But over the centuries it served as a leper colony, an insane asylum, an army base. Most notoriously the island held non-white political prisoners during that country's rule of apartheid until it was closed in 1991.

Nelson Mandela described it as "the harshest, most iron-fisted outpost in the South African penal system." He should know. He was one of those prisoners and spent 18 years there.

Now he is the nation's president and people come to see the bleak island and the gray cell that was barely large enough to hold him. They first board one of the small, crowded boats that was used to transport prisoners. Then they transfer to equally dilapidated buses for the hour-long ride to the deserted compound.

There are no prisoners now to break rocks endlessly, mindlessly in the limestone quarries. No men forced to clean up their own blood after being beaten. No more Africans or "coloreds" of mixed races to subsist on bad food. There are no inmates to spend the coldest winter nights with a single blanket. Or wait six months at a time to receive a single letter from home.

Neither are there souvenir or snack stands. Most visitors come as pilgrims rather than tourists. One remarked, "It sure isn't a comfortable or fancy tour. And there isn't a lot to see, either. But that's not really what it's about, is it? It's something you do because you need to."

Because you need to. We need to.

We all have things in life we need to do and places we need to go. Most of them arise from the simple realities of day to day living. But now and then urgency comes from a spiritual compulsion. We seek a connection with something beyond us so that we can make sense of another point in time.

I live and work on an island half a world away from Robben Island, the island of Manhattan. If you travel to the southern tip of Manhattan you can board a boat to a far tinier plot of land in the harbor — Ellis Island. Millions of Americans have ancestors who first set foot, probably a badly shod foot at that, on U.S. soil there. Their papers were processed, their bodies checked for disease and they waited. They waited, these poor immigrants from dozens of nations to find out if their dreams would turn into reality. If they could live their lives with an opportunity for justice and a future with possibilities. The worry of scraping together passage money, leaving the familiar behind and facing the dangers of an ocean-crossing was surpassed only by the fear that they would be rejected.

It is natural to want a better life. God wants it for us. Again and again people put themselves on the line to take the risk. They suffer, they fight, some die. Many live to keep fighting for a chance, for hope.

Stand on Robben Island or on Ellis Island and your viewpoint, however briefly, changes. "No man is an island, entire of itself" wrote John Donne almost four hundred years ago. And no one of us stands on whatever speck of ground without standing in the place of those who went before.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Standing and Kneeling at Mass

Q. Would you explain where the practice of standing during the consecration originated?

Some churches in our area follow this practice, but is it done anywhere else?

I have attended churches in Chicago, Colorado, Indiana and Florida, and the congregation kneels reverently from the "Holy, Holy" until after receiving Communion.

A. The response to your question may not be, at least in part, the one you expect.

If you have traveled in other parts of the world (Europe, for example), and seen churches built in past Christian centuries, you must have noticed that many of these older churches do not even have kneelers.

As I have explained previously, during many centuries Christians never knelt at Mass.

For one long period of the church's history, it was forbidden to kneel at Mass on Sundays and during the Easter season. Standing was obligatory.

Congregations in many countries and dioceses basically continue that tradition, which reflects of course a different vision of the participation and presence of the assembled faithful for the celebration of the Eucharist.

Some ancient prayers of Mass, which we still use, reflect this tradition, speaking of the "circumstantes," the ones standing around the altar, sharing in the offering of the eucharistic sacrifice.

General church law is that people stand from the prayer over the gifts (said by the priest just before the preface of the Eucharistic Prayer) until the end of Mass.

Exceptions are that they sit after Communion if there is time for meditation and should "kneel at the consecration unless prevented by lack of space, large numbers or other reasonable cause" (General Instruction of the Roman Missal, 21).

In 1969, the American bishops adapted this rule for the United States, providing that people should kneel from after the Sanctus until after the Amen at the end of the Eucharistic Prayer (Appendix to the General Instruction, 21).

Unless bishops of other countries adapt the missal in a similar way, the regulations for the universal church which I indicated above would apply to them.

Q. My son's godparents were married to each other at the time of his baptism. The next year she left her husband for another man and moved to another state.

Is there any formal way my son could have a new godparent? My sister-in-law just entered the Catholic faith and is interested in being his godmother.

A. It is understandable that you wish someone for your son who is more likely to care for his spiritual welfare and be a support through the years.

The Vatican has acknowledged that very situation, allowing the bishop of a diocese to designate a substitute spon-

Pope Embodies Spirit Of Council

In a recent issue, Father John Catoir asks whether Pope John Paul II has implemented Vatican II as fully as the Council fathers expected. Just asking this question represents a serious distortion of the situation.

The second Vatican Council is perhaps the first council to be followed by a crisis in which its teachings have been distorted into meanings contrary to their original intention. When the Holy Father defines himself as a "restorative" pope, he refers to going back to the original mind of the Council fathers.

If anyone knows this "mind" it is the former archbishop of Krakow, Poland, who disagreed with the non-reformist attitudes of other Polish bishops while attending the Council. He was a positive-minded activist who was nonetheless convinced of the impact of sin on human history and society.

The Church needs to be liberated from the distortion that has often been confused with the Council, and the best way to accomplish this is a return to the real Council and its real spirit.

Pope John Paul sums up this spirit: "The Church is the guardian of the fullness of God's truth, and although the dignity of the human being ... should be exalted, each person must follow the teachings of the Church to reach the truth." We can follow our holy and learned Holy Father to Jesus with confidence, certain that he is, indeed, implementing the spirit of Vatican II.

Faithful Must Be Discerning

To the Editor:

This is in response to Father Edgar Holden's letter in which he wondered if, since Scott Hahn was referred to as a "communicator of ... orthodox Catholicism," there might be a "brand of Catholicism that is not orthodox."

A 1994 Time magazine poll showed that 73 percent of American Catholics feel they can make up their own minds on issues such as birth control, and 89 percent believe it is possible to disagree with the pope and still be a "good Catholic." The number of Catholics who do not agree with the Church's position on abortion, pre-marital sex, divorce and remarriage, clerical celibacy and the ban on women in the priesthood is, sadly, equally high.

It is a tragic sign of our times that faithful Catholics (those who love the Church as their spiritual mother and find joy and peace in being obedient to her teachings) must discern who or what is "orthodox" in order to know which lectures or conferences to attend, which books or magazines to read, or which TV programs to watch that are in accord with the mind of the Church.

Even as early as the 2nd century, St. Ignatius of Antioch found it necessary to warn Christians to be wary of those who were "wolves plausible enough to ensnare the pilgrims of God" and used the word "catholic" to identify those who were remaining faithful to the Church founded by Christ.

Domingo De Pascua: Mensaje y Bendición "Urbi Et Orbi"

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).—Juan Pablo II presidió la concelebración eucarística solemne en la mañana del 30 de marzo en la Plaza de San Pedro, y después leyó su Mensaje de Pascua e impartió la Bendición "Urbi et Orbi" que da dos veces al año. Esta Bendición, "a la ciudad y al mundo", la da también en Navidad.

Debido a un pequeño retraso al comienzo de la Misa, el Santo Padre dio el Mensaje y la Bendición desde la zona del altar en la Plaza de San Pedro en vez de la logia central de la Basílica, como es su costumbre.

Damos a continuación algunos extractos de ese Mensaje, que se publicó en inglés, castellano, francés, alemán y portugués:

"Me dirijo a vosotros, cristianos! Me dirijo a vosotros, católicos, ortodoxos, anglicanos, protestantes! Me dirijo a vosotros con la estupenda noticia: Cristo ha resucitado! (...) Cristo, víctima inocente de la Cruz, nos ha reconciliado a nosotros, pecadores, con el Padre".

"El hombre que lucha contra el mal, que se enfrenta de continuo a la muerte, que trata de defender y salvar la vida de toda amenaza, este hombre se detenga, se quede hoy atónito. Pues hoy la muerte ha sido derrotada".

"Proclamad con nosotros que Cristo es la esperanza también de quienes ven la existencia y el futuro amenazados por la guerra o el odio, especialmente en el corazón del continente africano. (...) La fuerza del Resucitado sostenga a quienes trabajan por consolidar la paz y la democracia, logradas con frecuencia a costa de tantos sacrificios, como en la región de los Balcanes y, especialmente, en la querida Albania.

"El amor de Cristo, vencedor del pecado y la muerte, otorgue a todos la audacia del perdón y la reconciliación, sin los cuales no existen soluciones dignas del hombre: pensamiento que nos lleva especialmente a las personas que en Lima, Perú, están retenidas como rehenes desde hace largos meses. Que les sea finalmente concedida la tan suspirada libertad!

"Que puedan participar de la alegría pascual todos nuestros hermanos en la fe que, en diversas partes del mundo, son víctimas de ataduras o persecuciones. Lamentablemente, ellos no pueden celebrar esta fiesta de la Redención como hubieran deseado. (...) Cristo está con ellos, la Iglesia está con ellos! (...) En El nosotros podemos vencer hoy las fuerzas del mal. El ofrece a todos una vida nueva; gracias a El cada uno puede, desde ahora, abrirse con amor a los hermanos en la acogida, en el servicio, en el perdón".

Al final de su Mensaje, el Papa deseó a los fieles una Feliz Pascua en 47 idiomas.

Informe dice que espías cubanos se infiltran en grupos de Iglesia

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS) — Un informe del Vaticano dijo que, con la Iglesia de Cuba ganando en popularidad y el gobierno perdiéndola, las autoridades de allá han empezado a infiltrarse en los grupos eclesiales con espías.

El informe decía que los propios obispos cubanos se sintieron sorprendidos y complacidos por el aumento de la simpatía hacia la Iglesia, pero también preocupados de que la misión de la Iglesia pudiera tomar un sesgo abiertamente político.

El informe fue publicado a mediados de marzo por Fides, una agencia de información de la Congregación para la Evangelización de los Pueblos. El mismo delineaba el entusiasmo cada vez mayor entre los católicos y no católicos, a medida que el Papa Juan Pablo II se prepara para visitar a la nación isleña a principios del año próximo.

Especialmente los jóvenes están congestionando las iglesias los domingos, motivados en parte por la curiosidad y en parte por el respeto y el interés hacia el Pontífice, a quien los cubanos ven como un defensor sólido de los derechos humanos, decía el informe.

"La simpatía cada vez mayor hacia la Iglesia y la crítica abierta en aumento (contra el gobierno) preocupan a la policía, que ha decidido re-establecer los controles y la infiltración de espías y soplones en los grupos eclesiales", decía el informe.

El informe citaba a un estudiante universitario cubano no identificado como que había dicho que el gobierno había quedado asombrado por la desconfianza general entre la población, pero que estaba haciendo todo lo posible para retener su antiguo poder. El informe del Vaticano agregó una crítica del Presidente Fidel Castro, que se reunió con el Papa en noviembre último.

"El propio Castro, que durante su visita a Italia sonaba abierto hacia la posibilidad de instalar la democracia y poner en libertad a los presos políticos, a su regreso a La Habana ha reiterado su lealtad a los principios marxistas-leninistas", decía el informe.

El informe continuaba diciendo que había un debate franco cada vez mayor entre los cubanos sobre los problemas del país, y una crítica más áspera del gobierno, que «a nombre de la dictadura ha producido sólo fracasos económicos y humanos».

El informe mencionó la situación de los alimentos y la atención médica que empeoran en la isla. Según los trabajadores de hospitales, hay aumentos de la ceguera relacionados con la deficiencia de vitaminas, y de una forma de parálisis ocasionada por la desnutrición. Aún las medicinas corrientes, tales como la aspirina, han llegado a ser raras, terminaba diciendo el informe.

Mensaje del Padre

Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M.

“Alégrense, les traigo la obra de salvación”

Hermanos y hermanas:

En este tiempo pascual, reflexionamos muchas cosas. Tratamos de darnos cuenta que Jesús ha conquistado el poder de la muerte y del pecado en nuestras vidas. Compartimos su victoria. Buscamos que la presencia resucitada de Jesús esté constantemente en nosotros, dándonos su espíritu diariamente para fortalecernos en la tarea de la Resurrección: anunciar, ser testigos de la Buena Nueva.

En el relato de San Mateo sobre la Resurrección, vemos una experiencia muy tierna entre Jesús y las mujeres que van al sepulcro. Dice el Evangelio que Jesús salió a su encuentro y las saludó. Las saludó.

Esto quiere decir hermanos y hermanas que Jesús llegó con este saludo: «Alégrense, les traigo la obra de la salvación». Y las mujeres, dice Mateo, «se acercaron, se agarraron a sus pies y lo adoraron». Este acto de agarrar los pies de Jesús representa una expresión de una fe afectuosa. Es, a la vez, la expresión de una fe temerosa, temerosa de perder a Jesús. ¡Cuántas veces en nuestras vidas, experimentamos algo parecido! Sentimos la necesidad de agarrarnos de él y no dejarlo ir. Quiero decir que, como estas mujeres, todavía no hemos dicho completamente nuestro «Sí» a la resurrección de Jesús; reconocer que El está siempre a nuestro lado a pesar de nuestra poca fe, esperanza y amor.

En esta época de la Pascua, yo pido a Dios una sola cosa para toda la Comunidad Hispana: esa misma fe afectuosa de las mujeres que van al sepulcro. Una fe llena de amor que busca agarrarse de Jesús, no de sus pies, sino de su corazón lleno de amor, de ternura, de cariño para con todos los seres humanos, especialmente los menos afortunados que nosotros. Que el Señor nos conceda la gracia de estar siempre a los pies de Cristo, contemplando su corazón misericordioso que nos fortalece para anunciar, ser testigos de la Resurrección en la Comunidad y en todos los ambientes de nuestras vidas. ¡Felices Pascuas!

Lunes de Pascua: Regina Coeli desde Castelgandolfo

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO, 31 MAR 1997 (VIS).—Antes de rezar el 31 de marzo el Regina Coeli desde Castelgandolfo, el Papa recordó que ese lunes “tradicionalmente se llama lunes del Ángel, porque en el acontecimiento extraordinario de la Resurrección, los ángeles aparecen, junto a las mujeres y a los Apóstoles, como protagonistas significativos”.

“Los ángeles, además de en la Resurrección, están presentes con discreción en los momentos más importantes de la vida de Jesús. (...) Están al servicio de los designios de Dios en los momentos fundamentales de la historia de la salvación”.

Juan Pablo II indicó que «el Señor, al poner junto a nosotros a su ángel, quiere acompañar todos los momentos de nuestra existencia con su amor y con su protección, para que podamos combatir la buena batalla de la fe, y testimoniar sin temor y sin dudar nuestra adhesión a El, muerto y resucitado por nuestra redención”.

Después de rezar el Regina Coeli, el Santo Padre dijo: «La alegría pascual se ha enturbiado por las noticias sobre la tragedia del canal de Otranto (Italia), donde se ha hundido un barco lleno de prófugos albaneses. Os invito a rezar por los que han encontrado la muerte en el mar Adriático y os exhorto a la participación solidaria en el dolor desgarrador por los que sufren la pérdida de sus seres queridos».

“Aliento cordialmente la labor de rescate que llevan a cabo en la región de la Apulia la Caritas y varias instituciones y personas a favor de los prófugos. Y deseo también que se multipliquen los esfuerzos para llevar a Albania ayuda de primera necesidad, pero también orden social y paz, así como colaboración para un relance de las actividades productivas, para que la querida nación albanesa pueda recuperarse y construir su propio futuro en la concordia y en la serenidad”.

Segundo Mandamiento

“No pronunciarás el nombre de Dios en vano”

El segundo Mandamiento se refiere al deber que atañe a todas las personas de respetar el santo nombre de Dios. Nos manda, pues, glorificarlo, alabar, bendecirlo, proclamarlo con fe y amor. Nos manda evitar de pronunciar su nombre de manera indecorosa y de usarlo con fines inconvenientes. Respetar el nombre de Dios es respetar el insondable misterio de Dios mismo y todas las realidades sagradas que con este misterio se relacionan.

Actitudes equivocadas. Además de que se insulta a Dios con todo falso juramento y con todo voluntario incumplimiento de un voto o promesa hecho a El, se le insulta también con la blasfemia, que consiste en expresiones de odio, de desprecio, de reproche, de desafío a Dios, a Jesucristo, a los santos, a la Iglesia. Se le insulta con el pésimo abuso del nombre de Dios en ritos satánicos y prácticas supersticiosas. La falta de respeto al nombre de Dios constituye una de las señales más claras de la presencia del mal en el mundo.

Actitud cristiana. Por la fe y por la gracia, los cristianos profesamos y experimentamos que el nombre de Dios es santo y santificante. Por ello, lo invocamos con frecuencia y con devoción. Hablamos de él con suma reverencia y procuramos testimoniarlo con una adecuada conducta diaria, interna y externa, sobre todo en la iglesia, cuando participamos en las celebraciones sagradas y cuando oramos. Por eso, de alguna forma buscamos reparar las innumerables ofensas a Dios que hoy difunden ampliamente, aun en el mundo católico, los medios de comunicación.

Por eso, imploramos a diario al Padre celestial para que su nombre sea glorificado. Que sea santificado por nosotros, para que caminemos siempre en su divina presencia, alabándolo por su gloria, agradeciéndole las maravillas que ha hecho por nosotros y testimoniando su amor con el amor y santidad de nuestra vida. Que sea santificado por la Iglesia, para que persevere en la Alianza con El y confiese sin temor de pertenecer a El como pueblo elegido; se purifique para no ofenderlo y se santifique para agradarle más. Que sea santificado por el mundo entero, para que millones de personas que viven sin conocerlo, se abran a la salvación en Jesucristo y, así, el nombre santo del único y verdadero Dios sea respetado, reverenciado e invocado.

El Vatican Information Service y El Internet

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).— El Vatican Information Service (VIS), que comenzó sus transmisiones cotidianas a los clientes abonados vía fax y correo electrónico el 2 de enero de 1991, se unió al mundo de Internet en febrero de 1996.

Durante sus primeros meses en Internet el sitio del VIS registró un medio de 9.000 accesos cotidianos. A finales de marzo de 1997 esa cifra era 44.000, que equivale a un medio mensual de 1.365.000. Desde la inauguración el domingo de Pascua, 30 de marzo de 1997, del nuevo sitio de la Oficina de Prensa de la Santa Sede, que incluye al VIS, hay 5.000 lectores más del VIS cada día. Las estadísticas disponibles indican que la gente que busca el sitio del VIS provienen de más de 106 países (“domains”).

Entrando en el sitio VIS (http://www.vatican.va/news\_services/vis), el servicio se puede leer en tres idiomas: inglés, castellano y francés. Actualmente, el 49% de los accesos han buscado el inglés, 34% el español y 17% el francés. Cuando los lectores llegan a este sitio, pueden crear un “atajo” para llegar al VIS añadiendo una “bookmark” (señal).

El 4 de abril salió la edición 1.400 del Vatican Information Service. Ha presentado 8.638 artículos desde su comienzo.

Papa dice que Nicaragua debe mejorar los empleos y la enseñanza

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS)—El Papa Juan Pablo II felicitó al pueblo de Nicaragua por fortalecer a la democracia en su país, pero dijo que el adelanto está amenazado allí por la desigualdad económica y social.

Como en otras partes de la América Central, dijo el Papa el 24 de marzo, las gestiones de Nicaragua «para garantizar una democracia estable» han sido retardadas «por las rupturas económicas y las crisis sociales».

Al reunirse con el nuevo Embajador de Nicaragua ante el Vaticano, José Cuadra Chamorro, el Papa dijo que las dificultades económicas del país van acompañadas por «un gran desempleo», la corrupción y toda clase de violencia.

"No debe olvidarse que las desigualdades económicas contribuyen, del mismo modo, al deterioro progresivo y a la pérdida de los valores morales", incluyendo a las familias sólidas y al respeto por la vida humana, dijo el Papa.

El Papa Juan Pablo dijo también al embajador que él apoyaba a las gestiones de los gobiernos centro-americanos para trabajar juntos por la paz y el desarrollo económico de su región.

liderazgo, cómo funcionan los grupos y cómo se trabaja con los grupos que es lo más fundamental".

Por otro lado, el Padre Vizcaíno continuó diciendo que "para nosotros el concepto de liderazgo es que el líder es una persona conocedora de las necesidades de la comunidad cristiana y que se dedica a servir a esa comunidad para llevarla a una actividad coherente en la construcción del reino de Dios, haciendo que la sociedad sea mejor. Hay que enseñarles a las personas que sean agentes de su propio destino. No le damos pescado, sino que les enseñamos a pescar". (Reimpreso del periódico "Que Pasa Carolina")

Justicia económica para todos

Fundamentos católicos para la actividad económica

En esta reciente declaración de los obispos de los Estados Unidos conmemorando el décimo aniversario de su Carta Pastoral "Justicia Económica para Todos", ellos nos ofrecen diez principios que se derivan directamente de la doctrina católica sobre la actividad económica.

"Como seguidores de Jesucristo y participantes en una economía poderosa, los católicos en los Estados Unidos están llamados a luchar por una mayor justicia económica frente a la pobreza persistente, la brecha creciente en los salarios y el aumento en el debate de los asuntos económicos en Estados Unidos y en todo el mundo. Exhortamos a los católicos que usen estos fundamentos éticos para la actividad económica como principios para su reflexión, como criterios para sus juicios y como guías para su acción".

Entre los fundamentos éticos que nos ofrecen los obispos tenemos, por ejemplo, que la economía existe para servir a la persona, no la persona a la economía; que toda actividad económica deberá estar regida por principios morales; que una medida moral fundamental de toda economía es el trato que reciben los pobres y los desamparados; que todos tienen derecho a la vida y a satisfacer las necesidades básicas (Tales como alimento, ropa, techo, educación, cuidados médicos, ambiente saludable, seguridad económica); que todos tienen derecho a tomar iniciativas económicas, al trabajo productivo, a salarios justos y beneficios, a condiciones decentes de trabajo, así como a organizarse en sindicatos u otras asociaciones.

Los obispos nos dicen, asimismo, que todos, según su capacidad, tienen el deber de trabajar, la responsabilidad de satisfacer las necesidades de su familia y la obligación de contribuir a la sociedad en general; que dentro de la actividad económica, los mercados tienen ventajas y límites claros, el gobierno tiene responsabilidades y limitaciones esenciales; que la sociedad tiene la obligación moral de asegurar que haya oportunidad de satisfacer las necesidades básicas y de buscar justicia en la vida económica; que los trabajadores, propietarios, administradores, inversionistas y consumidores son agentes morales de la actividad económica; y que la economía global tiene dimensiones morales y consecuencias humanas.

San José y el mundo del trabajo

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS)—En la Audiencia General del 19 de marzo, Solemnidad de San José, el Papa se refirió al Santo como el "creyente plenamente disponible a la voluntad divina, como el hombre capaz de un amor casto y sublime hacia su esposa María y como el educador dispuesto a servir al misterioso proyecto de Dios sobre el Niño Jesús".

Recordó a los 8.500 fieles reunidos en el Aula Pablo VI que, "en concreto, la tradición ha visto en él (San José) al trabajador". Más adelante añadió que la Iglesia "quiere promover la dignidad del hombre frente a los interrogantes y a los problemas, a los temores y a las esperanzas relacionadas con la actividad laboral, dimensión fundamental de la existencia humana".

"Frente a las insidias presentes en ciertas manifestaciones de la cultura y de la economía de nuestro tiempo, la Iglesia no cesa de anunciar la grandeza del hombre, imagen de Dios, y su primado en la creación".

El Santo Padre señaló que "la

Iglesia recuerda a quienes intentan afirmar el predominio de la técnica, reduciendo al hombre a 'mercancía' o instrumento de producción, que 'el sujeto propio del trabajo sigue siendo el hombre', porque en el plan divino, 'el trabajo es para el hombre y no el hombre para el trabajo'. Por el mismo motivo, la Iglesia se opone además a las pretensiones del capitalismo, proclamando 'el principio de la prioridad del trabajo frente al capital'".

"Estos principios -continuó-, mientras reiteran la condena de cualquier forma de alienación en la actividad humana, son especialmente actuales frente al grave problema del desempleo, que hoy afecta a millones de personas".

El Papa subrayó además que «el derecho al trabajo debe conjugarse (...) con el de la libertad de elegir la propia actividad». Y concluyó diciendo que "el trabajo es un derecho antes que nada porque es un deber, que nace de las relaciones sociales del hombre".

La película "Selena"

NUEVA YORK (CNS) — La película "Selena", de Warner Bros., celebra la corta vida y los vínculos familiares próximos de la cantante mexicano-americana de música tejana, Selena, ganadora de un galardón Grammy, que fue asesinada en vísperas de alcanzar el estrellato en la corriente principal del país a la edad de 23 años.

El productor ejecutivo de la cinta es el padre de Selena, Abraham Quintanilla Jr., personificado por Edward James Olmos, que fue músico una vez y decide formar una orquesta familiar con Abraham Jr. como guitarrista y su hija Suzette en la batería, respaldando a su hermana cantante de 9 años, Selena (personificada por Becky Lee Meza).

Bajo la orientación estricta del padre y el aliento gentil de la madre (personificada por Constance Marie), la banda, especializándose en la mezcla de rock, polka, R&B, música popular e influencias latinas tradicionales a la que se llama «música tejana», hace una aparición regional en su estado natal de Texas.

Con el talento natural de Selena y su amor a la ejecución, las multitudes crecen con tanta rapidez como los tres hermanos. Hacia la edad de 17 años, Selena (personificada ahora por Jennifer López), es una cantante y bailarina vivaz y curvilínea que da la bienvenida al nuevo guitarrista Chris Pérez (personificado por Jon Seda) y los dos se hacen amigos rápidamente antes de enamorarse.

Esta es la fuente principal del conflicto: Cómo convencerá Selena a su padre, tres años después, de que ellos quieren casarse y de que Chris no es un buscador de oro que le romperá su corazón? Los vínculos familiares predominan cuando la pareja se casa y el padre se da cuenta de que su yerno es un joven decente y amoroso después de todo.

La media hora final comprende su ascenso continuo al reinado latino de la música tejana con dos álbumes de oro y uno de platino a su crédito, una cadena de "boutiques" de ropa y un álbum de "cruce", antes de que la presidenta de su club de fanáticos, Yolanda Saldívar, la matara después de haber sido acusada de apropiarse de los fondos de las "boutiques".

Ni siquiera las representaciones hábiles de Olmos y la dinámica Jennifer López pueden superar el tratamiento de rutina del logro del sueño estadounidense, sólo para ser derribada en un momento de demencia. Aunque la película evita cuidadosamente el melodrama sensacionalista (el asesinato ocurre fuera de la pantalla), puede haber ido demasiado lejos hacia el otro extremo, llegando a ser intensa hasta el punto de ser aburrida.

La representación de una familia latina que trabaja asiduamente junta y que también trabaja para resolver los conflictos familiares, es muy positiva en verdad, pero uno sospecha que hubo más acerca de la vida complicada de Selena como hija, esposa, artista y diseñadora de ropas que lo que sugiere este tributo de reverencia.

Sorprendentemente, a pesar de la unidad de la familia, no se tiene idea de sus convencimientos espirituales; ni siquiera queda aclarado si Selena se casó en una iglesia o sólo ante un juez de paz.

Con su vibrante banda de sonido de las canciones de Selena, primordialmente en español, la película puede terminar siendo en mayor medida un instrumento para sus álbumes que un vistazo memorable a una bella joven cuya vida fue cortada trágicamente en 1995.

Debido al lenguaje suave momentáneo y a la tensión doméstica breve, la clasificación de la Conferencia Católica de los Estados Unidos para la película es A-II — adecuada para adultos y adolescentes. La clasificación de la Asociación Cinematográfica Estadounidense es PG — se aconseja orientación por los padres.

La Pascua: Esperanza y Realidad

Aun estamos saboreando la alegría pascual y es tarea de todos los cristianos mantener esa llama encendida de amor y esperanza en Cristo resucitado.

Los hechos sucedidos en la Semana Santa que causaron dolor y tristeza a sus discípulos, se disiparon al saber que Cristo había resucitado. Su gozo fue completo al verlo de nuevo entre ellos en forma visible.

¿Qué señal más visible y concreta para comprobar la resurrección de Cristo que la que exigió santo Tomás de meter su mano en su costado y su dedo en las llagas de sus manos?

¿Cuántos Tomases hay que le exigen a Jesús prueba de su existencia, de su poder y de su amor, sin darse cuenta que ellos mismos son prueba de su existencia, de su amor y su poder?

El camino luminoso para conocer y amar al resucitado es el camino de la fe.

Nuestra fe, entre más honda y fiel sea, más nos acercará al resucitado y nuestra vida cristiana será una perenne Pascua.

Abramos totalmente nuestro corazón a la experiencia pascual, que responde a toda la dimensión de nuestra vida humana. No ofusquemos con el pecado este mundo, lleno de esperanza y amor.

Vivamos conscientes de nuestra nueva condición de hijos de Dios, nacidos en el bautismo, cuya dimensión total será cuando entremos a la morada eterna por medio de Cristo resucitado. No cambiemos la autentica libertad de los hijos de Dios, que Cristo nos ha dado, por la esclavitud de nuestros pecado.

Que la vida divina, que Cristo nos ha comunicado, sea nuestro mayor anhelo y, apoyados en su Evangelio y en la práctica de los sacramentos, especialmente la Reconciliación, la Eucaristía y el Acontecimiento Pascual, lleguemos jubilosos al Reino eterno del Padre.

Msgr. Kovacic Celebrates Jubilee

Msgr. Anthony Kovacic receives congratulations from Betsy Vandermeer at the 50th anniversary celebration of his ordination to the priesthood. During a special Mass held April 6 at Queen of the Apostles Church in Belmont, Bishop William G. Curlin thanked Msgr. Kovacic, currently diocesan director of the Propagation of the Faith, for his years of service to the Church. "God bless you for what you have done in your priestly ministry, and may God continue to bless you in the years to come," the bishop said.

NCEA Among Groups Backing TV-Turnoff Week April 24-30

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The National Catholic Educational Association is one of 45 organizations endorsing the 1997 National TV-Turnoff Week, set for April 24-30.

TV Free America, the Washington-based sponsor of the event, estimates that more than 4 million people will turn off their sets. Spokesman Monte Burke said it is "not a scientific number, but we think it's a very fair number."

The estimate is derived from the number of information kits about the week distributed around the nation and from the response by 25,000 to 35,000 U.S. schools indicating they would encourage students to turn off the TV set that week, or at least cut back on TV viewing.

The issue, organizers say, is not what Americans watch but how much they watch. Television sets are turned on for an average of four hours a day in American households.

"We should really reconsider what the excessive TV time takes away — what you're not doing when you're sitting there," Burke said.

The TV-turnoff week comes at the start of the spring "sweeps" period, which helps set advertising rates for networks and local stations for the summer and fall.

Other endorsers of the TV-turnoff week include the American Federation of Teachers, the American Medical Association, the American Nurses Association, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Congress of National Black Churches, Big Brothers/Big Sisters of America, Literacy Volunteers of America, and the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports.

There could be on occasion a good reason for this kind of official change. However, a loving, concerned friend or relative can usually do just as much good for the child without going through all this formality.

House Approves Ban On Federal Funds For Assisted Suicide

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In a move that could blunt the impact of a possible Supreme Court decision legalizing assisted suicide, the House of Representatives voted 398-16 to ban the use of federal tax dollars to pay for or promote assisted suicide or euthanasia.

The Assisted Suicide Funding Restriction Act of 1997, approved by the House April 10, had been strongly endorsed by both the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities and the National Right to Life Committee.

The Senate version of the legislation, with 32 co-sponsors, has been referred to the Senate Finance Committee.

In a statement after the House vote, the National Right to Life Committee called the legislation "a crucial preemptive strike to prevent tax dollars of American citizens from being used to fund legalized killing."

"This bill would help to protect America's most vulnerable citizens from euthanasia — people with disabilities, older Americans and those who have critical and chronic illnesses," said Burke Balch, medical ethics director for the committee.

Richard M. Doerflinger, associate director for policy development in the bishops' pro-life secretariat, said in a letter to Congress before the House vote that the bill's "central goal is both modest and urgently necessary: ensuring that the federal government will play no part in legitimizing and institutionalizing assisted suicide as a response to health problems."

The House legislation urges the Department of Health and Human Services to fund demonstration projects for improved care for persons with disabilities and terminal illness, to emphasize palliative care in its programs, and to study the adequacy of current medical school curricula on pain management.

CCHS Named Semifinalist in Presidential Scholars Program

CHARLOTTE — Charlotte Catholic High School senior Kristen Grauman has been named one of approximately 500 semifinalists in the 1997 Presidential Scholars Program. The semifinalists were selected from more than 2,600 candidates on the basis of superior achievements, leadership qualities, personal character and involvement in community and school activities.

Final selection of the scholars will be made by the White House Commission on Presidential Scholars, a group of some 30 eminent citizens appointed by the president, and will be announced by the White House in May. They will select one young man and one young woman from each state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and from families of U.S. citizens living abroad; up to 20 students from the creative and performing arts; and 15 students at-large.

Scholars will be invited to Washington, D.C., for several days in June to receive the Presidential Scholars medalion at a recognition ceremony and to participate in various activities and events in their honor.

"While we tend to lavish praise on athletes and actors, we often fail to applaud the diligence and discipline of good scholarship and creative accomplishment," said U.S. Education Secretary Richard W. Riley. "Now in its 34th year, the scholars program remains one of the few opportunities for national recognition of academic or artistic excellence."

The 500 semifinalists were selected for their exceptional performance on either the SAT of the College Board or the ACT Assessment of the American College Testing Program. For the arts component of the program, semifinalists were nominated by the National Foundation for the Advancement of the Arts, which annually conducts a competitive national talent search.

Semifinalists were selected by a panel of distinguished educators after a review of students' essays, self-assessments, descriptions of activities, school recommendations and school transcripts.

Kristen Grauman is the daughter of Robert and Karen Grauman.

Holy Comic Books!

Mother Teresa Joins Ranks Of Superheroes

CNS photo

Mother Teresa is the featured heroine of this comic book being sold throughout Italy. Citing editorial independence, the author of the magazine says he did not consult Mother Teresa's order, the Missionaries of Charity, or the Vatican on the project.

ROME (CNS) — Look, on the newsstand! Is it a bird? Is it a plane? No, it's Mother Teresa!

The globally renowned nun, champion of the poor, winner of the Nobel Prize for Peace and founder of a flourishing charitable religious order, has joined the ranks of Superman, Donald Duck and the Incredible Hulk: She has become a comic book superstar.

The full-color publication with a glossy cover is available for about $3 at bookstores and kiosks throughout Italy. It tells the story of the youth, spiritual development and humanitarian achievements of the Yugoslav-born child of Albanian parents who became the world's most famous nun. Its title: "Mother Teresa, Missionary of the Impossible."

But holy commercialization, Batman! It's being done without the knowledge of the subject or her order, the Missionaries of Charity. Leaders of the order's provincial house in Rome said they had never heard of the project.

"I don't think she has read it, but I hope that she will," the magazine's author, Paolo Gherlardini, said in an interview. Gherlardini, who holds the publishing rights along with the illustrator, explained that they did not get in touch with the Missionaries of Charity or the Vatican, nor did they accept donations of any kind toward production of the comic book because "we wanted to maintain editorial independence."

"We took this initiative because we thought it would be interesting to comic book readers of all ages to know more about (prominent figures) of the church," he said. The Italian publishing industry estimates that comic book readers range in age from pre-school to 33.

Having already published a comic book at the end of last year on the life of Padre Pio, an Italian priest nationally famed for his holiness, Gherlardini said it was time to turn his attention to Mother Teresa "because she is so recognizable, but not everyone knows her story."

That being said, Gherlardini admitted that even Mother Teresa would not recognize some parts of her illustrated biography, enhanced as it has been by the author's fantasy. For instance, there's the visit to a jungle village where the nun in the famous blue-striped, white habit — armed only with a flaming stick from a campfire — scares off a ferocious wild tiger that has the villagers prostrate with fear.

"Probably that did not happen," confided Gherlardini, whose skills in the past have been used to translate tales of the Teen-Age Mutant Ninja Turtles into Italian. "But this is the sort of thing the readers really like. And Mother Teresa might consider it a compliment."

The Milan-based publisher Gruppo Editoriale Sirio, producer of the two comic books, has commissioned Gherlardini to write his next book, due on the shelves in June, about Pope John Paul II. Gruppo Editoriale Sirio publishes about 45 periodicals, including one of Italy's leading television guides and a food magazine called Creativity in Cooking.

But so far, the results of the comic book series are not entirely promising. The company reports that it sold only 8,000 copies of the Padre Pio issue, which had a print run of 43,000. Figures for the Mother Teresa comic book were not available.

But to judge from its sales in what should be a prime location, the Mother Teresa bio has also been a disappointment. The manager of a newsstand directly across from the main entrance to St. Peter's Square reports that he can only get rid of a copy every two days, though he has the cover prominently displayed among the magazines and maps.

Gherlardini said continued slow turnover will hit him hard in the budget, as the contract he shares with the illustrator promises a cut of the profits only after the first 15,000 copies are sold.

"Until then, we don't get one lira," he explained. And since he also owns the publication rights abroad, there's no telling at the moment whether the comics will be translated and sold overseas.

"I started out as a quiet, homesick freshman. Then I began to get involved in activities ... Much to my surprise, I became a campus leader!"

Students Assist Special Olympians

WINSTON-SALEM — Eighty-one members of Bishop McGuinness High School's French, Latin and Spanish clubs assisted athletes at the Special Olympic Games held on the Wake Forest University track in Winston-Salem on April 15. Many students served as "buddies" to the athletes, while others timed events. The students' service marked the sixth year of BMHS participation in the Games. Their involvement was coordinated by faculty moderator Shirley Shaw.

BMHS students are required to complete 15 hours of community service each year in order to graduate. Eight of those hours are to be performed in the students' parishes or church communities, and seven are to be completed in the community at large. In 1996, students performed more than 6,000 service hours through the Youth Eager to Serve service program.

Cardinal Law Urges End To Economic Strictures Against Cuba

Cardinal Bernard Law speaks to Cuban Catholics at a church in Havana April 5. Law made a two-day trip to Cuba to hand over a shipment of medical supplies.

BOSTON (CNS) — Cardinal Bernard F. Law of Boston, returning from a visit to Cuba, expressed concern over the hardships of Cubans and urged the United States to consider dropping economic barriers against the island nation. Writing in his column in the April 11 issue of The Pilot, Boston's archdiocesan newspaper, Cardinal Law said his mission was to bring sorely needed medicines to the Cuban people and to help Cuba's bishops prepare for Pope John Paul II's planned visit in January. The cardinal said "it is hard to weigh" the U.S. government's stringent economic policies against Cuba compared to the favorable treatment it gives the communist countries of China and Vietnam.

New Document Urges Dialogue With Bishops On Health Care

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Bishops must collaborate with local health care leaders and among themselves in order to ensure that Catholic health care keeps its Catholic identity, according to a new document approved by the U.S. bishops' Administrative Committee. The 14-page document on "The Pastoral Role of the Diocesan Bishop in Catholic Health Care Ministry" was prepared by the bishops' Ad Hoc Committee on Health Care Issues and the Church and approved by the Administrative Committee in March. It was made public in early April.

Youngstown Bishop Lowers Confirmation Age

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (CNS) — Bishop Thomas J. Tobin of Youngstown has announced that starting next year, the usual age for receiving confirmation in the diocese will be lowered from 11th grade to eighth grade. In a March 31 letter explaining the new policy, he told Catholics the decision was "the most difficult and important I have had to make since becoming bishop here, because it affects all of our young people and all of their families in their sacramental life."

MAGGIE VALLEY —

"It took me six years to build the church — three years to clear the land and three years to build the church."

With those words by the late Father Michael Murphy, founder of St. Margaret Church, comes a history filled with an evangelical fervor that built up the Catholic Church in western North Carolina.

Michael Murphy arrived in North Carolina from Detroit in September 1950. Right away, he turned his attention to helping build churches in the mountain region of the state. He traveled to the town bearing his surname, where Father Lawrence Newman was trying to build a church with financial help from Murphy families throughout the country. After visiting there, Michael Murphy went on to Sylva and assisted in building St. Mary Church in memory of his late parents. The church was dedicated in August 1955. Soon thereafter, he also aided in constructing a Newman Center for Catholic students at Western Carolina University in Cullowhee.

The lay missionary later bought 33 acres of land in Maggie Valley. A two-story building was converted for use as a chapel, where a Waynesville pastor celebrated Mass during tourist season. Murphy furnished the chapel with statues that had belonged to his mother in Detroit.

The owner of a local restaurant suggested that Murphy purchase another property for sale in the area, owned by a retired Methodist minister. Murphy built a 25-unit motel on the site, naming it Falling Waters. Later, Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh gave him permission to build a church on the land, and in August 1969, the new St. Margaret Church was dedicated.

Bishop Waters urged the zealous Murphy to ponder becoming a priest. Murphy did, and studied at St. Meinrad Seminary in Indiana. In May 1972, he was ordained into the priesthood by Bishop Michael J. Begley of Charlotte. Father Murphy was 80 years of age at the time of his ordination.

After serving for a year at a North Carolina coastal parish, he returned to the church he had built in Maggie Valley. As pastor of St. Margaret, he built a house which would later serve as a convent, and a retreat house. In February 1977, the retreat building burned to ruins, but the flame of evangelism that burned in Father Murphy's heart raged on as well.

Father Murphy continued to own and operate Falling Waters Motel. Under Bishop Begley's direction, the motel was renovated for use as the Living Waters Reflection Center, which today remains a popular retreat spot year-round. In 1981, the pastor also donated a building on the land to the diocese for use as a parish hall.

Father Murphy's presence remained a constant in the parish community until the priest's death in April 1990. A parish hall, built and dedicated in the early 1990s, was named Murphy-Garland Parish Hall in honor of the priest who gave so much to the community. (Father Murphy's maternal grandfather, Michael Kelley Garland, was a friend of a builder of stoves. Liking the sound of the Garland name, the craftsman — who had just designed a stove for commercial purposes — used the name on his product. The Garland stove is now widely used in restaurants throughout the country.)

The succeeding resident pastor at St. Margaret, Father William Evans, continued the apostolic outreach to western North Carolina Catholics that Michael Murphy — as a layperson and priest — had begun.

That devoted enthusiasm still thrives in Maggie Valley thanks to the work of Father Eric Houseknecht, administrator, and Father Jim Byer, parochial vicar. Father Houseknecht arrived in Maggie Valley in August 1996 and has led a renovation crusade, yielding improvements to the church building, inner sanctuary, grounds, parish center, offices, rectory and elsewhere. Parishioners made the project a family undertaking, offering voluntary labor and donating a variety of items to their spiritual home. In early April, parishioners and visitors gathered for an open house to celebrate the enhancements.

Ministerial work exists at all ages; the youth group, for instance, regularly serves their neighbors at a local soup kitchen. Parish events and fund-raisers like coobook sales, flea markets, craft sales and bake sales bring the parish family together to share in camaraderie and the common cause of helping residents of the region in need.

With some 180 families who worship year-round in Maggie Valley — plus droves of seasonal visitors and retreatants at the Living Waters center — St. Margaret stands in memory of Father Murphy's dedication to the Church while also testifying to the vitality of the faith in western North Carolina today.

Charlotte Diocese Hosts 20th Annual Youth Conference

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CLOVER, S.C. — "Do you want a job?" Father Carl Del Guidice asked the record 451 teen-agers in attendance during the closing liturgy at the 20th annual Diocesan Youth Conference. "I've got one for you. Be a shepherd. Tend a flock — yourself, your family and the people around you."

The pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Brevard also spent part of the conference discussing devotion to the Virgin Mary and her special calling as the Mother of God. In the process, he encouraged youth to follow the Blessed Mother's example and answer God's call to serve their church and community.

"The Lord calls each and every one of us by name," he said. "We are all commissioned to be stewards of the world and carry out the mission of Jesus: to carry the kernels of God's truth, the Gospel of Jesus within, and share the message of our heavenly God."

The April 18-20 conference, held each spring at Camp Thunderbird, allows young Catholics to celebrate their faith, their love, and their lives. This year's theme was Theotokos, Greek for God bearer, and Mary, the mother of Jesus.

"The members of the Diocesan Youth Council chose it (the theme)," explained Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry. "This year, they decided to center it on the Blessed Vir-

Two Cities Unite In Prayer Over Oklahoma City Bombing

On April 19 Archbishops Eusebius J. Beltran of Oklahoma City and Charles J. Chaput of Denver celebrated Mass in their respective cities for the victims, their families and survivors of the bombing.

By JOHN MALLON

OKLAHOMA CITY (CNS) — Oklahoma City and Denver became sister cities united in grief, prayer and hope in ceremonies marking the second anniversary of the blast that destroyed Oklahoma City's federal building.

On April 19 Archbishops Eusebius J. Beltran of Oklahoma City and Charles J. Chaput of Denver celebrated Mass in their respective cities for the victims, their families and survivors of the bombing.

The Oklahoma City Mass took place following a civil ceremony during which 168 seconds of silence were observed at 9:02 a.m., the time of the bombing, for the 168 people who lost their lives when a bomb brought down the Alfred P. Murrah building.

The Mass was celebrated in St. Joseph Old Cathedral, which stands immediately adjacent to the bomb site and which sustained heavy damage in the bombing and was restored in December 1996. After a period of silence, church bells tolled and the names of the 168 victims were read as family members placed flowers and other mementos at the grassy site where the federal building once stood. The area has been fenced off since the bombing.

The Mass was simple and dignified with families of victims proclaiming readings and bringing the mementos forward.

In Denver at 9:02 a.m., the bells at Holy Ghost Church tolled 168 times in remembrance of the lives lost in the blast.

As the bells tolled, the name of each victim was spoken aloud and lifted up in prayer. That afternoon, more than 500 people gathered in the church for a memorial Mass celebrated by Archbishop Chaput for the victims and their families.

Holy Ghost Church is one block away from Denver's federal building, the site of the courtroom where the bombing trial will take place. Media attention has focused on Denver since that city was chosen as the venue for the trial.

Archbishop Chaput read a letter sent by Archbishop Beltran, who wrote: "In Oklahoma City we personally experienced the tragic bombing that occurred here two years ago. Now (with the trial in Denver) you share our grief and sorrow in a particular way, I trust that you will also share our hope and consolation."

In the celebration of Mass in both cities, the archbishop added, "we are reminded that Jesus came that we might have life, and have it more abundantly."

"May God bless all of you for your support, prayers and solidarity with us in faith," he wrote. "May the peace and joy of the risen Lord be in our hearts, our hopes and our lives of prayer."

After both Masses, Archbishops Beltran and Chaput led their congregations in the recitation of the prayer of St. Francis of Assisi.

The prayer appears on a card that the Vincentian Fathers who staff Holy Ghost in Denver are making available as a sign of healing and reconciliation and as part of an effort to start a "prayer chain" that would continue for the duration of the bombing trial.

"We certainly know the names of those who have died, but we can scarcely imagine the many thousands who are living the loss of their friends and loved ones," said Vincentian Father Gary Mueller, parochial vicar at Holy Ghost. "There is a wound in the heartland that can only be healed by prayer."

With a coalition of Colorado and Oklahoma businesses, organizations and agencies, the Archdiocese of Denver and Holy Ghost Church have been active over the past year making preparations to meet the needs of family members of bomb victims who want to be in town for the trial.

Catholic Charities USA has given a $10,000 grant to the coalition, which has established a safe haven where families can receive hospitality, mental health services and support from local clergy.

A safe haven facility has also been established in Oklahoma City at the Federal Aviation Administration building. A closed-circuit television link has been established at the facility for family members wishing to view the trial proceedings.

Contributing to this story was Peter Droege in Denver.

Anyone interested in supporting the continuing efforts to assist the more than 500 people injured in the blast and the families of victims can contact Holy Ghost Church's parochial vicar, Father Gary Mueller, in Denver at (303) 292-1556.

gin."

Workshop presenters focused on various subjects, including the Trinity, Evolution of the Modern Church, Creative Prayer, and the Rosary.

Megan Moses, a parishioner at St. Elizabeth Church in Boone and outgoing chairperson of the Diocesan Youth Council, was presented with the Bishop Begley Award. The honor recognizes a youth in the diocese who has exemplified the qualities of leadership and compassion of Bishop Emeritus Michael J. Begley, the first shepherd of the Diocese of Charlotte.

"I just felt serving on the council was one way I could give back to the Catholic community in the diocese," explained Moses, who has been involved in youth ministry for five years, the last three as a member of the council.

Another high school senior, Jason Patrick Clark, was also recognized for his dedication in youth ministry. The parishioner at St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton received the Eagle and Cross Award, an honor presented by the National Federation of Catholic Youth Ministers. The award is given for outstanding service to church, school and community.

"I just do what I can," said Clark, who has been involved in youth ministry at St. Dorothy since 7th grade. He is also a member of the Colombian Squires, the official youth organization of the Knights of Columbus.

During the liturgy, the youth also presented a check for $1,476 to Catherine's House, a transitional living facility for displaced women on the grounds of the Sisters of Mercy Convent in Belmont. The money was raised through special youth collections in parishes.

Afterward, Kotlowski said he hoped participants continue to grow in their faith lives.

"I hope our youth leave here with a renewed sense of fellowship, a deeper pride in their Catholic identity, and most importantly, with a renewed commitment to the Lord Jesus and His mother, our Blessed Lady," Kotlowski said.

Jennifer Cram-Edwards, 15, was among those who took the youth minister's words to heart. "I'm glad they focused the conference on the Virgin Mary. She is a second mother to me," said the parishioner at St. Margaret Mary Church in Swannanoa.

Mary bore Jesus into the world. Can you bear Him in your heart? Those words adorned shirts worn by conference participants the final day, and Father Del Guidice encouraged the youth to always center their lives on Jesus.

"You want a job? I've got it," the pastor said. "Be a shepherd and turn to Christ, who is the shepherd of all shepherds."

Charles Kuralt And Loonis McGlohon To Be Honored At May 10 Commencement

BELMONT — Charles Kuralt, "the laureate of the common man" (Time Magazine) will be the speaker at Belmont Abbey College's 119th commencement exercises to be held May 10 on the Abbey Church piazza and lawn. A total of 214 undergraduates and graduates will receive degrees in the 11 a.m. ceremony.

Kuralt will be joined in his presentation by the renowned composer Loonis McGlohon, a frequent collaborator of Kuralt's. The two have joined forces to write television themes, a musical video, a documentary score and a book. Both men will receive honorary doctor of law degrees during the ceremony.

Honorary doctor of humane letters degrees will be awarded to Benedictine Father Terrence Kardong, a Catholic theologian and author, and the Most Reverend David B. Thompson, bishop of the Diocese of Charleston. Thompson will also deliver the homily at the baccalaureate service, preceding commencement at 9 a.m.

A native North Carolinian, Kuralt enjoyed a 37-year career at CBS News and is best known for his "On the Road" series and his "Sunday Morning" program. He has won 13 Emmy awards and such prestigious broadcasting honors as the George Foster Peabody Award and the DuPont-Columbia Silver Baton.

A successful author, Kuralt has published seven books, most recently Charles Kuralt's America, a volume of reflections on the country which became a best-seller in 1995-96. His 1990 memoir, A Life On The Road, was the number one non-fiction book of the year.

Loonis McGlohon, pianist and composer, is recognized around the world and his songs have been performed and recorded by a long list of international stars including Frank Sinatra, George Shearing, Dudley Moore, Eileen Farrell and the London Philharmonic. He has received two Peabody Awards, two Gabriels, the Freedom Foundation Medal and the North Carolina Award. In 1996, he was named to the National Academy of Television Hall of Fame.

Father Kardong, a Benedictine monk of Assumption Abbey (North Dakota), is a teacher and the author of 10 books and more than 50 articles. In 1996, he wrote Benedict's Rule: A Translation and Commentary. The editor of The American Benedictine Review, he has lectured around the country and in Australia, Rome, the Philippines, England and Nigeria.

Thompson became the 11th bishop of the Charleston diocese in 1990. He had previously served as parish priest; high school professor, counselor and principal; and chancellor and vicar general of the Diocese of Allentown (Pennsylvania). During his tenure in the Charleston diocese, he has spearheaded a community effort to erase racism through friendship. He has been awarded the Tree of Life, the Jewish National Fund's highest honor, for his efforts on behalf of interfaith harmony.

Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas shares a laugh with Savannah Bishop J. Kevin Boland during Thomas' recent visit to Savannah, Ga. Thomas credited his Catholic education for his post on the nation's highest court.

By BARBARA KING

SAVANNAH, Ga. (CNS) — Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas returned to his hometown of Savannah April 3 to thank the Catholic Church for helping him gain a place on the high court.

Thomas also thanked the priests and nuns who educated him for their "affirmative action of the heart" toward African-American students.

"But for this diocese, I certainly would not be on the Supreme Court of the United States — but for St. Benedict's, St. Pius, St. John Vianney Seminary," Thomas said at a luncheon given in his honor by Bishop J. Kevin Boland of Savannah.

Last June the justice announced he was returning to his Catholic faith after more than 28 years of estrangement from

it. Born a Baptist, he was raised a Catholic by his grandparents and was in the seminary for a while.

Also attending the luncheon at the Catholic Pastoral Center was the justice's mother, Leola Williams, along with other guests and diocesan staff members.

Thomas, 49, spoke at length about the Catholic education he received in Savannah at St. Benedict the Moor Parochial School, St. Pius X High School (1963-64) and St. John Vianney Minor Seminary (1964-67). All the schools have since closed.

He continued in the seminary for a year at Immaculate Conception Abbey, Missouri (1967-68), and then transferred to Jesuit-run Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass., where he graduated in 1971. He went on to earn his law degree from Yale.

"At Holy Cross it was a very, very tumultuous time," the justice recalled. "And this converged with my own development at the time, which was also very tumultuous. I was 18...."

"I was very upset with the Catholic Church some years ago," he added. "I was young and very emotional and passionate about some things. It's more important to me now to correct the record."

Thomas, who joined the Supreme Court in 1991, returned to the Catholic Church in 1996.

"I've regained something that I left at Holy Cross in 1968," he told the Savannah group. "I have returned to my own faith. Once a Catholic, always a Catholic."

Thomas thanked the priests and nuns who educated him and said, "A lot of people take so much credit (for the accomplishments of others) but the people who really deserve it never take it."

"We had 'affirmative action' in the '50s and '60s — it was affirmative action of the heart," he said. "The nuns and priests committed time and energy to us," the black children of Savannah, he added.

"I would not be honest if I said there weren't problems, but despite those problems something positive happened," Thomas said. "We learned at St. Benedict's and St. Pius."

He said he said he was heartbroken that the schools he attended closed. He criticized the closing of "black Catholic schools for the sake of the 'pipe dream' of integration."

"The poor education for blacks that resulted from some of these decisions deeply saddens me," Thomas said. "It was very harmful."

"Some people think that the solution to all the problems of black people is integration," he added. "I never worshiped at the altar (of integration)."

Thomas said his experiences at St. John Vianney "helped me to learn to live with white people.... I understood that it was not easy to walk into a dorm room and feel the antagonism of the other seminarians. And it instilled confidence in me."

"There is no question in my mind that the idea of the inferiority of blacks has no basis in fact," he added. "Yet we're being told today that black kids can't do as well as whites on the SAT tests."

However, Thomas said, "some things at St. John's shattered me. I was a stray dog. I was lonely."

He said he learned how just lonely he was when, halfway through his time there, the only other black seminarian left.

"The loneliest walk I ever took was from the basketball court to the entrance to the main building at St. John's," he recalled.

After dinner the students who didn't have kitchen duty usually played basketball, and whoever made the first shot could choose his teammates, he explained. One spring evening he was on the court and made the first shot, he said, but instead of letting him choose his team, the six other students on the court walked to the opposite end and played their own game, three on three, excluding him.

"I vowed then and there never to let those kids, their slights disturb me," Thomas said. "I think I went into the chapel to pray. Never again would I let rejection hurt me."

Although some credit affirmative action for his success, Thomas said it did not begin until 1973, the year before he graduated from Yale Law School.

"Affirmative action started out really well," he said. "It expressed the idea that you could take poor kids and give them a chance...."

"But if the basis of advancement is purely racial ('no way could he make it on his own'), then we're accepting the inferiority of black people," he said. "Look at the numbers." He noted that in particular, "the rate of black males entering the labor force has plummeted," rather than risen under affirmative action programs based on quotas.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Sarejevo's Hope Lies In Forgiveness, Reconciliation And Dialogue

Dear brothers and sisters,

The purpose of my long-awaited pastoral visit to Sarajevo was to pray for peace and to encourage hope. I thank the civil and ecclesiastical authorities for their assistance during my visit. Sarajevo has become a symbolic reminder to Europe and the world that the senseless violence of war must end. During the Balkan conflict, when it was impossible for me to visit Sarajevo, I sought to assure our brothers and sisters in Bosnia-Herzegovina that they were not alone. In Sarajevo, I expressed gratitude to all who stood by those who suffered during those years and to all who provided relief. Now, after the painful experience of the war, the future must be one of hope, a hope concretely expressed in forgiveness, reconciliation and dialogue. This was my message to the Catholic faithful, to the Orthodox, Muslim and Jewish communities, and to the government leaders. Let us pray that the risen Christ, our advocate before the Father, will grant lasting peace to the people of Bosnia-Herzegovina and to all the peoples of the Balkans.

I extend a warm welcome to the pilgrimage group from the Diocese of Portsmouth. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially those from Australia, Japan, Canada and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Sends Greetings For Rome's 2,750th Anniversary

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II sent birthday greetings to the city of Rome as it celebrated the 2,750th anniversary of its founding.

"It is the feast of Rome," the pope said in his April 21 message to Mayor Francesco Rutelli.

The city celebrates its millennia-long history as well as its modern identity, "its Latin as well as its Christian civilization, reaching toward the future and determined to remain faithful to its heritage of high civil and spiritual traditions," Pope John Paul said.

The anniversary, "according to tradition," as the pope noted, commemorates the date when the legendary figure Romulus marked out the city's boundaries. Archeological evidence points to the existence of a settlement on the site at least from the eighth century before Christ.

As the year 2000 approaches, the pope said, "Rome is committed to preparing itself to offer the world the concrete image of a 'caput mundi' (head of the world) which characterizes it."

Rome's city government still has its headquarters on the Capitoline Hill, which took its name from its designation as the "caput mundi." The English word "capitol" to describe the seat of any government derives from the Roman usage.

Pope John Paul said the upcoming Jubilee Year celebrations in 2000 are "a providential occasion to renew Rome's mission of peace and solidarity in the awareness of its vocation as a crossroads of culture and faith."

"Throughout the millennia," he said, "the city always has been open and welcoming to all."

The attitude of openness must increase, especially toward those who are without work, without a suitable home or without adequate assistance, the pope said.

Pope John Paul also promised he would "personally go up the historic (Capitoline) hill to render homage to the city," although he did not say when that would be.

When Pranks Aren't Funny

I read recently that a man was filing a lawsuit against a golf club and a maintenance worker. The reason? The man was offered a hot dog by the maintenance worker. However, when he took a bite, what he got instead was a mouthful of dead mouse.

It seems the disgusting incident was explained by the club manager as being just a prank between two friends.

But the man didn't see it that way. According to the story, this was a "highly offensive contact" for him. Since then, he alleges he has suffered emotional pain "from knowing dead rodents carry potentially fatal diseases."

Could trying to feed someone dead mouse be just a prank? Who would think that was funny?

My daughter, her husband and I recently experienced a so-called prank that dismayed us.

My daughter had had surgery, and I had gone to help out so that my son-in-law wouldn't have to lose so much time at work. I took my young granddaughter to school and back, made meals and saw to it that my daughter rested.

On the day I was leaving to return home, the parents of one of my granddaughter's schoolmates offered to care for her the next day after school. My granddaughter was to ride the school bus to their home with their child when classes were over, and they would drive her back home that evening.

The teacher and the school bus driver were notified because never is a change in routine for a child made in that school system without all kinds of assurances that the parent approves.

I was unprepared for the call I got from my daughter Saturday morning. She told me that at 8 p.m. the night before, the mother of my granddaughter's friend called her saying she didn't know how to tell her the awful news that my granddaughter had never gotten off the school bus and the police had been working on this for the past five hours.

My heart was pounding as my daughter told me how she began screaming. Her husband came to the phone. At that point my daughter said the woman admitted it was just a joke. She thought it would be "a funny prank" to pull on my daughter. She never imagined that it would upset her.

What?

I asked my daughter what she was doing to get over this scare. I think she answered, "praying." She said she knew now something of the pain she would feel if anything ever happened to her daughter.

I began thinking of all the times I've seen someone play a trick on another person under the guise of teasing. I never thought this to be good humor. I always saw it as a form of hostility, or downright cruelty, or sometimes a way of gaining temporary power over another.

I am sure that Christ, who taught love, compassion and mercy for others, would never condone this way of having fun at the expense of another.

The Jewish Passover: Celebrating Our Roots

This week the Jewish faithful begin celebrating the principal feast in their liturgical calendar — the Passover. For all of us who have always honored our Judeo-Christian tradition, the Jewish Passover gives us the quintessential opportunity to understand and celebrate the roots of that tradition.

For centuries, the grounding of Easter in the Jewish Passover had been forgotten by many Christians. To right that, Church leaders urge us to understand the importance of the Jewish Passover for Jesus and His earliest followers. In fact, the American Catholic bishops in 1975 stated that “most essential concepts in the Christian creed grew at first in Judaic soil. Uprooted from that soil, these basic concepts cannot be understood. The renewal of Christian faith is the issue here, for renewal always entails a return to one’s origins.”

One instance of Christian renewal is to observe Jesus’ Last Supper in the light of Passover as it is celebrated by Jews throughout the world. From the moment

Jesus picked up, blessed, broke, and then distributed the unleavened bread to His disciples while proclaiming “This is My Body,” the Lord’s Supper has been irrevocably joined to the observance of the Jewish Passover.

Combined with the Feast of the Unleavened Bread (matzah), the Jewish Passover commemorates the Israelites’ exodus from Egypt. The word Passover comes from the Hebrew verb (pesah) meaning to pass over — referring to Yahweh’s “passing over” and sparing the houses of the Israelites while He struck down the first born of the Egyptians. The first night of the week-long celebration is organized around a meal (Seder) that has as its essential element the eating of matzah.

The Passover matzah has always been a symbol of Yahweh’s eternal covenant because unleavened bread does not mold or spoil as does leavened bread. And the specific use of this unleavened bread makes this first night of Passover “different from all other nights.”

The theological message of matzah is that God is with us in the present moment and promises to be with us into the future. The Babylonian scholar Samuel called this bread of oni the bread through which many questions are answered. During the seder liturgy, the leader holds up the matzah and says:

This is the bread of oni
The bread which our ancestors ate in the land of Egypt.

Let all who are hungry come and eat.
Let all who are in need come and share the Passover.

This year we are here.
Next year may we be in the Land of Israel.

This year we are slaves.
Next year may we be free.

Here is a specific instance of the origins of the Christian liturgy of the Eucharist. Jesus, Himself a faithful observer of the Torah, acknowledged in His use of the unleavened bread the eternal validity of God’s covenant with the Jewish people. Here the life and liturgy of the Jews provided the language and thought forms through which the revelation of Jesus was first received and expressed.

So together with our Jewish friends, not in competition with them, we Christians proclaim the name of the one God, the God of Israel, and await with them the fulfillment of God’s saving design for all humanity.

During this solemn and festive holiday of Passover, when our Jewish brothers and sisters say: “If it please God, may next year find us all in Jerusalem!” — Christian voices, resonating with respect, yearning for the New Jerusalem, can cry “Amen.”

Those Who Die Without Baptism

Q. Although it is 13 years since my child died, I am still haunted by what the hospital chaplain told me.

Our child died before birth, so he or she could not have been baptized. As you have explained in your column, the sacraments are for the living. I can understand that.

What I didn’t expect was his answer to my question, What happens to these children? He said unbaptized people, including children, spend forever in purgatory, with no hope of entering heaven.

I love the Church and am convinced the priest was wrong. But what he said still hurts. I hope you can give me some peace of mind.

A. It’s difficult to believe any priest could say that, especially the part about purgatory. Sometimes we don’t hear things well, particularly in moments of great stress.

If what you said is accurate, however, I apologize to you and others who have written with similar stories.

The fact is, we know very little about such matters except the one overriding certainty that people who die without baptism are in the hands of a loving, merciful and saving Creator.

Not many are aware, for example, that the Catechism of the Catholic Church says baptism is necessary for salvation “for those to whom the Gospel has been proclaimed and who have had the possibility of asking for this sacrament.”

Obviously, little children have not had that possibility. And we know God’s purposes frequently are accomplished in ways we cannot imagine.

As the catechism teaches, “God has bound salvation to the sacrament of baptism, but he himself is not bound by his sacraments” (1257).

Pope John Paul II, in his book “Crossing the Threshold of Hope,” speaks of God’s intense desire that all people be saved. God has told us much about his plan for salvation, and expects us to believe and follow what he says.

But there is also much God has not told us. God is unendingly at work in the sacraments, says the Holy Father, “as well as in other ways that are known to him alone” (p. 134).

As we learn in many other matters of faith as well, it is often possible to be fairly certain about what God has done, is doing or can do.

It is when we pretend to be certain about what God cannot do that we quickly find ourselves way out of our

Turning Tragedies Into Triumphs

It’s 4:00 a.m. and my 7-year-old son, Bobby, is playing in the bath to be more specific, an oatmeal bath. He has come down with the chicken pox and the bath seems to bring him relief. As the oatmeal bath works its magic, and once again Bobby is itch-free and happy, he begins playing with his Star Wars spaceships, imagining that the clumps of oatmeal surrounding him are exploding asteroids.

I, on the other hand, am not as easily amused at this hour. I look and feel as if I’ve just stepped out of The Night of the Living Dead, and I can only assume it will be months before I make a batch of oatmeal cookies again. This peculiar virus of spots and scabs also brings contrasting responses from neighbors and friends. Since Bobby first came down with the chicken pox, friends are either heading for the hills or are urging us to invite them over during peak exposure time.

As I dab calamine lotion on Bobby and calculate the number of days until his sister, Teresa, breaks out, I realize how weary I’ve become with sickness these past few months. Because Bobby has had chronic ear infections and Teresa has asthma, sometimes even the common cold can make the kids miserable. Since last fall, new and more persistent flu’s and viruses are reported just as we’ve recovered from the previous illness. There have been days when I’ll go to great lengths to avoid these illnesses. My family could single-handedly keep the antibacterial soap companies in business. I’m not alone. A few weeks ago, I heard a collective sigh of relief when our associate pastor announced to his congregation of coughers that we would refrain from offering each other a sign of Christ’s peace.

As humidifiers hum and fevers flare, I realize how impatient I am with illness. Being sick or taking care of someone who’s ill can be draining and frustrating. We are in a weakened state, homebound, and taken away from our daily routine. The most difficult part is watching a loved one suffer, no matter how minor the illness.

We live in a society obsessed with fitness and good health, one that often perceives sickness as a sign of weakness. We may become uncomfortable when we’re around people who are chronically ill or recovering from a serious illness or accident. They’re a reminder that we too could be sick and suffering in ways far worse than a virus or flu. We feel compassion for them and their families, but after our dutiful visit we can close the door and walk away, relieved that we’re not the one battling depression, suffering with cancer or waiting for our child’s medical test results.

What I’ve discovered in recent years is that we have much to learn from those who are sick and suffering. Rather than closing the door we should be opening our hearts. It’s a privilege to sit and talk with people who are sick or suffering. When we reach out and really listen to someone who is experiencing a tragedy or a serious illness, it deepens our faith to see how they’re meeting their crisis with faith, courage and peace. It also invites us to reflect on our lives and to make changes

Sacred Heart Wins Bible Quiz Bowl

SALISBURY — The 1997 Inter-parish Bible Quiz Bowl went into overtime at Sacred Heart Church in mid-April, and after 17 rounds of tough questions, the host parish team was declared the winner.

For the ninth consecutive year, the Inter-parish Quiz Bowl brought upper-elementary school children together to illustrate their knowledge of the people, places and events that compose the heritage of the Catholic faith. Questions for this year's event were developed from the four Gospels and the first Book of Samuel.

The Sacred Heart team competed against teams from St. Francis of Assisi Church, Mocksville; Our Lady of the Highways, Thomasville; and St. Joseph of Kannapolis. David McCanless of Sacred Heart Church and Nicole Walsh of Our Lady of the Highways were recognized for three years of participation in the project.

With the bowl tied between Sacred Heart and St. Francis of Assisi after nine scheduled rounds, the event continued through 17 rounds before Sacred Heart went on to victory.

The annual quiz bowl project is a spiritual activity beginning the first Sunday of Lent. Participants receive a list of Bible passages to read and study. After four weeks' preparation, students contend in classroom-level Bible Bees, followed by parish Bible Quiz Bowls. Team members for the inter-parish event are drafted from the two preliminary competitions.

This year's Inter-Parish Quiz Bowl was coordinated by Janice Wellman of St. Joseph Church and Michael Thompson of Sacred Heart Church.

For more information about participating in next year's project, contact Michael Thompson at Sacred Heart Catholic Church, 128 North Fulton St., Salisbury, N.C. 28144.

Murder At 1600

Cynical Plot Defies Logic

NEW YORK (CNS) — When a young woman is found stabbed to death in the White House, a homicide detective and a Secret Service agent risk their own lives investigating the "Murder at 1600" (Warner Bros.).

This latest action thriller, following soon after Clint Eastwood's "Absolute Power," also presents a highly cynical portrait of corruption, sexual venality and blatant cover-up at the highest level of the executive branch of the government. It will probably do just fine at the box office — and even better overseas.

Directed in swift, glossy style by Dwight Little, we meet veteran Washington homicide cop Harlan Regis (Wesley Snipes), who is called to the White House when a secretary is found stabbed to death there late at night.

Several policing agencies immediately clash over jurisdiction and the Secret Service boss (Daniel Benzali) makes it clear Regis is not welcome in "his" house — and must get all information through his assigned Secret Service liaison agent, Nina Chance (Diane Lane). The cop chafes at this, especially when he realizes he's not getting access to all the evidence. In quick order, a janitor is accused of the crime in what only appears to be an open- and-shut case.

Unconvinced, Regis keeps digging and surmises the president's womanizing son (Tate Donovan) had sex with the victim just before her demise and that she was planning a tell-all exposé about him and his just-as-randy presidential pop, which would certainly provide a strong motive for murder.

Yet the more Regis studies the inner circle of White House VIPs, the less sure he is of what is really going on and who actually killed the young woman.

Providing reluctant but crucial help in this search for the truth, Agent Chance dives in, knowing full well their lives as well as their jobs are in jeopardy once she goes behind her boss's back.

In the promising first hour the plot thickens agreeably and red herrings surface to keep viewers guessing. Technically, the movie looks sleek and the pace moves along at a good clip.

However, the narrative starts unraveling through the second half and is capped off by a definitely far-fetched climax in which Alan Alda's character is allowed to go over the top and the press is fed a whole new set of lies by the press secretary about the just-uncovered cover-up.

Sadly, such deeply cynical films about abuse of power in all agencies of the government seem to be hot sellers now, to the extent that good old-fashioned idealism looks nearly idiotic.

The script has the president (Ronny Cox) under pressure to take military action against North Korea for holding 13 soldiers hostage, but this aspect of the plot only wedges itself awkwardly into the action here and there until its significance becomes obvious at the overwrought finale.

Some may find this suspenseful entertainment if they don't think the rules of logic need apply to escapist movies. Snipes and Lane are more than adequate as the crusading snoops, although as her hard-nosed boss Benzali is very much a one-note character.

Because of a shadowy bedroom scene with fleeting nudity, intermittent violence and occasional profanity with rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Big Night" (1996)

Two Italian immigrants in the 1950s — a perfectionist chef (Tony Shalhoub) and his more pragmatic brother (Stanley Tucci) — risk bankruptcy by putting on a lavish banquet for celebrity Louis Prima in hopes the resulting publicity will attract business to their restaurant. As co-directed by Tucci and Campbell Scott, the bittersweet story is a warm-hearted celebration of family, community and the fragile relationships that give life its flavor. Implied sexual affair, sporadic rough language and minimal profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Dear God" (1996)

Feeble comedy in which a con artist working as a postal employee (Greg Kinnear) and his wacky co-workers get in hot water after he opens letters addressed to God and they begin helping the needy letter writers. Despite a talented comedic supporting cast, director Garry Marshall's sentimental tale is clumsily contrived, generating few laughs and mostly bogus emotions. Fleeting violence and mild sexual innuendo. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Madame Butterfly" (1996)

International co-production of Puccini's tragic opera set in turn-of-the-century Nagasaki, where a callow American naval officer (Richard Troxell) marries then abandons his 15-year-old Japanese bride (Ying Huang) only to return to claim their little son for his new American wife to raise. Director Frederic Mitterrand opens up the stage-bound opera format by using outdoor location shooting in a visually lovely film which should be music to opera lovers' ears. Subtitles. Marital desertion and a culturally condoned suicide. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Mother Night" (1996)

Unconvincingly complicated tale from Kurt Vonnegut's novel about an American spy (Nick Nolte) in Nazi Germany who after the war is regarded as a traitor because the government refuses to acknowledge his secret role. Directed by Keith Gordon, the heavy-handed result depicts events in Nazi Germany with little moral perspective and even less psychological credibility, leaving questions of individual responsibility and collective guilt underdeveloped and without much dramatic impact. Complex themes and some bedroom scenes with nudity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Secrets & Lies" (1996)

Powerful British drama in which an adopted black woman learns she was the illegitimate daughter of a white woman who at first denies being her mother, then comes to like her as a person and eventually invites her to a family gathering where one painful truth leads to a number of others. Director Mike Leigh uses the credibly contrived situation to examine the flawed humanity of each of the characters as well as their family relationships, social aspirations and racial attitudes. Sexual situations and references, much domestic tension and occasional rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"To Gillian on Her 37th Birthday" (1996)

Soapy tale of a widower (Peter Gallagher) who can't get over the death of his wife (Michelle Pfeiffer) until he comes to realize his obsession with keeping her memory alive is harming his relationship with his teen-age daughter (Claire Danes). Scripted by David E. Kelley and directed by Michael Pressman, the hokey proceedings are too thin to sustain emotional credibility in the characters and their problems, especially the husband's soppy conversations with his late wife's apparition. Morbid obsession, sexual innuendo, a teen's excessive drinking and some rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Visitors" (1996)

Fanciful Gallic farce in which a brave knight (Jean Reno) and his cloddy squire (Christian Clavier) are magically transported from the 12th century to contemporary France where they cope with culture shock, meet some of their descendants and contrive to return to their own time. Directed by Jean-Marie Poire, the comedy is largely slapstick, mixed with mistaken identities and misunderstandings, though the absurd proceedings prompt some thoughtful reflections on past and present. Subtitles. Slapstick violence, sexual references, vulgarities and minimal rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

How greed is disguised

Chinetown! I love Chinetown — in San Francisco, Chicago, everywhere, but especially New York.

To get there I take the No. 6 subway train at 77th Street on the Upper East Side to Canal Street, where I emerge into a whole new world. It is like going from the middle of New York to old Canton while never leaving New York.

In Chinetown everyone is Chinese, except a few foreigners like me. Some of the Chinese are the children or grandchildren of immigrants who came from China in the last century. Some of them came more recently, and some are business people or visitors from Hong Kong, Taiwan and increasingly from mainland China.

Looking at the crowded restaurants, banks, shops and stalls, it is hard to imagine the conditions in which the Chinese first came to America.

The Chinese came as cheap labor — working very hard for long hours, balancing heavy burdens on bony shoulders, sometimes under a hot sun, sometimes in rainy or cold and icy weather, all for meager wages.

The Chinese were brought to the United States by millionaires, often called “robber barons,” to build the railroad grid people now take for granted. As the millionaires became multimillionaires many times over, the Chinese workers lived in squalor. Being a “robber baron” is one thing, but nobody likes to be called one.

Many of the Chinese died on the job with no one to grieve them. Somehow many of them survived. They settled at the railheads in San Francisco, Chicago, New York and thrived.

And that is the origin of our Chinetowns.

Sitting at a restaurant in Chinetown, eating baby clams with black bean sauce (my favorite Chinese dish), my mind often flips back to the days our Chinese population first came to the United States.

Their story is one of grit and heroic survival. The story of those who hired them is one of greed.

There are many stories of heroic survival in the building of the country. For each one of them, there tends also to be a story of greed.

What is greed? From a distance, greed is fairly easy to recognize although it also can easily be disguised.

future! It is a matter of acting responsibly. Everyone has to have insurance against a rainy day! It is a matter of prudence.

And that is true: Everyone has to provide for the future. But the line between acting responsibly and acting greedily is sometimes very fine. Greed comes in many disguises.

Greed is not a matter of the money you make. Nor is it about your bankbook or the amount of your possessions.

Greed is about how you acquire the wealth, the human price paid for it, the attitude you have toward it and what you do with it.

bigger barns to store more grain, only to have his life taken in the midst of the effort (Luke 12:16-21).

Some people make a lot of money and accumulate many possessions. But someone who is not greedy does not hoard the money, using it instead to create work for others and to pay them a just wage.

Like lust and hate, greed can blind a person. Like a demon, it can possess a person. That is why, like anger, pride, gluttony, lust, envy and sloth, greed — sometimes called covetousness or avarice — is one of the seven deadly sins.

Greed is miserly and parsimonious.

In Chinetown, “looking at the crowded restaurants, banks, shops and stalls, it is hard to imagine the conditions in which the Chinese first came to America,” brought here by millionaires as cheap labor to build our railroads. “The story of those who hired them is one of greed.”

What would the country have become without the “robber barons”? From a distance, they appear heroically enterprising and almost benign. It is easy to forget the countless workers who lived in squalor.

Closer to home, greed is much harder to recognize. When we suspect its presence it is easy to excuse. After all, everybody has to provide for the

A saying of Jesus is a propos: “What profit is there for one to gain the whole world and forfeit his life? What could one give in exchange of his life?” (Mark 8:36-37).

We could extend Jesus’ saying further to include anyone’s life. Acquiring wealth at the expense of someone’s life, whether spiritual life or physical, natural life or supernatural, is a sure sign of greed.

Greed values money and possessions over people. Greed values acquisitions over even life itself. That is why some people can work themselves to death or at least risk their lives, risking the lives of others at the same time.

Jesus has another saying about greed. “Take care to guard against all greed, for though one may be rich, one’s life does not consist of possessions” (Luke 12:15). He also has a parable about a rich fool who spends his whole life providing for the future, building

Greed also stands in the way of common charity.

In God, the Creator of all, there is no greed. God is love.

If you wonder sometimes if you are greedy, remember this simple rule: Where love abides, there is no greed. Love cuts through every disguise.

Love also forgives and sets its memory aside.

I love Chinetown.

In a Nutshell

- Jesus saw how money and wealth can become all-consuming obsessions.
- Love is greed’s antidote. And greed’s opposite is simplicity.
- The catechism says that “greed and the desire to amass earthly goods without limit” violate the 10th commandment, as does “avarice arising from a passion for riches and their attendant power” (No. 2536).

Simplicity: greed's opposite

Folding up the sleeves of her habit with a wrinkled hand, she slipped the single rose into the vase and set it before the statue of St. Joseph. This daily ritual of Sister Mary of the Incarnation of Christ Jesus (known to her friends as "Inky") had been done at 11 a.m. ever since she returned to her Dublin motherhouse from the missions in Uganda.

"Why just one rose?" I asked her, knowing that the garden outside had many.

"Because one rose is enough," she replied. "You people in your country! You always think that more is better. Why would two roses be better than one, or four better than two? You always want more of everything. That's greed, my boy, greed."

The twinkle in her eyes did not hide the sincerity in her voice.

Inky's words have hung with me over the years: "You always think that more is better." Do I really think that?

When a little girl told her mother she wanted three Barbie dolls for Christmas, the mother asked the girl if she didn't think that was being a bit greedy. The girl thought for a moment and answered, "No. Eight Barbie Dolls would be greedy; three is just right." The little girl's parents gave her just one.

Greed never being satisfied with what is, always wanting more.

I see greed as wanting more flowers around the altar than the last priest had, more catechumens than the next parish, more money than the neighbor.

Greed is feeling an ache inside, an ache that senses something is missing, an ache that can only be alleviated by more of that "something."

We begin to judge our worth by satisfying that aching, that longing; by obtaining more of the "something" we need. But no matter how much, it is never enough.

Greed is a vice, much more insidious than some of the others. Anger comes and goes, as does sloth, while pride can be both a virtue and a vice.

But greed, along with its cousins gluttony and envy, is always there, never satisfied, because they come from a feeling of inadequacy inside the person. People who feel that God didn't give them enough talent, money, chances or possibilities cannot trust that God truly loves them.

Greedy people are emotional black holes, always taking in more than they give away and always having less of what is really important.

St. Francis said that "it is in giving that we receive."

Can greedy people give or can they only take?

How do we know if we are greedy?

The easiest way is to see how simply we live, how often we are satisfied with enough.

Greed's opposite is not poverty, it is simplicity.

Greed's opposite is found in the ability to see the value and worth of "enough" and not be obsessed with "more."

Simplicity means being able to enjoy just one rose.

Simplicity is noteworthy because it is the greatest threat to a materialistic way of life. For materialism is based on greed.

A dozen roses are beautiful, two dozen are spectacular and three dozen can be breathtaking. But more often than we care to admit, one rose can be the most beautiful sight of all. One rose can be enough.

A magnificently destructive obsession

By Father John J. Castellet

In all likelihood the man who asked Jesus to take his side in a dispute over the family inheritance had a valid claim against his brother. Jesus, however, saw beyond the legal question to its motivation: greed.

What Jesus did was to answer with a sweeping admonition. "Take care to guard against all greed, for though one be rich, one's life does not consist of possessions" (Luke 12:15).

He drove his point home by telling a story. A farmer reaps such a bumper crop that he doesn't know what to do with it all. His solution is to hoard his surplus and use it for his own selfish gratification. God's solution is devastatingly different.

The miser's plan will be thwarted by death, and then what use will his wealth be to him? His fault is found not in having possessions, but in his misuse of them. He should have used them to "grow rich in the sight of God" by sharing with those desperately in need of help.

Greed is self-destructive, dehumanizing. It sets a person's heart on things, and when things consume the heart, the person becomes a hard, insensitive machine. Why? Because, as Luke's Gospel says, "where your treasure is, there also will your heart be" (12:34).

And, Luke asks, "What profit is there for one to gain the whole world yet lose or forfeit himself?" (Luke 9:25)

Jesus saw how money and wealth can become all-consuming obsessions.

But, of course, people have a legitimate need for money. Parents have a duty in justice to provide for their children. The problem is that needs like these can be turned into irrational obsessions. They function like rival gods.

But there is room for only one absolute in a person's life — one God. "No one can serve two masters.... You cannot serve God and mammon (wealth)" (Luke 16:13).

When profit becomes the bottom line, a person's values system is turned topsy-turvy. The result is chaos.

Money is not the root of all evils, but "the love of money" is. "Those who want to be rich are falling into tempta-

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Have you ever listened in on a conversation among parents about to send their first child to college? A mild panic has set in; they are preoccupied by a realization that only with careful planning will the family, financially speaking, survive the college years' high costs.

Virtually everyone sometimes is preoccupied with money and the ways to maximize its purchasing power.

But planning how to use our money isn't the same as allowing money and a passion for it to "plan us" — to enslave us.

—Maximizing our money's purchasing power is sometimes necessary.

—Making money our life's real power is something else again.

No doubt we must pay attention to our money. But, as the Catechism of the Catholic Church suggests, if such a concern swings out of control, we need to take stock (Nos. 2535; 3536).

And, the catechism advises, concern about our money and possessions shouldn't lead to injustice toward others (No. 2537).

You know, one reason theologians have labeled avarice — a near synonym for greed — a "deadly sin" is because it fosters other sins.

Almost everyone is preoccupied by money sometimes. The real question: What kind of preoccupation does it ultimately become?

In a conversation with teens, how would you discuss the purpose of money and possessions?

"That I think too often we use people and love money instead of the reverse." — Sister Mary Kevan Seibert, SND, Lexington, Ky.

"That even though we have to work for our money and possessions, they are still a gift. Even the talents and education we have to gain them are a gift, and that if we're blessed with wealth we should use it not just for ourselves, but for other people as well." — Sharon Pleiman, Dayton, Ohio

"It's more important how you live your life and what you have spiritually than what you have materially. You need money to live, to put food on the table, but beyond that we have a tendency to get a little carried away." — Elizabeth Listwan, Suffern, N.Y.

Soul On Ice Priest-Professor Sticks Up For Hockey

EMMITSBURG, Md. (CNS) — It could be argued that brutal behavior and crude language are part and parcel of being a hockey player. But Father Jim Donohue comes equipped with hockey stick in hand and the spirit of God in his heart. Father Donohue, a theology professor at Mount St. Mary's College and Seminary in Emmitsburg, is a starting left wing for the Midnight Suns, an amateur team in a county men's hockey league. "Jim's great for the intimidation factor," teammate Steve Brockman joked about Father Donohue.

NEW YORK (CNS) — The Anti-Defamation League gave Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York its "America's Democratic Legacy Award" April 16. The guest of honor at an ADL fund-raising dinner at a New York hotel, Cardinal O'Connor was praised for his efforts on behalf of Vatican recognition of Israel and for support of other Jewish causes.

Flynn Says Boggs Would Make Fine Ambassador To Vatican

ROME (CNS) — Raymond L.

Flynn, the U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he thinks former Rep. Lindy Boggs of Louisiana would make a fine ambassador to the Vatican. In fact, he said April 18, she was one of the half dozen names he suggested to President Bill Clinton. The Washington Post reported April 18 that Clinton has chosen the 81-year-old former congresswoman to succeed Flynn. The White House would not confirm or deny the story.

Much 'Talent, Ethnic Diversity' Seen In '97 Class Of Priests

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Among the almost 500 men who are to be ordained in the United States this spring can be found "an immense amount of talent and ethnic diversity," said the head of the U. S. bishops' Office for Vocations and Priestly Formation. "There are men who entered the seminary after high school or college," said Father Timothy Reker in a statement. "There also are men who enrolled in seminary studies after professional careers in fields such as law and investments. A few have children and grandchildren." The incoming group of priests includes Anglos, Hispanics, Asians and African-Americans, reflecting the racial and ethnic diversity of the U.S. Catholic Church in the 1990s.

Cardinal Pitches Baseball, Honors Rabbi In Pittsburgh Visit

PITTSBURGH (CNS) — An Italian cardinal visiting Pittsburgh in mid-April threw out the first pitch at a Pirates baseball game, honored a U.S. rabbi and spoke on medical ethics. Cardinal Achille Silvestrini, prefect of the Vatican Congregation for Eastern-Rite Churches, threw the ceremonial pitch at the Pirates' April 15 game against the San Diego Padres at Three Rivers Stadium.

Senate Passage Of Assisted Suicide Funding Ban Hailed

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Senate sent "a strong message to courts and legislatures around the country" with its 99-0 vote April 16 to ban federal funding of assisted suicide, according to an official of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

The message is "that the federal government does not see assisted suicide as a legitimate medical procedure," said Richard M. Doerflinger, associate director for policy development in the pro-life office.

The bill also tells people "that there will always be havens even in the secular health care system where patients cannot be killed by their doctors — VA and military hospitals, federal enclaves, Medicare, federal employees' health plans, and so on," he added.

"Congress' action will set a good example for states and for private health insurance companies," Doerflinger said. "No one should imagine that we solve seriously ill patients' problems by eliminating the patient."

White House spokeswoman Mary Ellen Glynn said President Clinton would sign the Assisted Suicide Funding Restriction Act of 1997, which earlier passed the House of Representatives by a 398-16 vote.

"We will sign it," she said. "The president has long opposed assisted suicide."

The legislation bans the use of federal tax dollars to pay for or promote assisted suicide or euthanasia. The bill also urges the Department of Health and Human Services to fund demonstration projects for improved care for persons with disabilities and terminal illness; to emphasize palliative care in its programs; and to study the adequacy of current medical school curricula on pain management.

Burke Balch, medical ethics director for the National Right to Life Committee, hailed the Senate vote in an April 16 statement and said the legislation is crucial in preventing the use of taxpayer dollars to fund legalized killing.

"This bill will help to protect the most vulnerable of our citizens," he said. "Euthanasia is a serious threat to people with disabilities, older Americans and those who have critical and chronic illnesses."

schools, "I analyze and read and think," he said. "Even if someone disagrees with me, that's my thinking on it."

Thomas thanked representatives of the Savannah church for standing by him during his Senate confirmation hearing in 1991, which included accusations that he sexually harassed a female colleague.

"Some people didn't return my phone calls when I needed help," he said. "But you always returned my calls. Even when it was known that I was not a practicing Catholic. People could have said, 'He's not one of us.' You could have ignored me."

But his main message was one of gratitude to teachers who believed in the young Clarence Thomas during his school years.

"I wanted to thank you as a grown-up, as a practicing Catholic with all the benefits of the sacraments, not as a fallen-away Catholic," Thomas said. "I'm a product of what you provided."

A Child's Struggle Teaches True Faith

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

Editor's Note: The following article was not included in its entirety in the April 11 issue of The Catholic News & Herald. We apologize to our readers.

HIGH POINT — It is not just Cain Howard's flawless appearance, disarming blue eyes, hair the color of daffodils or his captivating smile that makes him extraordinary. Cain is special because he is autistic, and in spite of this often devastating neurological disorder, he will not be defeated by the daily challenges he must face. Even the simplest task like making eye contact takes heroic effort on his part. Fighting against the odds, this spunky toddler who will turn three in May inspires anyone who sees his valiant struggle: to be understood and to understand the world around him.

Behind Cain's growing successes in overcoming autism are his two parents, Amy and Patrick Howard, members of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point, who from the start would not succumb to despair, self-pity and doubt but instead subscribed to hope, hard work and faith. Through their love and perseverance, Cain, to a casual observer, behaves similarly to his peers, a miracle that would never have been possible without God's loving hand working through them. "If I can't ask God for help and trust His will be done, I won't get through a single day. Because of my faith, I can have peace with whatever happens," said Amy Howard.

When Cain was 18 months old, his parents began to notice that he was not developing properly. "One of the hardest times was not knowing what was wrong with Cain. We thought we were doing something wrong as parents," said Mrs. Howard, viewing the early diagnosis as a kind of blessing. Its timing, however, was unfortunate; the family was preparing for the birth of their second son, Sam. This joyous occasion was overshadowed, at times, by the crushing news of Cain's autism.

Although Patrick initially suffered when he found out, he now sees Cain's autism as a blessing. "In the past I have always taken things for granted in my life. I didn't have to struggle growing up, so I didn't appreciate all that I had. If Cain had been perfect, I probably wouldn't have appreciated the little things like I do now," said Patrick.

After the diagnosis, the Howards declared war on Cain's autism with "Intensive Early Behavioral Intervention," a program documented as having "recovered" some children.

Because no behavioral specialists were immediately available and time is crucial to recovery, Patrick and Amy implemented the program by themselves, relying on manuals and occasional consultations. They hired and trained college students, and developed a curriculum for Cain.

To understand the courage of the Howard family, one must understand autism and the toll it takes on family life. This life-long neurological disorder has no known cure and only theories as to what causes it. The symptoms and stereotypic behaviors such as rocking, hand-flapping, fixating on objects, hand-biting and head-banging vary with the individual, and efforts must be made to try to eliminate them. Patience becomes the predominate virtue when the Howards and their therapist battle some of these behavior problems. Coupled with lack of sleep, resulting from Cain's erratic sleep patterns, days can be stressful and long. Without this intervention, frustrations can overwhelm a child as well, and cause a total withdrawal. Fortunately, Cain's fighting spirit keeps him holding on to the raft of life as he reaches for the shore of mutual understanding.

A typical day starts at 9 a.m. Toy-play communication skills and social skills like eye contact are taught in the sessions. Later in the evening, Amy or Patrick will work again on those skills in a more natural setting. Although these activities are spontaneous for most children, autistic children struggle because they do not learn in normal ways such as through imitation. Cain, like most other autistic children, has an extremely short attention span and resists change. Helping him achieve normalcy continues to be physically, emotionally and financially draining on the family. As one behavioral problem is eliminated, new ones emerge. Money concerns continue to mount with little outside help. Although these issues can be discouraging, the Howards remain dedicated and hopeful.

"All children deserve a chance.

They are all special," said Amy, concerned that some parents might fear raising disabled children. "Even when your child is disabled, they bring so much joy into your life."

In only nine months with limited resources, Cain has already improved, although other health problems may be slowing down his progress. The Howards anticipate at least three more years of intense therapy before Cain is fully functioning on his own age level.

Patrick is concerned for the many autistic children like Cain who do not have access to this program, either because they do not know about it or simply can't afford it. He is actively pursuing grants and other resources to establish a behavior therapy clinic in North Carolina so that others can have the same chance Cain has to live a normal life.

Patrick admits that through it all, he has grown in his faith and has a strong desire to share with Cain a sense of who God is. He learned recently it would take time. "I was looking forward to taking Cain with me to church on Ash Wednesday. I thought about it all day. I just couldn't wait," he recalled. "Unfortunately, Cain made some noises which caused a humiliating pause in the service. I began to wonder if Cain would ever be able to behave during Mass and I wondered if he would ever know God."

Amy shares this same concern for Cain. Yet seeing Cain in his mother's arms affectionately playing with her hair, or on his father's shoulder smiling as if on top of the world, any doubts vanish. Cain certainly knows God because Cain knows love.

or realize what's truly important. I have friends who talk about their illness as a gift rather than a curse. A cancer survivor will talk about the important insights and perspectives he's gained rather than the days or months he's lost as a result of his illness. A victim of a senseless accident will tell you that she never realized the inner strength she had until the accident. And a parent whose faith was far off track has become close to God during his child's hospital stay. This doesn't happen overnight. But somehow through all the months of pain and heart-break, we can grow personally and spiritually.

It's not true that everyone is able to use sickness as an opportunity for spiritual and personal growth. An elderly person may be too confused or frightened to understand his illness. Someone living with AIDS may have been ostracized by family members or co-workers and believes she's also been abandoned by God. Those who are mentally ill may be unable to face the reality of their illness.

I'm not convinced that "God never gives anyone a cross they're unable to bear." I know many good people who have been crushed by the crosses they've had to carry. We've all had our times when we too would be crushed under the weight of our crosses if not for the prayers and loving support of family, friends and parishioners. Mother Teresa often reminds us that we have a responsibility not only to reach out to those who are sick and suffering but to unite in their suffering and bring them the love of Jesus. In countless cases, even one caring person reaching out with this love can help a suffering person pick up his cross and know that Jesus walks beside him.

We certainly don't need to go looking for sorrow and sickness in order to deepen our relationship with God. And I don't believe that God causes bad things to happen to us. But God knows that just as blessings and joys come into our lives, so do sorrow and pain. When we experience life's tragedies and disappointments, we need to remember that Jesus experienced the tragedy of the cross. When we cry out that our illness isn't fair or that the accident just doesn't make sense, we're reminded that the crucifixion is about as unfair and senseless as it gets. Like most people facing pain and suffering, Jesus pleaded with God to "let this cup pass from me." But by surrendering his will to His Father, his tragedy turned to triumph, bringing salvation to the world.

Two weeks after Bobby's first spot appeared, Teresa announced, "I'm very itchy and I have a hundred headaches." As I go through major and minor illnesses and accidents with my family, I hope I can keep in mind the words of St. Paul: "He comforts us in all our afflictions and thus enables us to comfort those who are in trouble, with the same consolation we have received from him."

depth in mystery.

I hope this is of some help for you. God created your child out of love. That love, we trust, has touched your child with the same blood that offers salvation to the rest of us.

Perhaps more than any other event, the death of a child like yours can, if we let it, put us immediately in touch with the mystery and graciousness of God's salvation.

Q. My wife and I have been married more than 50 years. We have four beautiful children, all grown and good people.

My wife has always been a Catholic, and I a Protestant. My question is, when we both die, am I allowed to be buried with her in a Catholic cemetery?

A. From the beginning of Christianity, believers in Jesus Christ have set aside specific areas for their dead, a custom our church has preserved right up to the present.

However, its policies are not so strict as to preclude what you suggest. People who are not Catholic may be, and often are, buried in a Catholic cemetery.

Since some policies vary from place to place, it will be wise to consult your parish priest about details.

A free brochure, in English or Spanish, outlining marriage regulations in the Catholic Church and explaining the promises in an interfaith marriage is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions for this column should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

Sponsored by the National Council of Churches and billed as a "nationwide electronic town meeting," it will focus on how church leaders, parents, teachers, youth ministers and teen-agers can understand media messages and how to use media to spread the message of the Gospel.

Pope To Honor Firefighters Who Saved Shroud Of Turin

A silver box containing the Shroud of Turin is carried from the burning St. John the Baptist Cathedral April 12 in Turin, Italy.

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The five firefighters who carried the Shroud of Turin out of the burning cathedral will be honored by Pope John Paul II.

A team of experts April 14 examined the shroud, which many people believe was Christ's burial cloth, and pronounced it completely unharmed.

Cardinal Giovanni Saldarini of Turin and members of the Commission for the Preservation of the Shroud said the two-and-a-half-hour examination showed absolutely no signs of damage or of change in the condition of the cloth since it was last on public display in 1978.

"They have excluded in the most radical way damage of any type, particularly damage which could have resulted from the fire, from the water and from other actions taken to put out the fire," said an April 14 statement signed by the cardinal.

Standing in the square in front of Turin's St. John the Baptist Cathedral with flames shooting from the roof April 11, Cardinal Saldarini waited with thousands of people for news of the shroud kept inside.

Two hours after the fire was discovered, the Shroud of Turin in its silver and zinc, casket-shaped reliquary was carried to safety on the shoulders of five firefighters.

As of April 14, investigators still had not said what started the blaze, which caused several million dollars' damage. The city of Turin and the regional government pledged almost $6 million for the repair work, and the Italian federal government was to vote on an aid package early in the week.

Cardinal Saldarini, the Vatican-appointed custodian of the shroud, took the cloth to his office for safekeeping. Even before the sun came up, he gathered archdiocesan officials together to break the wax seal on the outside of the box.

"It is intact. Thanks be to God, it is intact," the cardinal reportedly said. Mario Trematore, the Turin firefighter who used a 9-pound mallet to break through multiple layers of bullet-proof glass and free the shroud, quickly became a national hero.

Trematore, like many of the firefighters who fought the blaze for seven hours, was not on duty Friday night. He saw the flames and ran to the cathedral.

"The first attempt to get near the reliquary failed. The heat was increasing; there was need to act quickly," he said.

Pieces of marble, some weighing as much as 100 pounds, were falling from the ceiling as he picked up the mallet. His fellow firefighters sprayed him and the altar with water as he attempted to break the glass. The first blows did not even crack the glass.

"I hurled myself with fury toward the urn. It was a miracle; I had the strength of a giant," Trematore said. "One blow after another, the various layers of glass began to give way."

Trematore said when he finally broke the glass and saw the reliquary sitting there, "it was extraordinarily beautiful. I took it in my arms like you would do with a baby."

Trematore told Avvenire his one wish after the fire would be to meet Pope John Paul.

Apparently, his wish will come true. Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said the pope will honor Trematore and the four other firefighters who worked to save the shroud.

WINSTON-SALEM — The Benedictine monks of Belmont Abbey were the first Catholic clergy to minister in Winston-Salem. During the 1880s, the monks visited to celebrate Mass in the homes of the few Catholic families in town. Those early visits laid the foundation for the largest Catholic house of worship in Forsyth County today, St. Leo the Great Church.

With the slow addition of more Catholic families to the area came the need for a permanent structure in which to gather for Mass. In 1891, Benedictine Bishop Leo Haid of Belmont Abbey, then vicar apostolic for North Carolina, purchased a small frame church in downtown Winston-Salem. A rectory was added in 1903, and Father Thomas Stapleton became the first resident pastor. The congregation grew, and by 1916 plans were underway to construct a new, larger church.

The site of the present church was donated by a local Catholic, Zaffaroni Angelo, in 1924. Benedictine Father Michael McInerney of Belmont Abbey, the renowned architect of hundreds of churches throughout the Southeast, was called upon to design the building. The cornerstone was placed by Bishop William Hafey of Raleigh in January 1928, and the church was placed under the patronage of St. Leo the Great. Church construction was completed the following year.

In 1930, a 1,000-pound bronze bell, originally from St. Paul Episcopal Church in Winston-Salem, was purchased and placed in the St. Leo bell tower. The addition to the church landscape further enhanced the Catholic community's home; the church already had a large crucifix above the main altar whose corpus was carved by Anton Lang, the famed portrayer of Christ in the Oberammergau Passion Play.

Diocesan priests were appointed to St. Leo Church in 1942, thereby ending decades of the Benedictine pastorate at the parish. Then-Msgr. Michael J. Begley served as the first diocesan priest at the church. During his ministerial time there, he furthered the educational cause in Winston-Salem, welcoming Sisters of St. Joseph from Chesnut Hill in Pennsylvania to Winston-Salem to teach religion classes. Just over 1,000 parishioners composed the congregation by 1953. Thanks to the zeal of the sisters; Msgr. Begley and Msgr. Dennis Lynch, pastors; and Bishop Waters, those first classes led to later developments that included the founding of St. Leo School in 1954 and Bishop McGuinness High School in 1959.

Msgr. Begley returned to St. Leo Church as pastor from 1966 until 1971. He also served as director of Catholic Charities for the Raleigh Diocese during that time, and in 1972 received an even more far-reaching pastoral responsibility: serving as bishop for the newly created, 46-county Diocese of Charlotte.

A major renovation project ensued at St. Leo Church and School during the mid-1970s. Also, a church nursery and library were added and the rectory was expanded.

The 1970s and '80s — largely aided by industry — marked continual growth in the number of Catholics in the Triad region and throughout North Carolina. In 1978, Holy Family Church was founded in Clemmons, joining Christ the King Church in Kernersville and St. Leo, St. Benedict, Our Lady of Mercy, and Our Lady of Fatima churches in Winston-Salem on a list of sanctuaries opening their doors to Carolina Catholics in Forsyth County alone.

During the pastorate of Msgr. Joseph Showfety, St. Leo Church experienced yet another renovation. A parish center was built over the site of the former rectory and dedicated in honor of Bishop Emeritus Begley. The structure houses the parish office, meeting rooms and an activity area with a kitchen.

Father James Solari, current pastor, arrived at St. Leo Church in July 1993. He has continued to help build up the local community of faith by serving at what he calls "a very active parish." Among the latest forms of outreach to join the variety of ministerial activities within the parish is the Hispanic Family Ministry. Formed in August 1996 with the intention of providing for an ever-growing regional Hispanic community, the ministry touches people's lives sacramentally, catechetically, financially and in other ways. An ongoing ministry to the area's needy and poor is highlighted with extensive service projects at Christmas and Easter as well.

Sisters of St. Joseph continue to assist in the faith lives of St. Leo parishioners and members of the community through a variety of ministries including education, hospital ministry, and faith formation. St. Leo School enrolls almost 300 children in pre-kindergarten through eighth grade, thereby advancing the educational mission of the Church in Winston-Salem.

Like that small gathering of Catholics in Forsyth County in the 1880s, the parish of St. Leo Church — as conveyed in its mission statement — continues to strive in its "sense of mission and service to all of God's people through liturgy, prayer and formation of activities that will foster our growth in spiritual and community life in and through Jesus, our Lord and Brother."

Schutte To Present Concert, Workshop in Rock Hill

ROCK HILL, S.C. — Liturgist, composer and musician Dan Schutte will present a concert of music for liturgy and prayer, as well as a day-long workshop for liturgical ministers, on Sept. 25-26 at St. Ann Church, 1694 Bird St., Rock Hill, S.C. The event is sponsored by St. Anne Church and The Oratory: Center for Spirituality.

Schutte, who has published and recorded for two decades, has titled the workshop "Liturgy of the Word and Eucharist." He will address ritual and music in the major sacramental gathering and provide suggestions for musicians and all those involved in the liturgy. Doors will open at 8:30 a.m. for the workshop, and the program begins at 9 a.m. Participants are encouraged to bring their own lunches.

Registration for the concert is $10, and the workshop fee is $20. Send fees to The Oratory: Center for Spirituality, P.O. Box 11586, Rock Hill, SC 29731-1586, attn.: Sarah Morgan.

Schutte's music and recordings will be available at both events. His most recent publications are "Lover of Us All" and "Drawn by a Dream."

For more information on Dan Schutte's visit, call (803) 327-2097.

Vatican Official Sends Condolences After Fire Outside Mecca

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A Vatican official sent his condolences to relatives of Muslim pilgrims killed in a fire outside of Mecca, the Islamic holy city.

"We pray to almighty God that the pilgrims who died may find compassion and mercy of the Lord, and that the wounded may receive the comfort and solidarity which they need so much," Cardinal Francis Arinze, head of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue, said in an April 17 message to the Islamo-Catholic Committee in Italy.

The cardinal expressed his "deep sadness" at the tragic fire and offered his condolences to Muslim leaders and to families and friends of the victims.

More than 300 people were killed when fires fanned by high winds ripped through an overcrowded tent city on a plain near Mecca April 15. The flames destroyed 70,000 tents and left more than 1,200 pilgrims injured.

The fire was blamed on gas canisters, used by pilgrims for cooking, that exploded.

More than 2 million people were gathering in the area for Islamic rituals that mark the end of pilgrimage to holy sites. Every Muslim who can afford it is expected to make the pilgrimage once in a lifetime.

Previous years have also seen tragedy at the annual gathering, when hundreds have died in stampedes.

Serving Catholics in Western North Carolina in the Diocese of Charlotte Volume 6 Number 33 • May 2, 1997

Connecting with the past... Eighth-graders from Holy Trinity Catholic Middle School in Charlotte recently visited St. Joseph Church in Mount Holly, one of the two oldest standing Catholic churches in the state. The students' visit included hearing narratives of the history of Catholicism in western North Carolina by Bishop William G. Curlin and professional storyteller Paul Homoly. Above, Holy Trinity students Patrick Bruce, Gregory Knudsen, Chip Kincaid, Kenny Zoeller and Stephen Welt (l. to r.) examine the gravestone of one of the church's founding parishioners.

Singer-Songwriter Sees Music as God's Gift

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

BLACK MOUNTAIN, N.C. — It's a springtime afternoon in a cozy mountain town, and the sky hints of blue before yielding to grey clouds and rain showers. A man runs across the street to roll up a neighbor's car window, while a twenty-something couple sharing an ice-cream cone dashes under a storefront canopy. Another day in paradise? For local resident and singer-songwriter Jimmy Landry, it is.

Landry, whose first music gig was playing guitar and singing at a folk Mass almost 30 years ago, believes the most simple experiences can become celebrations of life — even a humble acknowledgment of the gift of music.

"When I'm at my best," he says, "music doesn't come from me, it comes through me. Creativity is God's work."

That awareness, he adds, has helped him cherish the countless number of graces in everyday life. "My first conscious thought every morning is 'thank you,'" the artist says. "Many times, I'll say it to God. But I'll also say it to a neighbor, to a waitress, to anybody. For me, there's a direct correlation between the number of times I say 'thank you' in any given day and the quality of that day."

Landry has been saying "thank you" a lot lately. Since moving to the Asheville area, he says his artistic creativity, faith, and appreciation for life and love have blossomed like never before. "There's a collective spiritual consciousness here," he remarks of the Buncombe County region. "This place nourishes, embraces and nurtures the creative spirit."

Cardinal Says Misguided Love Often Promotes Abortion

In his homily during a Mass for the annual Fall River diocesan pro-life convention, Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York said that ignorance, misunderstanding and fear lead many women to have abortions.

By DAVE JOLIVET

FALL RIVER, Mass. (CNS) — Those who advocate abortion are often guided by a "misplaced love" that is clouded by ignorance, Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York told a gathering of 800 pro-life supporters.

"When I talk of ignorance, I'm not talking about malice," Cardinal O'Connor said during his homily April 26 at a Mass for the annual Fall River diocesan pro-life convention.

"I'm not talking about propaganda. I'm not talking about big money-making machines that perpetuate the abortion machine," he said.

By "ignorance," he said he meant a lack of understanding whereby well-intentioned people who advocate abortion are guided by a love for the woman or girl contemplating having an abortion.

That love may be felt by the parents of a teen-age daughter who they feel is not mature enough to have a baby, and consequently they convince her to have an abortion, the cardinal said.

A pregnant wife may decide to have an abortion because the husband she loves threatens to leave her if she has the baby, he added.

He also used the examples of a woman who becomes pregnant in an extramarital affair and both parties see abortion as the only way out, or of a couple who learn through prenatal testing their unborn baby is brain damaged and fear drives them to choose an abortion.

"We must never condemn a woman who has had an abortion," he said. "We must reach out and help her pick up the pieces of a broken life."

Cardinal O'Connor said the pro-life movement must have compassion for those who do not agree with the pro-life message. He also spoke of a culture of death and cited abortion and physician-assisted suicide as illustrations of that culture.

Regarding the terminally ill who contemplate death through assisted suicide, the cardinal said it is fear that leads them to make such a drastic decision.

"These people are afraid of something," he said, "whether it be fear of pain, fear of loneliness, fear of being a burden to family members who come to visit them time after time after time, fear of being an economic burden to their family."

He said the terminally ill patients may be unaware of what he said have been great strides made in pain management that allow a patient to be lucid, to talk with relatives and to return home for short periods.

In encouraging his pro-life audience, Cardinal O'Connor said, "Christ wants us to help people pick up the pieces." He gave as an example the miracle of the loaves and the fishes when Christ fed the multitude.

"In their human way, (the people) ate what they wanted and threw the rest away, and it was Christ who said to the disciples, 'Go and pick up the pieces lest they be lost,'" the New York prelate said. "Our Lord can't stand to see anything lost."

He pointed out recent victories in the pro-life movement, such as some states banning partial-birth abortions, and others requiring parental consent for a minor girl to have an abortion.

"I'm very optimistic and very encouraged," he said of those victories, noting that slavery was abolished in the United States through a string of small victories. He said he sees the same thing happening in the pro-life movement.

Bishop Sean O'Malley of Fall River thanked Cardinal O'Connor for participating in the conference, citing him as "a real champion for the cause of life in our country."

Bishop O'Malley recalled the days he spent with Cardinal O'Connor in Central America during the height of civil wars in the region. "There, I got to see close up the courage, the compassion, the wisdom of this priest of God," Bishop O'Malley said.

Singer-songwriter Jimmy Landry says playing in a church folk group as a youngster opened many worlds for him, among them music, faith and friendship.

For Landry, developing a spiritual consciousness — along with his musical skills — goes back to playing in that folk group when he was a youngster. He found his inspiration to play guitar while attending the folk Mass at St. Thomas More Cathedral in Arlington, Va. After receiving his first six-string at age 12, he joined the folk group of St. Stephen the Martyr Church in Washington.

It was the late 1960s, Landry was in the seventh grade and a war was raging — not only in Vietnam, but on the homefront. "My parents weren't getting along," he says. "They separated when I was 12, got together, then separated again. I was in this unstable home environment, and there was this stability from the folk group."

"It was my salvation," he recalled of his folk group days. "These were college students who were like big brothers and sisters to me. And they were all about love." He said the same for the parish priests, participants in the charismatic renewal movement who permitted some secular songs — the Byrds' "Turn, Turn, Turn" was a favorite — in Masses. He continued as a member of the group through high school.

Landry says that period in his life opened many worlds for him — music, friendship and faith in action among them. "It wasn't like I was getting hammered with Catholicism, the strict theology stuff," he explains. "But I was getting a good dose of what it's all about: love, giving and compassion."

Landry carries that example with him, both in his approach to music and his way of living. Following his college years at the Marianist-operated Dayton University in Ohio, Landry has become a full-time narrator of what he calls "the examined, conscious life," writing dozens of songs about love, hope, faith and other elements of the human experience.

Since relocating to the Tarheel State in October 1994, he has released his fourth album, launched a record label, and spearheaded the production of "Here We Are," a compilation album of 20 Asheville-area performers. Every month, he hosts the Emerging Songwriter Series at the Grey Eagle Music Hall in Black Mountain, welcoming regional and national talents to share the stage. Later this month, he'll perform on opening night of the Kerrville Folk Festival in Texas, one of the country's premiere annual showcases for acoustic music.

The western North Carolina region, Landry says, defines the sense of fellowship that he knew and loved during his youth with the folk group. He likens his approach to life to a homily he recalls from years gone by: "The priest's sermon was about communion and community," he says. "What that touched in me was that making that connection with God is possible whether it be prayer, whether it be serving others, whether it be gathering at church."

"What he was talking about," Landry adds, "is not just on Sunday, but every part of every day. I may not always do it right, but that's my goal, and it seems like that comes through in the songs I write, in performances and in the music that means the most to me by others. That's the way I'd like my life to be."

The root of his happiness is not in how many records he sells or how many music halls he fills. The most important thing, he says, is to do everything from the heart. With that view, even seemingly insignificant things become affirmations.

For Landry, the simple approach works, saying it has also made him keenly aware of God's creative presence in his life. That combined with the inherent spirituality he feels in the Carolina mountains creates a heavenly peace.

"You wake up to that every morning," he says, pointing to the mountains overlooking his backyard, "and you're going to feel creative. You're going to feel a sense of wonder. That's part of my spirituality: this sense of wonder. I don't want to understand it all. I just want to be appreciative of it."

"I've spent my whole life getting to God through experiences and relationships," he adds with a smile. "Then, just recently, I asked myself, 'What if I go to God first?' If you go through God to relationships and experiences, you'll get it right every time."

Peruvian Priest, Former Hostage, Praises Faith Of Judge Who Died

By ALEJANDRO BERMUDEZ

LIMA, Peru (CNS) — A Jesuit priest who chose to stay with the hostages throughout the crisis at the Japanese ambassador's residence praised the faith of the only hostage who died as a result of the rescue.

Jesuit Father Juan Julio Wicht said Peruvian Supreme Court Judge Carlos Giusti "was a man of courage and a Catholic of deep human feelings."

Back at his Jesuit community in Lima's district of Miraflores April 23, unshaven but bathed after four months without a shower, Father Wicht spoke of Giusti, a prestigious lawyer appointed by Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori to reform Peru's judicial system.

Father Wicht and Giusti were among 72 people who, after remaining inside the embassy controlled by members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement for 126 days, were the target of a rescue by Peruvian military troops April 22. All 14 rebels, Giusti and two Peruvian soldiers died in the rescue.

Early in the four-month ordeal, rebels offered to release Father Wicht, but he chose to remain and minister to the hostages. According to the official Red Cross record, Father Wicht was not a hostage, since he chose to stay at the embassy.

The priest said the rebels had also given Giusti the opportunity to leave the embassy during the final release of hostages.

He said rebel leader Nestor Cerpa confused Giusti with an unknown doctor. But when the judge was asked to leave, he shouted, "I am Carlos Giusti, a member of the Supreme Court."

Cerpa responded, "Then you stay here!," Father Wicht recalled.

"During our days of captivity, Giusti was one of the most devout men at prayer, one of the most helpful and the one who most frequently requested Holy Communion," the Jesuit said. "Carlos is already in heaven."

Describing the relationship between the Tupac Amaru commandos and the hostages, Father Wicht said that "with few moments of exasperation and tensions, they were respectful, but distant."

"There was no kind of personal involvement. We always had a very clear understanding that they were our captors and that we were deprived of our liberty by them," he said.

The priest said that the hostage experience was an occasion for "rediscovering priorities in life and also for deep spiritual conversion for many of my companions," but he declined to give further details because, he said, "it involves the core of my priestly ministry."

Father Wicht recalled that some of the rebels regularly and respectfully attended the Masses offered inside the embassy. One of the rebels identified himself as a Catholic from the very beginning, he said.

With evident sadness, Father Wicht said that one day one of the youngest rebels approached him to ask for a sacrament.

"He said to me, 'Padrecito, I haven't had my first Holy Communion, I want to know if you can prepare me and give it to me,'" Father Wicht recalled. "I explained to him that receiving the sacrament demanded living the commandments, and that in these circumstances it was impossible for him to receive it."

"The episode revealed the poor consciences that some of the youngest (Tupac Amaru) members had," said Father Wicht. The majority of the rebels were under age 21.

Father Wicht said that he had experienced further and deeper pastoral contacts with members of the Tupac Amaru commando, but said that "the details will never be known, because they belong to the most sacred of my priestly duties."

Four Seminarians Enter Transitional Diaconate

Rev. Mr. Matthew Leonard promises obedience to Bishop William G. Curlin and the Church during his diaconate ordination.

By FATHER FRANK O'ROURKE

Diocesan Vocations Director

CLEMMONS — At first glance upon meeting each of them several years ago, they seemingly had little in common. A 30-year-old Navy veteran in his third year of college, majoring in philosophy and religion. A 22-year-old recent college graduate with a history degree. A 26-year-old who began seminary training at age 14 but discontinued when the Communist regime overtook his native South Vietnam. A 33-year-old corporate employee with degrees in engineering and computing.

These are four men with different backgrounds, yet all shared in the same voice calling to respond to a unique future in the priesthood.

Matthew Leonard, Christopher Davis, Peter Pham and Dean Cesa recently took an important step in their journey of faith when they were ordained into the transitional diaconate. Matthew and Chris, students at St. Mary Seminary in Baltimore, Md., were ordained into the diaconate on April 19. Peter and Dean, who are studying at St. Vincent Seminary in Latrobe, Penn., were ordained deacons on April 26.

With the grace of God, these four men will be ordained into the priesthood for the Diocese of Charlotte in 1998.

Rev. Mr. Matthew Leonard

The faith life of Matthew, a third-year theology student, has been enriched by his participation in the charismatic renewal and his college years at the Franciscan University of Steubenville, Ohio. His serving as a cook in the U.S. Navy and experience in the marketplace identify him as a community man called to minister to others. His being called to the priesthood is the result of a three-year dialogue with me and a discernment process that helped Matthew realize that this is where the Lord wants him to serve.

In addition to his Clinical Pastoral Education (CPE) at Carolinas Medical Center in Charlotte and seminary placements, his summer assignments have included work at the Franciscan Center and at St. Pius X Church in Greensboro.

Rev. Mr. Christopher Davis

Chris is an academically gifted, musically talented, humble man who desires to put his gifts generously at the service of others. He is a true convert to the Church, having been baptized at St. Benedict Church during his college years at the University of North Carolina-Greensboro.

With his broad range of interests and keen sense of humor, Chris looks forward to faithfully serving the people of God in our diocese. His summer assignment in Mexico last year expanded his abilities to minister to an ever-growing Hispanic community within the diocese. Other summer assignments have included work at St. Benedict Church in Greensboro; Holy Spirit in Denver; and St. Charles Borromeo in Morganton.

Rev. Mr. Peter Pham

Peter is a man whose faith has been tested and vocation strengthened through his experience in and escape from Vietnam. He responded to the call of living a life of priestly service as a teen-ager. In the midst of political turmoil, escape attempts and refugee resettlement camps, that calling remained constant.

His seminarian formation has taken him to St. Joseph Seminary College in St. Benedict, La.; Charlotte; and St. Vincent Seminary in Latrobe, Penn. He has carried out summer assignments at St. Margaret Mary Church in Swannanoa; Veterans Hospital in Asheville; and St. Mary Church in Sylva. He is a good student whose musical talents have enhanced the liturgical life of the seminary. He has struggled to be-

Rev. Mr. Dean Cesa

Dean's vocation to the priesthood was realized while participating in parish life at Our Lady of Assumption Church in Charlotte, along with involvement in Catholic Singles of Charlotte, and various prayer groups and choirs. With a professional background in computers and engineering, he met the challenge of the study of philosophy while in seminary, proving to be an excellent student in that field. Dean has also successfully completed one year of pre-theology and three years of theology during his studies at St. Vincent Seminary.

His ministry work at St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton, in the CPE program at the Veterans Hospital in Asheville, and at St. Margaret Mary Church in Swannanoa have further strengthened his call to ministry.

It has been a joy for me to recommend to Bishop Curlin that these men be ordained deacons. Join me in praying that the Lord who has begun this good work in them will bring it to completion.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

On Cross, Jesus Made Mary Central Faith Figure, Pope Says

Dear brothers and sisters,

In St. John's Gospel we read that when Jesus, from the cross, "saw his mother and the disciple whom he loved standing near, he said to his mother, 'Woman, behold, your son!' Then he said to the disciple, 'Behold, your mother!'" (Jn 19:26-27). With these words Jesus establishes a new relationship of love between the Blessed Virgin Mary and all his disciples. By entrusting the beloved disciple to Mary's care, the Lord gave her a new mission as the mother of all the redeemed. This is another sign of the great love which led Jesus to offer his life for our salvation. Standing at the foot of her son's cross, Mary is revealed as the New Eve, the "Woman" who cooperates with him in bringing new life to the world through the outpouring of divine grace. May all the Lord's disciples come to appreciate more fully the mystery of Mary's universal motherhood, acknowledging her as their own spiritual mother and placing their complete trust in her maternal love.

I offer a cordial greeting to the students and teachers from the Lutheran Church of Norway. I also thank the choirs for their praise of God in song. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrims from England, Scotland, Botswana, Korea, the Philippines, Canada and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Jesus Christ our risen savior.

Pope To Preside Over Family Celebrations During Brazil Visit

plans to open the World Meeting of Families in Brazil this fall with a festive celebration and an outdoor Mass attended by more than a million people. During his Oct. 2-5 stay in Brazil, the pope will also preside over encounters with local priests and religious, meet political leaders and dine with 560 Latin American bishops, according to details released in mid-April by Cardinal Eugenio de Araujo Sales of Rio de Janeiro. Vatican sources confirmed the dates and the papal program.

Pope Tells Czechs Spiritual Growth Must Influence Economy

PRAGUE, Czech Republic (CNS) — Czechs must work to ensure that progress in spiritual values keeps pace with and is allowed to influence the country's economic progress following the end of communism, Pope John Paul II said. "Only the full development of a people's moral virtues can ensure the peaceful and harmonious coexistence of all its members," the pope said April 27, ending a three-day visit to the Czech Republic. The same characteristics and values that helped the nation survive under the totalitarian regime and rebuild its economic and cultural life in a relatively short time must not give way to consumerism and hedonism, the pope said.

The Problem (?) With Mike

This column is for Mike and all the kids like him. Mike was smart, mature, poised and had a coolly ironic view of life.

Academically speaking, he was one of the top students in his class. He's now enrolled at a prestigious private southern university and doing very well, thank you.

When awards time rolled around at the end of Mike's senior year, faculty were meeting, determining who gets what medal, plaque or scholarship. Mike's name came up several times, and each time certain teachers frowned.

"Sure, he's smart," they'd admit, "but he doesn't 'do' anything.... He's not involved in any clubs or sports. I mean, what's he contributed to the school?"

Mike came to school every day, did his work, made his points in class discussions and cleared out of the place promptly at 2:30.

What no one took into account, however, was that when Mike left, he went to a job where he put in about 20 hours a week. He also spent time with friends, family, played tennis and was very talented in playing the guitar.

But that wasn't enough for some teachers, who seemingly spent every waking hour at school, supervising any activity they were asked to, having long ago forgotten the meaning of the word "no."

In their minds, the ideal high school student was "well-rounded," which they defined as being involved in a variety of school activities.

Mike's viewpoint was different and undoubtedly had something to do with birth order. He was the youngest of five, and being involved in the lives of his older siblings and their activities had given him a broader appreciation of adult life and a decidedly skeptical view of the importance of high school activities.

We live in a highly organized age. There are clubs and extracurriculars for every conceivable interest.

Students are constantly told by guidance counselors that they need to be involved in as many activities as possible so their transcripts will really stand out in the college-admission rat race.

Teen-agers find it necessary to lug around Daytimers as densely packed with notes on meetings and practices as their parents' are.

Is it worth it?

Mike took a look at life and decided no, it wasn't. He preferred to explore his interests without being tied to organizations or to the school grounds.

Look at your schedule and ask yourself some questions:

—Are you "involved" because you really want to be or because you feel you must be? It's worth noting that Mike got into a very good private university without an excessively padded transcript.

—Is all your activity hurting your grades? A long list of activities isn't going to help a grade-point average that reflects sheer exhaustion more than anything else.

—Are your activities truly broadening your experience of the world?

—Are they leading you to become an independent person who can participate in a sport just for the fun of it, even if there's no uniform or district championship to pursue?

—Are they teaching you to offer service to the community even if there's no recognition at the end of it or club requiring it?

So, if you find a bit of Mike in yourself, rest easy in who you are. Some people might have a hard time understanding it, but you just keep walking on the roads you've chosen, and never fear the great hobgoblin whose name is "Well-Rounded!"

The Power Of Vulnerability

Remember what you were doing 20 years ago this month?

You would if you had been on a 28-day sit-in back in 1977. You would if you spent most of that time on a hunger strike. You would if you were blind and were passionately committed to getting people who considered themselves average, everyday people to recognize the rights of average, everyday people with disabilities. You would if you were Mary Jane Owen.

The Rehabilitation Act of 1973 had gotten the ball rolling, but four years later, federal guidelines for compliance had yet to be approved. After meetings and discussions a number of concerned groups planned demonstrations around the country. That's why Mary Jane Owen and a hundred others went to the Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) Regional Offices in San Francisco to put themselves on the line.

Too many people shared a disquieting perception that "it would be better to be dead than disabled." By the 1970s more and more handicapped people began to act on their dreams of acceptance and possibility. Their story is emblematic of the millions who strive to experience the fullness of living in spite of physical glitches, who create their own ways to achieve their potential.

Activists like Mary Jane Owen searched for a common voice to better explain their sense of pride and self-worth. As she put it: "We were only seeking, as peacefully and with as much dignity as we could exhibit under such trying conditions, to prove to the world that we were strong people who wanted no longer to be treated as victims and second class citizens. We sought for recognition of our basic dignity."

On 28 April 1977 HEW head Joseph Califano signed the bill that prohibited discrimination against the handicapped in institutions receiving federal support. And this month, April 1997, a plaque was placed on that old federal building in San Francisco. It commemorates those hundred who for four weeks refused to let the rest of us forget that they had been promised civil protections - and expected to get them.

It was a beginning, an important one. The 1990 Americans with Disabilities Act added clout particularly in the areas of employment and accessibility. But what about the obstacle of attitude today?

Mary Jane Owen, a former professor of social work education and leader in the field of disability, is now the executive director of the National Catholic Office for Persons with Disabilities. She believes that "People with disabilities became a force once others recognized that we all share fragility, we are all vulnerable — it is the tie that binds us all together. Our shared vulnerability can bring us together in positive ways. Disabilities may well be the glue that can hold us together as community and Church with the knowledge that we need each other and our Lord."

Today, as the national psyche drifts into a spiral of silence on the issues of euthanasia and abortion, the campaign of those with disabilities reminds us that all assaults upon life move forward because so few of us are willing to speak out. We can change that.

When we recognize ourselves as a community of mutually dependent people, we will find the Kingdom of God in our midst. There is strength in vulnerability and it binds us together powerfully. We need only look with fresh vision at our lives within these fragile earthen vessels.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

The Kingdom of God

Q. My question is about the words "thy kingdom come" in the Our Father.

Maybe this is trivial, but those words seem to say that the kingdom of God is in the future, at the end of the world, which is what I always thought.

However, a priest speaking at our parish during Lent said the kingdom is here and now. He quoted Jesus saying the kingdom is among you.

I think about the Sunday Gospels a lot, but now I'm not even sure I know what the kingdom of God is.

A. Your question isn't trivial. The Gospels, Matthew particularly, speak of that kingdom dozens of times as a truth which frames and forms our relationship with God here and in eternity.

One difficulty is that the kingdom of God, or kingdom of heaven, is quite a fluid term in the New Testament. Jesus never actually defines what it is.

Rather, he alludes to it with a variety of images and stories that give us something of a composite, a multicolored description of what he means.

The kingdom of which Christ speaks is first of all not a place, or anything else static, something finally finished here or perhaps even in the future.

God's reign, his rule and power over all creation, is active and dynamic, an ongoing reality continually operative in everything he is creating.

Neither is it something new. God has always been Lord of the universe and of the human family, specifically the Hebrew people, who nevertheless rebelled against him.

...the core of the "good news" ...is that this God whose reign we honor is a gracious, loving, merciful and joyful Father who is unveiled in the life and words of His Son.

From the beginning of his public life, Jesus declares that this rule of God continues now; we must reform our lives to recognize his reign and to re-establish the harmony of creation destroyed by sin.

In fact, the core of the "good news" ("Gospel") is that this God whose reign we honor is a gracious, loving, merciful and joyful Father who is unveiled in the life and words of his Son — perhaps most of all in the great parables such as those in Luke 15.

Ultimately, it is this conviction that the infinite Mystery surrounding us is a benevolent one, that allows Jesus to urge us to trust, not to be afraid. Whatever happens, we are sure of the Father's presence and power active in the world.

As the preface of the feast of the Kingship of Christ puts it, the kingdom he proclaims is one of justice, love and peace. All these are active, ongoing realities that, at least here, are never totally perfect, always moving toward

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Choose Words Carefully When Discussing Family Members

In our marriage preparation program we discuss with engaged couples the relationships with their families of origin. For many married persons their families are important resources of companionship, counseling, and instrumental support. A general "rule" we suggest is to keep a unified front. Visit their families together as a couple, rather than separately. And be very careful of bad news they share about their spouse with their families.

We share with the engaged couples a story about Eddy and Jean, and Jean's older brother, Nick. Eddy and Jean had been married for six months. One day Jean calls Nick on the phone complaining about an argument with Eddy that got verbally abusive. Nick had always been Jean's "Lancelot" who protected her when they were kids, and had become her confidant over the years. Though she didn't want Nick to intervene, Jean's call was for the emotional support that was characteristic of their relationship.

As it was Nick was already finding it difficult to get along with Eddy. He felt that his sister could "do better." Getting wind of the unfortunate circumstances of the argument between Jean and Eddy didn't help him in his struggle to treat Eddy like family and to be, at the very least, civil to him. It only made his struggle more difficult.

At a family gathering a few weeks later, Jean and Eddy, having reconciled from their spat, were aglow and enjoying their renewed love for each other. Their relationship had taken a turn for the better because of their mutual effort to pick themselves up after a hard fall, their big fight was in the past. Jean felt as though she was the luckiest woman alive to have such a wonderful partner who was not above admitting his failings. Eddy was not perfect, but he was a good man who genuinely wanted his marriage to work. Meanwhile, Nick continues to struggle with merely being civil to Eddy.

What Jean hadn't understood was that she had violated an important boundary of her marriage by sharing transient bad news about her spouse with a family member. As much as Nick wanted to get along with Eddy, Jean's actions made it more difficult. Jean is setting the stage for her marriage to come between her and Nick, or her relationship with her brother to come between her and Eddy.

Especially in the early years of marriage, couples need to be very careful about sharing negative news about their spouses with family members. If you need to talk with someone, go to a priest, a counselor, or an objective friend who can be trusted. Family members do not love your spouse the way you love your spouse. They won't forgive your spouse as you would.

Family bonds between a spouse and in-laws take time to develop and grow. Often it takes many years for there to be genuine bonds of kinship. Sometimes it never happens. To give your and family of origin a fighting chance, be careful about what you say.

Greensboro College To Host Charismatic Conference

GREENSBORO — A Charismatic Renewal Conference will be held Pentecost weekend — May 16, 17, and 18 — at Greensboro College.

Workshops on the theme "Called and Gifted for the Third Millennium," taken from the Apostolic letter of Pope John Paul II on "Preparation for the Jubilee of the Year 2000," will be offered. The Holy Father has declared 1997 "The Year of Jesus," 1998 "The Year of the Holy Spirit," and 1999 "The Year of the Father."

Featured speaker is Walter Matthews, director of Chariscenter USA, headquarters of the Catholic Charismatic Renewal. In 1990, Pope John Paul II appointed Matthews a member of the Pontifical Council for the Laity. He is an advisor to the U.S. Bishops' Committee on the Laity.

The conference opens May 16 at 7:30 p.m. with music by Hearts of Fire from the Diocese of Raleigh. Music for the remainder of the weekend will be provided by Rev. Mr. Keith Kolodziej and Group. Rev. Mr. Kolodziej is a deacon at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

Holy Ghost Father Ed Vilkauskas, director of the Office of Evangelization for the Charlotte Diocese and pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe, will discuss "Jesus and the Power of the Holy Spirit" on Friday night at 8 p.m. Father Vilkauskas has been appointed coordinator for diocesan preparation of the Third Millennium.

Matthews will lead a session May 17 on "The Great Jubilee of the Year 2000 — Springtime for Christians." Greg Smith, a parishioner of St. James Church in Concord and long-time member of the diocesan charismatic service team, will focus on "Baptism in the Spirit," and Dr. Richard Collings, director of ecumenism and evangelization at Our Lady of the Highways Church in Thomasville, will discuss "The Dangers of the New Age Movement."

Father Ray Berg, spiritual director of the conference and of the Renewal, will celebrate Mass on May 17 at 9 a.m. Mass will also be celebrated Pentecost Sunday (May 18) at 11 a.m. on the grounds of Greensboro College.

All Christians are invited. Cost is $50 per person which includes two nights lodging and meals. A private room is $75. Cost for children over 12 is $25; children under 12 are free. Reservations may be made by calling Lynn Kolodziej (704) 541-6765; Joan Moran (704) 327-0487; or Van Nitz (910) 765-8003.

Securities May Help You Give

By JIM KELLEY

We are indeed fortunate to have generous, thoughtful Catholics here in the Charlotte Diocese who are committed to stewardship and care deeply about serving God in the best possible ways. One such way is by assuring that His work continues — and continues to grow — through gifts to Catholic causes, your parish, the diocesan Foundation or the Diocese of Charlotte.

As you plan your gifts this year, you may be interested in knowing about assets other than cash or checks that can easily benefit and strengthen Catholic causes. All such gifts bring blessings, yet some types of gifts can provide you greater advantages. Paying careful attention to what you give can provide substantial savings for yourself that carry over to those you love.

Gifts of securities essentially refer to using stocks, mutual funds, or some bonds to fulfill your charitable wishes. Securities you've owned at least a year and a day are said to be long-term investments, and ones that have increased in value are known as appreciated property.

You may find that securities make easy and convenient gifts that can further the heartfelt goals of Christians everywhere. The following example illustrates how a gift of stock can bring advantages to you as well as the Church.

One Couple's Way

Paul and Cecelia Johnson, a hypothetical couple, decide to satisfy a pledge in the amount of $10,000 by giving stock now valued at $10,000 that they purchased several years ago for $4,000.

Although the asset has more than doubled in value, it produces an annual dividend of less than 2 percent. The Johnsons have discussed selling the stock but have not taken that step because of the significant amount of capital gains tax that would be due on a sale.

A gift to their parish, Catholic causes, the diocesan Foundation or the Diocese of Charlotte, however, entitles the couple to a number of benefits:

- They receive a charitable income tax deduction for $10,000, the full fair market value of the property (not their original purchase cost of $4,000).
- They avoid the capital gains tax on the entire $6,000 increase in value. Had they sold the stock instead of funding their gift with it, this tax would have been due.
- They conserve their available cash for other purposes.
- They give the stock in memory of Cecelia's mother.
- They make a larger gift than they thought possible in support of Catholic causes.

When combined, the savings from the charitable deduction and the absence of capital gains tax turns out to be more than they originally paid for the stock.

Giving More, Saving More

Although Paul and Cecelia are hypothetical, the circumstances are real. If you have been considering a gift to further Christ's work, giving appreciated property can bring you tax savings and allow you to give more as you save more. The amount of your actual savings depends on your tax rate.

Traveller

Hard-Edged Violence Ends Tale Of Gypsy Con Men

NEW YORK (CNS) — Offering a small, offbeat story with some interesting characters but a haywire ending is “Traveller.”

The title refers to an American clan of Gypsies originally from the British Isles, where they are called “travelers,” and the story is premised on the stereotype of such people as thieves and con artists.

Pat (Mark Wahlberg), the son of a former traveler, tries to join his father’s clan but is rebuffed until Bokky (Bill Paxton) undertakes to give him a chance.

Bokky takes him on the road teaching him the tricks of the trade, such as paving drive-ways with used motor oil and short-changing people.

Pat is a slow learner but wants to make the grade and much of the film follows their picaresque adventures along the roads of the rural South.

When one of their scams costs bartender Jean (Julianna Margulies) her job, Bokky returns her money and they fall in love.

Jean’s little girl, however, needs an expensive operation and Bokky tries for a big score with a grizzled old sharpster (James Gammon) from outside the clan.

The scam involves supposedly counterfeit bills which they switch for real money but they are dealing with gangsters who play for keeps.

What had been a low-key tale of small-time con men turns into a needlessly gory bloodbath in a throwaway ending.

Director Jack Green develops the narrative slowly, taking the time to build sympathy for its characters, but it is all for naught with the hard-edged violence that ends the picture.

Because of graphic violence, sexual situations, Gypsy stereotyping and occasional rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

“The Bishop’s Wife” (1947)

A debonair, smartly tailored angel (Cary Grant) uses his heavenly powers to help the neglected wife (Loretta Young) of a busy Episcopal bishop (David Niven) renew her husband’s ministry to those in need rather than in raising the money for a new cathedral. Director Henry Koster’s sentimental Christmas fable has the virtue of a good script, sincere performances and some amusing moments with Grant’s angelic powers and Monty Wooley as a soft-hearted old cynic. Most of the family will find it charming entertainment. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

“Fantastic Voyage” (1966)

The miniaturization of a medical team (Stephen Boyd, Raquel Welch and Arthur O’Connell) to the size of a molecule and their injection into a stroke patient’s bloodstream is the only possible way to save the life of an important scientist. Director Richard Fleischer’s incredible plot premise yields rich dividends in the form of exacting special effects re-creating the surreal world within the human body. Much suspense and some tense moments. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

“Inside” (1997)

Drawn-out South African prison drama in which a post-apartheid investigator (Louis Gossett Jr.) painstakingly uncovers how a racist prison warden (Nigel Hawthorne) drove an idealistic white professor (Eric Stoltz) being held without charges to the point of suicide. Static direction by Arthur Penn brings little that is insightful or emotionally involving to this harrowing but familiar tale of extreme police brutality tolerated under the former racist government. Recurring bloody beatings, a few instances of profanity and frequent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

“Larger Than Life” (1996)

Underperforming comedy in which a hapless chap (Bill Murray) inherits his father’s performing elephant, then struggles to personally escort the unruly pachyderm across the country to an impatient buyer. Directed by Howard Franklin, the comic proceedings are pleasant enough, though they never venture far beyond its limited odd-couple premise. Fleeting profanity and brief menace. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

“Looking for Richard” (1996)

Playful documentary exploring the historical background, Elizabethan language and dramatic stagecraft of Shakespeare’s “Richard III” as undertaken by actor Al Pacino and his cohorts in preparing for an American version of the play. Also directed by Pacino, the result is an amusing hodgepodge of fact and whimsy, sometimes serious but often frivolous and at times self-indulgent, especially Pacino’s hammy run-throughs in the title role. Dramatized violence, sexual references and occasional rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

“The Preacher’s Wife” (1996)

Charming remake of the 1948 fantasy, “The Bishop’s Wife,” in which an angel (Denzel Washington) is sent to help the discouraged Baptist minister (Courtney B. Vance) of a struggling inner-city church and his neglected wife (Whitney Houston) rediscover romance in their marriage. Director Penny Marshall’s slow-paced, sentimental story about the values of faith and hope is enlivened by an engaging cast and vibrant gospel songs. Romantic complications. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

“The Stepford Wives” (1975)

Katherine Ross stars in this failed thriller about suburban wives behaving like docile, mindless windup dolls. Directed by Bryan Forbes, the harder it tries to be frightening and sinister, the more laughable it becomes. Adult hokum because of language and some visuals. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Solidarity: What Makes It a Virtue?

By Father John Crossin, OSFS
Catholic News Service

One striking thing about the mass suicide of the Heaven's Gate cultists near San Diego was their self-concern. They apparently limited themselves to seeking their own transcendence and their destiny in outer space.

How much thought did they give to others? As I see it, the cultists' isolated saints is a central dimension of our faith. It means that we are to share our spiritual and material goods with one another. We work together for the common good.

Solidarity implies mutuality. That means that in the community of believers we have a lot to learn from each other.

Thus we must learn to listen.

Listening these days can be extremely difficult with so much noise — telephones, television, music, pagers

ing. It is a friendly coalition of varied groups.

There is always someone handing out literature or wishing to engage in conversation. We are one in our commitment to the unborn. While diverse in religious background, we respect each other while pursuing our common purpose.

Such solidarity creates power. Together we are strong. Together we can pursue a just social order.

In their isolation the Heaven's Gate

Our solidarity is in Christ. Jesus blesses our community with many gifts and talents. When we are at our best we share these for the good of all.

These gifts include gifts of healing.

Oppressed by sin as we are, we know that our community can itself be fractured and distracted from its true purposes. In the power of the Holy Spirit, especially as manifested in the sacraments, our personal and communal sins can be healed.

Christ blesses us with the talents of good leaders. And the saints teach us how to live in imitation of Christ. Our contemporary saints — each of us probably knows at least one holy person — teach us what solidarity in Christ really means in practice.

Service to others is characteristic of such solidarity. In solidarity the communal search for life's meaning led to their demise.

Our deepest longings are fulfilled not in fleeing into outer space but in engaging our neighbor. We grow best when we share our spiritual and material goods out of deepest respect for one another.

We are made to be with and for others — in solidarity with them.

The word "solidarity" reminds me of the Polish trade union by that name, of Lech Walesa and the fall of communism. Only years after hearing of the union did I learn that solidarity is a virtue.

I first thought: How clever of Pope John Paul II to make his favorite trade union into a virtue! In his 1987 encyclical "On Social Concerns," the pope wrote: "Solidarity is undoubtedly a Christian virtue" (No. 40).

Only later, in reading the new catechism, did I find that Pope Pius XII mentioned "the law of human solidarity and charity" back in 1939 (Catechism of the Catholic Church, No. 1939).

The word "solidarity" has a European ring to it. Americans might rather speak of friendship, community and the works of charity. Yet, solidarity with others in the communion of — around us. Even more deafening is the "noise" with us: preoccupations, angers, resentments. To listen, we may have to change our ways of acting and let our internal selves be healed.

Yet we can learn to listen with head and heart. In solidarity, we learn that our poorest community members have gifts to offer and important things to say. Here the word "mutuality" implies that God speaks to us through others in many ways and that we should be alert to wise judgment wherever it is found.

Solidarity implies hope.

Recently I read that half the residents of nursing homes never have a visitor — not even one a year. These people suffer a social isolation which can create despair. They lack that oneness with others — in listening and in conversation — that is the ordinary stuff of which hope is made.

In relationships with others, we build hope.

Solidarity also seeks the common good.

And solidarity implies commitment. We commit ourselves to respect those who are different from ourselves.

Every year on Jan. 22 I attend the 'March for Life' in Washington where I live. The crowd is diverse and interestcultists seemed to me to lack this sense of social justice.

Life is given greater depth when we serve others. We experience transcendence as we serve others. Thus, solidarity calls forth deep, and often unrealized, spiritual resources within our hearts and souls.

leader washes other's feet as Jesus did at the Last Supper.

Our solidarity with others leads us to eternal life. Our ultimate solidarity will be with the saints in heaven.

Now we experience that imperfect yet genuine solidarity which works for a just and flourishing community on earth. Here we respect human dignity. Here we value each person's gifts.

The word "solidarity" still reminds me of a labor union. But this virtue also reminds me that I am most myself when I am in union with others.

(Father John Crossin, OSFS is the author of "Friendship: The Key to Spiritual Growth," which will be published this June.)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

St. Maximilian Maria Kolbe "offered his life in place of a prisoner unknown to him in the concentration camp at Auschwitz" during World War II. His action offered "a wonderful witness" of the virtue of solidarity, Pope John Paul II said in his 1987 encyclical "On Social Concerns."

For the pope, solidarity is powerful. In fact, what the pope sees in solidarity is "a new model" for "the unity of the human race."

Solidarity reflects a view of others as neighbors — but not solely in terms of "human and natural bonds."

Actually, the kind of neighbors people are — the depth of their relationship — makes all the difference here.

The virtue of solidarity is inspired by a vision of the "other" as "not only a human being with his or her own rights and a fundamental equality with everyone else," but as "the living image of God" — someone under the Holy Spirit's "permanent action."

That's why solidarity leads beyond "vague compassion or shallow distress" at other's misfortunes, the pope suggests. It leads to "a commitment to the good of one's neighbor with the readiness, in the Gospel sense, to 'lose oneself' for the sake of the other."

Ancient Israel Thought Solidarity Was a Given

By Father John J. Castellet
Catholic News Service

The first readers of the Cain and Abel story would have gasped in horror at Cain's cynical question: "Am I my brother's keeper?" (Genesis 4:9) For, in those ancient times, to ask that question was like asking: "Am I a human being?"

To be human was not just "to be" but "to be with" — to exist in community with others. The value of solidarity was a given!

One's very identity was determined by belonging to a family, a clan, a tribe, a people. Jews were "sons of Israel," brothers and sisters with natural rights and corresponding duties to each other.

It was taken for granted that people came to each other's aid. They didn't have to wait for a poet such as John Donne to write: "No man is an island," living in cold, selfish isolation from others.

Sometimes solidarity in Israel took a violent turn. When Jacob's family came into the land of Canaan, a man from a powerful local tribe raped their sister Dinah. When her brothers heard this, they "seethed with indignation" (Genesis 34:7).

The violence against Dinah was an outrage on more than one level. There was the violence that one individual had inflicted on another. In addition, one family had violated another family.

Dinah's brothers craftily tricked the sons of Hamor into a situation of helplessness, and when they were unable to defend themselves, "two of Jacob's sons took their swords, advanced against the city (of Shechem) without any trouble, and massacred all the males." Jacob's other sons "sacked the city" (Genesis 34:25-27).

For better or for worse, the story illustrates the deep sense of solidarity the people felt.

It is significant that both Matthew and Luke give Jesus a "family tree" — illustrating his solidarity with Israelite history and with the entire human family:

—Matthew introduces Jesus as "the son of David, the son of Abraham" (1:1).

—Luke, with a more universal outlook, traces Jesus' lineage all the way back to "the son of Adam, the son of God" (3:38). Jesus was a brother to everyone.

Jesus acknowledged this relationship by reaching out with care to all people. He was especially attentive to those written off by society as unworthy of consideration. This drew down upon him the hatred of intensely class-conscious people. So we read of people exclaiming, "This man welcomes sinners and eats with them" (Luke 15:2).

Jesus' followers made this attitude their own. That's why we read in Scripture that the ancient Christians "was of one heart and mind, and no one claimed that any of his possessions was his own, but they had everything in common.... There was no needy person among them" (Acts 4:32-34).

St. Paul reminded his readers of this. He said: "All of you who were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free person, there is not male and female; for you are all one (person) in Christ Jesus" (Galatians 3:27-28).

Now that's solidarity!

We Are What We Eat: The Body of Christ

By Father Lawrence E. Mick
Catholic News Service

Several families of Vietnamese refugees, who had fled their country when Saigon fell to the forces of the north, arrived in our town and our parish in August 1975. They had been sponsored by several families in the parish, so I had the privilege of helping to welcome them to our country.

The first few months were quite an experience. They spoke little English and we spoke even less Vietnamese.

Centuries ago St. Augustine, the great bishop, preaching to his assembly in northern Africa, recalled St. Paul's teaching that we are the body of Christ. Augustine then added:

"If you, therefore, are Christ's body and members, it is your own mystery that is placed on the Lord's table. It is your own mystery that you are receiving. You are saying 'amen' to what you are."

We belong to one another, and we need each other. As St. Paul insisted, "The eye cannot say to the hand, 'I do not need you,' nor again the head to the

Our culture was strange to them, as was theirs to us.

They were overwhelmed by the sheer variety in our supermarkets, and we were fascinated by their style of cooking and the new tastes they introduced to us. They were stunned by the size of our middle-class homes, and we were feet, 'I do not need you'" (1 Corinthians 12:21).

Our identity as members of the one body is the basis of our solidarity in the church. Our communion at the Eucharist goes beyond the hour of worship together.

As Augustine challenged his people, amazed at how little space they felt a family needed.

"A profound mystery at the heart of our worship reveals that we 'receive' the body of Christ, but we also 'are' the body of Christ."

The differences seemed endless, and they led to many moments of laughter and some experiences of frustration. We had so little in common at the beginning.

One thing we did share, however, was faith. They were Catholic Christians, and we shared Sunday worship together.

They didn't understand the readings and the homily, but the liturgy speaks also with the language of symbol and ritual. They knew the shape of the Mass and its meaning. They knew, and we knew, that we belonged to one another there, that we were brothers and sisters in Christ.

All the differences between us were less important at Mass than the unity we shared as members of the body of Christ.

A profound mystery at the heart of our worship reveals that we "receive" the body of Christ, but we also "are" the body of Christ. We are linked to one another as parts of the same body, sharing the same life.

"When you hear, 'The body of Christ,' you reply, 'Amen.' Be a member of Christ's body, then, so that your amen may ring true."

Our solidarity leads us to visit the sick, offer meals and support to the grieving before and after the funeral, assist the immigrant family seeking a new beginning, and reach out to the unemployed with moral support and monetary assistance.

Could we do otherwise? We are one body. We belong to one another. Let our amen ring true!

People In The News

Pro-Life Congressman Says Faith Comes First

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (CNS) — Rep. Henry J. Hyde says faith has been the keystone of his pro-life convictions throughout his 23 years in Congress. "The most important thing in my life is my Catholic faith," the Illinois Republican said at a press conference April 18 before speaking at a Kentucky Right to Life banquet in Louisville. Hyde, 73, added, "I think about my soul. It's one of the reasons I'm in this (pro-life) movement." Now chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Hyde became a nationally known figure in 1976 when, still in his first term in Congress, he ushered through the Hyde Amendment barring all federal funding for abortion.

Retiring British Catholic M.P. Plans New Political Career

LIVERPOOL, England (CNS) — One of Britain's best-known Catholic members of Parliament is stepping down after 18 years in the House of Commons. But David Alton, known for his pro-life stance, plans to resume his political career as a member of the country's second chamber, the House of Lords. Alton was first elected to the House of Commons for a seat in Liverpool in 1979 as a member of the Liberal Party. He has campaigned against abortion, euthanasia and embryo experimentation. He has also been prominent in fighting for human rights abroad — in China, in the former Soviet Union and elsewhere.

Cardinal Mahony Appoints First Woman Chancellor

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — Cardinal Roger M. Mahony appointed Sister Cecilia Louise Moore as chancellor of the Los Angeles Archdiocese, making her the first woman and first member of a religious order to hold that position in the archdiocese. All previous chancellors had been priests before Cardinal Mahony appointed the Sister of St. Joseph Carondelet to the post. She had been vice chancellor since 1994.

Portland Diocese Bids Farewell To Archbishop George

PORTLAND, Ore. (CNS) — Worshipers filled St. Mary's Cathedral for a special Mass April 20 to say farewell to Portland Archbishop Francis E. George. Although some of those attending Mass expressed sadness that he is departing, those feelings were tempered with understanding. After only 10 months as the church's leader in western Oregon, Archbishop George will officially become Chicago's archbishop May 7.

Holy Cross Father William Lewers Dies

NOTRE DAME, Ind. (CNS) — Holy Cross Father William M. Lewers, former head of the U.S. bishops' Office of International Justice and Peace and former provincial superior of his order, died of cancer April 19 at Holy Cross House, Notre Dame. The priest, who was 69 years old, was to be buried April 24 at the Holy Cross community cemetery on the University of Notre Dame campus following a funeral Mass at the university's Basilica of the Sacred Heart.

Sister Margaret Cafferty Dies Of Cancer

SAN FRANCISCO (CNS) — Presentation Sister Margaret Cafferty died of cancer April 20 at her motherhouse in San Francisco. She was 61. Her funeral was celebrated April 25 at St. Agnes Church in San Francisco. An educator, community organizer and social justice leader, Sister Cafferty was best known for her national and international work as a leader of women religious. She was executive director of the Leadership Conference of Women Religious, from 1992 until March of this year, when advancing bone cancer forced her to leave that post. The LCWR's 1,000 members are leaders of more than 78,000 U.S. women religious.

Father Pollard Cited For Work In Religious Education

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Father John E. Pollard, executive director of the U.S. bishops' Office for the Catechism, has been cited for his "outstanding contribution to the ministry of education in the United States." The F. Sadlier Dinger Award was presented to Father Pollard April 15 at the annual meeting of the National Conference of Catechetical Leadership in Orlando, Fla. "Father Pollard has labored tirelessly to help publishers produce catechetical programs that are faithful to the Catechism of the Catholic Church," said William S. Dinger, president of William H. Sadlier Inc.

Twins Have Identical Vocations

Besides having the same looks, Father William Lies (left) and his identical twin, Father James, share the same vocation as Holy Cross priests. They also have an uncle who is a priest, an aunt who is a nun and another uncle who is a religious brother.

By JOSEPH YOUNG

LITTLE FALLS, Minn. (CNS) — When newly ordained Holy Cross Father James Lies offered a celebratory Mass in his hometown parish of St. Mary's in Little Falls, he had to assure the congregation that they were not seeing double.

His identical twin, Holy Cross Father William Lies, ordained three years earlier, was in the church with their mother, Dolores Lies, along with a few hundred extended family members and scores of friends.

"I was a little nervous, so I thought about having (my brother) stand up here instead of me, hoping you wouldn't notice," Father James Lies told the congregation before the Mass.

Father James then made an aisle-by-aisle circuit of the church, blessing the well-wishers with liberal douses from a sprig dipped in a bowlful of holy water. "That may have been a good deal more fun for me than for you," he told the worshipers.

Ordained April 5 at the Basilica of the Sacred Heart in Notre Dame, Ind., Father James Lies is assistant director of campus ministry at Notre Dame. Father William also was ordained at Notre Dame.

Bill and of all our children." She and husband Thomas — who died 31 years ago when the twins were 4 years old — had 10 children.

"Jim looked really relaxed," she said. "He rehearsed his homily at home and asked me to critique it."

The twins are continuing a tradition of religious vocations in the family. Three of Dolores' siblings — School Sister of St. Francis Mary Hueller, Pallottine Father Francis Hueller and Brother Norbert Hueller, a Christian Brother of Ireland — have served the church for a total of more than 150 years.

Father Nicholas Landsberger, St. Mary's pastor who served as master of ceremonies for the Mass, said he knew of only one other priest who had a twin — retired Father James Minette, a priest of the St. Cloud Diocese who now lives in California.

"But his brother did not become a priest," he said, which caused some confusion when Father Minette's identical twin went out on dates.

Thankfully, the Lies twins need not worry about that type of confusion — just the everyday, run-of-the-mill mistaken identities to which all identical twins are subject.

Pope To Take Vacation In Northern Italian Mountain Retreat

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II will take his summer vacation at the northern Italian mountain retreat of Valle d'Aosta for the sixth time, authorities said in late April.

The pontiff is to stay in the region from July 9 to 19, Bishop Giuseppe Anfossi of Aosta announced in a statement, adding that the visit will provide Pope John Paul "real rest from the demands of his universal ministry."

Vatican spokesmen could not immediately confirm the details as released by the diocese, but they acknowledged it was customary for the news of the pope's impending vacation to be broken by the bishop who will act as host.

Pope John Paul's customary holiday in the woods at 4,000 feet is meant as a period of absolute repose. In recent years, spokesmen say, the now 76-year-old pope has passed the time reading, writing poetry, praying and walking the trails.

Lengthier hiking expeditions were the hallmark of his summer trips in the early days of his pontificate.

The pope generally stays in the village of Les Combes. Two years ago, he celebrated Mass with the inhabitants of the village. Last summer a museum dedicated to Pope John Paul was opened there.

Seniors Enjoy Fellowship At Spring Fling

By KATHY SCHMUGGE
HICKORY — There is an old Polish saying, “Sarosc nieradosc,” which translates “Old age is not joy.” Senior citizens in the Diocese of Charlotte who participated in the 11th annual CRISM (Catholic Retirees in Special Ministries) Spring Fling totally contradicted that maxim, allowing nothing but joy to overflow during the fun-filled day.
The April 23 event at the Catholic Conference Center was organized by CRISM coordinator Suzanne Bach. The day carefully blended the goals of the ministry, “planning, praying and playing,” with greater emphasis on the last two objectives.
“We can free up so much energy with laughter,” Bach told the approximately 105 participants who represented 14 different parishes.

Under the expertise of Carlita Hunter, recreation consultant and author of Gray Hair and I Don't Care, activities were well-organized, interesting and kept the seniors happily on the move. The theme of the day revolved around magazines, so decorations and many of the activities utilized pictures from periodicals. The limited free time during lunch was filled with music by accordion player Don Young, who was later joined by pianist/organist Mary Finlayson, a senior parishioner at Our Lady of Assumption Church in Charlotte.
A scavenger hunt, bingo, comical skits, chair dancing, sing-alongs, and trivia games were also part of Spring Fling activities. The day closed with a Mass celebrated by Father Ed Sheridan, pastor of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte, who proudly shared the fact that he had recently acquired senior status himself.
“When we come together, we need to pray for each other, and help those struggling in life. We may not be as vibrant as we were in our 20s, 30s, or 40s, but there is so much we can still contribute,” he said, challenging the seniors to give even more of themselves.
The Spring Fling was a new experience for Virginia Williamson, a parishioner at Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte. “The fun, the spirituality, the Mass — they all were inspiring,” she said.
With the energy and optimism demonstrated during the event and in their daily lives, these Catholic seniors illustrate for the greater Christian community what a joy it is to be serving God and each other.

Parishioners from Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte make their own cards for a unique game derived from Bingo.

LARCUM Conference To Include Session For Lay Leaders

HICKORY — The annual Bishops’ Ecumenical Dialogue, also known as the LARCUM conference, is scheduled for May 6-7 at the Catholic Conference Center and for the first time will include a special session for lay leaders.
The conference theme is “Clergy Stress: Its Implications for the Church,” directed by Conventual Father Canice Connors, former pastor of Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem and former president and CEO of the St. Luke Institute in Suitland, Md. Father Connors, who holds a Ph.D. in psychology from the University of Pittsburgh, travels nationally to serve as a resource person at retreats, workshops, conferences and lectures. He speaks and writes articles on human sexuality, sexual abuse and pedophilia and has served as a consultant for the U.S. Catholic Bishops’ Conference.
The clergy conference includes three presentations: “Naming the Issues and Sources,” “Reflecting on the Issues and Sources in a Faith Context,” and “Planning Effective Supports and Interventions.” Small-group discussions and worship services are also included.

The session for lay leaders is May 7 from 7-9 p.m. Father Connors will focus on stress of clergy and ways to help congregations assist their clergy members.
The Bishops’ Ecumenical Dialogue is jointly sponsored by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, the Episcopal Diocese of Western North Carolina, the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and the Western N.C. Conference of the United Methodist Church. The bishops of their respective faiths will host the conference.
The registration fee for the clergy conference is $10 per person plus meals and lodging. For the lay leaders session, the cost is $5 per person.

For information and registration, contact St. Stephen Lutheran Church, 1406 Harper Ave. NW, Lenoir, NC 28645, or call (704) 758-1261.

Mother Teresa Declared Fit For Travel, Plans Tour

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — Mother Teresa, who was confined to bed and a wheelchair for some eight months, has been described by her doctor as "fit for travel now" and plans an international tour during May and June.

The 86-year-old founder of the Missionaries of Charity was in and out of hospitals beginning last August and underwent an angioplasty last November, her third in five years.

"She is well and fit for travel now," said Mother Teresa's cardiologist, Ashim Kumar. However, a Missionaries of Charity nun and a qualified nurse will accompany Mother Teresa on her journey, reported UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

"I am going to Rome," Mother Teresa told UCA News April 27, adding that the main purpose is to attend the final vows ceremony for 30 nuns of her order there.

Missionaries of Charity sources said Mother Teresa will leave for Rome May 15 and will attend the 46th International Eucharistic Congress in Wroclaw, Poland, scheduled for May 25-June 1. She also plans to visit Missionaries of Charity houses in Poland.

Just prior to her departure, she is to attend the final vows of 29 Missionaries of Charity nuns in Calcutta on May 10 and first vows of other nuns May 11.

"I'm much better," Mother Teresa told UCA News in a loud and clear voice, cheerful and walking steadily and unaided on the first-floor balcony of the Missionaries of Charity motherhouse. She also stopped to bless children seeking her prayers.

Mother Teresa was superior general from the founding of the Missionaries of Charity in 1950 until mid-March, when Sister Nirmala Joshi was elected to succeed the Nobel laureate nun.

The new superior general will not be accompanying Mother Teresa, having left for Tanzania and Kenya April 27 to visit Missionaries of Charity houses.

The mission "for the poorest of the poor" that Mother Teresa began half a century ago is now spread among 568 houses in 120 countries.

fuller realization.

The New Testament indicates often that this reigning presence of God is not something we merit or "build." It is his work, a pure gift to his people when they try to live as a community of charity and faithfulness.

When we look at it this way, as part of the mystery of God's creating love, perhaps we can understand at least a little how the reign of God will always be here, and always be coming, as long as the Creator continues his work.

The more we are aware of the power of this divine rule among us now and of its continuance in eternity, the greater is our confidence that, in Paul's words, nothing can separate us from the love of God that comes to us in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Twelve Arrested In School Of Americas Protest

By MARK PATTISON

ARLINGTON, Va. (CNS) — Twelve protesters were arrested in a demonstration held at the Pentagon against the Army's School of the Americas.

The protest, which drew 200 to the U.S. military headquarters complex just outside Washington, featured a costumed Uncle Sam leading a dozen people, each representing a Latin American nation, to the Pentagon's parade grounds, where they were "shot" by a cardboard machine gun.

The nonviolent protest came near the end of an April 19-29 vigil seeking support for a bill introduced by U.S. Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., to close the School of the Americas, a training ground at Fort Benning, Ga., for Latin American military officers.

Paddy Inman, one of the organizers, said 16 were prepared for arrest, but that Pentagon security must not have spotted them all.

As security officers arrested the protesters, and later as they led them away, a loud cheer rose up from the others.

As the protest started, they read aloud a pledge of nonviolent action, vowing "openness, friendliness and respect" to all, including the targets of their protest.

"We stand for life. We stand for non-violence," said Art Laffin of the Dorothy Day Catholic Worker house in Washington, who began the rally outside the main entrance of the Pentagon on an overcast morning as workers silently filed in for another day at work.

"Hear our nonviolent witness on behalf of victims created by the Pentagon, the No. 1 killing institution in the world. We come here in humility and a spirit of repentance," Laffin said.

Maryknoll Father Roy Bourgeois, who started his campaign to shut down the School of the Americas six years ago, said the Pentagon action was one of the "sacred moments in the struggle for peace and justice.... We are here to speak for those whose voices have been silenced."

Inman said Bolivia, Nicaragua and El Salvador, the three nations with the highest number of School of the Americas graduates, are also the three nations with the worst human rights records in Latin America.

Graduates target religious leaders, labor organizers, educators and student groups in their home nations, Inman said. "They have left a trail of blood and suffering in every country where they have returned," he added.

Carmelite Sister Mary Ann Foley read a list of School of the Americas graduates, one from each country, followed by some of their activities. The list included former Panama strongman Manuel Noriega, plus people found responsible for the Washington car-bombing death of Chilean exile Orlando Letelier and the massacre at El Mozote, El Salvador.

"How do you find the defendant?" Sister Foley asked. "Guilty!" replied the other protesters.

As the overcast gradually lifted, the protesters walked most of the way around the Pentagon until they reached its parade grounds.

After the mock executions, some protesters dug up chunks of dirt from the grounds and tossed them atop the "executed" of different nations to signify their graves.

Phoebe Knopf of Boston, who represented El Salvador during the mock execution, said she has been involved in peace and justice causes for the past 24 years, but turned her attention to the School of the Americas after traveling to El Salvador. There she said she met Rufina Amaya, the sole survivor of the El Mozote massacre, which took more than 1,000 lives, including that of her husband and four children.

Knopf, 42, told Catholic News Service she is given to anger upon hearing of such deeds, but "I turn my rage over to Jesus."

Tony Vento came to participate from Cleveland, the home town of Jean Donovan and Sister Dorothy Kazel, two of the four churchwomen slain in El Salvador in 1980. Of those tried for the murders, a majority were School of the Americas graduates.

Vento wept as he recounted their stories. He clutched crosses bearing their names and that of Father Ignacio Ellacuria, one of six Jesuits murdered in El Salvador in 1989 along with their housekeeper and her teen-age daughter. Again of those held responsible in the deaths, a majority were School of the Americas graduates.

Bills introduced in Congress in past sessions to close down the School of the Americas have gone down to defeat. But Father Bourgeois told CNS, "It's a process. You can't shortcut (it). The School of the Americas has been hidden away for years. But you can't hide in the daylight."

He labeled as "hogwash" the notion that such protests are ineffectual and anachronistic remnants of the 1960s. "When there's an injustice, people respond," Father Bourgeois said. "Why? Because we are people of compassion, people of good will."

Catholics Urged To Fight Assisted Suicide Promoters

MARQUETTE, Mich. (CNS) — Michigan Catholics must waste no time in fighting a group who will begin in May to gather signatures to legalize assisted suicide, said the head of the state's Catholic Conference. "Now, more than ever, the time to act is today, maybe even begin tonight," urged Sister Monica Kostielney, president and chief executive officer of the conference. The Mercy sister, who continued in late April to speak out against the group's efforts, made her initial plea during a lecture in Marquette earlier in the month. She said a group calling itself Merian's Friends will try to gather 350,000 signatures in an effort to put the legalization of assisted suicide on the state ballot in 1998.

Panel: Laity, Priests Both Essential To Church Renewal

COLLEGEVILLE, Minn. (CNS) — The spirit of renewal will continue in the Catholic Church because the Holy Spirit continues to inspire the lay people who will have to do the work, according to a panel of speakers at St. John's University in Collegeville. But Father Andrew Greeley, a sociologist and author, said priests also have an important role if church renewal is to be successful. In fact, priests will be the ones holding parish communities together, helping to make the parish a place that all can live with, the Chicago priest said during the April 17 panel discussion.

Algeria Must End Violence, Promote Dialogue, Pope Tells Ambassador

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Algeria has to break the cycle of violence and promote dialogue to restore peace after years of conflict, Pope John Paul II told the country's new envoy to the Holy See. "The culture of violence must give way to the culture of peace," the pope said as Ambassador Mohamed-Salah Dembri presented his credentials April 24. Two days earlier, the news surfaced that Islamic fundamentalists had massacred 93 people in a village near the capital, Algiers.

NFPC President Urges New Vision Of Diaconate

ATLANTA (CNS) — An inadequate vision of diaconal ministry in the United States has led to the increasing "parochialization" of permanent deacons, a priest told a national conference in April. Father Nick Rice, president of the National Federation of Priests' Councils, addressed the National Association of Diaconate Directors at their annual meeting in Atlanta in April. Noting that 8 percent of U.S. permanent deacons are already in charge of parishes that are without resident pastors, Father Rice said that percentage is likely to increase as the priest shortage worsens. "This increased 'parochialization' of the diaconate ought to be studied very carefully, lest the diaconate be cast as a 'miniaturized priesthood,'" he said.

Salvation For Gays Requires Celibacy, Says Vatican Newspaper

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Gay people can attain salvation, but the Catholic Church expects them to remain celibate, said an article in the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano. "God loves us as we are," Dominican Father Jean-Louis Brugues wrote April 23, "with our limitations, our particularities, and our wounds, which can become ways to sanctification." The French priest, who teaches moral theology and is a member of the International Theological Commission, said nothing in church teaching suggests that gays and lesbians are cut off from salvation — but they should refrain from sexual activity, as should heterosexual singles.

Brazilian Bishops Urge Government Action On Poverty, Human Rights

BRASILIA, Brazil (CNS) — Brazil's bishops have criticized the government of President Fernando Henrique Cardoso for failing to reduce poverty and curb ongoing human rights abuses in South America's biggest country. "We cannot remain indifferent to the marginalization of millions of people and to so many crimes committed against life," the Brazilian bishops said in a statement issued during their annual assembly, which ended April 18. "The violence that permeates all society is also a consequence of economic policies that have produced" one of the world's biggest gaps in income distribution, the statement said.

Vatican Official Appeals For Safe Return Of Refugees To Bosnia

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A Vatican envoy has appealed for the safe return of an estimated 1.5 million refugees in Bosnia-Herzegovina, saying a Peruvian Archbishop Juan Luis Cipriani Thorne breaks down in tears while discussing the end of the Peruvian hostage crisis at an April 23 press conference in Lima. On the right is Japanese envoy Terusuke Terada. The two were part of a team trying to negotiate a peaceful settlement in the four-month standoff between the government and rebels.

Peruvian Archbishop Mourns Those Who Died In Hostage Rescue

LIMA, Peru (CNS) — Archbishop Juan Luis Cipriani Thorne of Ayacucho, Peru, expressed his sorrow and pain over the deaths that resulted from the military rescue of hostages at the Japanese ambassador's residence in Lima. "After four months of permanent contact ... all the hostages became a family for me, so the death of Dr. (Carlos) Giusti, the death of the members of the army and the death of the members of the MRTA bring me immense pain," the archbishop told journalists April 23, the day after the rescue.

lasting peace depends on the right to return to one's home. Cardinal Roger Etchegaray, president of the Pontifical Justice and Peace Commission, made the remarks in mid-April during a meeting in Geneva with the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, a Vatican statement said. Cardinal Etchegaray said he wanted to convey Pope John Paul II's deep concern over the refugee problem in Bosnia.

African Bishops Say Arms Sales, Prejudice At Heart Of Conflicts

NAIROBI, Kenya (CNS) — Prejudice, the international arms trade, poverty and a spirit of vengeance are the sins at the root of current conflicts in Africa, the continent's leading bishops said. The suffering of Africa's people is "the result of sin committed both by Africans and non-Africans alike," said the members of the standing committee of the Symposium of Episcopal Conferences of Africa and Madagascar. The committee members, along with the presidents of the continent's national and regional bishops' conferences, met in Nairobi April 14-18.

Pope Launches Appeal For Peace In Zaire

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II launched an appeal for peace in Zaire amid news of fresh atrocities in the war-torn central African nation. "I ask insistently that all the parties involved in the conflict accept an honest dialogue and a true negotiation, cooperating with the forces of the international community, so that the cessation of hostilities can come about, and the path toward an authentic democracy can be taken once more," the pope said at the end of his general audience April 23.

Iranian Official Says 'No True Muslim' Would Attack Pope

ROME (CNS) — A Muslim will never attack the pope, according to Iran's top diplomat. "I can say that no true Muslim thinks of attacking, or of planning or inspiring hostile acts against the pope," Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said in an interview printed in the Rome daily newspaper Il Messaggero April 23. Noting that the Italian government had just accused Iran of preparing terrorist attacks against Pope John Paul II and the Vatican, Velayati was asked why the pope in particular should be a target. "We Iranians in particular have and want to maintain a very close cooperation with the Vatican."

Donations For Aging Religious Called Heartening

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Catholics donated $26.4 million during the 1996 national collection for aging religious sisters, brothers and priests, according to the National Religious Retirement Office. The collection for 1996 was the second highest amount since the first collection taken up in 1988. A record high of $26.8 million was collected in 1994 and in 1995 what is now the third highest amount came in at $25.5 million.

SWANNANOVA — The year was 1933 when a connection between Swannanoa, N.C., and New Bedford, Mass., brought a migration of Catholics to the Carolina mountain area called "Grey Eagle" by the native Cherokee. Thanks to that influx of Catholics due to industrial relocation, St. Margaret Mary Church was founded.

A key figure in this migration was Charles D. Owen, whose family's Beacon Manufacturing Company was part of New England's industrial landscape. Owen purchased a farm in Swannanoa in 1923, and two years later, the plant he had built in western North Carolina to complement the business began operations.

As Owen's family business grew, so did the textile manufacturing base in the South, thereby bringing in an influx of northeastern Catholics to the region. In 1933, Beacon began closing its New England plant; the transfer of equipment and personnel to Swannanoa soon followed.

In previous years, eastern Buncombe County Catholics — those already settled and those moving there — were confronted with a 20-mile round trip, mostly on unpaved roads, to go to Mass at St. Lawrence Church in Asheville. As the roots of Beacon and other industries took hold in the area soil, the need for a new Catholic church east of Asheville was realized.

In the spring of 1936, Bishop William Hafey of Raleigh purchased a plot of land in the Grovemont subdivision of Swannanoa. Benedictine Father Michael McInerney of Belmont Abbey served as architect, and with funding from a bequest through the Catholic Extension Society, construction of the church and a rectory was underway on the site originally intended as the location for a hotel.

Bishop Hafey dedicated St. Margaret Mary Church in October 1936. Father Joseph Federal, who later served the Diocese of Salt Lake City as bishop, was installed as first pastor. The parish boundary was designed to include four townships in eastern and southeastern Buncombe County: Swannanoa, Black Mountain, Fairview and Broad River. The latter two have since been transferred to other jurisdictions.

Sisters from St. Genevieve-of-the-Pines in Asheville offered catechetical instruction for parishioners in the fall of 1936. As the parish grew over the next three decades, the need for more educational space — as well as social and worship room — became evident. Ground was broken for a multipurpose addition in 1965, and after a delay was dedicated by Bishop Vincent Waters in 1969. A parking area across the street from the church was donated to the parish soon thereafter.

The Diocese of Charlotte was established in 1972. A year later its first bishop, the Most Reverend Michael J. Begley, appointed former fellow seminarian Atonement Father Pius Keating as pastor of St. Margaret Mary Church. He served as pastor there for two decades, extending pastoral efforts into the ecumenical community. While in Swannanoa, he founded SAGE, the seniors club that became one of the parish's most active groups during Father Keating's pastorate and remains so today.

Father Keating was succeeded in 1994 by Father Anthony Marcaccio, currently priest-secretary to Bishop William G. Curlin. While at St. Margaret Mary, Father Marcaccio stressed lay ministry and led a renovation effort of the church's interior. In 1995, he was called to Charlotte to serve in the bishop's office.

Father Andrew Latsko, current pastor, has ministered to St. Margaret Mary parishioners since mid-1995. Father Latsko continues to emphasize service ministries and has strengthened the training and implementation of lay ministers of the parish. During his pastorate the Holy Name Men's Club has been activated, the Ladies Guild has broadened its activities and the youth have continued to actively participate in church life. Community outreach includes ministering at the Veterans Administration Medical Center, to the area needy through projects like Habitat for Humanity, and to students at local schools and colleges. Special attention is also being placed on service to the homebound and the aged. Adult education, CCD, Landings and other catechetical efforts add to parish life; several of these groups now meet in the annex building, recently rented by the parish for office and classroom use.

The parish celebrated its 60th anniversary in October 1996. Present were several original parishioners who still call the Swannanoa Valley home thanks to Charles D. Owen and Beacon Manufacturing Company. It was Owen's impressions of this mountain region that led him to enrich the production of the family business. In the process, he indirectly influenced an enrichment of the Catholic Church in western North Carolina as well.

Mercy Sisters Dedicate Administration Center

BELMONT — The Sisters of Mercy in Belmont dedicated their new administration center and Curtin Hall on April 27. The 12,600-square foot Mercy Administration Center is connected by a glass corridor and social space to Curtin Hall, a 5,700 square-foot multipurpose facility. The hall is named in honor of Mercy Sister Mary Charles Curtin, a pioneer of this community who arrived in North Carolina in 1869. Shown in the reception area of the administration center are Bishop Amando Samo of the Diocese of the Caroline Islands (a Mercy Sisters mission is located in the Pacific); Mercy Sister Mary Jerome Spradley, councillor; Mercy Sister Pauline Clifford, vice president; Mercy Sister Rosalind Picot, president; Bishop William G. Curlin; Mercy Sister Paulette Williams, councillor; and Mercy Sister Mary Thomas Burke, councillor.

New Book Gives History of Carolina Catholic Institution

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

HIGH POINT — Friends and supporters of Maryfield Nursing Home have a special memento to peruse while celebrating the institution's 50th anniversary in 1997. Maryfield U.S.A.: A Success Story, penned by a retired High Point newspaper editor, presents the rich and sometimes tumultuous profile of a health care facility whose roots lie in 19th century British soil.

Joe Exum Brown, former editor of the High Point Enterprise, volunteered his writing services after being contacted by Maryfield's Poor Servants of the Mother of God in 1994. For the next two years, Brown pored over the order's records and scrapbooks, along with regional histories, interviews, and local and wire reports from newspapers.

The writer, who calls the undertaking "a labor of love," also relied on personal knowledge. "I arrived in High Point about six or eight months after the sisters did," he says, "so I certainly have been familiar with Maryfield. The project (as a whole) was a good exercise in historical research."

That research took Brown back to 19th century London, where the order called Poor Servants of the Mother of God was established in 1869 by a convert to the Catholic faith. Earlier, Frances

Parish Center Offers Temporary Home To Flood Refugees

By JOE TOWALSKI

AVON, Minn. (CNS) — As flood victims in the Red River Valley returned to their home to see the magnitude of the damage, an Avon Catholic church stood ready to welcome families seeking short-term shelter.

Each of 12 classrooms in the religious education building at St. Benedict Church has been prepared to house one family and comes with a key to assure privacy and security.

"This is a big deal when it comes to respect and dignity," said GERALYN NATHE EVANS, the parish's youth ministry director, who has been coordinating the relief effort.

Volunteers set up a community room with snacks available 24 hours, a large-screen television, sofas and recliners. Shelves of toys have been collected for children, and cellular phones will be available.

Accommodations for up to 70 adults and children were available and refugees were expected to stay anywhere from four to eight weeks.

Although no families had yet been housed as of May 2, officials from the American Red Cross and the Federal Emergency Management Agency told Evans that families would likely start arriving at the facility in the near future.

Transformation of the religious education center into a transitional shelter took only a week, with hundreds of people offering time, money and materials. So many people donated mattresses that those offering them are now being placed on a waiting list.

"Honest to God, people will come up to me and say, 'We need this.' And within a minute — I'm not exaggerating — someone will walk through the door and say, 'I can do that,'" Evans told the St. Cloud Visitor, newspaper of the St. Cloud Diocese. "As soon as there's a challenge, God has presented the gift to meet it."

Laurice Kostreba added, "The generosity is so overwhelming. Just look at all this giving." She was working with her 11-year-old daughter Leah sorting and shelving piles of donated items that have poured in from towns throughout central Minnesota.

A child from Holdingford sent a small jewelry box tied with a rubber band. Inside were two snowflake earrings, a mushroom necklace and two pennies.

"You could tell this came from her heart," Kostreba said. "It brought tears to my eyes."

The community has learned much about itself through the act of giving, said Lewis Fisher, a St. Benedict's parishioner who has volunteered for cooking detail.

"We've opened our pocketbooks, our hearts and our buildings," he said. "We've said to them, 'Use us. We want to help you.'"

Meanwhile, St. Cloud Bishop John F. Kinney spent a day recently in Breckenridge, on the Minnesota border with North Dakota, bringing a message of solidarity and hope to flood victims.

He stopped at St. Mary School, which Minnesota National Guard troops have called home since arriving in the city several weeks ago to help with flood control efforts. The bishop prayed for flood victims at St. Mary of the Presentation Church, then toured the city to survey the damage and talk with residents.

"I wanted to be with pastors in this area..." who have faced challenges both personally and pastorally, he said.

"I also came not so much to see (what happened), but to be with whom I could be with," the bishop added. "It's not fair to talk about suffering around the world and not be with the suffering right here."

Bishop Kinney said he was "in awe of the spirit of the people and the faith I think is behind that."

One-third to one-half of St. Mary's parishioners were forced to leave their homes and stay in area shelters, hotels or with relatives, said Father Leo Moenkedick, the pastor.

His contact with parishioners has been limited mostly to those who have been volunteering, and "their spirits are pretty good," he said. But many families still faced the prospect of coming back to devastated homes.

It was precisely those families that the St. Benedict's parishioners in Avon, about 120 miles away, wanted to help. And in that effort is a lesson for students in religious education classes.

Although the classrooms were given over to the shelter, there were no plans to put religious education on hold.

"We're moving from learning out of books to learning by doing," she said. "Nothing is on hold. Rather it's a transition of thought. We as staff have said this is an opportunity to change our (classroom) learning into experiential learning."

People were beginning to realize that the corporal works of mercy, listed on the wall of one of the classrooms, are more than just a list to be memorized. Volunteers were connecting the concepts and what it means to be a Christian with their efforts to aid flood victims.

"Even if no one comes, this has been a success," Evans said. "The community will be stronger thanks to this."

Pope Opens Vocations Conference, Emphasizes Attracting Youth

By LYNNE WEIL

ROME (CNS) — Pope John Paul II opened a conference on vocations in Europe by urging church authorities to concentrate more effort on young members of their communities.

Calling the vocations ministry "an issue which is vital for the future of the Christian faith in the continent," the pope said in a statement to the early May conference that there is no doubt "that the ecclesial community's commitment to the pastoral care of vocations is one of its most serious and urgent tasks."

"You shall identify appropriate strategies for helping those whom the Lord chooses for this total commitment to discover their own call and to speak their 'yes' without reservation," Pope John Paul said. "Your attention will be directed above all toward the young, so that they might know how to welcome the Master's invitation to follow him."

The six-day European Vocations Congress was sponsored by the Pontifical Office for Ecclesiastical Vocations, an institution for coordinating vocations policy among Vatican departments. Taking part were members of the Roman Curia, bishops and heads of bishops' conferences from throughout Europe, and European authorities on vocations.

Under the motto "New Vocations for a New Europe," the group was to identify the expectations and values of young people and to make concrete suggestions for preparing them for vocations.

These tasks were already outlined in a report the Vatican released last October. This working paper, titled, "Pastoral Care of Vocations in the Particular Churches of Europe," was to be the focal point for the conference.

The document, the result of questionnaires returned by 28 European bishops' conferences, showed that with the exception of certain Central and East European countries, the numbers of new priests and religious were dwindling throughout the continent, while the Catholic population was steadily increasing. This left fewer and older priests and religious to tend to more of the faithful.

The document said seminary enrollment is on the rise, and student numbers in diocesan and religious seminaries has gone up about 30 percent.

But it also noted that many young people leave religious life. It blamed lack of discipline for a Europe-wide rise in men dropping out of the priesthood.

"They have a great desire to commit themselves and immediately take part in pastoral, missionary and charity experiences, but they do not possess the discipline for constant everyday work," the paper explained.

In the opening sessions of the congress, its leaders agreed that immediate action had to be taken to reverse these trends.

Cardinal Camillo Ruini, a senior member of the Vatican Congregation for Bishops, said an authentic new evangelization was needed in Europe to emphasize that Christianity can be a force of hope and salvation in European society.

Cardinal Miloslav Vlk of Prague, president of the Council of European Bishops' Conferences, said in a Mass on the first day of the congress that a continual re-evangelization must be combined with sincere prayer, because neither prayer alone nor renewed efforts to attract the faithful to vocations would be sufficient.

Pope John Paul's remarks echoed the cardinal's homily.

Margaret Taylor, known as Mother Mary Magdalen during her years as superior, had served with Florence Nightingale as a nursing volunteer in the Crimean War.

Five members of the congregation made their way to America — and to central North Carolina particularly — in 1947 with the intention of opening a hospital and convalescent home. A variety of financial problems largely prevented the former from becoming a reality, so the sisters turned full attention to developing what today is a 60-acre property in High Point featuring a 122-bed nursing facility and 29-home retirement community.

Brown notes that the institution's success of today was arrived at through determined prayer, hospitable support from the people of the Triad and the sisters' unflinching desire to tend to the sick and aging. Despite cultural anomalies, periods of financial uncertainty and pangs of homesickness, the sisters from the British Isles were resolute in their enterprise and their faith.

In the book, Sister Lucy Hennessy, Maryfield administrator since 1987, explains that the nursing home — while operating on a non-denominational admittance policy — emphasizes nurturing the soul as well as the body. "We want Maryfield to be a prayer center as much as we want it to be a care center," she says.

Maryfield U.S.A. chronicles the myriad people and events that have helped the establishment become a "climate which emphasizes hospitality and reflects the Gospel values of love, justice, service, and compassion," as referred to in a document titled "The Philosophy of Maryfield."

At the heart of that environment, Brown adds, are the Poor Servants of the Mother of God. "There's no question that the order of sisters is the key to the whole thing," says the author. "The sisters are delightful people and they are tremendously appreciative of everything that everybody does for them."

A graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Joe Brown began his writing career with the High Point Enterprise daily newspaper in 1948 as a rookie reporter. He later worked as city editor, managing editor and executive editor before his promotion to editor in the early 1970s. Brown served in that capacity for 18 years. Since retiring in 1989, he has voluntarily worked on local historical research projects.

Isidore the Farmer

Isidore was born in Madrid, Spain, to poor parents. When he was old enough to work, he became a farm laborer for a wealthy man. It is said he went to Mass daily and was an ardent worker. He often shared his food with others, keeping scraps for himself. His wife, Maria de la Cabeza, also is honored as a saint. Many miracles have been reported through Isidore's intercession. He died in 1130. He is patron of farmers and of Madrid. His feast is May 15.

Catholic Community Growth Means New Building For Charlotte Diocese

CHARLOTTE — The Catholic Diocese of Charlotte has contracted to purchase a new building to accommodate consistent growth trends. Over the past 10 years the Charlotte Diocese has almost doubled in size.

The three-story building is located on Church Street less than two miles from The Catholic Center, the main office for the diocese. The 57,000-square foot building will accommodate 95 diocesan employees now scattered throughout Charlotte at five different locations.

"This move will allow us greater efficiencies, as we bring ministries together in one central location," said Bishop William G. Curlin, bishop of the 46-county diocese of Charlotte. "Our outreach in faith can be greater fulfilled through a stronger collaboration of a more closely connected staff."

"Our concern is to meet the growing needs of our schools, our ministries, our parishes and our parishioners," said Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor of the Charlotte diocese. "And those needs have literally outstripped our current facility. By having one central location we can provide better service to the Catholic community throughout western North Carolina."

Currently, the diocese's services and ministries are splintered throughout the city. Administrative offices are in The Catholic Center on East Morehead St. There are also Catholic diocesan entities located on Park Rd., Eastway Dr., Buchanan St. and First St.

"After careful review, we knew the timing and the situation was right to make this purchase," said Bill Weldon, fiscal manager for the diocese. "Not only is the building ideal for our needs, but it's in a prime market location."

Weldon said the diocese will use internal financing that will allow payment of the building through existing liquid assets. This financial decision means that fund-raising efforts are not necessary to purchase the building.

"The diocese also will have a positive cash flow in the coming years because we will save on rent and overhead expenditures on current spaces," Weldon said. "And, we plan to sell The Catholic Center, further defraying the expense of this purchase."

Employees of the Catholic Diocese of Charlotte will occupy the top two floors of the building. And the diocese expects to move into the building by the fall of this year. Current tenants will continue to lease the first floor.

"The move is about providing service and ministry to the people of the diocese," said Bishop Curlin. "It's not just service for the sake of service; rather an outreach of faith and love to try to make a difference in our world."

The future Catholic Center sits in a prime location less than two miles from the present building.

Meeting Of Vatican, Islamic Groups Highlights Respect, Cooperation

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Muslims and Christians should not compete for followers, but should work together to create a climate in which all people believe in God and are free to worship, a pontifical council and an Islamic group said.

The Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue and the World Islamic Call Society, based in Tripoli, Libya, held a four-day meeting in April to discuss efforts to spread their faiths.

In early May, the Vatican published a brief statement about the Rome meeting, which, it said, included "self-criticism" on both sides about how Christians and Muslims have tried to win adherents in the past.

The similarities and differences between Christian mission and Islamic "da'wah," the call to Islam, were discussed during the meeting, the statement said.

"Mission, as defined by Christians, is the activity of the church to witness and to announce to all peoples the good news of the salvation of God realized in his son Jesus Christ," it said.

"Da'wah, as defined by Muslims, is the invitation to mankind to the path of Allah, the one and Almighty God, the creator of the universe as preached by all prophets" and revealed to Mohammed, the statement explained.

As Christians and Muslims try to live and share their faith, the statement said, "care must be taken to respect human dignity. This entails respect for the religion of the other when speaking and writing about it; it also means freedom of conscience enshrined in the right to religious liberty."

"Christianity and Islam agree that no compulsion should be used on persons or societies in the name of religion," the statement said.

"Rather than carrying out da'wah and mission in the next century in a spirit of competition — as sometimes happened in the past — they should practice it in a spirit of collaboration and as a service to humankind," it said.

Pope Calls April Visit A Follow-Up To Miraculous End To Communism

Dear brothers and sisters,

My visit to the Czech Republic a few days ago was part of the celebration of the millennium of St. Adalbert, the great bishop and monk venerated as the patron of Bohemia and Poland. Adalbert's missionary journeys, which culminated in his martyrdom, are an important chapter in the spiritual history of Europe, particularly Central Europe. The celebration concluded a 10-year program of spiritual renewal begun by the late Cardinal Frantisek Tomasek. My pastoral visit included a Mass for young people in Hradec Kralove, a meeting with religious and the sick in the ancient Benedictine abbey of Brevnov, an outdoor Mass in Prague and an ecumenical meeting at the Cathedral of St. Vitus. My return to Prague was closely linked to my first visit, seven years ago, shortly after the fall of the communist regime and the beginning of the spiritual rebirth which the millennium of St. Adalbert is meant to foster. I wish to thank President Havel and the civil authorities, together with Cardinal Miloslav Vlk and my brother bishops, for all they did to make my visit possible.

I extend a warm welcome to all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrim groups from Ireland, Australia, Indonesia, Japan, the Philippines and the United States. Upon all of you I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In Pre-Visit Message, Pope Urges End To Divisions In Lebanon

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A week before his historic visit to Lebanon, Pope John Paul II said he hoped his presence would help spur national reconciliation and an end to divisions. The pope said his May 10-11 trip had a "deeply religious and human purpose," and compared it to the visit Christ made to the same lands nearly 2,000 years ago.

Pope Condemns Slaying Of Seminarians

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II condemned the slaying of more than 30 seminarians in Burundi as a "barbaric act" and urged the country's ethnic groups to curb another escalating round of bloodshed. Vatican Radio reported May 2 that armed Hutu rebels had attacked the minor seminary in Buta, in the Diocese of Bururi, leaving scores of dead and injured. It quoted an unnamed missionary priest as saying about 46 people were slain, including seminarians and other students, with at least that many wounded. The Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, reported that 34 seminarians were killed. The attack took place April 28, but was made known only several days later.

What Makes Youth Theater a Good Idea

When a request arrived recently in the mail for a contribution to the local youth theater, it included a handwritten note from a young woman I've known in my work as a psychologist. She's had some hard times and has made some decisions that she later regretted.

Her involvement in a theater group delighted me. This is one of those teen activities that meets all the criteria for a good experience.

—First, it gets her in a situation where she can hang out with other teens, but with plenty of adult supervision. Teens involved in structured activities outside of school are much less likely to get in trouble.

There's something about working with grown-ups who aren't your parents that helps teens develop a more mature world view.

Of course, it's important that this is a structured activity. If this girl were just hanging around with some 25-year-old guys in their apartment, it would be nothing but trouble.

—Second, it's a sustained project. She'll be involved with the same group of kids or adults for months, maybe even years. That means she'll have chances at developing a group of friends who are into theater, rather than hanging out on corners.

When kids are in trouble, their lives can be filled up by other kids with problems. Two friends in trouble may help each other climb up out of the mess — or just find new kinds of problems together.

—Third, theater is fun and exciting. Putting on a play calls for your best efforts. There's no going halfway because your work is so very visible. If you do a second-rate job, hundreds of people will know about it.

That's why theater groups are so close. The kids involved with the show pull together. If it's great, everybody shares in the glow, and if it isn't great everybody shares in that too.

—Finally, theater engages the "big ideas." At heart, every good play is literature, a story about human values, about the important choices we make in our lives. You can't work on a play without thinking about the decisions the characters confront — and occasionally reflecting on your own life choices as well.

Certainly, theater isn't the only activity involving big ideas. The same engagement happens when you work with social agencies, get involved in political campaigns or work in any of the arts. Your diocese probably has a youth office, and one phone call will put you in touch with people who know dozens of projects just waiting for teen volunteers.

These activities help you ask the basic questions: What matters in life, and how should I choose to live?

You may have figured out that youth theater was an important part of my high school life. I was never a star athlete or one of the "popular kids." I just wasn't the type.

But I could paint sets and pound nails. I learned how to run a light board, and eventually I got some acting parts — and I was pretty good at that, too.

No, I'm not a movie star. In fact, I haven't been in a play for nearly 30 years. But I remember how much I learned from the theater and how much it helped me with the sometimes difficult process of living through high school.

I looked carefully at that letter, the one requesting a donation.

Then I wrote a check.

Oh, I Didn't Think Anyone Noticed!

It was just one of those chance opportunities for grace and revelation. Two men, unaware of the respect each held for the other, meeting for the first time. One, a filmmaker, responsible for the exquisitely produced movie, "Marvin's Room." The other, the former governor of Pennsylvania, whose personal reflections are so eloquently shared in his book, Fighting for Life.

The producer, Tod Scott Brody, had just finished reading the governor's book a few weeks earlier. Governor Casey had recently seen Brody's movie. Both were present at the 1997 Christopher Awards ceremony which celebrates film, television and print work that affirms the highest values of the human spirit. Both were winners.

The governor was beaming and looking terrific since his liver and heart transplant surgery. With him was a son and grandson who were clearly proud of their statesman dad and grandpa whose autobiography joyously weaves their shared experiences of family and faith during a struggle that captured nationwide attention.

Tod Scott Brody was standing with the film's director, Jerry Zaks, when he spotted the governor making a bee-line for them. He said later, "I couldn't believe my eyes. Here was the governor, whose personal story had so profoundly touched me, now reaching out to me with both hands and embracing our film with such heartfelt praise. I was speechless!"

When Brody caught his breath and explained that he had just read Casey's book, it was the governor's turn to be surprised. Two men, from different spheres, unaware of the meaning and value each had given the other.

The governor later observed: "There was a 'connectedness' between us that I could never have imagined possible. Each of us had in our own way tried to light a candle of hope in the certain darkness of this world. In that moment we found that we were not alone in what we individually were trying to do."

There are times in everybody's life when we feel that we are alone in our daily efforts to create something of value. Even though these acts may not be recognized or appreciated, it is important for us to know that we are not alone.

Even writing these weekly columns is like putting a message in a bottle and tossing it out to sea. Who knows on what shore it might be picked up and deciphered? At those moments, I find reassurance in knowing that my efforts are not created in a vacuum. There are others, like those I met at the Christopher Awards, like you, like those whose names we will never know — who spread the Good News of God's Love thorough acts of personal courage and hope and faith.

None of us needs to wait for an awards ceremony to celebrate that connectedness. We should take advantage of every opportunity we have to reach out to others and tell them how much we value them and their efforts. It will surely make a difference in their lives and in yours.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Events the Week Before Calvary

Q. One of the Catholic couples in our interfaith Bible study group (10 couples, six denominations) gave us your recent column about the stations of the cross and their relation to Scripture. This prompted a discussion about what happened each day in the week before Calvary. John (12:1) says something about "six days before Passover," and follows with events of different days.

One day describes the discussion of the withered fig tree, another the anointing of Jesus at Bethany, and so on.

Does the Catholic Church have any written information on what took place each day preceding the crucifixion?

A. The Gospels give us little information about time frames for these days of Jesus' life and differ widely from one Gospel to another about what happened when. It's impossible to put them together in a neat chronological package.

First of all, the Gospels do not agree even on the day of the Last Supper — and therefore of the crucifixion. Matthew, Mark and Luke put it at Passover, the first day of the feast of Unleavened Bread (Matthew 26:17), which would be the 15th day of the Jewish month of Nisan.

John says the supper was before the feast of Passover (13:1), the day of preparation (18:28 and 19:42), in other words on the 14th day of Nisan, one day earlier in the week.

Scholars differ on the possible motives for, and significance of, this difference. But, for reasons we cannot go into here, they pretty much agree that John's dating is probably correct.

Second, the sequence of some events of that week is not the same from one Gospel to another. For example, Matthew and Mark place the anointing of Jesus by the woman at a dinner in Bethany sometime after the "Palm Sunday" entry into Jerusalem.

John has it the day before that entry (Jn 12:12).

As I said, there are just too few specific clues in any of the Gospels, or all of them put together, to map out those final events of Jesus' earthly life in chronological order.

It is most essential in all this to remember that these variations should not surprise us. It is obvious the Gospels were never meant to be "biographies" of Jesus in our modern sense of the word.

The authors of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John intended primarily not to write history, but to explain the meaning of the message and person of the risen Lord, what he reveals, what he has accomplished and what he expects his followers to be.

Each had his own theological perspective and obviously did not hesitate to rearrange places and times and other details if that would help achieve his purpose.

One of the major documents of the Catholic Church put it this way: "From the many things handed down they (the Gospel writers) selected some things, reduced others to a synthesis, and still others they explicated, as they kept in mind the situation of the churches....

"The doctrine and the life of Jesus were not simply reported for the sole purpose of being remembered, but were 'preached' so as to offer the church a basis of faith and morals" ("The Historical Truth of the Gospels," 1964 Instruction of the Pontifical Biblical Commission, approved by Pope Paul VI; Section IX).

The way each Gospel relates the final days of Jesus is a good example of this creativity exercised by all four evangelists, under the inspiration and guidance of the Holy Spirit, to pass on the good news of salvation in Jesus Christ.

Letters

The following letter, addressed to Bishop William G. Curlin, was submitted to The Catholic News & Herald for publication.

Dear Bishop Curlin,

With gratitude, I acknowledge the great generosity of the Catholics of Charlotte, who last year provided $54,700 for the Society for the Propagation of the Faith. This assistance for the Church's mission ad gentes is joined with donations of Catholics throughout the world, including those of the young mission churches.

As we know, these are times of immense suffering and sacrifice in the missions. In 1996, 46 missionaries gave their lives in witness to Jesus Christ and the Gospel. As it lives out the Paschal Mystery, the Church in the developing world depends greatly on the prayers and sacrifices of all the faithful.

It was the vision of Pauline Jaricot that prompted the establishment of the Propagation of the Faith in France 175 years ago this year. She realized the necessity of prayer and personal sacrifice for the Church's worldwide mission and understood that such outreach would help to revitalize the missionary faith in her homeland, as indeed it did. As Pope John Paul II has said, "Faith is strengthened when it is given to others!"

Your generous support of the Propagation of the Faith means so very much to so many of our brother bishops in the missions whose work is made possible through this assistance. On their behalf, I extend sincerest gratitude to you. I am grateful as well for the effective collaboration of Monsignor (Anthony) Kovacic (diocesan director of the Propagation of the Faith).

Propagation of the Faith

To the Editor,

I am writing in regard to your People in the News article about the Catholic student teacher suing the public education system in Massachusetts. Based on the story, I agree the man was wronged, but not for the reasons he states.

As an educator, he has the responsibility to remain in his class with his students. As a Catholic educator in a non-denominational classroom, he has the added responsibility of blending his religious beliefs with his job of educating children of all religions.

I believe that God asks us to be His voice and bring His word to everyone we meet through our words and actions. This student teacher could have used the opportunity to educate the children, not on religious issues, but on issues of principle and free speech, and to educate the students on their right to not accept everything as art, as true, or even acceptable. By walking out, he showed students it's OK to quit and not stand up for yourself and your beliefs.

I certainly hope this student teacher gets another chance to teach, but only after he has learned the art of teaching.

Branch Of CSS Launches Project Safe Place

By MIKE KROKOS

WINSTON-SALEM — Billy is a victim of gang violence. Every day, the 14-year-old is harassed between classes, and later, as he walks the 10 blocks home. On occasion, he is confronted with threats. A month ago, the teen would not have known where to turn for help. Now, he knows he can seek shelter at a nearby city recreation center.

The recreation center is among the public facilities and businesses that has been designated a Safe Place. They are identified with large Safe Place signs displayed outside buildings. Thus far, 70 sites in Forsythe County have received such designation.

Host Homes — a local non-profit agency under the umbrella of Catholic Social Services — launched Project Safe Place in April. Begun in 1983 in Louisville, Ky., Project Safe Place is a collaborative effort among the community to help reach children in need.

"The employees at the appointed sites are trained to provide guidance to children looking for help," explained Mable Stevenson, Host Homes director. The responsibility of the site is minimal. After calming the child down, Host Homes is called. They will respond within 20 minutes by sending a staff person or trained volunteer to assess the situation.

According to Stevenson, Safe Place sites are designed to get children help fast. Sites are designed to assist youth who are lost, children running from a bully or gang, or youth running from problems at home. Unless parental physical abuse is evident, parents will always be contacted immediately by Host Homes.

"This program is another way the community can help troubled kids," Stevenson said.

"Host Homes has demonstrated in the Piedmont-Triad area a real leadership in developing sound, professional programs for children," added Elizabeth Thurbee, CSS executive director. "Project Safe Place is another indication of their commitment to assist children in vulnerable positions get the best possible care."

Established in 1987 by CSS, Host Homes provides three major services: therapeutic counseling to youth ages 10-17 and their families; specialized foster care for youth ages 10-17 in a crisis (youth can live up to two weeks in licensed volunteer foster homes); and a Special Friends mentoring program, where a client is matched with an adult role model.

The agency and its responsibilities have grown in the past decade. The program started with a part-time person; now the staff consists of five full-time and two part-time employees.

Host Homes serves approximately 250 families per year. The agency is youth-oriented, meaning a child must be diagnosed with a problem before his or her family is included in the process.

"The majority of kids we serve are having problems at home. If they're having problems at home, they are generally having difficulties at school too," Stevenson said. "Most are runaways from the immediate area."

Some clients are "throwaways," the director added. "Parents tell their children they can't deal with them anymore, and they end up here," she said.

An equal amount of boys and girls are served through the program. Children from diverse backgrounds seek assistance. Referrals come from a variety of sources, including the courts, schools, other parents, and various community resources (such as the Department of Social Services or Mental Health Center). Children are served regardless of race or religious affiliation.

Host Homes is funded through grants and other fund-raising vehicles. Project Safe Place is being funded by a grant from R.J. Reynolds. All services are provided free.

THOMASVILLE — More than 1,000 people turned out for the Cinco de Mayo Celebration held May 3 at the Davidson County Fairgrounds in Lexington. The festival, sponsored by Our Lady of the Highways parish, raised more than $3,000 for the church's building fund. The indoor festival was a celebration of Hispanic culture. It featured a Mexican folk dance program which included the traditional Mexican hat dance and the Machete dance. Authentic cuisine from Cuba, El Salvador, Guatemala, Mexico and Puerto Rico was available for fairgoers as well. Organizer Kathy Laskis of Our Lady of the Highways termed the festival a "great success" and added parishioners are already looking forward to an even bigger Cinco de Mayo celebration next year.

Commandments

Character Tries To Break God's Laws

NEW YORK (CNS) — Beset by personal losses, a distraught widower attempts to defy God's laws in "Commandments" (Gramercy).

Writer-director Daniel Taplitz raises serious questions about how a benevolent God can allow good people to endure extreme suffering, but presents the story in a sweetly goofy comic vein that doesn't really jell with its spiritual theme.

Earnest Seth (Aidan Quinn), raised by a Jewish father and Catholic mother, can no longer cope after his pregnant wife drowns, his house is destroyed by lightning, he loses his job and his dog is crippled.

Suicidal and raging at God for all the miseries visited on him, he vows to break every commandment to defy what he now believes is a malevolent Creator.

Enter Rachel (Courteney Cox), his late wife's kind sister, who takes in homeless Seth under protest from her selfish reporter husband, Harry (Anthony LaPaglia). Harry's a womanizer who intends to write a headline-grabbing story about Seth, especially if the grieving widower breaks the Big One — thou shalt not kill.

Meanwhile, Seth listlessly curses, tells a lie, dishonors his father, etc. — and grows increasingly fond of Rachel, and furious with her cheating spouse.

The upshot is Seth and Rachel fall in love and break a commandment in the process, but Seth breaks it off, afraid that God might take Rachel from him as well.

Unable to kill anyone, he decides to do himself in instead and Harry sees Seth leap from a lighthouse into the hurricane-tossed ocean.

When Rachel visits the site the following morning, a miracle in the making even has cynical Harry questioning his own smug atheism.

Quinn and Cox play engaging characters who convey real pain when their spouses either die or lie, effectively destroying both marriages. But the audience is supposed to be laughing at their confusion as they find themselves unwittingly attracted to each other and unsure what to do about it.

LaPaglia has a broader comic role as the snoopy reporter catching the local police chief in compromising positions that he knows only too well himself.

As the narrative tries ever harder to be an offbeat comedy, it refuses to relinquish its heady biblical theme, finally becoming ludicrous with its Job-like conclusion drowned in schmaltz.

Serious questions are raised and then just washed away as Seth is literally reborn into waiting welcoming arms, ready to tackle life's little surprises once more, with or without faith — the audience will have to guess.

The appealing cast can't overcome this thin material that never fleshes out the ideas it initially presents.

Because of fleeting sexual encounters, brief violence, intermittent rough language and some profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Blood and Wine" (1997)

A stolen diamond necklace and an alluring Cuban nanny (Jennifer Lopez) drive a unreachable wedge between a sullen young man (Stephen Dorff) and his thieving stepdad (Jack Nicholson) as each aims to get the girl and prevent the other from keeping the ice. Director Bob Rafelson finds most of his characters struggling with their consciences, but it's often a losing proposition in this serpentine crime thriller. Some violence, intermittent rough language and recurring profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Evening Star" (1996)

Spirited sequel to 1983's "Terms of Endearment" continues the story of the strong-willed grandmother (Shirley MacLaine) and her problems with the three grandchildren she raised as she pursues romance with a decades-younger therapist (Bill Paxton), despite the opposition of her longtime maid (Marion Ross) and adoring neighbor (Donald Moffat). Writer-director Robert Harling paces the drama with plenty of heart and comic sassiness as the imperious matriarch comes to terms with her progeny's independence and her own mortality. Restrained bedroom scenes, minimal rough language and an instance of profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Fire on the Mountain" (1996)

Documentary about the formation and military achievements during World War II of the Army's 10th Mountain Division, the only American infantry corps specifically trained for mountain warfare. Co-directors Beth and George Gage engagingly document the division's three years of training in the Rockies, its assault on German positions in the Italian Apennines and how the surviving members of the 10th helped to popularize skiing in postwar America. Some combat footage. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Get on the Bus" (1996)

Documentary-like road movie explores the attitudes and emotions of 15 African-American residents of Los Angeles as they bus across the country to attend the 1995 Million Man March in Washington. Directed by Spike Lee, the fictional characters engage in lively discussions of racial and family issues that often turn serious and thoughtful but seldom preachy. Fleeting violence, some racial epithets, sporadic rough language and occasional profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Godfather" (1972)

Blockbuster screen version of the Mario Puzo novel about a Mafia family's rise, decline and resurgence in the murderous world of New York racketeering. Marlon Brando plays the aging but indomitable don with James Caan and Al Pacino as leading family members. Francis Ford Coppola's direction is a study in control and pacing with all the right touches in establishing the proper 1940s ambiance. The murders are plentiful and gruesome, with little spared in detailing the intricacies of mob life. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"The Leopard Son" (1996)

Nature documentary follows two years in the growth of a male leopard from cub to adulthood on Africa's Serengeti Plains. Narrated by John Gielgud and directed by Hugo van Lawick, the dramatically photographed chronicle of life in the wild provides an uncompromising portrait of the survival of the fittest, with some fairly graphic scenes of animal kills. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences.

"Palookaville" (1996)

Low-key comedy about three jobless Jersey City losers who halfheartedly plan robberies to pay the bills but bungle their every attempt. Director Alan Taylor maintains a consistently wry tone as the basic humanity of its would-be felons keeps the trio reluctantly on the straight and narrow. Fleeting sexual innuendo, brief nudity and recurring rough language with profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

At the local barber shop I get more than a haircut. I get the opinions of year-round residents and seasonal tourists on all the current events. During the O.J. Simpson trial, there were more heated debates in that barber shop than in the Los Angeles courtroom.

Not long ago some people thought they saw the image of the Madonna and child on the window of an office building in our area. Reactions in the form of judgments about this ranged from unquestioning belief to scoffing ridicule.

Judgments. We all make them, we all hear them, we all deal with them. Parents make numerous judgments in raising children. Employers judge among qualified applicants for a job. Citizens judge which candidates deserve their votes.

Yet as Christians we have been cautioned by Jesus about making judgments: "Stop judging, that you may not be judged" (Matthew 7:1). What did he mean?

Just before that biblical passage, Jesus encouraged his listeners to trust in God's care for them and seek the kingdom of God rather than worrying about things excessively. When Jesus warned his followers not to judge others, it was a reminder that our human judgments should contribute to the fulfillment of God's desires for all of us.

According to God's covenant, all

It is widely believed that some people judged O.J. Simpson guilty just because he is an African American, while others judged him innocent for the same reason. If this is true, they prejudged him.

—Learning is the second characteristic of good judgment. This requires an informed mind and the izes good judgment. Not the absence of knowledge but the refusal to learn.

Sometimes this form of ignorance stems from insecurity, sometimes from a fear that new knowledge will force a person to make unwelcome changes.

Some people criticize the computer age simply because they are not familiar with it. Some professionals judge continuing education a waste of time because they don't want to re-think what they were taught when they earned their degree.

Third, good judgment looks ahead. This requires a broad mind, the ability to look beyond the immediate situation and see the implications for the future. In jurisprudence, court decisions set legal precedent; in government, laws determine public policy; in business, decisions affect people's livelihoods and careers.

In all areas of life, especially religion, judgments should envision how everybody can benefit both now and in the future.

The opposite attitude is self-serving. In this case people make judgments to benefit themselves, assuming that there are only winners and losers, and that only their opinion is right and all others are wrong.

It happens when one group outshouts all other groups so that only its opinion will be heard. But most of us need to ask at one time or another how self-serving our approach to other people is.

Exercising good judgment is not always easy. But listening with an open mind, learning with a willing mind and looking ahead with a broad mind are great assets — even at the local barber shop.

Getting a grasp on good judgment

people are destined for a blessed life. This is what Jesus joyfully proclaimed as the coming of God's reign. But not all people act worthily. They lie, they exploit others, they are unfaithful, they steal, they kill. They provoke God's judgment.

The judgment of God must be understood in relation to the covenant of God. When God's judgment is pronounced, it is first of all an affirmation of the covenant, a restatement or God's intentions. It is in relation to this covenant that a person's behavior is exposed as incompatible or sinful.

But even then the purpose of God's judgment is to persuade people to change their way of life.

Following God's example in making our own judgments is not easy, but a friend of mine who recently retired as a court judge offered some helpful advice.

Good judgment includes three characteristics, he believes.

—Listening is the first characteristic, he said. An open mind is needed and the discipline to let the facts speak for themselves.

The standard representation of justice as a blindfolded person with an extended arm holding scales typifies this characteristic. The evidence in each case should be the basis of judgment, not personal preference.

In religious terms we should first listen to the word of God before presuming to judge others according to it.

The opposite of this mentality is prejudice. A prejudiced person has a closed mind, already made up without considering or caring what the facts are.

willingness to gain new knowledge.

Good judgments are made in the framework of established values, but no one completely grasps the meaning of those values and how to apply them. This is why court judges review prior cases, medical doctors consult one another and test cases are used to teach moral and business principles.

In religious terms we are always learning what God's covenant means.

Ignorance is the opposite of the attitude of learning that character-

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Sometimes it's tricky to function as a person of good judgment without assuming God's place as judge — judge of others, that is. What's the problem?

Sometimes we're influenced in painful or unjust ways by another person's actions. What then? Do we find ourselves resenting that person?

The problem is that resentment is a powerful force; we may lose sight of the fine line between exercising good judgment about another's actions and judging the resented person's worth.

Then there is the need to hold others responsible for the consequences of their actions. The problem is that in seeing correctly how others' actions create problems for them, we can take a wrong turn into judging the person as bad, a loser or hopeless.

It is possible by constructively helping people see the consequences of their actions to convey hope to them. But condemning them as persons could help to rob them of hope.

Again, to exercise good judgment toward others whose actions we don't welcome, I think it helps to believe in them as much as possible — to remember the importance of the future for them. People can change. When they do, will they remember us as people of good judgment?

Was there a time when someone attempted to exercise “fraternal correction” of you? Was the person effective? Why?

“My best friend.... We are both capable of giving each other heartfelt, constructive advice. We do this for each other in a very gentle, loving manner.” — Patty Sosenheimer, Fort Wayne, Ind.

“It was my mother, who explained to me that all people are children of God.... I learned not to judge people by their appearance.... She helped me not to let peer pressure influence my attitude.” — Debbie Greenwood, West Chicago, Ill.

“Jesus showed us that we have to be gentle and understanding in our approach. Then, if grace is operating, a person is open to change. Every exercise of tough love is an instance of fraternal correction.” — Father John Oldfield, OAR, Suffern, N.Y.

Would God judge it my way?

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

There is a character in Maeve Binchy's latest novel who self-righteously passes judgment on other people. When his opinion is called into question, he responds indignantly: "Look, I'm sure that God himself would agree with me if he knew all the facts in the case." What arrogance! God knows perfectly well all the facts in every case and still offers love. People pass judgment on themselves by turning their backs on God's gracious offer of salvation.

In John's Gospel, we hear this: "God did not send his Son into the world to condemn the world but that the world might be saved through him. Whoever believes in him will not be condemned, but whoever does not believe has already been condemned because he has not believed in the name of the only Son of God" (John 3:17-18).

St. Paul had many enemies who were quick to pass judgment on him. His answer? "It does not concern me in the least that I am judged by you or any human tribunal. I do not even pass judgment on myself....

"Therefore, do not make any judgment before the appointed time, until the Lord comes, for he will bring to light what is hidden in darkness and will manifest the motives of our hearts, and then everyone will receive praise from God" (1 Corinthians 4:3-5).

If people are quick to judge others, just as often they are proved wrong. In the Old Testament King Saul was sure that David was out to get him and on this basis decided to eliminate the younger man.

Now, David was sure that he would one day be king, but he had not the slightest intention of getting there over Saul's dead body. In fact, when David had Saul at his mercy and his followers urged him to kill the king, he adamantly refused to lay a finger on him.

When Saul heard of this, he cried out: "You are in the right rather than I; you have treated me generously, while I have done you harm. Such is the generosity you showed me today, when the Lord delivered me into your grasp and you did not kill me" (1 Samuel 24:18-19).

When Jesus was pressured to pass judgment on a woman caught in adultery (all by herself?!), he turned the tables on her accusers, and they slunk away. Left alone with her, he asked her where they had all gone. "Has no one condemned you?" She replied, "No one, sir." Then Jesus replied, "Neither do I condemn you. Go (and) from now on do not sin" (John 8:10-11).

This same Jesus advised in his Sermon on the Mount: "Stop judging, that you may not be judged. For as you judge, so you will be judged.... Why do you notice the splinter in your brother's eye, but do not perceive the wooden beam in you own eye?"

"You hypocrite, remove the wooden beam from your eye first; then you will see clearly to remove the splinter from your brother's eye" (Matthew 7:1-5).

What we don't know can hurt us

By Anne Hansen
Catholic News Service

Will scientists in time find that a gene is linked to the human judgmentalism most of us seem to possess? The ideal is to keep judgmentalism in check, but it's not easy.

"Don't judge a book by its cover," was mother's advice from childhood.

At times it feels comforting to watch the dress, behavior or lifestyle of another and know, because we are smarter, more astute, just plain better, that we would never be like them.

Often lack of understanding or ignorance causes us to be judgmental. Perhaps we decide arbitrarily that stupidity led someone into bankruptcy; that negligent parenting led a child to drugs or alcohol; that a neighbor who left her husband was immoral.

How do we know that the bankruptcy was caused by greed or overspending? It may have been, but sudden business reverses or the loss of a job could also be the cause.

How do we know that a parent whose child turned to drugs didn't do everything possible to prevent it?

People may ask how their neighbor could leave her husband "when he provided so well for the family." But do they know for sure that simple survival wasn't her motivation? The nice house and funds for college may have camouflaged an abusive lifestyle.

The teen-age mothers I work with are subjected frequently to judgmental comments. They do not need to be reminded of the mistakes they have made. However they also are quick to point out that they did not have abortions but gave life to their children — a good decision at any age.

My brother died of complications from AIDS nearly six years ago. The church was packed for the memorial Mass. His friends hosted a gathering at their home after the service. The house was overflowing with guests. Nieces and nephews ran up and down the stairs as friends and family members laughed and cried together.

A woman we'd grown up with — a good woman, a Catholic who is usually very gracious and outgoing — asked for a tour of the home. My sister and I were getting quite annoyed as she stared into each room and said nothing. I felt unsupported by her.

The next day as we gathered at the cemetery this woman was present. She came to us and said she wanted to apologize. She knew my brother was gay and that the owners of the home where we had been the night before were also gay.

She had arrived expecting a bizarre situation — one she wouldn't be able to cope with. I think she also was afraid, and afraid to interact. As can happen in all sorts of situations, she anticipated a situation involving a gay lifestyle that didn't leave room for her to imagine my brother's friends as warm, caring human beings loved by God — even though during the earlier service the church itself recognized this about them.

Because we are human, we judge other people's actions in ways that leave them less than human in our imagination. And we are judged. The important point is that we learn something in the process and live accordingly.

Israel's Ambassador To Vatican Hopes To Bridge Past, Present

JERUSALEM (CNS) — The new Israeli ambassador to the Vatican, a descendant of Jews expelled from Spain by Catholic King Ferdinand during the Inquisition, sees himself as a bridge between past and present. "I am some kind of bridge between a different period of relations between the Jewish people and the Catholic Church to the present time, when we've embarked on a field of cooperation and fruitful dialogue," said Aharon Lopez, 62. "It is very important to try and find common denominators and understand each other and close that gap on both sides."

Pope Names Coadjutor Bishops For Two Vietnamese Dioceses

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II has named coadjutor bishops for two dioceses in Vietnam. According to the April 30 Vatican announcements, Father Pierre Nguyen Van Nho, the 60-year-old rector of the Stella Maris Seminary in Nha Trang, was named coadjutor bishop of Nha Trang. Father Joseph Nguyen Tich Duc, 59, a professor at the same seminary, was named coadjutor bishop of Ban Me Thuot. The appointment of bishops has long been a point of tension between the Vatican and the Vietnamese government, which continues to insist on approving nominations before they are announced.

West Bank Catholic Student To Remain In Israeli Custody

BEIT EL, West Bank (CNS) — An Israeli military court has ruled that a Catholic student from the West Bank's Bir Zeit University remain in custody to face charges of stone throwing and membership in an illegal organization. Nader Jalal Khoury, 21, was arrested March 31 on the Allenby Bridge as he crossed back from Jordan. Khoury had been sent to Amman by Father Emil Salayta to renew the passport of another parishioner and to bring back religious material.

Cardinal Sees New Agenda For Catholic-Jewish Relations

CHICAGO (CNS) — After 30 years of progress and with a currently healthy state of affairs in Catholic-Jewish relations, it is time for a new agenda for the two faiths, said Australian Cardinal Edward I. Cassidy. His hope is that a new agenda would include deeper dialogue, intensified educational efforts and more practical cooperation on the local level. "The great progress achieved in our relationship has not led to a situation with which we can be satisfied, a 'point of arrival,'" said the cardinal, who is the president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity and its Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews. "Much still has to be done; our journey must continue," he said at the 1997 Joseph Cardinal Bernardin Jerusalem Lecture April 30 at a Chicago synagogue.

Israeli Government Honors Salesian Priests Who Aided Jews

ROME (CNS) — The Israeli government posthumously honored two leaders of a Rome-based Catholic religious institution who helped save 70 Roman Jews from Nazi persecution.

Salesian Father Mario Carnevale, director of the Salesian Institute, was to accept the award on behalf of Father Francesco Antonioli, former director, and Father Armando Alessandrini, former administrator of the Salesians of St. John Bosco.

Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Millo was to give the medal and a certificate to Father Carnevale in a ceremony at the Salesian Institute May 6.

The institute received recognition from Yad Vashem, the Holocaust memorial organization in Israel, for its part in saving part of Rome's Jewish community, which is the world's oldest continuous Jewish population.

Yad Vashem announced it was giving the Salesians its Medal of the Just Among the Nations, which is awarded once a year, usually to private individuals. A spokeswoman for Israel's embassy to Italy said the prize had never before gone to members of a Catholic men's religious order.

"The ceremony this year assumes a special importance because it coincides with the commemoration of 'Yom HaShoa,' the day of remembrance of the victims of the Holocaust," an embassy statement said.

Israeli and Jewish organizations worldwide planned events marking the Holocaust memorial day, which is meant to serve as a reminder and a preventative against further intolerance.

The Salesians sheltered 70 Roman Jews, most of them young men, during the nine months in 1943-44 when Germany occupied Rome.

During this time, the Nazi-ordered program of deportation and killing of Jews was put into effect in Italy as it had been in other parts of Europe under German control. Of the more than 1,000 Jews deported from Rome, only 10 returned alive.

Gypsy Beatification Is Call To End Prejudice, Says Archbishop

The beatification of Ceferino Jimenez Malla, a Spanish Gypsy who was martyred in 1936, is a call to end discrimination against Gypsies, said the president of the Vatican council for migrants and travelers. Thousands of Gypsies were expected to attend the beatification ceremony May 4.

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The May 4 beatification of a Gypsy is a call by the church to end discrimination against Gypsies, said Archbishop Giovanni Cheli. The archbishop, president of the Pontifical Council for Migrants and Travelers, told reporters May 2 that the beatification of Ceferino Jimenez Malla also is proof that all people are called to holiness and the way to sainthood is open to all.

Young Artist Follows In Michelangelo's Footsteps

By JOE BOLLIG
TOPEKA, Kan. (CNS) — First came the agony, painting high above the floor on scaffolding. Then came the ecstasy, when the masterpiece was finally finished.

Of course, we're talking about two artists — the great Renaissance artist Michelangelo, and the Hayden High School artist Ravi DeSilva.

DeSilva, 18, a senior and a member of Most Pure Heart of Mary Parish in Topeka, decided last year that he would do something special for his art history project in design class. He would produce a portion of the Sistine Chapel ceiling.

The fresco he chose was "The Creation of Man," where a supine Adam receives the spark of life from the finger of God.

"It's probably the most recognized portion of the Sistine Chapel, except for the 'Last Judgment,'" said DeSilva, whose work was featured at the school's April 29 arts fair.

Some at the school were skeptical when he chose the endeavor, but his art teacher, Susan Winkelman, was supportive. With her blessing, DeSilva began.

He measured out a large section of the design room ceiling, and with the aid of a picture he sketched an outline.

He got some scaffolding and began painting in April 1996. Taking some time out in September, he finished in October.

According to legend, Michelangelo painted his masterpiece while flat on his back, with paint dripping down on him.

DeSilva sat in a chair. Still, working several feet from the floor and at a weird angle was "incredibly difficult," said Silva. It made him think about all the problems that Michelangelo faced before he completed his masterpiece.

"Sometimes I thought I'd never get it done, all this time I've spent," he told The Leaven, newspaper of the Archdiocese of Kansas City. "I definitely appreciate what he did much more now."

Like Michelangelo, DeSilva worked under the gun. Pope Julius II wanted the Sistine Chapel back. And the art teachers at Hayden wanted their classroom back.

While Michelangelo made his own paints, DeSilva used plain, old latex acrylic house paint from the local Sears store.

The paint has a 15-year guarantee, and it's likely that the mural will last a lot longer than that. The concrete ceiling of the classroom is a lot more durable than the plaster of the Sistine Chapel, plus DeSilva's mural doesn't have to endure direct light or smoky incense and candles.

"It'll be there, unless they decide to paint over it," said DeSilva.

That, he hopes, will never happen. If time isn't so kind to his mural, he's willing to come back from time to time to touch it up. It might only need a cleaning.

Many students have seen the mural and some former students have returned to view it, and DeSilva's parents and sister are proud of him.

While his parents may have dabbled in art in their youth, neither produce art today. He's the artist of the family.

"The Creation of Man" was the largest work DeSilva has done. But it's not his last.

Currently, he's helping out with a class mural just down the hall from Michelangelo tribute. This time the theme is very different. It's "Star Wars," dominated by a brooding Darth Vader.

Maybe if Michelangelo were alive today, he might want to try his hand at copying DeSilva.

Ethnic Violence Continues In Zaire, Rwanda; Nun, Priest Killed

By LYNNE WEIL

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Ethnic violence continued in Zaire and in Rwanda among members of the Hutu and Tutsi tribes.

Rwandan state news agency reports of a guerrilla massacre at two schools in northwestern Rwanda were relayed in the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, April 30.

The Rwandan news agency report said militiamen stormed the schools, killing a Belgian nun and 17 schoolgirls, and wounding 14 other girls.

When the militiamen entered the dormitory of one school, they commanded students to separate into Tutsi and Hutu groups. But when the students refused to cooperate, the soldiers reportedly opened fire indiscriminately.

The militiamen then attacked a second school, where the army intervened, but too late to save the 62-year-old nun who taught at the school.

Although the Rwandan news report did not identify the militiamen, Rwandan authorities have blamed a series of attacks this year on former Hutu troops that led the genocide of hundreds of thousands of Tutsis and moderate Hutus in Rwanda in 1994.

Fides, the information service of the Vatican Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples, said a 41-year-old priest working on an agricultural development project in Luebo, in eastern Zaire, was assassinated in late April.

Fides also said Zairian government soldiers had been destroying missions in the region. Men and women religious in at least six missions had taken refuge in the forest, Fides said.

Many of the Zairian soldiers are Hutus, while many of the Zairian rebels, led by Laurent Kabila, are Tutsis. The rebels, whose ancestors came to Zaire two centuries ago, have captured more than half of Zaire.

The government-rebel conflict has caused more than half a million refugees, most of whom are Rwandan Hutus, to flee camps in eastern Zaire, where they sought refuge from the 1994 fighting in their homeland. It has also displaced Zairians.

Hutu refugees in rebel-held territory have reported being attacked by Zairian villagers and Tutsi rebels. Rebel authorities have denied the attacks, saying they only intervene to help the refugees when they are attacked by villagers.

L'Osservatore Romano compared the attacks to Nazi Germany's plan to exterminate Europe's Jewish population, referred to as the "Final Solution."

But in the case of the assaults in An aid worker carries a malnourished Rwandan refugee girl to a U.N. shelter in Biaro, Zaire, April 29. Rwandan Hutu refugees have been the targets of recent violence and many are suffering from disease and lack of food.

Zaire, the newspaper continued, "no one is intervening resolutely in order to stop them. Just half a century ago, after the horrors of the Second World War, the civilized world solemnly proclaimed that 'final solutions' would never be repeated."

Aid workers have been frustrated in their attempts to assist the refugees.

A U.N. airlift to return refugees to Rwanda, which was to start in mid-April, finally began April 30. The United Nations said the airlift was postponed because of an outbreak of cholera, but local aid workers also reported that the United Nations did not want to repatriate Hutu guerrillas, and it was having difficulty separating them from other refugees.

After villagers reportedly stopped and raided a train with 120 tons of food aid and looted warehouses with food and equipment in rebel-held eastern Zaire, authorities decided on April 29 to suspend the sending of aid to some regions because of the security risk.

"The situation of these refugees is becoming more dramatic all the time," Fides said in a report. "The suspension of food aid cannot help but aggravate this already dramatic situation."

In addition, rebel troops were blocking some aid convoys on roads in the region just south of Kisangani, the main city of Zaire's northeast, now under the control of rebels. Humanitarian aid agency heads said Kabila was not honoring his April 27 promise to let aid workers have unrestricted access to refugees.

Author Says His Life Changed With Stint In Catholic School

By CAROL ZIMMERMANN
WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Jewish college graduate who landed a job teaching for a year in an inner-city Catholic school says the experience changed his life.

"The experience stays with you as a person," Mark Gerson told Catholic News Service in a telephone interview. "I was immersed in another America, basically."

Now a student at Yale Law School, Gerson had decided after graduating from college he wanted to spend a year teaching in an inner-city public school. He was never even granted an interview with any public school district he contacted so he applied to Catholic schools.

He was accepted by the principal of an inner-city high school run by the Sisters of Charity in Jersey City, N.J. He taught American history to 10th graders for an annual salary of $15,600.

Gerson relates his experiences in a book he wrote called "In the Classroom: Dispatches From an Inner City School That Works," published this year by The Free Press in New York.

Jersey City has been called the nation's most ethnically diverse city, and the school that took in Gerson — which he calls St. Luke's in his book — reflects that reality.

During the 1994-95 school year, when he taught there, the school's 430 students came from 42 countries; some did not speak English and more than half their families were on welfare.

From the book's first chapter, the reader is right there with Gerson in classroom 306, privy to discussions on politics, U.S. history and religion, and also to issues the students face every day such as violence, teen-age pregnancy, drugs and racial tensions.

He also relates how when any of the 10th graders got out of line he imposed a different kind of detention.

They were given what was called "a Frank" and required to spend the duration of their after-school stay listening to Frank Sinatra music.

The students hated it at first, but some detention regulars began making specific song requests.

Students could also get extra credit by volunteering to come to the afternoon sessions with Ol' Blue Eyes, one of Gerson's favorites.

All of this was a means to expose the students to something new, according to Gerson. But while he introduced his students to music beyond rap, he says his students in turn taught him about a completely different world.

Gerson still keeps up with about four or five of his former students, calling them "part of my life." He said he has had a few calls from students who've liked the book, but is not surprised that most of the students haven't even read it.

"They're from very poor home where books are not part of their day to day discussions," he said.

The book ends with Gerson's trip back to his own public high school, setting the stage for his pitch to get more people involved in helping inner-city youths.

He thinks every college graduate should do some kind of service for a year. "I'd even go so far to make it mandatory," he adds. "I think there is a lot of idealism in college students that is just not being tapped."

He also is now on the bandwagon for school choice, as long as it includes religious schools, insisting that "Catholic schools educate these kids the best."

"Anyone concerned about inner-city youth owes an enormous debt to the Catholic Church," he said, noting that schools like the one in Jersey City are primarily educating non-Catholics.

"St. Luke's works and is cohesive because the importance of religion that can't be overestimated," he said. The students were influenced by the "faith that permeates every room" and by the strong degree of discipline.

Today, when he hears about initiatives to help schools by pumping more money into specific programs, Gerson is skeptical.

To really get results he has his own solution, he said. "Take away the money and put the Sisters of Charity in charge."

Visions In Faith

June 15-18

Fr. Joseph Komonchak

This early summer seminar opens up questions on faith and tradition for the people of God now 30 years after Vatican Council II and a few years from the millenium. From the vision and teachings of the council, what are the challenges and questions for the tradition we celebrate and foundations on which we build the future?

Dr. Komonchak is professor of Church History at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. and a prolific writer. He knows the pastoral pulse of the American church and also brings his great interest in Cardinal Newman.

The St. Meinrad School of Theology will not be affected by the decision.

Uganda First Case In New Third-World Debt Relief Program

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In their first implementation of a new debt relief program for some of the world's poorest countries, the executive boards of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund agreed in April to relieve Uganda of 20 percent of its $3.5 billion external debt burden. Pope John Paul II is among those who have called for urgent action to relieve massive debt burdens in Uganda and other poor countries in Africa. "The pope would like us to forgive all of it, but that will require divine intervention," World Bank President James D. Wolfensohn told reporters April 25.

Nun Works For Better Education About 'Moderate Drinking'

HOUSTON (CNS) — A Dominican nun has vowed to fight on despite the defeat of a stockholder resolution she introduced to urge the nation's largest manufacturer of beer to tell consumers what constitutes "moderate drinking." Sister Annette Sinagra of the Dominican Sisters of Adrian, Mich., presented the resolution at the April 23 annual meeting of Anheuser-Busch stockholders in Houston. Her order holds 16,000 shares of Anheuser-Busch stock. Offered by a coalition called Shareholders of Anheuser-Busch for Advertising Reform, or SABAR, the resolution received more than 15 million affirmative votes. There were about 383 million votes against it.

Church Must Use Media, Not Just Criticize It, Say Speakers

ROME (CNS) — Archbishop Dario Castrillon Hoyos, pro-prefect of the Congregation for Clergy, said if their were one gift of the Holy Spirit he would pray would be bestowed on all priests, it would be the gift of tongues. "Obviously, it is not a question of the immediate and charismatic learning of foreign languages, but the ability to know how to speak to everyone ... with the language of the heart," the archbishop said April 28. Church officials, students and scholars discussed the Catholic Church's communications efforts during a two-day conference sponsored by the Santa Croce Athenaeum. The institute in Rome, run by Opus Dei, inaugurated a School of Church Communications in the fall of 1996.

Study Finds Today's Social Involvement Different, But Strong

WASHINGTON (CNS) — People may not be doing the same types of civic service they once did, but based on one survey, people still are linked by activities such as attending church and going to the gym. A study on civic participation for the Pew Research Center for the People and the Press also showed half the Philadelphia area residents polled had spent at least part of a day volunteering in a given month but that even those who are active in their communities still do not particularly trust others. The study was released in Washington a few days before Philadelphia hosted the President's Summit for America's Future, a national forum on volunteerism that began April 27.

Salvadoran, U.S. Religious End Days Of Protests Over U.S. School

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — One hundred and fifty Salvadoran and U.S. religious ended nine days of protests in front of the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador to demand the permanent closure of the School of the Americas in Fort Benning, Ga. The protesters, many of them Franciscans, gathered early each morning in front of the main gates of the embassy, the same time as lines of people seeking visas began forming. Held in solidarity with protests taking place in Washington, the protests at the embassy, located in the San Salvador suburb of Santa Elena, began April 21 and ended April 29.

Providence Diocese Working To Restore Aid For Legal Immigrants

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (CNS) — The Providence Diocese is involved in a drive to restore to Rhode Island's legal immigrants aid that was eliminated in last year's federal welfare reform law. While Msgr. George L. Frappier, diocesan vicar for social ministry, has been lobbying state legislators, the bishops of the statewide diocese raised the issue with the State Council of Churches and other ecumenical leaders at a recent interfaith breakfast. In ongoing meetings with General Assembly leaders, Msgr. Frappier told The Providence Visitor, diocesan newspaper, he is pushing for the state to replace all or part of the Supplemental Security Income and food stamps that legal immigrants will lose by August.

Extent Of Abortion Trauma Dulling U.S. Conscience, Nun Says

SAN DIEGO (CNS) — The extent of trauma brought about by abortion has "dulled the conscience of American society," said Sister Paula Vandagaer, director of International Life Services. She believes "every abortion has consequences," not just for the woman undergoing it, but for the fathers and for everyone else who somehow has partici-

Catholics Urged To Find Core Truths Of Their Faith

ORLANDO, Fla. (CNS) — Catholics have lost sight of their faith's "hierarchy of truths" in an attempt to conform with the American view of equality, said Boston College's Father Michael Himes. "We need to move back to the basics to the central truths and core truths which make our faith unique," he said. "All other doctrines can flow around these core truths." Father Himes, an associate professor of systematic theology, made his remarks at the April 13-17 annual meeting of the National Conference of Catechetical Leadership in Orlando.

Turk Claims He Was Second Gunman In 1981 Papal Shooting

ROME (CNS) — Italian investigators said they planned to follow up on a reported confession by a Turk who claimed he was a second gunman in the 1981 attempted assassination of Pope John Paul II. Oral Celik reportedly phoned the French magazine Paris Match in late April and told a journalist that he had fired at the pope in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981. The pontiff was seriously injured in the attack. A fellow Turk, Mehmet Ali Agca, was arrested in the square, convicted and is serving a life sentence in Italy.

Parish Profile

CHARLOTTE — Bishop Vincent S. Waters of Raleigh established St. Ann parish in August 1955, installing then-Msgr. Michael J. Begley as pastor. With nearly a half-dozen Catholic churches having already been constructed in Charlotte, a Catholic presence was firmly taking root in the Mecklenburg County seat.

With property purchased on the corner of Park Road and Hillside Avenue, Msgr. Begley and parishioners began tending to their new spiritual home. A house on the property became the rectory, and a duplex on parish grounds served as a catechetical center, with Sisters of the Mission Helpers of the Sacred Heart offering CCD classes there.

In 1956, the duplex was converted into a convent for the Sisters of St. Joseph of Chesnut Hill, Penn., who arrived to open a parochial school. After celebrating Mass in the nearby Park Road School auditorium for a year, Msgr. Begley began offering Mass in the school building when construction was completed in September 1956. The school opened its doors to 296 children in its first year.

As parish growth continued to coincide with the influx of Catholics moving to the Charlotte area, plans were developed to build a new church. With the building project completed in 1960, St. Ann School gained space for three classrooms and a library. Later additions to the school further increased the number of classrooms.

Before Msgr. Michael Begley was transferred to St. Leo Church in Winston-Salem in 1966, he directed the building of yet another church to serve the ever-increasing droves of Catholics in south Charlotte. The chapel, placed under the patronage of St. Vincent de Paul, was dedicated in October 1961 and became a mission of St. Ann parish. Msgr. Begley, along with Benedictine Father Michael O'Keefe of Belmont Abbey, celebrated Masses at the chapel in those early years.

The parish continued to expand over the next several decades both in membership and property. An adjacent lot was purchased during Msgr. Anthony Kovacic's pastorate from 1972-79, and renovation work in the church and school buildings took place while Msgr. Francis Smith served as pastor into the early 1980s.

Msgr. Richard Allen has served as pastor of St. Ann parish since July 1988. During his pastorate, the parish has built an activity center, which was dedicated in October 1993. A strong focus on outreach work highlights pastoral life at St. Ann's, with Msgr. Allen leading missionary projects that assist needy people in Kentucky and Jamaica. The music program also accents parish life, not only in weekly liturgies, but in special occasions such as the recent Schubert Sunday Spring Concert, at which the parish choir joined with symphony instrumentalists and other musicians to present the Austrian composer's Mass #2 in G Major. The pastoral staff of St. Ann's strives to assist parishioners — as well as people beyond parish boundaries — in the spiritual, social and educational mission of the Church.

About 810 Charlotte Catholics became parishioners of St. Ann Church when the new parish was founded in 1955. Over 40 years later, more than 2,600 St. Ann's parishioners — under the spiritual direction Msgr. Allen, parochial vicars Father Tan Le and Father John Hanic, and priest-in-residence Father James Hawker — continue to build up a thriving community of faith.

New Parish Announced For Northern Mecklenburg County

By JOANN KEANE
Associate Editor

HUNTERSVILLE — Explosive growth of the Diocese of Charlotte was further evidenced this week with the May 13 proclamation: Establishment of the newest parish in western North Carolina.

Announcing St. Mark in Huntersville as a parish, Bishop William G. Curlin said, "St. Mark parish will help meet the faith needs of our parishioners residing in northern Mecklenburg County." The bishop named Msgr. Joseph Kerin as pastor of the new parish community.

The decision for St. Mark comes after consultation and reflection of information prepared by the Office of Planning. Along with the bishop, Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor, and members of the presbyteral council reviewed an extensive feasibility study outlining growth trends and population shifts in the area of northern Mecklenburg County. "This area (along with southern Iredell County) is sited as one of the fastest growing areas in North Carolina," said Planning Director George Cobb.

With this in mind, the diocese opted to utilize a 23-acre tract on Stumptown Rd., land purchased by the diocese in 1990. A recently purchased home across from the property will serve as the St. Mark parish rectory.

In a letter to registered Catholics in zip codes 28078, 28031 and 28036, Msgr. Kerin issued an invitation to join the new faith community. On June 1, the first Mass for St. Mark will be offered at Northcross Lanes at the Lake, located on Highway 21, off I-77 at exit 25.

In the foreseeable future, the bowling center will be home base for the people of St. Mark, with Masses scheduled Sundays at 9 and 11 a.m. "We plan to take our time to organize the parish and form community, then assess our (facility) needs," said Msgr. Kerin. "Any building program will develop as a result of that procedure."

Parish boundaries for St. Mark begin at the northeast corner of Mecklenburg County and proceed west along that boundary until reaching the waters of Lake Norman; proceeding southwest in the main channel of the lake until the Gaston County Line, following the Gaston County line south to the southern boundary of Township 10; follow the southern boundary east to the Township 9 southern boundary; continue along the southern boundary of Township 9 until reaching the Mecklenburg County line, and proceed north along the Mecklenburg County line until reaching the northeast boundary of Mecklenburg County.

"Esse Quam Videri. To be, rather than to seem..." Noted author and television veteran Charles Kuralt addresses the graduating class of Belmont Abbey College May 10.

Native Sons, Charleston Bishop Address Belmont Graduates

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

BELMONT — During the 119th annual commencement exercises of Belmont Abbey College and the solemn academic Mass that preceded it, a pair of native sons and a diocesan shepherd conveyed a message of hope and advocated the virtuous, simple life to the graduating class of 1997.

Charles Kuralt, musician-composer Loonis McGlohon and Bishop David B. Thompson of the Diocese of Charleston, S.C., addressed the 216 undergraduates and graduates, along with families and friends, from the Belmont Abbey Church piazza May 10.

"There is such a thing as a conspiracy of good people," Kuralt reminded the audience. "They know one another when they meet, and they do all the important and lasting work of the world."

"My fondest wish for you on graduation day is that you so live your life as to become one of these good people."

Kuralt, whose television, radio and print media work has taken him to the most distant reaches of the globe, has made a career out of profiling such folks.

He spent 37 years with the CBS television network, yielding 13 Emmy Awards, three Peabodys and a variety of other recognitions along the way. His most recent publication, Charles Kuralt's America, continued the native Tarheel's celebration of people, unaffected pleasures and, as he said under the spires of Belmont Abbey Church, "the standards of the graceful and worthy life."

He suggested that the students seek the interconnectedness of living with purpose and the graces that result from serving others. "Your companions on this earth need you," he said, "and you must put your talent and aptitude at their service if your own life is to have meaning."

Conferred an honorary doctor of laws degree during the ceremony, Kuralt counts himself as owing a "debt to the older generation." He said he tried to repay that contribution with renowned composer and musician Loonis McGlohon back in 1984 by writing North Carolina is My Home in com-

New Archbishop To Chicagoans: 'I Am Francis, Your Neighbor'

By BILL BRITT

CHICAGO (CNS) — "I am Francis, your neighbor," Archbishop Francis E. George told Chicagoans May 7 at his installation as new archbishop of Chicago.

"Chicago is a city of neighborhoods" the 60-year-old Chicago native said in a homily in which he paid homage to the late Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin and others who preceded him as archbishop of Chicago.

His greeting as "Francis, your neighbor" evoked Jesus' call to treat everyone as one's neighbor and Cardinal Bernardin's greeting when he arrived in Chicago 17 years earlier, "I am Joseph, your brother."

The new archbishop introduced himself as a man who wishes to help ease the city's racial tensions and one who wants to create harmony among all people.

"In his first days here, Archbishop Bernardin often said that he was Joseph, your brother," he said. "Cardinal Bernardin said it also at the end of his days, and he truly was your brother and brother to many others as well."

"As I explained to the priests last night (at vespers)," he said, "I cannot, I should not claim such intimacy now."

"But since Christians are to look on everyone as a potential neighbor," he said, "for starters, if it is all right with you, I will say that I am Francis, your neighbor."

The installation liturgy for Archbishop George at Holy Name Cathedral began with a lengthy procession that started outside a couple of blocks away and then entered the cathedral.

Inside the aisles overflowed with friends, family and well-wishers of the archbishop, as well as civic leaders, church officials and archdiocesan employees.

The congregation included Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar and his wife, Brenda, and Chicago Mayor Richard Daley and his wife, Maggie.

Dozens of women and men religious and laity, as well as members of the Greek Orthodox community, Jewish community and other religious communities, also participated in the celebration.

The procession entered the cathedral against the musical backdrop of Poulenc's Concerto in G minor. Twenty-five U.S. archbishops processed in, followed by 91 U.S. bishops.

Then came Chicago's Auxiliary Bishops Raymond E. Goedert, John R. Gorman, Thad J. Jakubowski, Edwin M. Conway, Gerald F. Kicanas, George V. Murry, John R. Manz, Alfred L. Abramowicz and Timothy J. Lyne.

Cardinals Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia, James Hickey of Washington, William Keeler of Baltimore, Bernard Law of Boston, Roger Mahony of Los Angeles, Adam Maida of Detroit, John O'Connor of New York and Edmund Szoka (now a Vatican official) walked immediately in front of the new archbishop.

Archbishop Francis E. George receives the offertory gifts during his installation as the eighth archbishop of Chicago May 7 at Holy Name Cathedral. The former archbishop of Portland, Ore., told the people of Chicago, "I am Francis, your neighbor."

As the new archbishop entered the holy space, the entire congregation greeted him with a standing ovation. Archbishop George smiled, waved and nodded to the congregation that had come to welcome him.

In his homily, Archbishop George said that as a native Chicagoan he recognizes the city's long history of neighborhoods and their important place in residents' lives, but he noted also that they tend to separate people.

"What does the bishop bring to the neighborhood? In any place, at any time, the bishop has to see to it that the whole church makes visible the gifts that Christ wants his people to enjoy," he said.

A church that is faithful to the Lord must transform the neighborhood, he added.

"The church is neither a country nor a corporation, neither a club nor a seminar. The church is the Body of Christ, held together for ... generations by the Spirit of God and moving forward, as a pilgrim people, according to the mission she has received from her Lord," he said.

"In the church, every racial and cultural difference must be made public so that everyone can come to know how Christ can be black or white or brown or yellow or red."

Archbishop George said that the church must work to create a neighborhood in which everyone can be at home.

Those themes of racial justice, equality and multiculturalism were visible during the ceremony's general interces-sions, which were read in six languages: Spanish, Polish, Tagalog, Korean, Vietnamese and English.

Catholics in the Chicago Archdiocese number about 2.34 million. Sixty-two percent are of European background; 31 percent are Hispanic; 4 percent, African-American; and 3 percent, Asian-American.

Gift bearers for the offertory included the archbishop's sister and brother-in-law, Margaret Mary and James Cain; his secretary and his housekeeper from Portland; Mary Jo Tully, a former Chicagoan who serves as chancellor of the Archdiocese of Portland; and a number of Chicago archdiocesan officials.

Archbishop Agostino Cacciavillan, apostolic pro-nuncio, officiated at the rite of installation.

"I pray that you will offer a good, happy, long, fruitful benefit to society," he told Chicago's new archbishop. "This is a moment to celebrate the universality of the church."

During his homily, Archbishop George spoke honestly of his surprise at being named archbishop of Chicago.

He recalled that when he attended the funeral Nov. 20 for Cardinal Bernardin, he never imagined he would be in the cathedral May 7 "taking on his mission."

"But then, coming occasionally as a lad to this cathedral and seeing Cardinal Stritch in this sanctuary, I never imagined that I would someday be his successor too," he added. "If surprise is a sign of God's presence, then God is with us in force today."

After the Eucharist, he thanked Pope John Paul II for his confidence and for selecting him to replace Cardinal Bernardin. He also thanked the civic leaders, the leaders of other faiths who shared in the celebration, his family and friends, the priests of the archdiocese and Bishop Goedert for his work over the past months.

THE CHANCERY

May 16, 1997

Dear Friends in Christ:

The Catholic Communication Campaign helps spread the Good News of God's message through projects such as TV documentaries, children's videos, radio programs and Catholic newspapers. They are at work nationally, although half of all donations from our diocesan collection remain in our diocese to help with our local endeavors, as well.

Thanks to donations from Catholics across the nation, the CCC created the successful national Movie Review Line, to help parents/parishioners avoid unexpected movie scenes. (By calling 1-800-311-4CCC, parents can hear a detailed review of current movies.) The CCC is all about shaping values, not only by what children see on the screen but what they see in real life.

The Catholic Communication Campaign puts modern communications to work — and it is expensive. However, the work is important and the need is great. Your contribution to the collection on the weekend of May 17-18 can help the CCC in its efforts to change the negative values in our society by presenting the Christian message more often.

Thanking you for your response and wishing each of you God's abundant blessings, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

our faith is not enough; we must practice it."

Bishop Thompson, conferred the honorary degree of doctor of humane letters at the commencement, said Christ himself celebrated the first baccalaureate Mass, giving the first baccalaureate homily to his students, the apostles.

"He gave them then three pieces of advice: 'Learn of me, abide in me, love one another,'" the bishop added. "All of us, whether we are believers or not, should learn about Jesus Christ. (He) was the tenured teacher for the apostolic college. He is the tenured teacher here for you. Please do not graduate yourself from him."

"If you take these three pieces of advice memoration of their home state's 400th birthday.

McGlohon, who also received an honorary doctor of laws degree, performed a selection with Kuralt from their tribute during the commencement. Their collaboration first appeared as a sound recording, then later as a book, stage show and television program. In addition to his work with Kuralt, McGlohon was noted during the ceremony for decades of devotion and service to his family, community and state.

"Esse Quam Videri. That is our motto," Kuralt read, with McGlohon at a keyboard behind his long-time friend. "They are Latin words, but they suit us. 'To be, rather than to seem.'"

At the baccalaureate Mass earlier in the morning, concelebrant and homilist Bishop Thompson extolled virtues similar to that of the North Carolina slogan. "Knowing Christ is not enough; we must follow him," the bishop said. "Knowing from our Blessed Lord, the divine master and teacher ... you have a fix on life that will lead to you success and fulfillment," he said.

Bishop Thompson concelebrated the liturgy with the Right Reverend Oscar Burnett, abbot and chancellor of Belmont Abbey, as well as other Benedictine and visiting clergy.

At the convocation, Bishop Thompson was commended for his more than 45 years of priestly dedication. Abbot Burnett, presenter of the bishop's degree, lauded the South Carolina shepherd for his commitment to education, community relations and vocations, the latter of which have increased 400 percent in the diocese since he became Charleston's bishop in 1990.

Also receiving an honorary degree was Benedictine Father Terrence G. Kardong of Assumption Abbey in North Dakota, whose work as monk, priest, teacher, writer, editor and theologian was commended with a doctorate in humane letters.

Dr. Kimberly Robertson, Belmont Abbey College associate professor of recreational studies, was recognized as the 1997 recipient of the Adrian Faculty Excellence Award "not only for her enthusiasm in the classroom, but also for the care and concern with which she calls her students to accountability and responsibility," according to Benedictine Father Placid D. Solari, academic dean, who presented the award.

Dean of Students Dr. Michael McLeod bestowed the Abbey Person of the Year honor to Heather Eileen Smith, president of the Student Government Association, who "in many ways ... represents what Belmont Abbey College hopes to accomplish with all of its students" through her mature responsibility to her community and fellow students.

Throughout the ceremonies, the graduates were reminded of being rather than seeming, and of learning and abiding in Christ through their love for one another. In her senior address, Class of 1997 President Erin Margaret Egan reflected: "We have seen many changes since we have been at Belmont Abbey," she said. "We have been influenced by the college, but more importantly, we have been influenced by each other."

The Gaston County school is the only Catholic college in the Carolinas. The institution's foundation dates back to 1876, when Benedictine monks from Latrobe, Penn., arrived to develop a religious and educational facility. Today, the student body comprises some 1,000 individuals pursuing a variety of academic majors.

"You are to be graduates of a Benedictine institution," Bishop Thompson said in his homily, "an institution inspired by the humanitarian rule of St. Benedict, who gave to everybody a wonderful pattern of life ... dedicated to decency, to compassion, to zeal, to study, to community life."

Rita of Cascia

Rita was born in 1381 in Italy. She wanted to join the religious life, however her parents arranged a marriage. For 18 years she bore the abuse of a brutal husband. After the deaths of her husband and their two sons, Rita became an Augustinian nun. She had a deep devotion to the Lord's passion, and she received on her head a wound of a piercing thorn. She died a recluse in 1450. She is patroness of impossible and desperate causes. Her feast is May 22.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Veneration Of Mary Brings Faithful Closer To Jesus, Pope Says

Dear brothers and sisters,

In our catechesis on the spiritual motherhood of the Blessed Virgin Mary, we have seen that Jesus, on Calvary, entrusted Mary to the Apostle John to be the mother of all his disciples. Jesus' words — "Behold, your Mother!" (Jn 19:27) — help us to see that the church's devotion to Mary is based on the Lord's own will that all his followers should share his filial love for his Mother. As the history of Christian piety makes clear, Mary is the way which leads us to Christ. The veneration of Mary increases and perfects our closeness to her son, our savior and lord. It is significant that Jesus entrusted Mary to his disciples at the hour of his death on the cross, at the supreme moment of his redemptive mission. Like St. John, the beloved disciple, may all Christians receive Mary into their own homes (cf. Jn 19:27), sharing with her the concerns and events of their lives. Thus they will appreciate ever more fully her role as example and guide along the way of salvation in Christ.

I extend a warm welcome to all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrims from England, Indonesia, Japan and the United States. Upon you and your families I cordially invoke the joy and peace of Jesus Christ our savior.

Pope Applauds Efforts Of European Vocations Congress

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II applauded the efforts of church authorities from throughout Europe who had gathered in Rome to share insights on religious vocations. Urging the assembled cardinals, bishops and experts on vocations to work for a new blossoming of interest in consecrated life and the priesthood, the pope reminded them May 9 that "it is, therefore, urgent that a great movement of prayer sweeps across the ecclesial community of the European continent, countering the wind of secularism."

Prejudice? In My School?

Prejudice? In my school?

Never.

After all, we're a Catholic school. You know, we're Christians.

Yeah, right.

Students in my school were recently asked to describe any racism or ethnic prejudice they could discern among their classmates.

"Oh, there isn't any," one girl piped up without hesitation. "After all, we only have a couple of black students, so there's no one here to be prejudiced against."

Strange logic. It took a few minutes, but the young woman eventually understood that her example was probably strong evidence for the presence of prejudice, rather than against it.

Once past that, students were quick to present examples of everyday speech and actions expressive of prejudice.

Hispanic students regularly are referred to as "wetbacks" and "orange pickers."

Students reluctant to spend their money are called "Jews."

And in this enlightened age, the infamous "n-word" is by no means a thing of the past. Its pervasive use in rap music doesn't help.

Some students revealed that their parents have forbidden them to date across racial lines and have instilled a wide variety of fears and judgments in their minds.

Prejudice isn't just a matter of race, ethnicity or gender, either. Stereotypes run wild in the high school world, a fact that makes it really hard for kids to be themselves. Do any of these sound familiar?

— Athletes are stupid.

— Cheerleaders are airheads.

— Boys in drama or music must be gay.

— Academic achievers are nerds.

What can be done?

After a week or so of discussion, the students were given an assignment: Devise a strategy to tackle one of these problems. It has to be realistic and specific.

The results were imaginative and specific.

Some students addressed the problem of a rather homogenous student body. Why don't more minorities attend our school? they asked. They then designed a flyer for recruitment purposes.

What about gender stereotypes? A couple of girls grappled with those tensions and emerged with a program for the student body in which successful businesswomen would be invited to come and speak on their experiences, giving all, male and female alike, examples of what women achieve in the work world.

Another group of students came up with a whole series of flyers they'd distribute to the students, a series to be titled "The Truth About ..."

Each flyer presented facts about various groups within the school — drama kids, cheerleaders, the alternative crowd — and ended with a plea for tolerance.

It's sometimes difficult for young people, so insecure about their own identities, to be open-minded and tolerant of others' differences. It's easier to laugh, joke and prejudice than to take the risk, get to know another person and perhaps find yourself changed in the process.

As one boy said to me: "I feel better just hanging around people who are like me. Why do you want to force me to be around people I don't have anything in common with?"

It's not a matter of forcing anyone to be friends or best buddies with anyone else. No, it's simpler than that. The real world is a big and complicated place, much bigger than your own neighborhood, school or church.

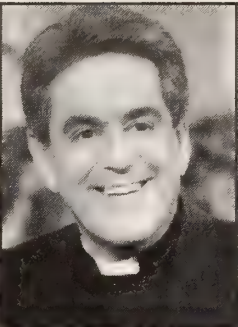

Part of education is learning how to get along in that diverse world. You can't hide in a shell forever.

Besides, aren't you a little bit curious? Aren't you fascinated that there are so many different people with such varied life experiences out there? Why would people want to limit themselves in such a world, closing in rather than opening up to the richness that every person offers?

<h3>Mother's Day: Making Life Meaningful</h3> A man stood over his baby's crib, staring down intently. His wife entered the room and silently watched him. She saw in his face a range of emotions: wonder, doubt, admiration. Deeply touched, she moved closer, put her arms around him and said, "A penny for your thoughts." He blurted out: "For the life of me, I can't see how anybody can make a crib like that for $39.95!" That may be a fun "father" story, but if we reversed the characters and tried to make it a fun "mother" story, it just wouldn't work. Images of dad handing out cigars to total strangers and pressing his nose against the nursery window at the hospital have a certain universal appeal. But, oh, how we love the image of mom cuddling her newborn infant. Our merchandising culture has a knack for making Mother's Day nearly collapse under the weight of sentimentality and idealism. But fear of unreality	must not keep us from coming to terms with the power of the imagery — the force of emotions — associated with such a day. Motherhood remains one of the most elemental images. Some feminists argue that the mystique of motherhood restricts the ways in which women may find fulfillment. Yet, while acknowledging the mystique, we dare not abandon the mystery. Neither test-tube babies nor any other modern scientific "breakthrough" can be substituted for the ancient and ongoing mystery of the human "bonding" in the parent-child relationship. And being a parent is clearly more than a biological or legal fact. To be a mother in the fullest sense requires more than the ability to have babies: A woman becomes a mother and an infant becomes a child when the relationship is sealed and celebrated in love and responsibility. Human life has innate value. But it takes the love, the importance attributed by parents and community to bestow a sense of individual worth. In the U.S. Supreme Court ruling on abortion, Justice Blackmun, in the majority opinion, suggested that a "potential for meaningful human life" may exist in the last three months of pregnancy. What a tragic missing of the point! What a dangerous thing when government takes upon itself the right to decide when human life is meaningful and when it is not! Are we God's children because our lives are meaningful? No. Our lives are meaningful because God, in love, has declared us to be His children! The difference is all important. It is precisely the work of love to make meaningful the life that seems to possess the least meaning. A healthy society, shaped by this moral tradition and built upon the Mystery of Love, is marked by its concern for its most defenseless members. An unborn child, a handicapped toddler, a teen-age mother, someone who is mentally retarded, or desperately poor, or eld-	erly and frail, or in some other way vulnerable — these must be precious in our sight. Remember Matthew's account of the final day of judgment, when the witnesses called to testify for or against us will be the most vulnerable? On that day, when history finds its fulfillment in the Kingdom of God, your life and mine will be found meaningful only if we have, in love, bestowed meaning on others. Mother's Day is not a day for cheap sentimentality. In celebrating it, we are seized by the world's greatest reality — the transforming power of love. Even if for one day out of the year, Mothers' Day helps explain what life itself is all about. "Mother" is another word for Love. For a free copy of the Christopher News Note, "All In A Mother's Day," write to The Christophers, 12 East 48th St., New York, N.Y. 10017. Father Thomas J. <h2>Question Corner</h2> Father John Dietzen
<h3>New Vatican Guidelines for Confessors</h3> Q. Our Catholic newspaper recently reported on the new Vatican guidelines for confessors, mostly about birth control, it seems. What disturbs me is the statement that, generally, a confessor is not obliged "to investigate concerning sins committed in invincible ignorance of their evil or due to an inculpable error of judgment." In such cases "it is preferable to let penitents remain in good faith rather than create a situation in which they would begin formally to sin." How could any Catholic beyond the age of reason be invincibly ignorant of	the church's teaching on artificial birth control? They might not want to believe it. But that's not invincible ignorance. A. Yours is a good question, and I will attempt to respond as well as possible in this short space. First, however, something very much bothers me in the mail I'm receiving about this. Perhaps it's worth some prayerful reflection. I have the strong impression that many writers are angry mostly because another person is doing something we believe is wrong and getting away with it. There seem to be an almost anxious need and desire to prove someone else is committing serious sin. St. Paul insists that genuine Christian love is patient, not pompous, and "does not rejoice over wrongdoing" (1 Cor 13). Wrongdoing must sometimes be identified and addressed and exposed, but only with humility and sadness over the sinfulness. To be happy that we can declare someone in mortal sin, that we can transfer them into a state of sin when (because of some ignorance or moral disability) they are not, is a terrible sin against the love of God and neighbor. Instructing the ignorant is still a spiritual work of mercy. And doing	something objectively sinful is wrong. It is a cosmic leap to a far different wrong, however, to deliberately attempt to change that objective wrong into a subjective, personal alienation from God. To do this unnecessarily and without extremely serious reason, to do it for example just so others don't slip by without the punishment we think they deserve — that is evil, a prideful intrusion into the relationship between an individual soul and God. Contrary to what you and others as-

<h3>Interfaith Friendships</h3> A few weeks ago, my husband, Joe, and I watched the Rugrats' Passover Special on the Nickelodeon channel with our 7-year-old son, Bobby, and our 5-year-old daughter, Teresa. After the program, Bobby asked, "Aren't we just a little bit Jewish, Mom?" I told Bobby that one of his uncles is Jewish and two of his cousins are part Jewish, but he is Catholic. "I know I'm Catholic, but I really want to be Jewish, too," he said. Bobby's desire to be Jewish not only comes from the fact that his favorite cartoon characters are Jewish — or that he can spin a mean dradle — but also because he attends a public school where two of his close friends and his former kindergarten teacher are Jewish. During his school's winter sing-along there were songs, stories and poems about Christmas, Hanukkah, Los Posados and Kwanza, reflecting the wonderful diversity of religions and cultures of all the	students. I can't help but think how fortunate my children are to have this exposure to the traditions, customs and beliefs of different cultures and religions. I know that most of today's Catholic schools have non-Catholic students and children of many cultures. While Catholic education is taught and Catholic values and beliefs permeate the school, there is a respect for other religious traditions and a celebration of diversity. I've heard it said on more than a few occasions that all this exposure can confuse a child or weaken their faith. It's too bad some people feel this way. Aren't we confident enough in our own religion to expose our children to what others believe? Do we lack knowledge of our religion or fail to live out our roles as teachers of the faith? Do our children see that our faith is at the center of who we are and what we're about? When children have a strong understanding of their faith, they won't be confused about their faith but there's a good chance they will be curious about other faiths. We live in a world where people have been persecuted and wars have been waged over religious hatred and intolerance. When I read about another bombing in the Middle East or Northern Ireland, I find my son's interest in other religions refreshing and hopeful. We have a ways to go not only in the far corners of our world, but in our local communities as well. Although there have been significant advances in interfaith dialogue and in collaborative efforts among different faith groups, our religious differences can still divide us. Many of us don't know a whole lot about what Jews, Muslims, Protestants or Hindus believe. Of-	ten what we know about other faiths isn't accurate. We know all too well that the ruptures among groups within our own religion can be just as divisive as our interfaith disagreements. We are fortunate in our country that we don't live with the daily fear of being physically harmed because of the religious labels we wear. But we have our subtle ways of allowing the stereotypes, the mistrust and the judgments to take root in our hearts and divide us. We have a responsibility to speak out whenever our religion is being attacked or unfairly depicted in the media or by others. But we also have an enormous responsibility to teach our children to love and respect people of other religious traditions and

Catholic Scholar Urges Humans To Take Responsibility For Holocaust

By JOHN STRANGE
NC Catholic Staff

RALEIGH — All of humanity must accept responsibility for the Holocaust, a Catholic scholar said in a North Carolina memorial service May 4. Otherwise, society's "moral fabric" is lost.

"We were not our brothers' and sisters' keepers," said Sister of Mercy Carol Rittner, professor of religion at the Richard Stockton College of New Jersey. "And I say 'we' because even though most of us were not there, we must share in the responsibility. We carry the consequences of the words and deeds of those who came before us."

Sister Carol, co-founder of the Elie Wiesel Foundation for Humanity and a doctor of higher education administration, said that the sheer number of victims and the time passed since the Holocaust has led to a kind of numbing of human responsibility.

The Holocaust's six million deaths — "numbers that have been all too familiar" — have had a "numbing effect on hearts and minds," which also led to an almost casual acceptance of deaths in Cambodia in the '60s and '70s, and more recently in the former Yugoslavia, Rwanda and Zaire.

Today, she said, it is common to hear that a war, conflict or other incident led to "only" less than a million deaths, or less than 1,000, or less than 100. Evil casts a long shadow."

Sister Carol explained that the challenge is to move past the numbers into the victims of the Holocaust itself. But to name every victim, taking three seconds for each name, would take 5,000 hours, or 208 days, she said.

Further, Nazi Germany did more than kill individuals. They destroyed records, letters and other documents, expunging the very history of their victims.

"Some victims will never be named," she said. "There are names we will never know, because everyone who knew the victims were killed as well. Nazi Germany obliterated the fact of their existing at all."

"We'll never know all the lives lost," she added. "For if we did, we would weep, we would howl, we would cry to heaven."

She said that from the days of the death camps' liberation, human beings — from German soldiers to political leaders in other countries — have been trying to avoid responsibility for the Holocaust.

There was initial shock, Sister Carol said, at the fact that such acts could be performed in Christian Europe, in the shadows of universities and cathedrals.

But there was also some initial responsibility, as U.S. and Allied military commanders ordered camp guards to help bury the dead, and nearby town officials and residents to tour the camp as witnesses to what had happened in their neighborhoods.

"Germans were forced to face the consequences of their actions," she said.

But in the Nuremberg Trials, accused war criminals struggled to escape from responsibility. Those who ran the death camps claimed they were only following orders, like "decent Germans." Meanwhile, those at the top of the hierarchy claimed they had "never killed anyone."

Sister Carol said that the Germans were able to distance themselves from responsibility because of the political and social organization that comes with totalitarianism.

"It was like a many-layered onion, with the leader at the center. The layers serve to buffer the others, so that everyone is implicated, but no one feels responsible."

That system served the Nazis well, she said, so that even today accused war criminals deny responsibility, and their lawyers argue for leniency because they are now frail old men.

Remembrance.... An unidentified woman examines an exhibit on the Holocaust at Raleigh's Meredith College May 4.

"But human justice is all we have, and justice must be done, even if it is years after the crime was committed, and even if the criminals are old and frail."

Churches, organizations and governments also do not go blameless, she said.

The United States and other countries held fast to strict immigration quotas, forcing Jewish refugees to remain in Europe. "It was a war we wanted to win," Sister Carol said, "not necessarily lives we wanted to save."

The Catholic Church also bears responsibility, she said. While the Church made accords to protect its interests, little was done publicly to protect the Jews. Of 80 French Catholic bishops, she said, only four spoke out.

Without accepting responsibility, human beings have "no chance of rethreading the moral fabric," she said. "And even if we never regain that moral fabric, we are not free to desist in that never-ending task."

The service, held at Meredith College, marked the first day of the week-long "Days of Remembrance," a state-wide remembrance of Holocaust victims and survivors.

Estate Planning Workshop Held At St. Gabriel Church

By STEVE UZZELL

CHARLOTTE — "Do I really need a will?"

The answer is a simple one: Yes.

"You need one to ensure that your wishes are carried out after your death," said Jim Kelley, director of development for the Diocese of Charlotte, at a seminar for will and estate planning at St. Gabriel Church April 24. More than 125 parishioners and friends attended the special workshop offered by the parish in response to a growing need expressed by families and individuals.

If you don't create a will before your death, your estate will likely be faced with unnecessary taxes and other costs, Kelley said.

"Did you know that in the absence of any close relatives, the state could even give your property to a distant relative you never met?" he added.

Father Ed Sheridan, St. Gabriel pastor, shared how he came to ready his own will. All priests must have a will ready for the diocese within two months of ordination, he noted.

Kelley talked about the importance of thinking about loved ones and planning ahead for their benefit. He also presented a video which examined general topics on wills.

Don Hodgens, an estate planning attorney and member of the board of the Foundation of the Diocese of Charlotte, shared valuable insight on wills, including current information about tax laws and planning strategies. He reminded participants that a will is for the living, not for the deceased, and that the cost of obtaining a will is much less than the cost of not having one. He recommended that individuals have a formal will prepared by an attorney and that it be reviewed and updated regularly.

"The tax collector is a partner for life and is also an heir in your estate," warned Hodgens. "Individuals must consider and plan for the tax collector in estate planning to minimize death taxes as much as possible."

Hodgens discussed effective ways to use trusts for asset management and reasons of privacy. Various power of attorney arrangements were also noted as effective ways to handle financial affairs. A downstream of assets to children and grandchildren, an unlimited marital deduction and a strategy in planning gift deductions for family and institutions were discussed as well.

Kelley said a well-prepared will allows you to control the distribution of assets and can serve as a tool for providing life income for loved ones. It also enables you to serve others by a gift to your parish, Catholic school, Catholic agency, the diocesan Foundation, or the diocese itself.

"A will allows you to continue your legacy of good stewardship even after your death," Kelley noted.

For more information on will and estate planning seminars, call Kelley at (704) 331-1709, or 377-6871.

Nuevo edificio para la Diócesis de Charlotte debido al crecimiento de la comunidad católica

CHARLOTTE — LA DIÓCESIS DE CHARLOTTE ESTÁ EN negociaciones para comprar un nuevo edificio que acomode el crecimiento consistente de la población católica. En los últimos 10 años la Diócesis de Charlotte ha aumentado casi el doble.

El edificio de tres plantas está situado en la calle Church, a menos de dos millas de la presente oficina central de la diócesis. El edificio de 57,000 pies cuadrados dará cabida a 95 empleados diocesanos que se encuentran actualmente regados en cinco diferentes localidades en la ciudad de Charlotte.

"Este cambio nos traerá una mayor eficiencia al juntar todos los ministerios en una sola localidad", dijo el Obispo William G. Curlin, pastor de los 46 condados que comprenden la diócesis de Charlotte. "Nuestro ministerio en la fe puede ser más efectivo a través de una colaboración mayor con todos de empleados trabajando más cercanamente".

"Nuestra inquietud es la de satisfacer las necesidades crecientes de nuestras escuelas, nuestros ministerios, nuestras parroquias y nuestros feligreses", dijo el Padre Mauricio West, Vicario General y Canciller de la Diócesis. "Y todas esas necesidades literalmente han acabado nuestra presente localidad. Teniendo una localidad central podremos servir mejor a la comunidad católica del oeste de Carolina del Norte".

Actualmente los servicios y ministerios de la diócesis están divididos a través de la ciudad. Las oficinas administrativas actualmente están en el Centro Católico, situado en la calle East Morehead. También hay oficinas diocesanas en Park Rd., Eastway Dr., Buchanan St. y First St.

"Después de un estudio cuidadoso, hemos llegado a la conclusión de que el tiempo y la situación son adecuados para hacer esta compra", dijo Bill Weldon, administrador fiscal de la diócesis. "Este edificio no solamente es perfecto para nuestras necesidades, sino que está situado en una zona ideal".

Weldon dijo que la diócesis usará financiamiento interno que hará posible el pagar el edificio a través de recursos existentes. Esta decisión financiera significa que no será necesario recaudar fondos para comprar el edificio.

"El próximo año la diócesis tendrá dinero en efectivo de lo que ahorraremos en alquileres y gastos extras de los locales que actualmente ocupamos", dijo Weldon. "También planeamos vender el Centro Católico en Morehead, lo que ayudará a costear esta compra".

Los empleados de la Diócesis de Charlotte ocuparán los últimos dos pisos del edificio. La diócesis espera mudarse a este edificio en el otoño de este año. Los ocupantes actuales continuarán rentando el primer piso.

"Este cambio es para dar un mejor servicio y ministerio a la comunidad de la diócesis", dijo el Obispo Curlin. "No es solamente un servicio por el simple hecho de dar servicio, sino una manera de hacer llegar la fe y el amor que pueda ayudar en nuestro mundo".

Pentecostés

AÑO TRAS año la Iglesia se dispone a celebrar el aniversario de su nacimiento.

Ella nació en la cruz el Viernes Santo; pero manifestó su nacimiento ante el mundo el día de Pentecostés, cuando los Apóstoles fueron "revestidos del poder desde lo alto".

El soplo oxigenador del Espíritu ha venido a despertar en la Iglesia energías escondidas, a levantar carisma adormecidos, a difundir aquel sentido de vitalidad y de alegría que hacen joven y actual a la Iglesia, dispuesta para anunciar su eterno mensaje a los hombres y mujeres de los tiempos nuevos.

"Como el Padre me ha enviado, así también los envío yo.... Reciban el Espíritu Santo". El Espíritu Santo es el regalo que nos envía Cristo resucitado. Es la gran promesa del Padre. Hoy el Espíritu Santo quiere continuar su obra en la Iglesia, pero a través de nosotros. El es el alma y la vida de todo cristiano. Somos los cristianos que debemos ir por todo el mundo y proclamar las maravillas de Dios. De un Dios que nos ha creado, que nos ama; que nos ha enviado a Jesús, que lo ha resucitado; que nos llama a todos a la vida plena.

Reafirmemos hoy nuestra fe y confianza en la acción del Espíritu Santo; esto es, en seguir a Jesús que camina con nosotros.

Propongámonos con decisión firme tomar muy en serio todos los compromisos de nuestra vida diaria y de actuar siempre animados por la fuerza y vitalidad del Espíritu que hemos recibido.

Arzobispo califica de bendición a decisión sobre ley de aborto

SAN SALVADOR (CNS) — MONSEÑOR FERNANDO SÁENZ LACALLE, Arzobispo de San Salvador, manifestó su satisfacción por la decisión del Congreso salvadoreño que ilegaliza a casi todas las formas de aborto en la nación centroamericana.

Monseñor Lacalle dijo el 27 de abril que era "una bendición de Dios el que el Congreso haya adoptado esta medida".

El dio las gracias a la población de El Salvador por ser "protagonistas importantes" del asunto durante la lucha de la Iglesia Católica contra el aborto en aquel país.

A continuación de una intensa campaña por parte de la Iglesia, 60 de los 84 miembros del Congreso votaron el 26 de abril a favor de un nuevo Código Penal que ilegalizará todas las formas de aborto inducido en El Salvador.

La nueva legislación, que entrará en vigor en enero próximo, sustituye a una ley existente bajo la cual una mujer puede abortar a un feto en circunstancias excepcionales, incluyendo la violación o cuando esté en peligro la salud de la madre.

Cada año se realizan 3,000 abortos ilegales en El Salvador, según dicen los grupos de los derechos humanos.

En mensaje previo a visita, Papa insta a terminar divisiones en Líbano

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS)

— UNA SEMANA ANTES DE SU HISTÓRICA visita al Líbano, el Papa Juan Pablo II dijo que él esperaba que su presencia ayudaría a propiciar la reconciliación nacional y a poner fin a las divisiones.

El Papa dijo que su viaje, en los días 10 y 11 de mayo, "tenía un propósito religioso y humano profundo", y lo comparó con la visita que hizo Cristo a las mismas tierras hace cerca de 2,000 años.

"Confío al Todopoderoso la marcha valerosa del pueblo libanés por el camino de la reconciliación y de la reconstrucción social, en una unidad y cooperación cada vez más fuertes", dijo él en un mensaje fechado el 1ro. de mayo.

"Confío en que ustedes hallarán en el amor a su tierra la energía necesaria para superar las divisiones y vencer todos los obstáculos que puedan aparecer", dijo él.

El Papa hizo notar que él presentaría un documento importante sobre la Iglesia Libanesa, los resultados de un Sínodo de Obispos especial efectuado en 1995. El dijo que su visita se encaminaba también, de modo especial, a los enfermos y los que sufren en el Líbano, un país que trata de recobrarse de 16 años de luchas civiles.

El Papa ha deseado durante mucho tiempo hacer la visita al Líbano, su primera visita a un país del Oriente Medio. El se propone celebrar Misa, reunirse con varios grupos católicos y hablar con dirigentes políticos y musulmanes durante su estada.

Tercer Mandamiento "Santificar los días de fiesta"

TODOS LOS DÍAS DE NUESTRA VIDA pertenecen a Dios, pero de modo particular y específico debemos dedicarle el domingo y las fiestas de guardar, dejando nuestro trabajo diario para honrarlo con actos de culto externo, principalmente participando en la celebración de la Eucaristía. Desde sus orígenes, la Iglesia sustituyó la santificación del sábado, relacionada con la Antigua Alianza, por la santificación del domingo, relacionada con la Nueva Alianza en Jesucristo, porque el domingo, día de la resurrección del Señor, inaugura la nueva creación y su serena y total consagración a Dios por parte de todos los redimidos.

Actitudes equivocadas.

El domingo es el día dedicado al Señor, pero su sentido religioso viene culpablemente estropeado por quienes, en ese día, sin una justa causa, siguen en su acostumbrado ritmo de trabajo y, sin verdadero impedimento, rehusan dar a Dios ese culto externo, visible y público, según lo manda la Iglesia. Y es peor todavía cuando alguien aprovecha el domingo para satisfacer sus pasiones, ocupando precisamente este día con cosas indebidamente o en excesos o para juntarse con malas compañías o para acudir a espectáculos pecaminosos.

Actitud cristiana. La santificación del domingo caracteriza a los auténticos cristianos. Para éstos es el día más importante y más bello de la semana. Es el día del Señor, es el día especial de liberación del diario quehacer para dedicarse con serena tranquilidad a las cosas de Dios; a escuchar y reflexionar sobre su Palabra, fuente eterna de verdadera paz y felicidad; a celebrar, junto con los hermanos y hermanas en la fe, esa suprema acción de gracias y de alabanza a Dios que es la Eucaristía, fuente de gracias divinas, para las personas, las familias y para el mundo entero.

El domingo es un día excelente para realizar alguna obra de caridad, aunque sea pequeña, que siempre ayuda a santificar este día. En fin, a disfrutar de un sano esparcimiento, que de alguna forma ayuda también al descanso de nuestro cuerpo y de nuestra mente.

MENSAJE DEL PADRE

Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M.

En este mes de mayo, como los primeros apóstoles, nos preparamos juntos con María para recibir los siete dones del Espíritu Santo. Uno de esos dones es el don de la caridad, del amor. Uno de los primeros frutos de la vivencia auténtica del amor es el respeto hacia uno mismo y hacia los demás. El amor no busca controlar, dominar o manipular al otro. El amor hace que uno reconozca lo bondadoso que ha sido Dios para con uno mismo. Entonces, uno se acepta como hijo de Dios, como valioso y aprende a aceptar al otro así. Como dice San Pablo, el amor no es envidioso ni rencoroso.

Al prepararnos para la solemnidad de Pentecostés, tenemos que reconocer que necesitamos recibir más profundamente el Espíritu de Amor. Nuestra vivencia del amor es a menudo envidioso y rencoroso. En dado momento buscamos controlar o manipular a otro, todo bajo la apariencia del amor. La herramienta que más usamos en este sentido es el chisme. Hoy deseo compartir con ustedes unas reflexiones sobre el chisme.

Chisme: — Es hablar acerca de personas que no están presentes. Es una de las más poderosas y a la vez más complejas formas de la comunicación humana. Como característica de todas las culturas, el chisme es para destruir, para arruinar la reputación de un individuo o de un grupo. Es un camino de traición de los secretos y un obstáculo serio para el cambio. Satisface la envidia que los chismosos sienten hacia otros, denigrando los lazos de éstos; da a los chismosos un sentido de poder sobre la gente y un sentido temporal de comunión con sus oyentes.

Las personas que hablan acerca de otros en una forma negativa, evitan el tener que enfrentar asuntos serios dentro de ellos mismos o en el grupo. El chisme dice: «Otros tienen problemas, no nosotros». El chisme es una confesión personal de malicia o de estupidez, el chisme es un negocio muy feo.

El chisme es agresión; es el instrumento íntimo de información perjudicial en el interior de un grupo, con o sin una deliberada intención de malicia, es una forma oculta de agresión y normalmente lleva un prejuicio: «tú sabes que no le deseo ningún mal a nadie, pero...» Después de este «pero» los chismosos proceden a hacer lo que decían no querer hacer.

El chisme necesita, por lo menos, tres personas: el chismoso, el oyente y la persona o grupo de la cual se chisme.

El chismoso, motivado por la envidia o el enojo de los éxitos de otros, logra en el momento de chismear, un sentido de poder sobre la persona de la cual se está chismeando. La persona que recibe esta información, no sólo comparte este poder sino que también se siente privilegiado de que él o ella es confiable para escuchar tales noticias. La amistad o alianza entre los dos es así reforzada.

En breve, un hambre por poder, es el corazón del chisme. En el acto de chismear, el chismoso y el receptor de la información sienten, por lo menos temporalmente, la satisfacción de quitar el poder o destronar a la persona o grupo del cual se está hablando. Además, el chisme es la forma más segura de manipulación de poder o de agresión para sus perpetradores, por dos razones: primero, el chismoso declara que sólo está compartiendo una información y rehusa tomar la responsabilidad de ello, y segundo, todo se hace en una atmósfera de secreto. El daño se hace sin que se haya llamado a alguien que pueda testificar sobre la validez objetiva de la información.

Hermanos y hermanas, en esta temporada de Pentecostés, pidamos al Señor, el don del Espíritu Santo, el espíritu de amor, de verdad, de valentía. Y con ese amor, esa verdad y esa valentía, seremos capaces de respetarnos a nosotros mismos y al otro, llegando a ser auténticos testigos de la Resurrección de Jesús, del amor de Dios vivo en medio nuestro. Y el daño destructivo del chisme será condenado a la muerte para siempre.

Arzobispo insta a Estados Unidos a no deportar inmigrantes centroamericanos

Cientos de personas, algunas de ellas llevando cuadros de Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe y del finado dirigente de los trabajadores agrícolas, César Chávez, desfilan a favor del derecho de sindicalizar a los trabajadores de las fresas el 13 de abril en Watsonville, California. Monseñor Sylvester D. Ryan, Obispo de Monterey, ha ofrecido su apoyo a los recogedores de fresas, diciendo que algunos patrones y cultivadores infringen constantemente los derechos de los trabajadores.

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (CNS) — EL DIRECTOR DEL CONSEJO EPISCOPAL de la América Latina (CELAM) ha pedido a los Estados Unidos que no deporten a millares de inmigrantes centroamericanos a tenor de una nueva ley de los Estados Unidos.

Monseñor Rodríguez dijo que los dirigentes del CELAM estaban preocupados porque los inmigrantes de la América Latina se hayan convertido en chivos expiatorios de las dificultades económicas de los Estados Unidos.

El Arzobispo agregó que el CELAM, que es una dependencia administrativa y coordinadora de 22 conferencias episcopales de la América Latina, había manifestado sus puntos de vista a los obispos católicos de los Estados Unidos, de quienes dijo que ellos habían compartido sus preocupaciones.

La corriente de inmigrantes de la América Central hacia los Estados Unidos aumentó considerablemente durante la violencia política en el decenio de 1980. Hasta abril, muchas de estas personas estuvieron protegidas por una exención especial de los reglamentos del Servicio de Inmigración y Naturalización (INS). Aunque los funcionarios del INS han dicho que los nuevos reglamentos, que entrarán en vigor el 1.º de abril, no resultarán en deportaciones en masa, los funcionarios de los gobiernos de la América Central dicen que las deportaciones procedentes de los Estados Unidos han aumentado en las semanas recientes.

Los presidentes de la región han puesto el asunto en el programa de trabajo de una reunión con el Presidente Bill Clinton, señalada para mayo en San José, Costa Rica.

Es difícil precisar la cantidad de inmigrantes centroamericanos en los Estados Unidos, pero los observadores de esa región estiman que hay cerca de 330,000 hondureños, 336,000 salvadoreños, 185,000 guatemaltecos y 60,000 nicaragüenses viviendo en los Estados Unidos que podrían estar sujetos a la deportación inmediata.

Tal acontecimiento “produciría una debacle en la economía, con mayor desempleo, menos divisas extranjeras y más delincuencia”, dijo el Ministro del Exterior de Guatemala, Eduardo Stein.

Los dólares que envían a sus familias en la América Central los inmigrantes de esa región en los Estados Unidos desempeñan un papel indispensable en las economías de las respectivas naciones. En 1996, los inmigrantes enviaron cerca de $400 millones a Honduras y más de $1,000 millones a El Salvador —una cantidad de divisas mayor que cualquier otra producida por cualquier actividad económica en ese país.

La Sábana Santa se exhibirá en Turín en 1998 y en el 2000

LA IGLESIA DEL MANTO SANTO — Bomberos inspeccionan los daños en la Catedral de San Juan el Bautista en Turín, Italia, el 12 de abril, horas después que el Manto de Turín fue rescatado de un fuego que envolvió la iglesia. El fuego causó varios millones de dólares en daños a la iglesias, pero el manto no fue dañado.

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).— EL CARDENAL GIOVANNI SALTARINI anunció el 24 de abril en una conferencia en la Oficina de Prensa de la Santa Sede que la "Santa Sindone", o Sábana Santa, conservada en la Capilla Guarini de la Catedral de San Juan en Turín hasta el reciente incendio, se exhibirá, como estaba previsto, en 1998 y también en el 2000.

El Arzobispo de Turín y Custodio Papal de la Sábana Santa estuvo acompañado por Don Giuseppe Ghiberti, Decano de la Facultad Teológica de Turín y Vicepresidente de la Comisión para la Ostensión de la Sábana Santa; Gian Maria Zaccone, Vicepresidente del Centro Internacional de Sindonología; Ugo Perone, Asesor para los recursos culturales y las comunicaciones, ciudad de Turín; Walter Giuliano, Asesor para los recursos naturales y culturales, provincia de Turín; Giampiero Leo, Asesor para la cultura, región de Piamonte.

El Cardenal explicó el daño que sufrió la Capilla Guarini, la Catedral de Turín y una parte del Palacio Real contiguo, debido al incendio que se originó durante la noche del 11 al 12 de abril. "La Sábana Santa, que se conservaba en una teca en el coro de la Catedral — señaló —, fue salvada de las llamas y se trasladó a la casa del Arzobispo". Añadió que "una comisión de investigación está trabajando para identificar las causas del incendio". El lino fue previamente dañado en un incendio en Francia en 1532.

La Sábana es una tela de lino que mide 4,36 por 1,10 metros, y lleva la impresión de un hombre de tamaño natural, que según la tradición es el lienzo fúnebre en el que Jesús fue envuelto tras ser bajado de la cruz. La posesión de la Sábana cambió a través de los siglos. Los Saboya de Italia fueron sus propietarios desde 1578, cuando la trajeron a Turín. En 1983, tras la muerte de Umberto II de Saboya, la posesión de la Sábana pasó a la Santa Sede, de acuerdo con su voluntad.

La Sábana, en el griego de los Evangelios y también en latín, se pronuncia "sindon" y significa pieza de tela o lienzo fúnebre.

El Cardenal Saltarini comentó que la conferencia de prensa de hoy fue convocada por la Santa Sede "para informar sobre la situación casi dos semanas después del incendio y para comunicar los proyectos que planean las autoridades religiosas y civiles para los próximos meses".

"Junto a la pregunta sobre el saldo de los daños -continuó- y sobre el grado de pérdida o de recuperación de los bienes artísticos dañados por el incendio, está en particular la de la Ostensión de la Sábana Santa, que estaba prevista para el período pascual del próximo año: tendrá lugar aún la Ostensión o se deberá suspender o posponer?"

"Deseo responder a esta pregunta desde esta posición privilegiada como Custodio Papal de la Sábana Santa", dijo el Arzobispo de Turín. "Es firme la intención de todas las autoridades responsables de hacer la solemne Ostensión de la Sábana Santa en Turín el próximo año en el tiempo y el sitio ya planeados, es decir, entre el domingo 18 de abril y el domingo 14 de junio de 1998, en la Iglesia Catedral. (...) Este empeño está visto como una señal de confianza en la divina Providencia y una 'apuesta por la esperanza'".

Dijo que "cuando a Juan Pablo II, el propietario de la Sábana, se le preguntó si la Sábana se exhibiría en 1998 o en el 2000, respondió: 'Por qué no en ambos?'".

El Cardenal comentó que la última vez que se expuso la Sábana Santa fue del 26 de agosto al 8 de octubre de 1978, el IV centenario de su presencia en Turín, y durante ese período la visitaron unos 3 millones de peregrinos.

"La solemne ostensión de la Sábana Santa tiene una finalidad exclusivamente pastoral y no presupone ninguna toma de posición con respecto al debate científico sobre este misterioso y sugestivo hallazgo antiguo", terminó el Cardenal Saltarini.

Ugo Perone dijo que con ocasión de la Ostensión de la Sábana Santa se restaurarán numerosas Iglesias de Turín y se organizarán itinerarios turísticos y culturales en la ciudad. Habrá una exposición sobre la imagen de la Sábana y otra sobre la iconografía artística de ésta.

Por su parte Walter Giuliano indicó que las Ostensiones de 1998 y del 2000 «servirán para hacer un examen de conciencia personal y colectivo, capaz de individuar y trazar un futuro de esperanza que consienta construir un proyecto de sociedad que no prescinda de los valores de solidaridad y de paz entre los hombres».

Próxima ordenación

El próximo 14 de junio a las 10 de la mañana en la Catedral de San Patricio, en Charlotte, serán ordenados como sacerdotes los diáconos Arturo De Aguilar y Ray Williams por el Excelentísimo Monseñor William G. Curlin, Obispo de la Diócesis de Charlotte.

El domingo 15 a las tres de la tarde el Padre Arturo De Aguilar celebrará una Misa de acción de gracias en la Iglesia de San Charles Borromeo, situada en el 714 de West Union Street, en Morganton, Carolina del Norte.

Todos están invitados a participar en estas celebraciones.

Juan Pablo II ordena sacerdotes a 31 diáconos de Roma

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS).— EL 20 DE ABRIL, IV DOMINGO de Pascua, conocido como el "Domingo del Buen Pastor", Juan Pablo II ordenó sacerdotes a 31 diáconos de la diócesis de Roma en la Basílica Vaticana, y les alentó a "imitar a Cristo, convirtiéndose en sus testigos valientes, ministros incansables de su Evangelio".

"La misión pastoral de Cristo -dijo- es una misión universal, que no se limita a los hijos e hijas de Israel, sino que en virtud del sacrificio de la Cruz, abraza a todos los hombres y a todos los pueblos".

El Papa se refirió al rito de la prostración en el suelo, durante el canto de las Letanías de los Santos, y les dijo que "la Iglesia pide para vosotros no sólo la gracia del Sacramento del sacerdocio, sino también la santificación, para que podáis, a su vez, santificar a los demás. Este es un momento decisivo de vuestra existencia, que se os quedará grabado para siempre en la mente y en corazón, como le sucede a cada sacerdote".

Comentando las palabras del Salmo: "Bendito el que viene en el nombre del Señor", el Santo Padre indicó que "nos introducen en el misterio eucarístico, que desde este momento y para todos los días de vuestra vida será vuestra particular porción y vuestro don espiritual (...). Cuando nosotros pronunciamos en su nombre, 'in persona Christi Capitis', las palabras de la consagración que El dijo en el Cenáculo, es siempre el mismo Cristo, quien a través de nuestro ministerio, hace presente el sacrificio de la Cruz".

Los nuevos sacerdotes proceden: 17 de Italia, 3 de Filipinas, 2 de Colombia, 1 de Rumanía, 1 de Zaire, 1 de Uruguay, 1 de Francia, 1 de la India, 1 de Honduras, 1 de Venezuela, 1 de España y 1 de Corea.

Sacerdote peruano ex-rehén elogia la fe del magistrado que murió

El Padre Juan Julio Wicht S.J. habla a los reporteros el 23 de abril sobre su confinamiento durante cuatro meses en la residencia del embajador japonés en Lima. Foto CNS de Reuters

LIMA, Perú (CNS) — UN SACERDOTE JESUITA QUE DECIDIÓ QUEDARSE con los rehenes durante toda la crisis en la residencia del Embajador del Japón, elogió la fe del único rehén que murió como resultado del rescate.

El Padre Juan Julio Wicht S.J. dijo que el Magistrado Carlos Giusti, del Tribunal Supremo de Justicia del Perú, "era un hombre de valor y un católico de profundos sentimientos humanos".

De regreso en su comunidad jesuita, en el distrito de Miraflores, Lima, el 23 de abril, sin afeitarse pero ya bañado después de cuatro meses sin tomar una ducha, el Padre Wicht habló sobre el Magistrado Giusti, un abogado prestigioso nombrado por el Presidente del Perú, Alberto Fujimori, para reformar al sistema judicial del Perú.

El Padre Wicht y el Magistrado Giusti estaban entre las 72 personas que, después de permanecer dentro de la residencia del embajador japonés, controlada por miembros del MRTA durante 126 días, fueron objeto de un rescate efectuado por tropas militares peruanas el 22 de abril. Todos los 14 rebeldes, Giusti y dos miembros del Ejército murieron en el rescate.

Al describir la relación entre los comandos del MRTA y los rehenes, el Padre Wicht dijo que "con pocos momentos de exasperación y tensiones, fueron respetuosas, pero distantes".

"No hubo involucración personal ninguna. Siempre tuvimos una comprensión muy clara de que ellos eran nuestros captores y de que estábamos privados de nuestra libertad por ellos", dijo él.

El sacerdote agregó que la experiencia de ser uno de los rehenes fue una oportunidad para "volver a descubrir las prioridades de la vida y también para una conversión espiritual profunda para muchos de mis compañeros", pero rehusó dar más detalles debido a que, según dijo él, "eso involucra al núcleo de mi ministerio sacerdotal".

El Padre Wicht recordó que algunos de los rebeldes asistían periódica y respetuosamente a las Misas ofrecidas dentro de la residencia. Uno de los rebeldes se identificó a sí mismo como católico desde el mismo principio, dijo el sacerdote.

Con tristeza evidente, el Padre Wicht dijo que un día, uno de los rebeldes más jóvenes se le aproximó para pedir un sacramento.

"El me dijo: 'Padrecito, no he hecho mi Primera Comunión; quiero saber si usted puede prepararme y dármele'", recordó el Padre Wicht. "Le expliqué que la recepción del sacramento exigía vivir los Mandamientos, y que en aquellas circunstancias era imposible que él lo recibiera".

Las palabras de Jesús en la cruz

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (VIS). — DURANTE LA AUDIENCIA General del 23 de abril en la Plaza de San Pedro, el Papa prosiguió su catequesis sobre la Virgen María y comentó las palabras de Jesús en la Cruz dirigidas a su Madre: En mensaje previo a visita, Papa insta a terminar divisiones en Líbano "Mujer, ahí tienes a tu hijo" y a San Juan: "Ahí tienes a tu Madre".

"Estas palabras, particularmente conmovedoras" dijo el Santo Padre, "constituyen una 'escena de revelación': revelan los profundos sentimientos de Cristo que muere y encierran una gran riqueza de significado para la fe y la espiritualidad cristiana". Recordó que "las palabras de Jesús que muere, en realidad revelan que su intención primaria no es la de confiar a su Madre a Juan, sino la de entregar al discípulo a María, asignándole una nueva misión materna".

Juan Pablo II subrayó que «la nueva maternidad de María en relación con el discípulo constituye un signo ulterior del gran amor que condujo a Jesús a ofrecer su vida por todos los hombres. En el Calvario, este amor se manifiesta en donar a una Madre, la suya, que de este modo se convierte también en Madre nuestra».

"La nueva Eva, María, coopera al acontecimiento salvífico de la Redención. De esta manera, la figura de la 'mujer' se recupera en la Virgen y la maternidad asume la tarea de difundir entre los hombres la vida nueva en Cristo (...). Si en el designio de Dios la maternidad de María estaba destinada desde el principio a extenderse a toda la humanidad, sólo en el Calvario, en virtud del sacrificio de Cristo, ésta se manifiesta en su dimensión universal".

El Papa terminó poniendo de relieve que "Jesús en la Cruz no ha proclamado formalmente la maternidad universal de María, sino que ha instaurado una relación materna concreta entre Ella y el discípulo predilecto. En esta decisión del Señor se puede percibir la preocupación de que esta maternidad no sea interpretada en sentido vago, sino que indique la relación intensa y personal de María con los propios cristianos.

"Que cada uno de nosotros, precisamente por esta concreción de la maternidad universal de María, reconozca plenamente en Ella a su propia Madre, abandonándose con confianza a

Fathers' Day

Williams And Crystal Comic Exchanges Highlights Of Film

NEW YORK (CNS) — Robin Williams and Billy Crystal team up to find a 16-year-old runaway, each believing the boy to be his biological son, in "Fathers' Day."

The lightweight plot is essentially silly — the boy's desperate mom (Nastassja Kinski) separately tells long-ago lovers Dale (Williams) and Jack (Crystal) that each is the real father — not her husband (Bruce Greenwood) — of missing Scott (Charlie Hofheimer), in hopes they will find the teen.

Of course, the movie contrives to have the two potential pops meet, agree to team up in the hunt and hit the road.

Speaking of the road, the movie, directed by Ivan Reitman, lets Williams and Crystal ad-lib in the style of Bob Hope and Bing Crosby from their "Road" movies of yesteryear.

This is good because the two comedians are in their prime and appear to enjoy working off one another and trying to crack each other up. But that isn't quite enough to result in a world-class comedy when the plotting is slack and the tone overly sentimental. And so "Fathers' Day" ends up an amusing, often pleasing comedy that falls short of its potential considering its comic star power.

Making a decidedly odd couple are disciplined lawyer Jack, in his third childless-by-choice marriage, (to Julia-Louis Dreyfuss in a small role), and leftover hippie Dale, a failed writer hoping to connect to anyone as a reason to go on.

The prospect of a son intrigues Jack but positively elates Dale, and even when the two strangers discover their former girlfriend told each of them the same thing they decide to pool their resources and find out the truth once they get Scott home.

The lad is actually not too difficult to locate — he's trailing a rock band with his disenchanted girlfriend — but he wants nothing to do with the two over-eager baby boomers who claim him as their own.

Bloating the narrative is a weak subplot in which Scott is being sought by two dopey drug dealers whose money the boy has stolen to buy his sweetie a diamond necklace. This goes nowhere and is too serious a matter to blend into featherweight comedy.

Throwaway comic exchanges between the two would-be dads form the high points of the movie as it moves predictably to an upbeat end where both men seem in a better position to truly become fathers.

The tone is all soft and cuddly as mom fesses up and everyone learns actual blood ties aren't necessary to form warm human bonds. Past promiscuity on the part of the characters is treated as simply cause for comic banter, making this film inappropriate for impressionable teen viewers.

The direction is strictly routine and, outside of the two leads, other cast members barely make an impression. One would almost conclude it would be a funnier, tighter comedy if it was structured as a two-man show, allowing Crystal and Williams to describe the situation in their differing sassy and manic styles.

As it stands, "Fathers' Day" looks unlikely to produce any offspring.

Because of intermittent comic violence, several sexual references and humorous treatment of past sexual escapades, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"The Comedians" (1967)

Multileveled tragicomedy about a man (Richard Burton) who finds himself in the middle of a plot to overthrow a ruthless dictatorship in Haiti. Strong cast (Alec Guinness, Peter Ustinov, Elizabeth Taylor, Lillian Gish, Cicely Tyson and James Earl Jones), thoughtful script by Graham Greene from his own novel and assured direction by Peter Glenville result in a powerful movie about personal commitment in the context of political injustice. Some brutal violence and much tension. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Funeral" (1996)

Depression-era tale of how two Italian-American gangster brothers (Christopher Walken and Chris Penn) avenge the murder of their younger brother (Vincent Gallo). Director Abel Ferrara sluggishly probes the dark psyches of brothers trained as killers by their father but constantly rebuked for their crimes by their devout Catholic wives (Isabella Rossellini and Annabella Sciorra). Some gory violence, a sexual encounter with nudity and much rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Hobson's Choice" (1954)

Amusing British tale set in 1890s Manchester, where a smug shoe store owner (Charles Laughton) gets his comeuppance when his eldest daughter (Brenda de Banzie) marries an uneducated but talented shoemaker (John Mills) and they open a rival shoe shop. Directed by David Lean, the story of a wise daughter outsmarting her foolish dad has plenty of ironic humor, a zestful music score and a grand comic performance from Laughton. Period sexism and romantic complications. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Meet Wally Sparks" (1997)

Dreary comedy in which a trashy TV talk show host (Rodney Dangerfield) tries to discredit a Southern governor (David Ogden Stiers) whose family-values speeches are hurting his ratings. Director Peter Baldwin's low-budget, poorly edited movie is an appropriately shabby vehicle for Dangerfield's leering one-liners. Much crude sexual humor, brief nudity, some comic violence and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Night Train to Munich" (1940)

Classy British caper in which a Czech inventor and his daughter (Margaret Lockwood) are snatched from England by a nasty Nazi agent (Paul Henreid), then rescued from a heavily guarded German train by a daredevil British operative (Rex Harrison). Director Carol Reed paces the cat-and-mouse thriller with some twisty plot turns, comic byplay (notably Basil Radford and Naunton Wayne as woolly English travelers) and suspenseful action, including a shoot-out atop the Swiss Alps. Stylized violence and mild romance. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Ransom" (1996)

Fearing his kidnapped son will be killed anyway, an enraged father (Mel Gibson) spurns the FBI's advice to pay the ransom money and offers it instead to anyone who can identify the abductors (led by Gary Sinise) as he races against time to locate the boy. Director Ron Howard's taut action thriller twists and turns suspensefully, although its point-blank violence is disturbingly realistic. Several gory killings, deadly menace to a child, frequent profanity and much rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Seconds" (1966)

Middle-aged banker (Rock Hudson) fed up with his deadening routine pays a mysterious organization to provide a new identity but he finds his new life not what he expected. Directed by John Frankenheimer, it's intriguing mystery with a troubling ending, but there's a sexually exploitive sequence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is O — morally offensive. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Actor Assante Calls Himself A 'Healthy Catholic'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — He lost 40 pounds to play his latest part, but that's not why actor Armand Assante, who stars in the NBC miniseries "The Odyssey," declared, "I am a healthy Catholic — I hope." He made the comments in a telephone conference call with television writers to promote the show. The New York native, who began his acting career 30 years ago on the stage and took to the screen 20 years ago, ticked off the touchstones of his Catholic upbringing — his grade school, his high school, the church where he was wed. "The very fact of Christ — his works, his teachings — mean a great deal to me," Assante said. "To think that this man died for my sins, it's a profound thing to meditate upon."

Armand Assante stars as Odysseus in the NBC miniseries "The Odyssey." The show, based on Homer's lengthy poem, airs May 18-19.

Pope Sends Message To Fatima For 80th Anniversary Of Apparition

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II sent a message to commemorate the 80th anniversary of the Marian apparition at Fatima, Portugal, emphasizing its enduring value. The text of the note, directed to Bishop Serafim de Sousa Ferreira Silva of Leiria-Fatima, was released at the Vatican May 13, eight decades to the day after the first apparition. "The message which the Most Holy Virgin sent to all humanity on this occasion continues to resound with all its prophetic force, inviting everyone to insistent prayer, to interior conversion and to a generous commitment of expiation for one's own sins and for those of the world," the pope said.

Saginaw's 'Rested' Bishop Says It's Good To Be Home

SAGINAW, Mich. (CNS) — Now that Bishop Kenneth E. Untener is back from a sabbatical, "home" will once again be in a parish in his Saginaw Diocese that has invited him to hang his hat. "I ended up doing in San Francisco just what I do in Saginaw," joked the bishop. "I continue my life as a professional sponger as I go from parish to parish." Upon his return home, he resumed his temporary residence at St. Mary Nine Mile Parish in Pinconing, where he lived before his sabbatical. Ever since he sold the bishop's official residence in Saginaw after becoming bishop in 1980, he has moved every three or four months to a different parish in his 11-county diocese. In December Bishop Untener went to Menlo Park, Calif., in the San Francisco Archdiocese, for four months of reflection, prayer and writing. The move was his 54th in the past 16 years.

Study Finds No Ill Health Effects From Communion

LODI, N.J. (CNS) — People who receive Communion run no more risk of infection than those who don't, according to a study by New Jersey microbiologist Anne LaGrange Loving.

Health effects do not change if the communicant receives daily or only occasionally, or if the communicant takes consecrated wine as well as the consecrated bread, she said.

Loving teaches microbiology at Felician College, a small Catholic college in Lodi. She compared weekly health reports over a 10-week period by 681 New Jersey residents who participated in the study.

She said that in more than 100 years of research and debate among scientists over the possible relationship between reception of Communion and communicable diseases, hers was the first recorded study that compared actual churchgoing and Communion practices with the actual health history of a large number of people over a period of time.

She delivered a paper on her study May 7 at the annual meeting of the American Society for Microbiology in Miami Beach, Fla., and later made it available to Catholic News Service.

Working with her on the study was Lisa Wolf, a psychology professor at Kean College of New Jersey in Union.

Study participants included churchgoing Catholics, Protestants and Orthodox whose practices ranged from daily worship and Communion to occasional worship, with or without Communion.

Also included were more than 200 people, Christian and non-Christian, who during the study never attended church or received Communion.

Besides standard demographic data and their weekly worship and Communion practices, they were asked to record each week any medications taken and any respiratory, intestinal, skin, systemic or general illness problems they experienced.

Communion Cup — A new study by microbiologist Anne LaGrange Loving shows that receiving the Communion host and cup does not increase risk of illness.

"There were no differences in reported illness between those who received, those who attended but did not receive, and those who never attended church," Loving reported.

"Since there were no differences in health among these groups," she said, "it was not necessary to determine which method had been used by an individual to receive the wine — sipping from a common cup, separate cups, intinction, etc."

She said she also tested "to determine if those in religious life had a higher incidence of reported illness."

"These individuals attended church and received the sacraments as often as daily, and some consumed the 'dregs' of the consecrated wine after all parishioners had sipped from the chalice," she reported.

"No significant differences were found for any of the health problems between those in religious life compared to other respondents."

to gather with other Christians united in the bond of Jesus.

I love the Catholic Church and believe her teachings with all my heart. But I know many people of different faiths who love God and their church as deeply as I love mine.

Seven years ago I became friends with Fran, a woman in my neighborhood and the mother of three children who happen to be Protestant. We discovered how important faith was to both of us and to our families. For the first time, I experience a friendship that was founded on faith. Over the years, we shared so much about our different faiths and the misconceptions we had about each other's religion. Fran's prayers and words of God's love helped me through some of my most difficult hours. Her unshakable faith and knowledge of the Bible have deeply enriched my spiritual life.

During the many conversations I had with Fran over the years at our kitchen table, in hospital rooms, on the beach or over the phone, I often felt that God was smiling on us, pleased that we transcended the stereotypes and instead focused on what united us in our faith. I am a better Catholic because of Fran's love and example.

For me, having a friend who is Catholic is a bit like putting on a pair of old shoes. They're comfortable. They feel right. We've walked on familiar and common ground together for years. Meeting a friend who isn't Catholic may be more like buying a new pair of shoes. At first they might be uncomfortable. They may be a style or color that we normally wouldn't buy. We're unsure how they'll look on us. I believe God is telling us we need to wear both kinds of shoes on our journey of faith. We need the loving and mutual support of our family of faith — its beliefs, traditions and values we have known and loved for years. But we also need the richness of other religions and cultures that reflect the diversity of the world God created.

The most effective way we can work toward the unity that God wishes for all the world's people is to be a shining example of God's love in the way we treat all peoples rather than claiming religious superiority. And one of the first places we begin this is by teaching our own through word and example to be respectful of the many ways people search for God in our world.

sume, ignorance of the law, which you reject in this case, is only one of many varieties of invincible ignorance. There may also be ignorance of the fact that I am bound by the law, whatever that law is.

For instance, if individuals exercise all the reflection, faith and prayer they can reasonably manage in the circumstances, and if they still cannot see they are bound to a particular obligation, they are in what is, somewhat indelicately, called invincible ignorance.

Their action may be objectively wrong, but they are not sinning because they cannot see that they are acting wrongly. (Those serious about understanding this may see almost any of the classical moral texts, for example, Nodin-Heinzel "Summa Theologiae Moralis, De Principiis," 1952.)

As a less sensitive example, some great non-Catholic theologians and philosophers have been, or are today, experts in Catholic doctrine. They know well the church's teaching about necessity of membership in the Catholic Church.

In spite of all their study and reflection, however, they have never come to see membership in the church as a personal moral imperative. They know the "law"; they just cannot in conscience perceive that the law applies to them.

According to the church's traditional teaching on moral responsibility, they are (again in the embarrassingly disrespectful phrase) invincibly ignorant.

Finally, these thoughts, reflected in the guidelines, are not new or revolutionary. They are simply part of the church's traditional criteria for evaluating responsibility and culpability for our moral actions.

Both Volunteers, Governments Seen Needing In Aiding Poor

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — Some people think more volunteering will turn the tide against poverty in the United States. Others think more government help will make the difference. But “it’s not either/or,” according to John Carr, secretary for social development and world peace at the U.S. Catholic Conference in Washington. “We need a lot more creative community initiatives, and we need better and more just public policy,” Carr said in an interview with The Catholic Standard and Times, newspaper of the Philadelphia Archdiocese.

Catholic Leaders Urge Funding Overhaul For Illinois Schools

CHICAGO (CNS) — Catholic leaders in Illinois are urging the state to restructure its system for funding schools to make it “more just and equitable” and to guarantee access to quality education for all. The Catholic Conference of Illinois recently outlined principles it believes should guide a discussion on financing of primary and secondary education. “We need to reconsider the funding source,” said Elaine Schuster, superintendent of schools for the archdiocese and chairwoman of the Catholic conference’s Education Committee. “Schools should not be dependent upon property taxes because that system is not an equal or fair way of offering quality education to the students of Illinois,” she told The New World, Chicago archdiocesan newspaper.

Jesuit Says U.S. Hiding Evidence On Priest’s Death

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (CNS) — A priest who has read hundreds of pages of declassified U.S. government documents believes the Clinton administration has yet to come clean about the disappearance of a fellow Jesuit in the jungles of Honduras. Father James Carney, a U.S. citizen who was born in St. Louis and served for 25 years as a missionary in Honduras, disappeared in September 1983 while a chaplain with a small band of Honduran guerrillas. Many of his family and fellow Jesuits believe he was tortured and killed by the Honduran military. Among them is Father Joseph Mulligan, a Jesuit from Detroit who works with basic Christian communities in Central America. Father Mulligan, who lives in Managua, Nicaragua, has become the Jesuits’ point man on the Father Carney case.

KINGS MOUNTAIN — While history of a Catholic presence in the Cleveland County town of Shelby dates back to around 1884, it took until the mid-1930s for Mass to be regularly celebrated in local residents' homes. The first Catholic family in the Kings Mountain area, southeast of Shelby along Highway 74, is said to have settled there in the mid-1930s. Today, parishioners of Christ the King Church in Kings Mountain can reflect on the evangelical spirit of their faithful predecessors that brought a Catholic church home.

For a quarter-century, Catholic families living in Kings Mountain had to travel to Shelby or Gastonia for Mass and catechetical instruction. As that number of families neared 20 by 1960, Father Thomas Clements, then pastor of St. Mary Church in Shelby, began celebrating Mass in the Kings Mountain American Legion Hall.

The following year, Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh established an apostolic center in town for training newly ordained priests. On the one-acre property stood a former Associate Reform Presbyterian Church, along with other buildings to be used by the Catholic congregation for worship, educational and social purposes. A new Catholic parish was born.

With the acquisition of the property came almost instant obstacles for the congregation. The church buildings and other edifices, having been constructed decades earlier, were suffering from disrepair. By 1965, the apostolic training center was relocated from Kings Mountain, and the church family reverted to mission status. Having sold what they could of the church grounds structures in 1973, parishioners began searching for a new, permanent spiritual home.

Local Episcopal and Lutheran congregations welcomed their Catholic neighbors to use their church facilities for Masses through the 1970s. With Bishop Michael J. Begley, shepherd of the newly founded Diocese of Charlotte, the mission continued to search for a site on which to build a new church. Having petitioned St. Joseph since 1960, when sisters from the Mission Helpers of the Sacred Heart arrived to teach CCD classes, the congregation continued to call on the intercession of the universal Church's patron into the early 1980s.

On the feast day of St. Joseph — March 19 — in 1981, four acres of land were purchased in town. Two decades earlier, a pair of Mission Helpers sisters had buried a medal of St. Joseph on that same piece of property, echoing the hope of local parishioners that a Catholic church would someday be built in Kings Mountain.

The congregation received financial assistance from the Catholic Extension Society, the diocese, parishioners and friends, and ground was broken for the new church in September 1982. Present at the ceremony were Father (now Msgr.) Felix Kelaher, pastor; and the Reverend Gerald Weeks, former pastor of Resurrection Lutheran Church, where the Catholic mission had celebrated its liturgies for a time.

The first Mass in the new Christ the King Church took place in July 1983. Forty-three families were registered as parishioners at the time. The church was dedicated on the feast day of Christ the King — Nov. 29 — that year.

Much development occurred during the pastorate of Msgr. William Wellein, who arrived to minister in Shelby and the mission in Kings Mountain beginning in late 1984. The lower level of the Christ the King facility was completed, thus allowing space for CCD classes and other catechetical and social activities. A wall hanging of Christ the King was placed on the large brick wall in the sanctuary. The pastor also added to the landscape a statue of Jesus which he had obtained from a Wilmington movie studio while serving as pastor on the Carolina coast years earlier.

Father Carl Kaltreider was installed as pastor of St. Mary and Christ the King churches in June 1996. In addition to its strength as a faith community, church life is highlighted by the presence of the Ladies Guild, various faith formation efforts, the parish council and a newly developed Knights of Columbus joint council.

The contemporary-style Christ the King Church continues to open its doors to resident and visiting faithful in Kings Mountain. Memories of the fervent missionary efforts of Cleveland County Catholics to establish a church on their eastern border remain strong. And somewhere in the surrounding soil, perhaps, still lies a medal of St. Joseph, the saint whose intercession was called upon in the hopes of establishing a new church.

Priest Slain; Witness Said To Ignore Cries For Help

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (CNS) — As mourners gathered at a funeral Mass for a retired Catholic priest murdered along a New Mexico highway, questions continued about reports that several witnesses failed to respond to the priest's cries for help.

Archbishop Michael J. Sheehan of Santa Fe celebrated the May 8 Mass for 62-year-old Father Armando Martinez at St. Anthony Church in Questa, the priest's home village in northern New Mexico.

Several passers-by apparently witnessed Father Martinez being chased and beaten by his assailant May 3 along Highway 4 in the Jemez Mountains.

One purported witness told a local television station that he did not stop his vehicle because he thought two drunks were fighting along the roadside, even though a much younger man was striking an older man.

An 18-year-old woman stated in an affidavit that she and five friends were driving along the highway when an older man in bloodstained casual clothes dashed in front of her car and waved his arms. When she stopped and rolled her window down a few inches, the man yelled: "A man is trying to kill me."

The woman said the man continued shouting: "Please help me. I'm a priest. I gave him a ride from Jemez Springs and he just got out of prison. He's going to kill me. You must believe me, it's my life, it's my life."

However, the woman told authorities she was scared and drove away after a younger man approached her car and told her to ignore his drunken friend. While the car sped away, a passenger reportedly turned around to see the younger man hit the older one.

Father Martinez's nude body was found along the highway the next day. Investigators said he died from head injuries caused by blunt force. His car and belongings were missing.

Shortly before the funeral, murder suspect Dennis Carabajal, 38, allegedly surrendered to police after a $1,000 reward had been offered seeking information regarding his whereabouts.

Carabajal, a New Mexico native, was paroled in July 1996 after being sentenced to three years in the state prison for attacking a woman and slashing her face with a carpet knife. He has a history of violent crime and drug abuse.

Law enforcement officials said a police officer thought he saw Father Martinez and Carabajal during a May 3 traffic stop outside the town of Jemez Springs.

Archbishop Sheehan described Father Martinez as a gentle and friendly person and speculated early on that the priest had been murdered during a robbery after picking up a hitchhiker.

Father Martinez had worked in the archdiocesan Marriage Tribunal and in many parishes throughout the state. He was ordained in 1961 at St. Therese Church in Albuquerque.

D.C. Pair Preach Respect For Diversity, Intolerance Of Hate

By MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Vice President Al Gore and Attorney General Janet Reno, speaking at the Anti-Defamation League's annual leadership conference in Washington, spoke out against hate crimes being committed in the United States and promoted respect and tolerance for racial, ethnic and religious differences.

Comparing the fight against intolerance to the Middle East peace process, Gore said May 20 that while much has been done, "we have not traveled nearly far enough. We have a lot of work to do."

Gore added, "People look to us (in the United States) as the example of the proposal that we human beings on the Earth have the God-given gift to rise above the differences ... to rise above the evils that are unleashed in the human spirit."

The vice president said that the two-pronged approach all Americans should follow involves "respect for differences and appreciation for diversity" while "reaching out to embrace all that we have in common."

Reno, who spoke before Gore May 20, said the Department of Justice wants to "eliminate hate crimes and make it a systemic part of the Justice Department's efforts."

Since 1989, 500 defendants have been convicted of hate crimes, virtually all of those who have been tried, she said.

Of the 400 church arsons investigated since January 1995, 187 arrests have been made in 136 of the cases — a record Reno said which was double the typical arson arrest rate.

"There is more to do but we are making some inroads," she said. "Our efforts are paying off," she said, noting that 200 FBI and Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents have investigated church burnings.

The church arsons have "generated a tremendous response" around the country, Reno said, leading to her hope that Americans can erase "the hate and bigotry that is too often in our midst."

Reno said hate crimes are underreported because their victims are reluctant to come forward. "In the past, hate crimes were not taken seriously," she said. "The victims were vilified for reporting the incident."

To bring about an upswing in the reporting of hate crimes "requires great sensitivity and great patience," she said. "If nothing is done, the victim's fears will have been vindicated."

In a question-and-answer session, Reno suggested that groups to support hate-crime victims be formed along the lines of Mothers Against Drunk Driving and groups that support victims of domestic violence.

"Be as constructive as you can" when talking with prosecutors and monitoring the course of hate crimes through the criminal justice system, Reno said. "Tell the victim every step of the way that they are doing the right thing."

Reno, in her talk, also spoke highly of the benefits of prevention, plugging legislation that would channel anti-youth violence grants directly to courts to set up their own initiatives.

Youth skinhead gangs are responsible for some hate crimes, she said, adding that while violent crime is "down significantly," it may rise again because of the projected growth in the teen-age population in the next 10 to 15 years.

Gore touched upon last year's spate of church burnings to close his remarks, noting when in western Tennessee, his home state, two churches — one white, one black, about two miles from each other — had burned about a year apart.

The cause of the white church's fire may have been electrical, and the black church was the first church to donate to its rebuilding. A year later, the black church burned due to a probable arson, and the white church responded in kind by making the first donation for the black church's reconstruction.

Neither congregation had met the other before the church burnings. But "tragedy brought the communities together and (they) might never have been brought together except for the event," Gore said. "Man intended it for evil, but God intended it for good."

Mildred Rankin Retires After 60+ Years Serving Mercy Community

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

BELMONT — Like Sacred Heart Convent and its Sisters of Mercy, Mildred Rankin is a fixture in Gaston County history.

No, the 84-year-old is not a member of the religious order. Rather, her connection to local lore is via the workplace: Rankin was employed at the former Sacred Heart College and the Sisters of Mercy Motherhouse for more than 60 years. She recently retired and was honored with a surprise dinner May 15 where family and friends honored Rankin for her years of service and commitment to the community.

"Mildred is a special person; she's part of our Mercy family," said Mercy Sister Rosalind Picot, president of the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina. "We become very involved in the lives of our employees and they become a part of our lives. It's more like family here than a business, and may it always be that way."

For the Mercy president, the memories of Rankin go back many years — specifically, when Sister Rosalind was a college student at Sacred Heart. At that time, Rankin worked in the dormitories at the school. "Mildred used to look out for us. She used to warn us, 'so and so is coming.' And she used to do extra little

Ecumenical Dialogue Stresses Christian Unity

By KATHY SCHMUGGE
Correspondent

HICKORY — As part of a continuing ecumenical effort, Roman Catholic clergy and three other Christian denominations met May 6-7 at the Catholic Conference Center for the annual Bishops' Ecumenical Dialogue, sponsored by the Episcopal Diocese of Western North Carolina, the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte and the Western North Carolina Conference of the United Methodist Church.

This year's topic was "Clergy Stress — Its Implications for the Church," with featured speaker Conventual Father Canice Connors, former president of the St. Luke Institute in Maryland, who has published articles and advised the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in the areas of human sexuality, sexual abuse, pedophilia and other related topics. Father Connors offered basic survival tips and advice to 26 clergy and lay leaders on how to live a healthier and happier life.

Father George Kloster, ecumenical officer for the Charlotte Diocese, has been involved with the churches' cooperative effort known as LARCUM (Lutherans, Anglican/Episcopalian, Roman Catholic and United Methodist) for 15 years, and sees a positive trend developing in recent dialogues. "Over the past few years, a mutual confidence has developed and we are now focusing on issues that we share," said Father Kloster, pastor of St. Michael Church in Gastonia. "Certainly the theme of clergy stress is one that is prevalent in the four denominations who sponsored this forum."

"We share stresses, human qualities and psychological make-up. We should not be emphasizing our differences, but our oneness," added Dr. Donald George, ecumenical liaison officer for the Western North Carolina United Methodist Conference. George has been involved in the ecumenical movement for almost 30 years and has been part of LARCUM since its inception. "The greater truth holds us (Christians) together."

The Rev. Dr. Leonard Bolick, newly installed bishop for the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, said the conference was an enriching experience. "It is important for Christians to be in conversation about our faith and what we believe, stating clearly how we see God," he said.

Also in attendance was the Rev. Charlene Kammerer, bishop of the Western North Carolina Conference of the United Methodist Church. Bishop Kammerer and Bishop Bolick hope to organize another meeting among the LARCUM bishops in hopes of expanding the ecumenical effort to all levels. "We must find ways to stand united and speak words of hope in a world which desperately needs to hear that message," Bishop Bolick noted.

The Rev. Gilmer Miller, a Lutheran minister who serves on the LARCUM planning committee, feels that Christians have reached a time where they can no longer ignore other faiths. "We are all God's people. We must work together and serve God faithfully in the various manifestations of Church." By sharing traditions and theology, individuals gain a better understanding other denominations as well as their own, he added.

The Rev. Bob Crewdson, an Episcopal representative on the planning board, would like to see the ecumenical effort go in a two-prong direction: Continuing to present speakers who address the needs of all denominations and resuming education about the various denominations for new members.

LARCUM participants see the dialogue as a way to break down barriers; where people may come together as strangers but leave as friends.

S.C. Bishops Confess Sin Of Racism

CHARLESTON, S.C. (CNS) — Bishop David B. Thompson of Charleston joined with his brother Lutheran, Episcopal and Methodist bishops in South Carolina in confessing the "sin of racism" and asking for forgiveness.

The bishops issued a joint statement May 16 after attending a May 12-13 dialogue on race relations.

"We ask (Jesus) now to help us in our struggles to overcome the sin of racism, that powerful prejudice which pits one race against the other to the damage of all," the bishops said. "We go to each other, confessing guilt and seeking forgiveness."

The approaching third millennium of Christianity presented the bishops with a "unique opportunity" to "face up to the evil of racism totally united in the belief that God created us all in his own image and likeness, that he created us all equal and that we all have the same inalienable right," the statement said.

"No dogmas, no creeds, no Christian denominations divide us on these beliefs," it added.

"Arm in arm, heart with heart, calling upon the Lord to assist us, we must, if we deserve to be called Christian, have this love for one another, embrace each other totally and in the first belief in one Lord, one baptism, one human family, with equal liberty and justice for all."

The statement was signed by Bishop Thompson; Episcopal Bishops Dorsey F. Henderson Jr. of Upper South Carolina, Edward Salmon Jr. of South Carolina, and South Carolina Suffragan Bishop William J. Skilton; Evangelical Lutheran Bishop David A. Donges; and United Methodist Bishop J. Lawrence McCleskey.

The dialogue on race relations is part of an ongoing series of two-day dialogues among Lutheran, Episcopal, Catholic and Methodist bishops and lay leaders in which the laity participate in a series of talks on the first day, and the bishops respond on the second.

Topics covered during the race relations dialogue included successful cross-racial clergy appointments, thriving integrated congregations, the appointment of blacks to leadership positions, the establishment of bishops' commissions on race relations, and programs to help congregations become more sensitive to racial differences.

Past dialogue topics have included Eucharist and interdenominational marriage. Last year's dialogue resulted in the creation of a common baptismal certificate to be used by all denominations.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Expresses Gratitude For Warm Welcome In Lebanon

Dear brothers and sisters,

Following my long-awaited visit to Lebanon, I express my gratitude to the president of the republic and to the civil and ecclesiastical authorities for their warm welcome and hospitality. In Beirut, I presided at the solemn conclusion of the special assembly for Lebanon of the Synod of Bishops and entrusted to the young people my post-synodal apostolic exhortation, titled "A New Hope for Lebanon." Young people are the hope of Lebanon and the church, and the implementation of the synod will largely depend on them. Lebanon has a long Christian tradition reflected in the presence of the Maronite Church and many other churches, both Catholic and Orthodox. Cooperation among believers, together with restoration of the centuries-long tradition of harmony between Muslims and Christians, must mark the present time of reconciliation and rebuilding after long years of conflict. Only in this way can the preservation of Lebanon's national and cultural identity be ensured. Let us pray that Lebanon, where Christ himself taught and worked miracles, will become a place of tolerance, cooperation and peace.

Pope Sends Message To Fatima On 80th Anniversary Of Apparition

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II sent a message to commemorate the 80th anniversary of the Marian apparition at Fatima, Portugal, emphasizing its enduring value. The text of the note, directed to Bishop Serafim de Sousa Ferreira Silva of Leiria-Fatima, was released at the Vatican May 13, eight decades to the day after the first apparition. "The message which the Most Holy Virgin sent to all humanity on this occasion continues to resound with all its prophetic force, inviting everyone to insistent prayer, to interior conversion and to a generous commitment of expiation for one's own sins and for those of the world," the pope said.

In Times Of Change, Emphasize Church Teachings, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Traditional Catholic teachings must be emphasized in times of transition, Pope John Paul II told members of the southern African bishops' conference in mid-May.

The 27 bishops from South Africa, Botswana and Swaziland were on their "ad limina" visits, which bishops worldwide make every five years to report on conditions in their dioceses.

This was the South African bishops' first "ad limina" trip to the Vatican after the demise of apartheid, under which members of the country's white minority governed and suppressed the black majority.

Pope John Paul acknowledged that the country "has had to adapt to radically new social and political conditions" since then. But he urged the bishops to encourage clergy and lay people to stick to conventional Catholic teachings despite this environment of constant change.

Guardian Angels

Sometimes people experience coincidences which seem to them to involve the direct hand of a higher power. These incidents can't be fully explained logically or scientifically. They leave the subjects profoundly moved, believing they have been chosen for this special gift from a heavenly power.

Many of these stories point to what Catholics always have called guardian angels. When I am told an angel story the sincerity of the person who experienced heavenly help comes through so loud and clear that I can't help but be moved.

Precious Blood Sister Kathryn Ann Gunther of Dayton, Ohio, a reader of my columns, wrote to me of an experience she called her "encounter with angels."

It began when she arrived at a conference for nurses, social workers and pastoral care staff members at the state house in Dayton.

In her words: "Chaplain Nancy, who walked with me in the state house, offered to carry my purse. I have multiple sclerosis and at times find it difficult to carry anything heavy when I walk.

"Out of the corner of my eye I thought I noticed a railing on the right wall. Without looking at the presumed support, I extended my right hand and grasped the supposed railing.

"What a shock I experienced! The band on the railing I had grasped was moving faster than I could walk. Unfortunately, when I am afraid, my body becomes rigid.

"Suddenly I realized that the railing I had grasped was the banister to the down escalator. In less than a minute, my rigid body was stretched to its full length and my entire body was head-first on the banister.

"I heard Nancy scream, 'Someone help us, she can't get down!' The next moment I saw two men jump onto the escalator. When they touched me, I felt relaxed and released my hands to them. One of the men took one arm and the second man took the other. At the same time, a third man jumped onto the escalator from the top, lifting both my legs.

"Gently I found myself carried off the escalator.

"What was so remarkable about their transporting me from the escalator is my feeling no hand contact, no sensation of skin against skin, no discomfort. It seemed as if I were floating easily and comfortably while they lifted me from the banister and carried me to safety.

"Without a doubt I knew three angels had rescued me from the escalator."

When Sister Kathryn Ann sent me her story, she pointed out that her friend Nancy maintains these were just young men, not angels, who merely happened to be there when she needed help. But "God works through human beings," Sister Kathryn Ann noted, and for her the men who delivered her from a fatal fall will always be angels.

It's good to recall that the subject of angels has been around for a very long time. St. Thomas Aquinas, in the "Summa Theologica," wrote about angels: their number and variety, their knowledge and love and their angelic sanctity and angelic sin, too.

St. Thomas referred to angels as our "angelic big brothers" and said they have much to teach us. The great intellectual master also wrote, "Some of them (angels) are friendly with that staunch friendship that endures, even heightens, throughout our weaknesses, our failures, our pettiness, our positive malice; so friendly as to be on guard for us 24 hours in the day."

Light One Candle

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

A Child's Eye View Of Pentecost

Celebrating the children's liturgy at my parish when I was a young priest was always a daunting task, but never more so than at the Feast of the Pentecost. How does one adequately present the mystery of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit to those still mastering the intricacies of tying their own shoelaces?

When I was growing up such tasks were left to the imaginative teaching skills of the parish school nuns, whose own theological explanations at the time were cautionary tales featuring this thing called the Holy "Ghost" in the role of hero. Sister Rosanne, our jubilant third grade teacher, put it this way: "There is no reason to be afraid of scary ghosts when you are alone in the dark, because God has given us the Holy Ghost who is stronger than the bad ones." Oddly enough it was a reassuring notion for youngsters scared of things that go bump in the night.

Then, somewhere along the way, the Holy Ghost became the Holy Spirit and Father Rocco took up the challenge. His homilies were magic — literally. An amateur prestidigitator and magician, he illuminated the story of the flaming tongues that settled on the heads of the disciples by waving a sparkler wand over an empty glass. Presto! The glass was filled with milk! His explanation? "We are the empty container, and the milk is the Holy Spirit." Memorable, if a bit off the theological mark.

My seminary training was far more intricate. The great theologians of Franciscan mysticism — Blessed John Duns Scotus and St. Bonaventure — viewed the Holy Spirit not so much as an entity to be defined but as a way of life. They draw our attention not to what the Spirit IS, but to what the Spirit DOES. Jesus lived and preached freedom and salvation by manifesting a power that enables us to develop and share our God-given abilities. That power in its purest form is Love.

This new way of living was both exciting and confusing to his friends. When Jesus announced that He would soon leave, His followers became fearful at the prospect of carrying on without His example and leadership. So He promised to send the Spirit who would reveal to them and sustain in them all that Jesus lived in their midst. Indeed on that first Pentecost this promised Spirit emboldened them through the ability to see as Jesus did and the courage to act as Jesus did. Not only were their own lives radically changed, but they brought joyful renewal to the lives of all they touched.

Thus was born the Church. The People of God, through the Spirit, are empowered to love as Jesus loves. And it is the child and the childlike who are most open to this power: "Unless you change and become like little children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven." (Matthew 18:3)

Then it was my turn to be the teacher. Standing in front of those youngsters so many years ago, I thought of those theologians and mystics and of Sister Rosanne and Father Rocco. And I asked a question: "What do you like most about God?" One fifth-grader unhesitatingly shot back: "That's easy, He helps me do good." Out of the mouths of babes! For insight into what this Pentecost is all about, children and the impressionable child in each of us need only welcome the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Love who already lives in us and among us.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Catholic Witnesses at Protestant Baptisms

Q. My question concerns Catholic and non-Catholic godparents.

Non-Catholics are permitted to be Christian witnesses for a Catholic baptism. How about the other way around? May a Catholic be a godparent for a child being baptized into the Lutheran Church? What is the church's position about this?

A. It is possible for Catholics to do what you suggest at a Protestant baptism. Catholic understanding is that, normally, godparents at baptism should be members of the Church or ecclesial community in which the baptism is being celebrated.

One reason is that sponsors are present not only as relatives or friends of the family. They also represent that particular community of faith, that "family of believers."

As such, they commit themselves to support the child as it becomes a full member of the community in which the baptism is taking place.

However, it is also Catholic belief that a valid baptism, in any Christian faith, makes one part of the larger community of believers in Christ.

For this reason, and because there may be other ties of friendship and family, a baptized person in another church may be admitted as a Christian witness in a Catholic baptism, together with a godparent who is a practicing Catholic. This happens frequently.

For the same reason, a Catholic may do likewise for a person who is baptized into another Christian community.

These guidelines are found in the Vatican's Directory for the Application of Principles and Norms on Ecumenism, 1993; Nos. 96-98.

The Origin Of Water And Wine

Q. As a convert, I've never learned the significance of adding water to the wine at Mass. Why is this done?

A. As is true so often with religious rituals, the origin of this part of the Mass seems connected with something totally unrelated to religion.

The practice of adding water to wine almost certainly has its roots in the ancient custom of adding water to alleviate the strength, or sometimes the bitterness, of wine.

This practice is still common in countries where wine is the customary daily drink.

Jews of Jesus' time did the same. At Passover meals, for example, water was mixed with the wine, as it almost certainly was at the Last Supper.

As time went on, the rite was given a variety of mystical and spiritual meanings. St. Irenaeus (second century), for example, was perhaps the first to see in the mixing of water and wine a symbol of the unity of Christians with Christ in the Eucharist.

The action was later seen also as symbolic of the water and blood which flowed from the side of Christ on the cross. (Jn 19:34)

Letters

To the Editor,

My heart goes out to the parent whose unbaptized, unborn child died 13 years ago. Father Dietzen's words in the April 25th issue were excellent and convincing. Now may I add another word to it to reassure that parent even more.

First of all, God is infinitely good, merciful, and loving. With these attributes it is impossible to conceive that He would create human beings in His own image and likeness and discard them. In fact, I firmly believe that the only way anyone would be lost is through a willful and persistent rejection of God. Persons who do not fall into that category, whether Christian or non-Christian, baptized or unbaptized, born or unborn, will be recipients of eternal salvation.

Secondly, this is true as confirmed by Saint Paul, in Romans 6:23, where he says that the "wages of sin is death." If the wages of sin is death, then the unborn baby that is dies (or is killed) pays for the original sin that He is conceived with. This is possible because Christ through his death has pre-earned for us such forgiveness. These unborn children who die or are killed fall into the same class as the Holy Innocents who also did not receive sacramental baptism.

Therefore, I dare say that child who died without baptism has, after death, flown straight into the arms of the Father to be happy forever. And guess what other surprises await us in heaven!

Dear Bishop Curlin:

Heartfelt thanks for your check of $51,277.24 representing the contribution of the Diocese of Charlotte to the 1997 Collection for the Church in Latin America. Our Committee for the Church in Latin America is most grateful for this assistance.

As you know, our purpose is to provide aid to those projects whose thrust will permit the Latin Americans to help themselves. May God bless our concerned U.S. Catholics who — under the able guidance of their bishops — are bearing true witness of solidarity with our sisters and brothers in the Latin American countries.

Begging a place in your Masses and prayers for our work on behalf of the Church in Latin America, I remain

Faternally yours in Christ,

Professor Of Church History To Speak At Oratory Seminar

ROCK HILL, S.C. — Father Joseph Komonchak, professor of church history at the Catholic University in Washington, D.C., is the featured speaker for the 1997 "Visions in Faith" seminar at the Rock Hill Oratory from June 15-18.

Father Komonchak will address the continuing impact and directions of Vatican II Council for the American church. He offered the following preview of his presentations:

Father Joseph Komonchak

"Over 30 years of have passed since the close of the Second Vatican Council, the watershed event in the history of 20th century Roman Catholicism, which, precisely because of that eventful character, remains subject to various and even contradictory interpretations and evaluations.

"We will discuss recent efforts to reconstruct 'what happened at Vatican II' and then review the reception of the Council into the life of the church, with special reference to the church in the United States." He also encouraged those attending to bring a copy of the Vatican Council II documents.

Father Komonchak brings his experience as a parish priest and college teacher in New York, as well as his education at the Gregorian University in Rome and Union Theological Seminary in New York. Since 1977 he has taught in the Department of Religion and Religious Education at Catholic University.

The New Dictionary of Theology, as well as the English edition of the History of Vatican II, are the chief editorial works by Father Komonchak. He also is the author of Foundations of Ecclesiology for the Lonergan Workshop and continues to work on books and articles on the preparation of Vatican II and on John Courtney Murray.

"Visions in Faith" is open to all with special emphasis for pastoral leaders, adult learners, catechists and educators.

Tuition for all sessions of the seminar is $100. Room and board is $115. The sessions for "Visions in Faith" are scheduled for 4 p.m. and evening 7 p.m. to encourage commuters.

For information, contact Sarah Morgan at The Oratory, P.O. Box 11586, Rock Hill, SC 29731-1586, or call her at (803) 327-2097.

May Queen Would Radiate Beauty At Any Age

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — May queens are like brides — they are always beautiful. Perhaps there is a special grace which magnifies their own natural beauty.

Mary Elizabeth McGurk was May queen for the Mother's Day May procession held by the parish of the Cathedral Basilica of SS. Peter and Paul.

She was, it goes without saying, beautiful. But McGurk doesn't fit the stereotype of the young, girlish May queen. She is 90.

The auburn hair she had as a teen has turned to gray. The measured pace of the procession which wound around the cathedral is her natural gait.

"I feel like I have been so honored," McGurk said after the ceremony. "I've waited years for it. I thank the Blessed Mother for giving me this day."

"It was magnificent, and I'm sure my mother in heaven is looking down. How happy she would be because she named me after our Blessed Lady."

McGurk, who is still an active member of the cathedral parish, has shared an apartment with her daughter, Helen, for 26 years.

"My mother, Genevieve McKinley Taylor, lived with us too," McGurk said. "She was 103 years and seven months old when she died. I have her rosary hanging by my bed."

Next to the 1997 May procession, her most memorable procession was at Our Lady of Victory Parish in 1921.

The parish always had grand May processions with all of the girls in the school wearing white dresses and the entire neighborhood turning out to watch.

That year, "Mary Grogan was May queen," she said. "Mary was tall and attractive and looked like a May queen. She had a court of four girls; I was one of them. Mary was my friend, and I was pleased to be in her court."

McGurk attended John W. Hallahan High School (class of 1925) and worked for a time before marrying George Aloysius McGurk. George has been dead for 40 years, and she has outlived her other two children, George and Joseph.

One thing that has kept her going is community work.

Early in her marriage, when St. Edmond's Home for Crippled Children was located in West Philadelphia, McGurk founded an auxiliary to help the Bon Secour Sisters in their work with the children.

She also has been a Gray Lady volunteer with the American Red Cross and a volunteer at Mercy Fitzgerald Hospital. McGurk is still an active member of the Little Sisters of the Poor auxiliary.

The cathedral was filled to capacity for the crowning of the Blessed Mother statue, to which Catholics from throughout the archdiocese had been invited.

"Together we have rolled back the clock for one brief moment," said Brian Gail, a May procession planning committee member who offered a pre-benediction reflection in the cathedral. "We are, the church today, the way we were. We are the church that again will be."

St. Therese Of Lisieux May Soon Be 'Doctor Of Church'

St. Therese of Lisieux, photographed here as a young woman, may become the 33rd doctor of the church. She would become the third female to receive the designation, which is given to church figures who have made important contributions to explaining the faith and whose teachings are of true holiness.

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — St. Therese of Lisieux, "The Little Flower," may soon be recognized as one of the "big" of church history, becoming the 33rd "doctor of the church."

The Discalced Carmelite order and the French Diocese of Bayeux, which includes the city of Lisieux, formally presented the final request to the Vatican Congregation for Sainthood Causes in February, said Carmelite Father Simeon Tomas Fernandez.

The request included a 950-page "positio," or position paper, detailing the great influence the French Carmelite has had on Catholic spirituality in the 100 years since her death.

The documentation included statements of support from about 50 national bishops' conferences, including the U.S. National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said Father Tomas, the official promoter of the effort.

The bulk of the material, he said, is focused on her life, her suffering and death at age 24 from tuberculosis, her writings — especially her spiritual biography — "her importance for people today" and her "charism as a doctor, a master of spirituality."

St. Therese would become the third female doctor of the church. St. Teresa of Avila was proclaimed a doctor in September 1970 by Pope Paul VI. A month later, he conferred the same honors on St. Catherine of Siena. No new doctors have been proclaimed since.

The honor is given to great church figures who made important contributions to explaining the faith and whose teachings were accompanied by true holiness.

The process includes obtaining a favorable opinion from the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, which has been given, Father Tomas said May 15. The next step is a discussion and vote by a nine-member special commission of theologians at the saints congregation.

The opinion of the theologians will be presented to Pope John Paul II, who makes the final decision regarding the proclamation, Father Tomas said.

"I believe, from rumors I have heard, that the opinion will be given to the pope before the end of June," Father Tomas said.

An official at the saints congregation would not comment on the schedule of meetings, explaining, "these things are secret."

Another rumor is that Pope John Paul will make the proclamation in Paris in late August when he joins young people for the celebration of World Youth Day.

"Many people are saying this, but who knows if it is true? You have to ask the pope," Father Tomas said.

The original eight doctors of the church lived, taught and wrote in the first six centuries of Christianity. Four represent the Western tradition: Sts. Ambrose, Augustine, Jerome and Gregory the Great. Four others represent the Eastern tradition of Christianity: Sts. John Chrysostom, Basil the Great, Gregory of Nazianzen and Athanasius.

Western Region Hosts Catholic Quiz Bowl

WAYNESVILLE — Nine teams from five parishes of the western region of the Charlotte Diocese met on April 27 at St. John Church for a Catholic quiz bowl.

Two high school teams — St. John and St. Margaret from Maggie Valley — competed against one another. Seven middle school teams, comprising fifth-through eighth-graders, went head-to-head during the afternoon of competition.

In the high school division, the St. Margaret team edged out St. John's for a close victory.

The middle school division featured a team from St. Joseph Church, Bryson City; two teams from St. Joan of Arc, Asheville; a team from the Basilica of St. Lawrence, Asheville; a team from St. Margaret, Maggie Valley; and two teams from the host parish.

The St. Lawrence squad won the middle school finals over the two St. John teams, having posted a near-perfect score on their way to the playoff rounds.

Judges for the contest were Father Ray Hourihan, pastor of St. John Church; Father Eric Houseknecht, administrator of St. Margaret Church; Father Jim Byer, priest in residence at St. Margaret Church; Sister Mary Ruth, director of St. Joseph Academy, Maggie Valley; Rev. Mr. Robert Dotson, permanent deacon at St. John Church; Richard Wolf, western region faith formation director; Linda Dilger; Joan Surber; and Cris Ammons, director of religious education at St. John Church.

Moderators were Mike Lodico, teacher at Tuscola High School; and Helen and Jack Gordon of the Basilica of St. Lawrence.

Andy Garcia (right) portrays an unseasoned district attorney who tests the honor of his father (Ian Holm, left) in "Night Falls on Manhattan." The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Night Falls On Manhattan

NEW YORK (CNS) — The career-making case of a novice attorney returns to haunt him when he is elected district attorney in the brooding drama, "Night Falls on Manhattan" (Paramount).

A New York street cop for a decade while he slogged his way through law school at St. John's, Sean Casey (Andy Garcia) is still wet behind the ears as an assistant district attorney when the opportunity of a lifetime lands at his feet.

Morgenstern (Rob Leibman), the fiercely ambitious D.A., cunningly selects Sean to prosecute a vicious drug dealer (Sheik Mahmud-Bey), who killed three cops in a shoot-out and nearly murdered a fourth, veteran cop Liam Casey (Ian Holm) — Sean's highly respected father.

With the electorate riveted by the sight of handsome Sean questioning his own recovering father on the witness stand, the verdict is a foregone conclusion, despite defense attorney Sam Vigoda's (Richard Dreyfuss) claims that his client actually shot in self-defense as the cops were dirty, on the take, and set to take him out in favor of a better offer from a rival drug dealer.

When the guilty-on-all-accounts verdict comes in, Morgenstern's re-election is assured — until a stroke incapacitates him, propelling local hero Sean into the D.A.'s chair.

At this point the story really takes off as Sean discovers his father and his longtime partner (James Gandolfini) may well be corrupt, that the cop-killer's sentence may be overturned and that Sean's marriage proposal to a beautiful lawyer (Lena Olin) on Vigoda's team is jeopardized by newly discovered incriminating evidence each is ethics-bound to reveal despite devastating consequences.

As he did in "Serpico" (1973) and "Prince of the City" (1981), director Sidney Lumet finds his characters mired deep in moral dilemmas for which there are no facile answers.

And he elicits superior performances from Garcia's too naive Sean, more so from street-smart cop father Holm, and even the somewhat shrill D.A. Leibman, who is hell-bent on crushing all political opponents. The situations and characters come across as grittily realistic (if you overlook that a rookie attorney would hardly be handed a major case involving his own family).

Slowly, almost sullenly, a dark tale of idealism clashing with moral expediency unreels as innocence is corrupted and inevitable compromises are reached.

The narrative does turn melodramatic in sections, but whenever it seems fully predictable, a more unexpected route is taken, which keeps viewers involved in the changing dynamics at hand.

As is often the case, however, the romantic subplot is weak and seems worked into the script just as a respite from the almost all-male cast of characters. Garcia and Olin as two opposing lawyers torn between love and loyalty to their ethical code seem strangely passionless in their scenes together.

The plot twists at the end are well-written and should provide some fairly solid dramatic entertainment for those interested in thoughtful, morally complex tales.

Due to brief violence, an implied premarital affair, recurring profanity and much rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Daylight" (1996)

A former medical emergency worker (Sylvester Stallone) single-handedly attempts to rescue a dozen trapped survivors when a tunnel connecting Manhattan to New Jersey collapses at both ends following a fiery explosion. Director Rob Cohen's formula disaster movie works up considerable concern over the fate of the frightened victims as their peril mounts from fires, flooding and collapsing supports. Some charred corpses, accident-related fatalities and occasional profanity.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Heavy" (1996)

Slow-paced character study set in a rural New York tavern whose aging owner (Shelly Winters) hires a young part-time waitress (Liv Tyler) who soon fascinates the owner's overweight, slow-witted son (Pruitt Taylor Vince) but only irritates the tavern's regular waitress (Deborah Harry). Writer-director James Mangold develops the slight situation in a fashion some will find ponderous, though others may appreciate for focusing on the tenuous nature of human relationships. Sexual situations, excessive drinking and occasional rough language.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Losing Chase" (1996)

Recovering at home from a nervous breakdown, a hostile mother (Helen Mirren) of two little boys initially resents, then comes to love the patient young woman (Kyra Sedgwick) hired to care for them, though their closeness creates problems for the wife's hapless husband (Beau Bridges). Kevin Bacon directs a sensitive and very human story of juvenile and adult characters trying to cope with the ravages of chronic depression. Some sexual innuendo, occasional profanity and an instance of rough language.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"One Fine Day" (1996)

Frantic romantic comedy in which two overworked single parents (Michelle Pfeiffer and George Clooney) meet one morning and decide to alternate baby-sitting shifts in order to finish crucial job assignments due that day. Director Michael Hoffman relies on star power to carry an otherwise predictable story whose chief merit is showing children as the real victims of economically stressed one-parent families. Sexual references and minimal profanity.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Star Trek: First Contact" (1996)

Headed by its bold captain (Patrick Stewart), the 24th century Starship Enterprise battles an on-board invasion by killer aliens while racing back to the year 2063, where a crisis on planet Earth could terminate humankind. Director Jonathan Frakes weaves together two separate stories for a sci-fi tale of old-fashioned adventure jazzed up with futuristic visuals. Some stylized violence and fleeting sexual innuendo.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Stephen King's Thinner" (1996)

Steadily losing weight because of a Gypsy's curse, a frantic lawyer (Robert John Burke) takes increasingly desperate measures to get the curse lifted. Directed by Tom Holland, the thin premise soon turns into a formula revenge-themed horror story with nasty Gypsy stereotypes. Some gory violence, brief sexual innuendo, fleeting nudity, occasional profanity and recurring rough language.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Swingers" (1996)

Lame look at the egocentric lives of several young men (Jon Favreau, Vince Vaughn and Ron Livingston) whose search for work in Hollywood seems limited to party-going and bar-hopping looking for show biz contacts and available women. Director Doug Liman tries to give a comic tone to the aimless proceedings but the material is too thin to be amusing and the characters are too wrapped up in themselves to be interesting. Sexual situations, heavy drinking and much rough language with some profanity.

The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Pope Celebrates 77th Birthday With Children At Rome Parish

ROME (CNS) — Before members of St. Athanasius Parish launched 77 red balloons in the sky in honor of Pope John Paul II's birthday, a young member of the parish asked the pope what his birthday promise was. "To be good," the pope responded to the delight of the 300 children spending Pentecost Sunday with their bishop, the pope. As the pope entered the parish meeting room May 18, the children sang the Italian version of "Happy Birthday," followed by "Sto Lat," the Polish birthday song.

McMorrough Named Editor Of New Catholic Miscellany

CHARLESTON, S.C. (CNS) — Jordan B. McMorrough, associate editor of the North Texas Catholic in Fort Worth, has been named editor of The New Catholic Miscellany in the Charleston Diocese.

With a circulation of about 26,500, the North Texas Catholic is about the same size as the Miscellany. McMorrough was with the Fort Worth paper for five-and-a-half years. He holds a master's degree in journalism from the University of North Texas.

"I'm looking forward to visiting parishes this summer and getting a better feel for the diocese," McMorrough said.

"With our technology tools and our staff," he said, "we're real close to being one of the top national papers."

Father Drinan Retracts '96 Comments On Abortion Bill Veto

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Jesuit Father Robert F. Drinan has withdrawn comments he made a year ago saying that although he opposes abortion, he believed President Clinton was right to veto a bill that would have banned partial-birth abortions. Father Drinan, a former Massachusetts congressman and faculty member at Georgetown University Law Center, issued a statement May 12 retracting points made in opinion pieces he wrote for the National Catholic Reporter and The New York Times last May and June, respectively. "I withdraw those statements and any statement that could be understood to cast doubt on the church's firm condemnation of abortion — a doctrine that I totally support," the priest said.

Belgian Franciscan Released, Thin But Unharmful, In Zaire

ASSISI, Italy (CNS) — A Belgian Franciscan priest kidnapped in Zaire was released unharmed after he was forced to walk for 11 days in the southern Zairian forest, the Franciscan order reported. Father Raoul de Buisseret, pastor of the mission at Lukonzolowa, was released the morning of May 16 "in good condition," according to a press release from the Franciscan general chapter, which was meeting in Assisi. "He is tired, thin from the long walk in the forest, but states he was treated humanely by his kidnappers," the press release said.

Pope Meets With Mother Teresa, Blesses New Superior

By CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II personally blessed the new superior general of the Missionaries of Charity May 20, but he gave the place of honor to the order's founder, Mother Teresa of Calcutta.

After lighthearted greetings, the 77-year-old pope offered the 86-year-old Mother Teresa the seat directly in front of his desk, the same seat occupied by visiting cardinals, bishops and heads of state.

Sister Nirmala Joshi, the 62-year-old nun elected head of the Missionaries of Charity in mid-March, sat nearby during the half-hour meeting.

"She is now superior general," Mother Teresa told the pope, introducing her successor. "I am completely free."

Sister Nirmala told the pope, "when you were very sick we prayed for you."

The new superior, who had been head of the contemplative branch of the Missionaries of Charity, asked the pope how he was feeling.

"I am well," he answered. In 1996 he had several bouts of stomach ailments and underwent an appendectomy in early October. "God bless the new superior general and all the sisters," the pope said as the women left his private library.

Vatican television showed pictures of Mother Teresa in a wheelchair at one of her order's Rome convents earlier in the day. However, at the Vatican she walked into the papal library and stood talking until the pope offered her a chair.

Mother Teresa has had heart problems and was hospitalized in serious condition earlier in the year. She was given oxygen upon her arrival May 16 at Rome's airport.

The doctor who cared for her at the airport told reporters that although she was tired, there was no cause for worry.

After two days of rest at the Rome convent, Mother Teresa met May 18 with Francesco Rutelli, the mayor of Rome.

He called her "an unstoppable little motor" who had "the same energy she always has had."

Mother Teresa was able to secure the mayor's promise that restoration work would be done on her order's facility at the historic St. Gregory Church on the Celian Hill, and he also said he would try to help the Missionaries of Charity expand their homeless shelter near Rome's central train station.

Rutelli presented Mother Teresa with a thick pile of city transportation passes, which will allow the 100 or so sisters in Rome to ride the buses, subway and trams for free for the next year.

Mother Teresa was scheduled to preside over ceremonies May 23 and 24 for

76-Year-Old Receives Master's Degree From Catholic College

IRVING, Texas (CNS) — Donovan Derby almost quit — twice.

Both times, friends encouraged Derby to continue pursuing a master of theology degree in the wake of his wife's death. Now, after three years of dogged perseverance, the 76-year-old has become the second-oldest student to graduate from the University of Dallas, a Catholic college.

Derby wasted no time applying his newfound knowledge. While his classmates were walking across the stage to receive their degree May 18, Derby was in New Mexico, helping the poor.

"When my wife passed on, I felt a tremendous void," Derby said. "Although I didn't know exactly what I would do, I knew I needed answers. I've found some of the answers over the last three years. Now I can go on to complete the mission that I believe God has laid out for me."

Derby's internal strife began in 1993, shortly after he began a hard-earned retirement, when his wife of almost 50 years died.

"My wife and I had both facilitated groups in adult religion at St. Elizabeth in Plano, and in that work I had many unanswered questions about the Catholic faith. I think pursuing a master's degree in theology was the saving grace of my life."

Derby promptly enrolled in the University of Dallas Institute for Religious and Pastoral Studies, a program that gives students a broad background in the Catholic faith. He found his new academic life to be rigorous.

"I had to learn how to study again," Derby said. "Many a night I stayed up late, reading assignments, researching and preparing papers. I almost quit twice, but my friends urged me to keep pursuing the degree."

When he finally finished the feelings were bittersweet, he said because he felt sad to leave something that he had been "so closely bonded with for three years."

Douglas Bushman, director of the university's Institute for Religious and Pastoral Studies, said few students exhibited the kind of fervor with which Derby approached his studies.

"He saw a three-year program stretched out before him and during our initial meeting, he asked if there was any way the degree could be earned in less time," Bushman said. "I told him that wasn't really possible. Then he said, 'At my age, I don't even buy bananas unless they're ripe.'"

Although many students immediately begin applying their studies after graduation, Derby's plans have a unique twist. Derby was not able to receive his degree at the official ceremony because he moved to New Mexico a week before graduation to work at border missions run by the Catholic Church.

If all goes as planned, Derby will help run several sparsely populated Catholic parishes that serve the border area. The parishes, which cover thousands of square miles, are served by only three Catholic priests, who travel from parish to parish like modern-day circuit riders.

Derby encourages others who find themselves in similar life situations to also consider the academic path.

"It's not easy to go back to the classroom," he said. "It's difficult to think of an elderly man choosing a new career. But it's good discipline and it pays off in many ways. I thank God for it."

For Tonight Host, Cleanliness Next To Godliness In Joke Department

By MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Jay Leno has been in comedy nearly 30 years — he was voted funniest boy in his high school graduating class — and he says he knows how to keep from stepping over the line into bad taste.

In a telephone conference call in May with reporters to commemorate the fifth anniversary of his hosting "The Tonight Show," Leno said that when viewers write saying they are offended by one of his jokes, "I call the people and apologize to them."

A criticism Leno says he has heard continuously since taking over the helm of "The Tonight Show" from Johnny Carson is that he's not "edgy" as he was in his earlier days doing stand-up comedy across the country.

To that Leno pleads guilty.

"You're in people's homes every night," said the comic, who is the son of an Italian-born Catholic father and a Scottish-born Presbyterian mother. "People need to get comfortable with you. People need to trust you."

Leno said he depends on his studio audience's reactions to inform him whether he's stepped over the line.

In an interview with Broadcasting & Cable, a trade magazine, Leno elaborated on his approach.

"You have to have a sense of who is watching and who you are going to hurt. The best philosophy is be kind, be kind, be kind," he said.

He makes sure his comedic targets are fair game.

"I don't think we pick on the president any more than we pick on any other political leader. I used to get 'Why are you always picking on Bob Dole?' Whoever's in the paper — and the president is in the paper — you do because people laugh at it," Leno said.

"I don't do jokes about Chelsea (Clinton). I don't do jokes about Hillary (Rodham Clinton) unless Hillary has done a particular political thing. I don't do jokes about Hillary as a woman."

In the conference call, Leno said his parents' influence keeps him from using salty language.

Leno, in his recent autobiography, "Leading With My Chin," said his mother would never tolerate "anyone who took the Lord's name in vain," her son included.

"I remember being home in the mid-1980s, watching the Roberto Duran-Sugar Ray Leonard fight on TV with my dad," he recalled. "One of the fighters took a fall." Leno, excited by the turn of events, used Christ's name in vain.

"I heard what I thought sounded like hoofbeats approaching: 'thump thump thump thump.' The whole house was rattling," he wrote. "I wondered: 'What's that? An earthquake?'"

"Then suddenly: BONNNK! My mother hit me on the head with a pot. The last time that happened was when I got caught ditching high school."

She told him: "Not in this house! ...

You'll not say that in this house!"

"I felt a dent in the side of my head!" Leno added.

In the book he also said that except for comedy clubs, "I've never been fired from a job in my life. That was something I never needed my parents to see."

Both of them lived long enough, though, to see Leno succeed Carson in the host's chair of "The Tonight Show" on NBC and weather the withering criticisms early in his tenure on the program.

Leno is self-deprecating. As for being host, "it's not particularly hard," he told reporters in the conference call. "It's very time-consuming."

His involvement with the show is more than the one hour he spends on camera. "I make the most money on this show," Leno said. "So I'm the first one here and the last one to leave."

Thousands Gather At Funeral For Slain Officer

Baltimore police carry the casket of slain officer Lt. Owen E. Sweeney Jr. at funeral services May 12 in Baltimore. The Catholic officer was shot in the back during a routine call.

By STEFANI MANOWSKI

BEL AIR, Md. (CNS) — The mournful sounds of bagpipes and police commanders calling their officers to attention outside a Bel Air Catholic church punctuated an emotional two-hour farewell to Baltimore City Police Lt. Owen E. Sweeney Jr.

Nearly 3,000 law enforcement officers, family, friends and fellow parishioners gathered at St. Margaret Church in suburban Baltimore for a May 12 funeral Mass celebrated by Cardinal William H. Keeler for the fallen officer.

Sweeney was shot in the back May 7 during a routine call in Baltimore. It was the city's first police killing in four years.

The death of the 47-year-old veteran police lieutenant not only shocked the parish community where he had belonged since 1988, but also served as a harsh reminder that the tragic fallout of violence reaches well beyond the Baltimore City limits.

"Our innocence fades away a little bit every time something like this happens," said Father Thomas Malia, associate pastor of St. Margaret's.

"It's a real tragedy," said Pauline Kempleton, a St. Margaret parishioner for 20 years. "We've never had anything like this happen in our parish or in Bel Air."

To those who knew him, Sweeney was a humble public servant, always willing to help his neighbors in any way he could. He had been on the police force for almost 29 years and was preparing to retire.

Pat Faherty, who went to school with Sweeney at Our Lady of Fatima in Baltimore, said he "did what he could to help people, but never needed the limelight. He never needed that recognition."

There was not enough room in the 1,000-seat church to accommodate all the mourners, and hundreds gathered outside, standing silently as they listened to the sounds of the Mass brought to them through an outside loudspeaker.

Sweeney's police cap was brought forward with the gifts of bread and wine during the Offertory and placed on the church ambo. Following Communion, the eulogy was given by Baltimore City Police Sgt. John Slowinski, a family friend.

"He was there for his officers without hesitation," Slowinski said. "He made a difference in our lives and he will be missed."

"Life has changed; it has not ended," said Cardinal Keeler, who told the grieving family and fellow officers that "it is coming together in Communion, love and prayer that Owen remains with us."

Calling the slain officer a hero, Baltimore City Police Commissioner Thomas Frazier noted that "his dedication to duty is exemplified by his supreme sacrifice."

Baltimore Mayor Kurt L. Schmoke and Maryland Gov. Parris N. Glendening also attended the funeral but did not speak at the Mass.

A funeral procession made up of 96 motorcycles and 675 cars traveled the 18 miles from Bel Air to Sweeney's burial site in Timonium.

The funeral came just three days after Cardinal Keeler and other Catholics joined leaders of other faiths in an event described as the nation's first interfaith service in appreciation of law enforcement.

The May 9 service at the Cathedral of Mary Our Queen drew some 600 law enforcement officers and included readings from the Bible, Hebrew Scriptures and the Koran.

Msgr. Jeremiah F. Kenney, judicial vicar and vice chancellor for the archdiocese who organized the service, read the peace prayer of St. Francis of Assisi and expressed his appreciation for those who put themselves at risk each day for peace and justice.

"Thank you, ladies and gentlemen of law enforcement, for not being apathetic, for being involved," Msgr. Kenney said. "Thank you for being our heroes."

During the hour-long service, Chief William Harrison, president of the Maryland Chiefs of Police, and Sheriff James Aluisi, president of the Maryland Sheriffs' Association, placed two books listing the names of fallen officers on the altar. A color guard procession included law enforcement representatives from across the state.

"It's about time somebody did something like this," said Agent Donna Staffer of the Baltimore City Police Department. "It's especially meaningful to us today because of Lt. Sweeney."

Staffer, a Lutheran who attended a Catholic college, said she would like to see the service hosted by a different denomination each year.

Contributing to this story was Donna Koros Stramella in Baltimore.

BMHS Auction Raises $50,000

WINSTON-SALEM — A recent auction hosted by Bishop McGuinness High School's Home School Association raised $50,000 for the benefit of the school.

More than 300 guests, including parents, faculty, alumni and friends, attended the event in the BMHS gymnasium. Fine dining and live music also highlighted the fund raiser, dubbed "Puttin' on the Glitz."

Members of the Bishop McGuinness High School junior class offered to prepare and serve two dinner parties as auction items at the "Puttin' on the Glitz" fund raiser in late April.

Students attending BMHS assisted in the proceedings by selling raffle tickets, serving guests and displaying auction items. They also contributed items to the auction, such as baby-sitting services.

More than 300 items were collected for the auction, including fine furniture, vacation packages, Carolina Panthers tickets, a special pass to see the inside world of NASCAR racing, and VIP parking for a BMHS student.

"The support we received from both the parent community and the community at large was phenomenal," said Colleen Lopina, BMHS' director of development. "The event was a great success, and plans are already underway for next year's auction."

Third-Grader Megan O'Malley Is Nation's Top Reader

By JOE BOLLIG

BONNER SPRINGS, Kan. (CNS) — Last summer when an arsonist set fire to Sacred Heart Church in Bonner Springs, destroying the elementary school's basement library, the last thing on anyone's mind was seeing a student win a national reading award.

Then along comes 9-year-old Megan O'Malley.

The third-grader from Sacred Heart School was named 1997's national reader by Reading Is Fundamental. Called RIF, it is the nation's oldest and largest not-for-profit children's literacy program.

She was named from 400,000 children nationwide who took part in the annual reading program and earned an April 22-25 trip to Washington, which included a visit to the White House to meet first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton.

As for her school's library, other Catholic schools and some public libraries in the area have donated books to Sacred Heart, bringing its new collection to 6,000 volumes. Right now it's a library on wheels; carts filled with books are rolled into the gymnasium when needed.

The road to being named the nation's top reader started for Megan last fall when the Sacred Heart School librarian, Clyde Lingelbach, enrolled students in the annual RIF program.

For two weeks the students had to read at least 30 minutes each day and record their accumulated times until they completed a list of reading assignments. Megan was the first to finish, taking five-and-a-half accumulated hours to do it.

For her promptness Lingelbach chose Megan as Sacred Heart's RIF reader, then she was named the state's reader. Next, former Miss America Tara Holland from Overland Park, Kan., chose Megan's name at random as the national winner.

Megan's father, Kelly, was notified by telephone of his daughter's good fortune. Later that day he broke the news to the rest of the family at the local Dairy Queen.

Kelly and Susie O'Malley describe their daughter as a "readaholic." She has a dresser drawer full of books, and the family has shelves groaning under the weight of books in their basement.

Mom and Dad taught Megan to read. But sister Katy, a ninth-grader at Immaculata High School in Leavenworth, got her started learning her first words.

"My first word was 'cat,'" Megan told The Leaven, newspaper of the Kansas City Archdiocese. "I was in preschool, like age 3 or 4, and my sister Katy taught me my second word, 'fat.' Katy would take things out of the refrigerator and say, 'This is fat,' and spell the words to me so I could read them."

Among her first books were the usual children's fare. But now Megan has graduated to more sophisticated literature. Her two favorite books are "Little Women" by Louisa May Alcott, and "Forever Angels" by Susana Weyn.

Megan's teacher, Jennifer Diel, said RIF couldn't have picked a better representative. "Megan is a wonderful reader," she said. "She is an excellent reader and perfect for this."

But reading isn't all Megan does. She plays basketball, is a Brownie, enjoys dancing lessons, plans to take piano lessons, and spends time with the family's two horses and three dogs.

The Washington trip was an adventure, said Megan, who was accompanied by her mother, her father, sister Katy and Lingelbach. Sisters Susan and Kelli stayed home.

At the White House they were greeted briefly by Mrs. Clinton in the East Room; President Clinton was not on hand because he had just returned from surveying flood damage in the Midwest.

The White House visit was recorded for television, according to Megan. "Mrs. Clinton said, 'Hi.' and she whispered because she was on TV," she recalled. "She asked me what book I had, and I held it up. She said, 'Oh, that's neat.'"

The O'Malleys also visited members of the Kansas congressional delegation. Travel-weary Megan fell asleep in the office of Rep. Vince Snowbarger, a Republican from Olathe.

Megan also received a $500 U.S. savings bond, a bag of books, a dictionary and a magazine subscription. Her school will receive a collection of books and $250 to purchase more books, and librarian Lingelbach was also honored for his involvement in RIF.

"I'm going to enter next year and make a poster, too," Megan told The Leaven.

"You want to go back to see the Clintons?" an amused Lingelbach asked.

"Sure," she said. "They already know me."

Living Rosary Brings Church Community Together

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

Correspondent

NEWTON — Following the 10 a.m. Mass at St. Joseph Church on May 11, three parishioners carefully unpacked a 50-foot handmade rosary and placed it on the barren field behind the church. In a steady stream, approximately 150 children, teen-agers and adults converged upon the field. Coming from different directions, they were drawn together by a common goal: To give honor to the Blessed Virgin on Mother's Day through a "living rosary."

Guided by their faith formation teachers, the youngest participants took their place, standing near the bead they were to become and silently rehearsing their assigned prayer. The few open beads were quickly filled by teens and adults until the rosary was complete.

At 12 noon, the rosary was transformed from pieces of wood held together by string into a living, breathing and loving prayer. The significance of the starting time brought back memories for some adults who recalled praying the mid-day Angelus prayer as children.

Sixth-grader Mark Mette read the mysteries and their scriptural references as a reward for his perfect attendance in faith formation. Meanwhile, the young children, in their soft and sometimes barely audible voices, prayed Hail Marys. Their parents and grandparents stood close by, listening and praying with them.

Meg Barrett, faith formation teacher and coordinator of the event, got the idea of a living rosary from an issue of Columbia magazine. "I did not want the rosary to be something that is taught in first or second grade and forgotten," she said. "I wanted to bring it to life, where the children could touch it and be part of it alongside their family."

The event was a memorable experience for eighth-grader Chris Gilfillan who, as a member of the youth group, helped put the large rosary together with its designer, Ray Feltz, a youth minister. "The living rosary was special to me because it involved people of all ages, not just the young or the old," said Gilfillan, who also illustrated the glorious mysteries on signs held up during the rosary.

Youth minister Peg Manus hoped the experience would lead to continued participation in church life. "When you get the youth involved early, giving them a sense of belonging to the faith community, they will probably feel more comfortable to serve again (in ministry)," she said.

This day in May brought a diversity of age and ethnic groups together in like a large family united in prayer giving thanks to the Blessed Mother, who leads the faithful to her son.

of Bingen, who believed that Christ brings vitality to those in need. Cost is $200.

"In the Breaking of the Bread" is a June 14-20 retreat directed by Blessed Sacrament Father Eugene LaVerdiere focusing on the origins and development of the Eucharist as explained by Luke. Cost is $250.

"Be Still and Know that I am God" is a June 23-29 nature retreat directed by Father Dan Havron, OFM, and sister Fran Grady, SCL, focusing on hearing the voice of God in a peaceful setting. Cost is $250.

"The Psalms: School of Contemplative Prayer" is a July 1-7 retreat directed by Father Sidney Griffith, ST, focusing on the psalms as the prayer of ancient Israel, the prayer of Jesus and the prayer of the Church. Cost is $250.

Bishops' Spokeswoman Praises Partial-Birth Abortion Vote

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Senate's May 20 approval of a ban on partial-birth abortions "reflects our nation's moral consensus that this barbaric procedure has no place in a civilized society," said the U.S. bishops' pro-life spokeswoman. The vote to ban the procedure except to save the life of the mother was 64-36, not enough to override President Clinton's expected veto if all 100 senators vote. In that event, 67 votes would be needed for an override. The bishops' spokeswoman, Helen Alvare, said while the vote reflects America's opposition to abortion, "we are dismayed at the number of senators who continue to support partial-birth abortion, relying on claims decisively rejected by the medical community."

Oregon Legislature To Approve New Vote On Assisted Suicide

SALEM, Ore. (CNS) — The Oregon Senate appeared likely to approve a bill to send the state's assisted-suicide law back to voters for a new look. Under House Bill 2954, OK'd May 13 in a close tally on the House floor, voters would again consider the Oregon Death with Dignity Act in November. Lawmakers admitted that their decisions will have worldwide impact. "I'm afraid today's death with dignity could become tomorrow's duty to die," said Rep. Bryan Johnston, D-Salem, just before the House approved the legislation 32-26 in a sometimes tearful session.

Former College President Works For Land-Mine Ban

WASHINGTON (CNS) — After 17 years as a college president in Vermont, Mercy Sister Janice E. Ryan has moved to Washington to campaign for a global ban on anti-personnel land mines. She recently joined the U.S. Catholic Conference as a full-time volunteer to help mobilize Catholic support in the United States for a ban. Americans need to be made aware, she said, "of the humanitarian crisis that is being caused by 110 million land mines in the ground around the world, waiting to explode." Those mines kill or maim some 25,000 people a year, she said.

Coalition Forms To Back Child Health Bill

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A bipartisan children's health insurance bill is being backed by a coalition that represents tens of millions of people, though it does not include the most prominent Catholic agencies that have been lobbying for such legislation. Co-sponsored by Sens. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, the bill would provide basic health care coverage for the estimated 10 million children who are ineligible for Medicaid but whose families cannot afford private insurance. It would finance the program with a tax of 43 cents per pack of cigarettes, one-third of which would go toward deficit reduction. Although the U.S. Catholic Conference and Catholic Charities USA are vocal advocates of providing such services to children, both were missing from the list released May 13 of 150 organizations making up the Campaign for CHILD Health Now, in support of the Hatch-Kennedy Child Health Insurance and Lower Deficit Act.

In mid-May, the 27 bishops were on their "ad limina" visits, which are made every five years by bishops worldwide. They report on conditions in their dioceses to the pope and to members of the Roman Curia. Archbishop Wilfrid F. Napier of Durban and Archbishop Lawrence P. Henry of Cape Town saw Pope John Paul II alone during their first days in Rome, then went on to speak separately with officials in charge of Vatican diplomatic affairs, missionary work and issues involving justice and peace. "The concern I keep raising with everyone is about our young people," Archbishop Napier said in an interview. "With the end of apartheid, after a period of hope and expectation, young blacks are not finding the jobs and opportunities they had believed they would find, and they are becoming disillusioned."

Italian Nuns Who Run Hospital Beaten By Zairian Soldiers

MILAN, Italy (CNS) — In the confusion surrounding the takeover of Zaire's capital, two Italian nuns who run a maternity hospital were beaten and threatened by government soldiers. But Sister Fausta Beretta said she, two other Italian nuns and close to 200 women patients and their newborns were saved by a woman in the last stages of labor. "A young woman began to scream. She was having labor pains and the baby was about to enter the world. The soldiers were frightened and ran away," said Sister Beretta, a member of the Adorers of the Blessed Sacrament.

GREENSBORO — The parish of St. Mary was established to support increasing numbers of Greensboro area Catholics during the late 1920s. Today, the 800-family parish joins four other Greensboro churches to compose one of the highest concentrations of Catholics in the Charlotte Diocese.

At the invitation of Bishop William Hafey of Raleigh, sisters of the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul order arrived in Greensboro from Baltimore, Md., to staff a school in 1928. The school opened its doors to a dozen children on its first day of operation; within several days following, the number exceeded 100.

With the establishment of the school came the founding of a new Catholic mission in Greensboro. The church family was soon thereafter given parish status. Largely comprising African-American parishioners, the congregation celebrated its first Mass in Sept. 1928 in the same edifice that housed the school. Josephite Father Charles Hannigan, a missionary priest known for building churches, was founding pastor.

The present church, with the Blessed Mother as its patron, was constructed in 1936 and was dedicated in November of that year.

In August 1939, the first priests of the Congregation of the Mission to minister at St. Mary Church arrived, thereby beginning a pastorate that continues today. The order of priests, also known as Vincentians, was founded in France in 1625 by St. Vincent de Paul, who also co-established the order of sisters that arrived in Greensboro in 1928 to staff a Catholic school.

With the dawn of the 1950s came a name change for St. Mary parish. In 1948, Bishop Vincent Waters granted a request that the parish be called Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal. The church was officially known as such until 1972, when again the parish was placed under the patronage of St. Mary.

The St. Mary community played a role in the building up of the church in western North Carolina during the '50s and beyond. In 1951, the priests of the Greensboro parish began ministering to the mission congregation of Reidsville. Their pastorate lasted in Reidsville until 1968, when the territory of Holy Infant Church was given parish status.

Dwindling enrollment forced the parish to close its grammar school in 1972. The buildings, however, have remained a part of the parish landscape, serving as a parish center and host to a variety of ministerial and social activities, including those of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, the SHARE food ministry program, Montagnard refugee outreach, faith formation and Knights of Columbus.

Multiethnicity highlights parish life as well, with an influx of Montagnards, Vietnamese and Spanish Catholics having been welcomed into this Greensboro congregation. The weekend Mass schedule includes liturgies in English, Spanish and Vietnamese.

The Vincentian tradition continues at St. Mary parish, through the pastoral ministry of Father Robert Prior, pastor since Sept. 1996; Father Manh Nguyen, parochial vicar and celebrant of the parish's Vietnamese Mass; and Father Vincent Finnerty, priest in residence and diocesan director of Hispanic ministry. About 800 parishioners compose the St. Mary family of faith.

Catholic News Heralds National Awards

DENVER — The Catholic News & Herald was recognized for excellence in journalism with recognition in the form of three press association awards during the national convention of the Catholic Press Association.

Associate Editor Joann Keane was presented two awards for excellence in editorial writing, and shares a third with designer Jeff Rothe in the category of best use of art and graphics. The awards were announced May 23 at the annual CPA convention in Denver.

Keane received second place honors for best editorial on a local issue for You Oughtta Know, a focus on the raw lyrics found in the songs of Grammy-nominated singer/songwriter Alanis Morissette. Judges said the editorial "serves as a warning to parents, urging them to help their children find artists who uplift rather than offend."

Keane also won an honorable mention in the category of best editorial on a national or international issue for her tongue-in-cheek look at last summer's Olympic Games in Atlanta. The unOfficial® Guide To The Summer Games® focused on the crass commercialism surrounding the 1996 Olympiad.

Photography by Keane and design by Rothe were awarded third place in the best use of art or graphics category for the cover of the newspaper's 1996 Diocesan Support Appeal edition. The Catholic News & Herald competed with all diocesan newspapers in the U.S. and Canada in this open category. The cover included a poignant photograph of children presenting flowers to Mother Teresa during her visit to Charlotte in June 1995; while an inset photo showed Bishop William G. Curlin during a solemn moment of a priestly ordination. Judges said there was "Great use of color here — the deep blue conveys both warmth and dignity. The cover illustration, carefully cropped, struck an evocative tone. The logo was also well done."

Keane, who also serves as director of communications for the Diocese of Charlotte, received a 1996 Certificate of Merit from the Catholic Communication Campaign for A Celebration Of Faith With Mother Teresa, and top honors with her 1994 best of show award from the Extension Society for photography.

The Catholic News & Herald, which serves 46 counties in western North Carolina, has a circulation of approximately 39,000. The diocesan newspaper now holds seven CPA awards in its six years of publication. During the 1993 convention, Keane accepted two awards for photography. In 1994, The Catholic News & Herald was recognized with writing honors for best personality profile and best feature writing categories.

CPA membership includes 167 diocesan newspapers, five U.S. Catholic newspapers, 13 Eastern-rite publications, eight diocesan newspapers in Canada, two Canadian national newspapers, and four other Canadian diocesan newspapers. It also includes 250 U.S. magazines, and 22 Canadian magazines. Circulation for all U.S. and Canadian publications is 26,790,289.

St. Matthew Parishioner Views Ministry As Answer To Calling

By MIKE KROKOS
Editor

CHARLOTTE — In an era when the average career of a youth minister is a year and a half, Bill Martin is an exception.

The St. Matthew Church member, who oversees the parish's Confirmation program, has been consistently involved in youth ministry since 1958. Martin was recently recognized for his untiring commitment at the annual Diocesan Youth Conference, where he received the "For God and For Youth" Award, a national honor bestowed on adults who have dedicated themselves to God and His Church in the area of youth ministry.

"I base my service on Matthew 25:31-47: '...For I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, a stranger and you welcomed me, naked and you clothed me, ill and you cared for me, in prison and you visited me ...,'" Martin said. "I believe that (passage) says it all. People are always waiting for things to do, and there is so much right here in front of us."

"Through our baptism, we are all called to serve," he added.

A native of Pennsylvania, Martin

Vocations Update

Father Frank O'Rourke

Greetings and peace!

Prevalent among my thoughts today is the privilege of inviting, encouraging and supporting those who hear the call of the Spirit to say "Yes" to the priesthood. It is a beautiful ministry that challenges me to be what I hope to call others to be: servants of the Lord.

I am especially privileged to announce that two of our seminarians will soon be ordained into the priesthood for the Diocese of Charlotte. They are Rev. Mr. Arturo DeAguilar, who attended St. Vincent de Paul Regional Seminary in Boynton Beach, Fla., and Rev. Mr. Walter Ray Williams, who completed his studies at the North American College in Rome.

Arturo DeAguilar

In his native Mexico, Arturo studied for the priesthood through middle school, high school, college and one year of theology. He then took some time away from the seminary. That period of exploring other possibilities and broadening his experiences brought him to the United States, where he worked at and later helped manage a horse farm in southern Florida.

During that time, Arturo realized the depth of his call to priesthood and began a dialogue with the Office of Vocations for the Diocese of Charlotte. A summer experience working with Father Joe Waters, pastor of Holy Trinity Church in Taylorsville, exposed him to the great need we have for priests in this diocese. Being bilingual enables him to serve as a bridge between English- and Spanish-speaking communities.

Through his variety of ministerial work as a seminarian and transitional deacon, he has revealed himself to be a capable leader who approaches ministry with an openness and respect for others.

Walter Ray Williams

Ray's life and call to the priesthood have been most interesting. Baptized and raised in the Episcopal Church, he earned his undergraduate degree in history from Bob Jones University in Greenville, S.C., spent more than a half-dozen years in Nepal teaching English as a missionary, and worked for six months at a refugee resettlement camp in Austria before returning to his native Asheville to expand his studies.

A man who has had interest and participation in a journey of faith all his life, Ray was welcomed into the Catholic Church in September 1990. His desire to invite others to a deeper faith experience and a conviction of the truth found in the Catholic Church are at the heart of Ray's vocation.

With family roots that have grown deep into North Carolina's soil, Ray has a great love for his home state. He looks forward to returning "home" to be a parish priest.

Unite your prayers with mine for Arturo and Ray as they take another step in faith. Like all of our seminarians, their life experiences are varied, yet it was the same voice they heard calling them into priesthood. As diocesan vocations director, it is my special joy to join Bishop Curlin in inviting you to participate in the ordination of these two dedicated men on June 14 at St. Patrick Cathedral at 10 a.m.

Seminarians' Summer Plans

This year, our seminarians can be found working in parishes, hospitals, diocesan ministries, universities and enrichment programs that equip them for special ministries. The following appointments are made with the approval of Bishop William G. Curlin:

David Brzoska and Frank Seabo — Holy Trinity Church and Hispanic Ministry, Taylorsville

Dean Cesa — St. Charles Borromeo Church, Morganton

Christopher Davis and Shawn O'Neal — Clinical Pastoral Education (CPE), Baptist Hospital, Winston-Salem

Joseph Long Dinh — CPE Carolinas Medical Center, Charlotte

Duc Duong and Tien Duong — UNC-Charlotte

Christopher Gober — Media Center and Tribunal, Catholic Center, Charlotte

Brad Jones — St. Francis of Assisi Church, Lenoir

Matthew Kauth — St. Aloysius Church, Hickory

Bryan Lamberson — CPE, Tampa General Hospital, Tampa, Fla.

Matthew Leonard — Basilica of St. Lawrence, Asheville

Charles Messler — St. Meinrad Seminary, St. Meinrad, Ind.

Luis Osorio — St. Francis of Assisi Church, Jefferson

Peter Pham — St. Joan of Arc Church, Asheville

Joseph Tran — Development Office and Tribunal, Catholic Center, Charlotte

Matthew Buettner, Stephen Doering, Matthew Ritter and Brandon Schmitz will spend their summers working in the marketplace.

Living Faith Leads Man To Youth Ministry Calling, from page 1

began his youth ministry service while at Kings College in Wilkes-Barre. Over the years, his call to ministry has included assisting parishes in Maryland, New Jersey and North Carolina. He moved to Charlotte in 1985, initially attending St. John Neumann Church before St. Matthew parish was formed in September of that year.

Msgr. Joseph Kerin, pastor of St. Mark parish in northern Mecklenburg County and former pastor of St. Matthew, worked closely with Martin for 11 years. He said the youth minister demonstrates a commitment to Christ and the Church. "When St. Matthew was formed, Bill helped with the religious education program and later helped start our confirmation program," Msgr. Kerin explained. "One of his joys in life is reading theology and Scripture. Bill has a thirst for learning and enjoys calling youth to a higher learning."

While Masses for the new parish were initially held at the Tower Place Cinemas on Highway 51, the first catechism classes were taught in the rectory. "There were six to eight kids, and we all sat on the floor," Martin recalled.

Since those early days at St. Matthew, Martin (who received a master's degree in pastoral studies through the Loyola Institute of Ministry program in New Orleans) has continued to be active in youth ministry, teaching catechesis and continuing to oversee the parish's confirmation classes with a team of adult facilitators. A few years ago, Martin also established a peer ministry program through which young adults who have been confirmed make a commitment to return and assist the confirmation class the following year. Many peer ministers lead discussions in the classes after being trained. This year, nearly half of the 150 students being confirmed have committed to help next year.

In his four decades of ministry work, Martin has seen America's youth evolve. "Kids are much more aware today. They are more challenged and threatened, and much less secure," he said.

The most rewarding thing as a youth minister, he noted, is watching young people grow in their understanding of the Lord and "having kids see the Church as the people of God and the body of Christ," not just another organizational structure. "We want them to understand what the Church is," Martin added.

Msgr. Kerin called Martin a "unique person" who has a special gift that allows him to connect with youth. "Bill has a good understanding of young people and a perpetual optimism," he said. "When there is a crisis, it's amazing how many kids will go to him (for assistance)."

Martin, who will turn 61 in July, credits his family and faith for his longevity in youth ministry. "I've always received encouragement from my wife, Barbara, and our five kids," he said. "She is a woman of deep spirituality, and definitely my rock."

"You must put your trust in the Holy Spirit," he added. "Everything is ultimately up to Him."

Love One Another

Jesus said to his disciples, "As the Father loves me, so I also love you. Remain in my love. If you keep my commandments, you will remain in my love, just as I have kept my Father's commandments and remain in his love. I have told you this so that my joy might be in you and your joy might be complete. This is my commandment: love one another as I love you. (John 15:9-13)"

Child Holocaust Survivors Remember Catholic Rescuers

Shlomo Breznitz, professor of psychology at Haifa University in Jerusalem, wrote a book about the time he and his sister spend hiding from Nazis at a Slovakian convent of the Sisters of St. Vincent.

By JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
JERUSALEM (CNS) — When they were children during World War II, Dina Wardi's grandparents were saved by a group of Italian priests and nuns.

Wardi, an Israeli psychologist, spoke of when her grandparents took their children and grandchildren back to Italy to meet the people who had saved their lives. The nuns gave Wardi and her older sister charm bracelets with images of saints. As soon as they left the convent, her sister took off the bracelet, said Wardi.

"To me it looked pretty, but I took it off, too," Wardi said. "Then my grandmother told us she used to go to church and pray, and I asked her if she was saying Catholic prayers. When she told me she was saying the words to Jewish prayers I felt relieved she hadn't believed in the Catholic prayers. It is not a rational feeling," she said.

In recent years child survivors of the Holocaust have begun to make their stories public. Some speak of gratitude and a feeling of connection to Catholicism, keeping medals of saints that remind them of people who rescued them.

"A very integral part of the identity of these children saved by Christians is this duality, where the Christian part remains in them in varying degrees and forms," said Wardi, who now serves as senior supervisor of AMCHA, an organization that provides support to Holocaust survivors and their families.

"They never feel completely like they belong only here, only to the Jewish people; there is always a part in them which does not really belong. They remain in between two worlds because they don't belong in either."

As with all Jewish child survivors of the Holocaust, those rescued by Christian institutions experience pangs of guilt for having survived and not having gone through the concentration camps. Many also have guilt feelings because, for a time, they practiced Catholicism, and they feel they betrayed their religion, their parents and their family, said Wardi.

For some of the survivors' children and grandchildren, like herself, it is hard to accept that their grandmother prayed to the Virgin Mary or their grandfather was an altar boy, she added. "Nobody talked about these child survivors, but everybody knew they existed," she said.

"In general, Israeli society now is a little more open on the collective level. Maybe there is an indirect connection to the establishing of ties with the Vatican — people feel less hostility and are willing to talk about this. But for many of the second generation, it is not easy to accept that their mother has been keeping a cross for 50 years."

Psychotherapist and social worker Sima Weiss, director of the AMCHA in Tel Aviv, said this subject is just now coming to the forefront because many of the child survivors have finished raising their families, are reaching retirement age, have more time to reflect on their past and are finally opening up.

Shlomo Breznitz, now a professor of psychology at Haifa University, wrote a book, "Memory Fields," about the years he and his older sister spent in a Slovakian convent of the Sisters of St.

Vincent. His mother survived Auschwitz, a Nazi death camp, although his father did not.

His mother was so grateful to the nuns for having saved Breznitz and his sister that she did not force her children, especially her daughter, to stop going to church. Within a short time after their mother's return, however, they chose to stop going.

"The mother superior was a very special person, very courageous," recalled Breznitz, who was 9 years old at the time. Despite several searches by Nazi soldiers, the nun never turned over the four Jewish children entrusted to her care. On the other hand, a nearby Carmelite convent immediately handed over the Jewish children hiding there during the first Nazi search, he said.

"At some point, I was devastated by all this and sought comfort in religion, and I became a very devout little Catholic. I did everything we were supposed to do and even volunteered for things. I was an altar boy. I was trying to be as devout a Catholic as I could in order ... for my parents to come back and to survive," said Breznitz, who has three grown children whom he has told about his childhood.

But when his mother came back, he said, he quickly slipped back to his former norms and "everything changed." He no longer felt the need to go to 5 a.m. Mass. Still, for a while after the war he would run after Jewish boys in his village, taunting them with chants of "Jew, Jew."

He said he later joined a Jewish youth group and was very comfortable there, "although the first year or so I must have been quite mixed up. It all depends on the context you are in. I was fortunate that my mother came back and she was very warm and accepting. I felt very secure, protected, loved," he said.

"The one thing that still is with me (from that period) is that I love choral music more than anything else," he added. "I don't know if that thrives on those memories, but that is the music I love the most."

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Jesus May Have Met Mary After His Resurrection, Says Pope

Dear brothers and sisters,

In our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we have seen that she was intimately associated with her son in all the events of his life and mission. On Easter morning, the risen Lord first appeared to the women who had stood by him faithfully at the foot of the cross. While the Gospels make no mention of an appearance of Jesus to his mother, Christian reflection and piety have lovingly described such an encounter. Because Mary was perfectly united with Christ in his sacrifice on Good Friday, it was also fitting that she should be the first to experience his Easter glory. The Blessed Virgin Mary was a privileged witness and participant in the whole Paschal Mystery: from her son's death on Calvary (cf. Jn 19:25) to the completion of his saving work in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (cf. Acts 1:14). May Mary's joy at the Resurrection, with its promise of hope for all humanity, ever find an echo in our hearts!

I thank the young men and women of "Up With People" for their presence and for their generosity in donating the proceeds of their performances in Rome to the construction of a hospital in Albania for children suffering from heart disease. I also welcome the participants in the course sponsored by the NATO Defense College, and I encourage them in their efforts to support international security and peace. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, including the pilgrims from England, India, Indonesia, Canada and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Emphasizes Rediscovery Of Bible As Key To New Evangelization

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Rediscovery of the Bible is the key to the church's new evangelization efforts in modern society, Pope John Paul II said. "There are too many faithful who remain deprived of a vital encounter with sacred Scripture and who fail to nourish their faith with the richness of the Word of God," the pope told Italian bishops May 23.

Taking Stock as the School Year Ends

Another year over and done with.

Another school year of hundreds, maybe thousands of algebra problems, hours that add up to days of athletic practices, laughing, crying, sleeping, eating.

How did it go?

You might have started the year off with a lot of confidence, high expectations and hopes for yourself. "This is the year I'm going to get organized," you said. "I'm going to set my priorities and feel good about myself for once instead of always having regrets about not doing my best."

Perhaps you're one of the lucky few who met or exceeded your own expectations. But more than likely, you're like most others in being a little bit disappointed with what you've accomplished.

Your grades may not be what you thought. Chemistry was harder than you ever imagined. And the so-called "logic" of geometry never made a lick of sense to you, while the reading in English class just kept multiplying — page after page of words.

Maybe you had every intention of keeping good notebooks this year, but you'd lose papers and leave things at home when you needed them at school or forget worksheets at school that you were supposed to do for homework.

Everyone tells you that if you just organized your time better, you could get everything done, and you really meant to do that this year. Get home, relax, study, eat, then study some more. No fun stuff until you had your work done, you told yourself.

But there you'd be at the end of your day, 10:30 at night, looking at books yet to be opened. What happened?

You didn't mean to watch all of that TV show, but it got so interesting that you just had to see what happened. You were only going to go onto one website to check out some information on Mayan civilization, but you ended up surfing instead. Then one of your friends called, and by the time the conversation ended you were too wiped out to do any serious work.

If you're even a little disappointed in your performance this year, take a minute before summer starts and consider the following things:

You may not have met your ideal, but I'll bet you've improved from the year before this. It may not seem like it, but you probably are just a little more mature, self-disciplined and serious. You're not where you should be, but take heart by looking at how far you've come.

Don't give up. You may not have made huge strides, but that doesn't mean you should give up completely. Keep up that determination, and don't lose hope. Next year will be better if you make the choice for it to be.

Focus on your good qualities. OK, you made a few less-than-stellar grades. But you're still a person of good humor, warmth and compassion. Your friends appreciate you, your parents love you (and in case you didn't know it, that's what their nagging means: They love you!) for everything you are.

Finally, take it all to God.

Let God reassure you how much you're loved. Your grades or wins-losses record don't define you as a person. (God defined you as a person and wants you to use the gifts and talents you've been given to bring peace to your own life and light into the lives of others.)

But God knows that you are much, much more than your grades and doesn't want you to get discouraged.

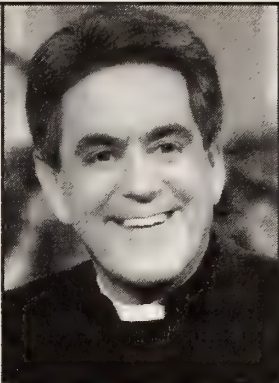

So take heart, have a good summer, learn from your mistakes. Never give up!

Style, Substance And New Ideas

In my years as a priest and university teacher, a fair share of my time has been spent trying to capture the attention of a congregation or class. I have spent more time as a listener, a member of the audience with a personal and professional interest in communications. After a speech or sermon, I have wondered how some speakers reach out and grab attention while others never touch you, let alone move you.

I can still remember one of the first to make an impression on me while I was growing up. He was the archbishop of my hometown diocese in Erie, Penn. — John Mark Gannon. I was 11 years old the first time I heard him speak to a large gathering of diocesan school children in St. Peter Cathedral.

At that time, much of the pomp and courtliness of pre-Vatican liturgy was still in vogue. The archbishop processed down the aisle in the full regalia of a prince of the church — a 15-foot red silk capa magna with ermine collar trailed behind him and was lifted at the edges by six pageboys. Talk about making an entrance! Standing in front of the main altar without the benefit of microphone or manuscript, he proceeded to hold his young audience in the palm of his hand.

He began simply with a rhetorical question: "What is it that you will do once you have finished grade school?" And then a long silence, as he peered into the congregation seemingly expecting each of us to respond. He continued: "You might be thinking, 'Oh, I'll go on to high school and then maybe college.' Good, that would be very good. But then what will you do?" Again the intense silence. "Perhaps you are thinking, 'Then I will become a doctor, or a fireman, or a movie star. I'll surely marry and have children of my own, if I don't become a priest or a religious.' All very fine, yes, very fine and good. But after that, I ask you, what will you do?" This time the long pause was deafening. Six-hundred youngsters sat hushed and without a clue about where he was going. "Well, let me help you. You will, my dear children, become an old person and, like all who come to the end of life, you will die."

We young listeners were now riveted to a thought that none of us had yet considered. Then, walking slowly toward the altar, the archbishop pointed one finger to the heavens and whispered, "Then what will you do?" Silence. Dropping his hands to his sides, he gave us one last look, and crossed the sanctuary to his throne and sat with his head bowed.

Theatrical? Decidedly. Effective? You bet! Here was a man who knew his audience. His personal presence and eloquent style took a few words and held 600 young souls suspended in the midmorning air of a sacred space. Archbishop Gannon had presence, eloquence and magnetism. And he had something else: a powerful idea. He made each of us consider something that had just been a strange, vague concept — our own mortality. Style caught my imagination, but it was the substance of this earth-and-soul-shaking notion of life, death and eternity that stayed in my memory.

Oliver Wendell Holmes said that a "mind stretched by a new idea never goes back to its original dimension." I think good speakers — and listeners — would agree.

Conditions for Marriage Annulment

Q. Two local politicians are attempting to obtain annulments. Both of these characters are divorced and remarried out of the church, and apparently are trying to legalize their actions. I have reviewed the Catechism of the Catholic Church and the Code of Canon Law and can find nothing about annulments. Yet we know annulments exist. Is this each bishop's prerogative? Or do they still come from the Vatican?

A. Both of these individuals seem to have had tragically messed up lives. I assume you are happy and grateful that, at whatever late date, they are trying to heal what can be healed and somehow return to the practice of their faith.

However, your reading of the catechism and canon law, I must say, leaves a great deal to be desired. If you're as knowledgeable as you say you are, you know that a declaration of nullity by any diocesan tribunal (normally not the Vatican) means that something essential for a valid marriage was missing from the beginning of that marriage.

The catechism spells out very carefully what those essentials are: They include intentions for a permanent life commitment to their partner, willingness to have children, total fidelity to one's spouse in sexual and other areas of their life together, freedom from any force or fear that could make a free and voluntary marriage impossible, and so on.

In addition, marriage consent must be a "human act." This means an act that is conscious and emotionally mature, a genuine human commitment to a "partnership of the whole of life," as canon law and the catechism speak of marriage.

When any of these essentials are lacking, says the catechism, the church can declare a marriage null. No true, valid marriage, as we understand marriage to be, ever existed.

Procedures for all this are spelled out in canon law.

As you see, the catechism not only speaks of what makes a marriage null and void, but addresses directly the church's process for granting annulments. (see especially Nos. 1625-1654)

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Family Role Models And Heroes

Earlier this month Andrew's cousin Gilbert celebrated his 80th birthday. Gilbert is on a remote branch of our family tree. We're not sure, but we believe that Gilbert's great-grandfather is Andrew's great-great-grandfather. Gilbert is a scrappy, muscular man with a wide, gentle smile and full head of hair. Doris is an energetic, loquacious woman whose looks defy her 70-plus years by at least 15 years. They have been part of our lives for only seven years. Yet, Gilbert and Doris have become important family figures for us. Their story has become part of our story.

We drove down to Belleville, about five hours away, for the celebration. It was a rich gala affair that began with a Communion prayer service with family members and close friends. At the end of the service, friends and family gave testimony to Gilbert. One man shared how, growing up without a father, Gilbert was a father figure for him and other kids in the neighborhood.

Listening to the testimonies, we remembered another gathering in Belleville six years ago to celebrate Gilbert and Doris' 50th wedding anniversary. As a gift to them, we brought our camcorder and conducted interviews with dozens of guest at the gala. A remarkable thing occurred during these interviews. Though we didn't know Doris and Gilbert well at the time, we came to know their essence through the many stories people shared with us.

We discovered through these stories that Gilbert and Doris are heroes. Listening to story after story, we gained a sense of who they are. There were many stories of Gilbert's younger days as a professional boxer. However, most of them were about a helping hand, a listening ear — compassion and Christ-like charity. We heard from many that Gilbert and Doris have been role models for them.

Six years later, the stories continue. As they posed for snapshot together, Doris threw her leg over Gilbert's. There was a glimpse for us of a younger who love each other passionately. As Doris gently kissed Gilbert on his cheek, it was clear that the fire was still alive. Then we got a glimpse of ourselves decades from now.

Though we can't seem to remember where our branches connect on our family tree, Gilbert and Doris Lyke have made a direct connection with us as family, role models, and heroes.

Charlotte's Mint Museum Of Art To Exhibit North Carolina Frescoes Of Ben Long June 14-Aug. 24

Consider the following offer:

Fresco artist willing to create large scale project for free; only cost is the price of the materials. Apprenticed seven years under master artist Pietro Annigoni. Experience includes painting frescoes for the chapel of the ancient Dominican Monastery at Monte Cassino and other churches in the Florence area of Italy. Contact: Ben Long.

Dialing Ben Long's telephone number today would assuredly produce a busy signal, as the North Carolina native is as well-known and in heavy demand for his oil portraits and frescoes in France and Italy as in America. But in 1972 what wasn't the case.

"It took me two years to secure a fresco site in the United States," stated Long. "The first problem was that no one knew what a true fresco was. The second problem was when you described the complexity of what was needed to begin the fresco project, most rejected the proposal."

It took the interest of an Episcopal minister, Faulton Hodge, in a surprising corner of the world, Beaver Creek in the North Carolina mountains, to find a taker on the fresco offer. From his initial North Carolina fresco, a modest 6 1/2 by 3 feet work entitled Mary Great with Child, to the three 23 by 18 feet frescoes serving as a triptych in the lobby of the corporate headquarters of NationsBank, Long is fueling a revival of buon affresco, or true fresco.

The North Carolina Frescoes of Ben Long, organized by Charlotte's Mint Museum of Art, will present the drawings and studies employed in the creation of Long's frescoes at five sites within the Tar Heel state. The exhibition, June 14-Aug. 24, is sponsored by NationsBank.

Selected drawings, oil sketches and cartoons include scenes from The Mystery of Faith (1975) at St. Mary Episcopal Church in Beaver Creek; The Last Supper (1980) at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church in Glendale Springs; The Agony in the Garden, The Ascension and The Pentecost (1988-89), a 35 by 44 foot fresco for St. Peter Catholic Church in Charlotte; the NationsBank Corporate Center triptych (1992) and the fresco in tribute to police in the lobby of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Law Enforcement Center (1996). Also featured will be a cutaway panel demonstrating the true fresco process with its four layers of lime and sand plaster and the techniques, tools and brushes involved.

A fresco begins with preliminary drawings made with pencil, charcoal or conté on paper. Numerous sketches of elements within the proposed design are often produced. These lead to creating watercolor and oil studies to explore concepts employed in the design. Cartoons, full-scale drawings to be transferred to the rough plaster surface, are the final step prior to painting the intonaco, or final layer, of lime and sand plaster.

True fresco involves the mixing of ground earth pigments with pure water, applied to a still-damp lime plaster surface or wall, and absorbed. As the plaster dries, the absorbed pigment is chemically sealed within a layer of calcium carbonate that encases the pigment within a durable surface. The chemical reaction also contributes another unique characteristic of true fresco — its glow. The fresco surface not only reflects ambient light, but appears to contain its own light within the plaster and pigment.

The quick drying plaster dictates that the artist must work with speed and a resolute hand as fresco is less forgiving of mistakes. Errors are cut away and the process started again. The end result is an artform that offers expressive depth and power that is not found in other forms of painting. "Most of my preliminary sketches come from my imagination," stated Long. "As I begin to mentally focus on them, I decide on a certain type or individual that I might hink perfect for a particular figure within a composition. I do not hold myself to the absolute reality of the model."

"I am always interested in the tension that exists between a figure and the space that surrounds it," said Long. "I am also fascinated with the amazing and ephemeral qualities of gesture and movement and person and place."

With each fresco comes a purpose. For the fresco at St. Peter's Catholic Church in downtown Charlotte, Long hoped to inspire people to pray, as the Renaissance painters attempted to do. For the secular tribute to the Charlotte police, Long stated, "Paintings have always enhanced communities. The police fresco is meant to be community friendly. My hope is that it makes the Law Enforcement Center more welcoming to the public coming in so they won't feel frightened."

As do all figurative artists, Ben Long struggles with presenting art in any form of realism that is not "just a rehashing of something done extremely well in the past."

"You really try to find an aesthetic and present it with the proper amount of honesty and power so that it reads and carries its own weight and is, in fact, an art form," said Long.

"These days, I think that when an artist is particularly dealing with realism or figurative work you have to be careful not to be illustrative or too particularly narrative. In my own work, I have long been interested in the great scope of human ambiguity — that ambiguous quality that deals with how I feel about the ruthless, modern regard for things. It's an ambiguity that expresses an uncaring emotion and yet also at the same time is hopelessly caring. If it has enough of a magnetism to it, the viewer will be able to respond to a work with his or her own thoughts and reactions. "The guidelines within the art of true fresco are strict. To control the medium is extremely difficult. I still pay attention to the undying rules within the medium that cannot be betrayed without jeopardizing your picture," said Long. "On occasion, I have tried to stretch it technically here and there. Sometimes it worked well, at other times it didn't."

"Fresco is a marvelous medium because it is so grand," remarked Long. "It is the highest form of public art. It lives on with the wall, becoming a living part of it. It has its own special light, an inner glow that comes from the medium itself."

On June 15 at 3 p.m., artist Ben Long and fresco painter Chuck Kapsner, an associate of Long's since 1973 when they first met in Florence while studying under Pietro Annigoni, will illustrate the fresco process through slides of seven Ben Long frescoes produced in North Carolina as well as frescoes the pair painted in Italy. Kapsner served as crew chief for Long's North Carolina fresco projects. A question-and-answer session will follow the presentation.

The Mint Museum of Art is located at 2730 Randolph Road, 1 1/2 miles south of downtown Charlotte. Hours are Tues. 10 a.m.- 10 p.m., Wed.-Sat. 10 a.m.-5 p.m. and Sun. 12 - 5 p.m. Admission is $4 adults, $3 seniors, $2 students and free for children 12 years old and younger and Mint members. Free days include Tuesday evenings from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. and the second Sunday of each month. For taped highlights, call (704) 333-6468 or call the museum at (704) 337-2000. ## Our Lady of Knock Shrine: Story Of Mary's Visit Draws Pilgrims KNOCK, Ireland (CNS) — On Aug. 21, 1879, 15 people witnessed the apparition of Mary, St. Joseph and St. John the evangelist on the gable of the church in the western village of Knock.

A statue of Our Lady of Knock, donated in 1880 by a woman thankful for the recovery of her eyesight, rests on the grounds behind the basilica of the shrine in Knock, Ireland.

In the center of the wall, a lamb stood in front of a large cross on an altar, while angels shrouded in bright light hovered overhead.

Testimonies taken from witnesses by two separate official church commissions were considered "trustworthy and satisfactory."

In the 1960s, Italian sculptor Ferri created white marble statues of the apparition from Carrara marble. The statues are housed in a new chapel in Our Lady of Knock Shrine, built by Polish architect Andrzej Wejchert in 1979.

A small part of the original wall of the church in Knock remains intact and is inset on the Apparition Chapel wall.

Eighteen individually carved holy water fonts are situated in front of the chapel.

Pope John Paul II visited Knock in 1979 during his visit to Ireland.

Shortly after the papal visit, government authorities built an international airport to service pilgrims visiting Knock Shrine.

More than 1.5 million pilgrims journey to Knock each year, compared to 4 millions who visit the Marian shrine in Lourdes, France.

Diocesan School Board Openings:

The Diocese of Charlotte School Board has four board member positions to be filled. The term is for three years. The Board is responsible for proposing policies to Bishop Curlin to enact in governing 17 schools. The Board meets monthly from Sept.-June on agreed upon dates from 6:30-9 p.m. The Board meetings are held in a different school each month. Interested applicants should send by June 20 a letter and resume detailing parish and/or school involvement and state why you would like Bishop Curlin to appoint you to serve on the Diocesan School Board. Please send information to: Dr. Michael Skube, Superintendent of Schools, 1524 E. Morehead St., Charlotte, NC 28207.

Characters study the movements of cloned stegosaurus in "The Lost World: Jurassic Park," the Steven Spielberg sequel kicking off summer movie releases. The U.S. Catholic Conference said the film has new special effects but is largely uninspired. The USCC classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

The Lost World: Jurassic Park

NEW YORK (CNS) — They are meaner than ever, but this time around the dinosaurs don't seem to have as much bite in the so-so sequel, "The Lost World Jurassic Park" (Universal).

It's been four years since the original was released and quickly became moviedom's all-time top money grosser.

Universal persuaded Steven Spielberg to direct Michael Crichton's sequel novel, and the technological advances in special effects and computer imaging are evident on screen. Scenes with the beasts and their human prey together look more believable.

But the novelty of the original premise — that dinosaurs can be genetically re-created from fossilized DNA — now seems old hat, and the revelation that another, previously unmentioned colony of dinos was thriving on an uninhabited neighboring island is just a simple way of getting the story back in an identical groove: humans arrive, dinos attack.

Resuming his role as sardonic mathematician Ian Malcolm, Jeff Goldblum is only willing to return to the danger zone because his paleontologist girlfriend, Sarah (Julianne Moore) is already there, alone, unconvinced she is in mortal danger.

Ian arrives to rescue her, unaware his young daughter (Vanessa Lee Chester) has smuggled herself along for the ride. A photographer (Vince Vaughn) and operations specialist (Richard Schiff) complete the quartet who promptly find Sarah happily studying noncarnivorous dinosaurs on the island's relatively safe perimeter.

Out of the skies, however, arrives the theme-park corporation's band of mercenaries determined to capture and exploit the fabulous animals for gain. They do indeed snare and cage a few, but when idealistic Sarah releases them, the expected occurs: rampage!

Now the hunters are the hunted and the only communication equipment lies in the center of the isle, deep in tyrannosaurus rex and velociraptor territory.

Getting off to a serviceable start in which a little girl is surrounded by chicken-sized dinosaurs when the family yacht stops on the deserted isle, the movie plods along for a good while before jolting the audience with the first of numerous attacks by the vicious creatures.

The narrative is a formula presentation of these action set-pieces in which terrified humans dash or are devoured by the marauding monsters. In between there is dreary dialogue, but the characterizations remain bare-bones, so one does not desperately care about the individuals' fates since they haven't really been individualized beyond good-guy, bad-guy. Ditto for the dinos; they have no personality, only appetites.

As the endangered child, Chester appears to be in a state of shock, which is scarier to see than some of the animal attacks, and should remind parents this movie is far too intense for sensitive younger children.

Some of the scenes of danger are well-staged (the occupied trailer teetering over a cliff to oblivion, and raptors clawing at a tin hut where Sarah and the child are trapped inside) but the sustained sense of tension and excitement does not register as strongly in the sequel.

Unlike the original, this time a mad mama dino and her baby do arrive state-side in most dramatic fashion, on board a ship with all hands on deck — and nothing else. Needless to say, the giant reptile makes quite an impression as unfortunate citizens of San Diego get underfoot during its tour of the town.

There are some nasty maulings and occasional gore, but much is left to the imagination, but with ear-piercing sound effects that make the off-screen deaths seem even more horrific.

The movie is sure to draw in a huge audience, but its paltry characterizations and formulaic narrative make it a largely uninspired sequel.

Because of recurring violent deaths and much intense menace, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

The following are capsule reviews of movies recently reviewed by the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting.

"Addicted to Love"

A heartbroken astronomer (Matthew Broderick) and a vengeful photographer (Meg Ryan) join forces to wreck a romance between their ex-flames (Kelly Preston and Tcheky Karyo). Director Griffin Dunne's overly contrived romantic comedy has a distinctly dark side, but relies heavily the appeal of the rejected pair as they predictably turn to each other. Brief comic violence, fleeting shadowy nudity and references to pre-marital affairs. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Brassed Off"

British production set in a depressed 1992 Yorkshire mining town where the mine's band leader (Pete Postlethwaite) insists the group carry on with their music sessions in hopes of winning a national band contest. Writer-director Mark Herman's spirited drama goes overboard in its indictment of Tory social policies, but is otherwise a winning, warmly human story of a working-class community coping with economic ruin. Brief sexual innuendo, fleeting locker-room nudity, minor violence and intermittent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Ponette"

French production in which a 4-year-old French girl (Victoire Thivisol) whose mother has been killed in a car crash is confused by adult attempts to comfort her with platitudes about heaven because she adamantly expects her mother will return to her. Writer-director Jacques Doillon convincingly captures a toddler's innocent perspective but the film's preoccupation with the tearful child's abject misery becomes tiresome. Subtitles. Conflicting ideas about God and the afterlife. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Sprung"

Mindless low-budget sex comedy about an African-American couple (Tisha Campbell and Rusty Cundieff) who move in together, then break up because of nasty friends (Paula Jai Parker and Joe Torry), but ultimately get back together. Also directed by Cundieff, there is nothing original or amusing here and, though there's occasional talk of love, the action is focused mostly on sex. Exploitative sex scenes, explicit sexual references, rough language and profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is O — morally offensive. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

A house for the church

By Father Paul Schmidt
Catholic News Service

Many priests have had their ego boosted when a toddler greeted them in church with the startling words: "Hi, God!"

dressed in special clothes and seemingly in charge, is the one whose house it is.

Eventually we learn that the God we meet in church is invisible — and slightly more awesome than the pastor!

For Catholics, the place known as the house of all God's children, open and welcoming" (No. 1186). How sad that modern barbarity and vandalism often make it necessary to lock the doors.

The building we call a church is also a place where the church, which is the body of Christ, assembles to pray and celebrate. This is the meaning of the expression "a house for the church."

We who believe in Christ are the church. The four walls around us merely "signify and make visible," in the catechism's words, "the church living in this place, the dwelling of God with people reconciled and united in Christ" (No. 1180).

We come to church to be initiated

"Architecture and art help us sense the holiness of the place.... You might say the building itself should pray — on the exterior and the interior."

into the community by baptism and confirmation; nourished with the bread of life; married and buried.

So the church building becomes a treasure house of memories.

Sociologists tell us that the parish church of our childhood leaves us with experiences and memories which we cherish — and sometimes rue — all our lives. That's why the destruction of a church by fire or earthquake or wrecking ball is so painful.

Children learn at an early age that the place their parents take them on the weekend is "God's house." It is perfectly logical that the person they see every week, a church includes the presence of Jesus, God's Son, in the tabernacle.

Architecture and art help us sense the holiness of the place. In the words of the Catechism of the Catholic Church, they "show Christ to be present and active in this place" (No. 1181).

The catechism adds, "A church must also be a space that invites us to the recollection and silent prayer that extend and internalize the great prayer of the Eucharist" (No. 1185).

So, you might say, the building itself should pray — on the exterior and the interior.

If the building serves many uses, it should provide some space for quiet and prayer so that we can come to church to say hello to God. For, as the catechism says, "the church is visible church is a symbol of the Father's house toward which the people of God is journeying and where the Father "will wipe every tear from their eyes" (No. 1186). The church is a kind of "heaven on earth."

To make this point, medieval cathedrals had a sculpture of the Last Judgment at the front door to serve as a reminder that the person entering would have a foretaste of heaven amid the stone and stained glass inside.

The church building is God's house and our house. It is an out-of-the-ordinary place, yet very close to us.

The church is a home — one that relates to our ordinary homelife; one related, as well, to the home where we hope to spend our eternity.

(Father Schmidt is the director of Priests Personnel for the Diocese of Oakland, Calif.)

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

Think of a church building that you treasure. What about this place moves you?

"It would be my own parish church, St. Casimir's. It was my father's church, the church I grew up in, where my children attended the parish school and I'm still a member.... The church has statues and relics from Poland which are meaningful not only spiritually but also for the sense of roots they give me." — Linda Shulor, Kenosha, Wis.

"The church building that moved me most was a simple church built in the 12th century in Salzburg, Austria. It had lovely stained glass, and on the Christmas Eve I was there it was lit entirely by candles, and the music was harpsichord. There was no heat, and we were bundled up in our coats. It was a beautiful Mass, an experience I will never forget." — Ann Synan, Iowa City, Iowa

"It's the church I'm attending now.... The altar and the crucifix are the focal points that help create (a) prayerful space. It's an open space, full of light." — Bob Freund, Kenosha, Wis.

An upcoming edition asks: Why do you think the Bible, which is ancient, can still connect with your modern life? If you would like to respond for possible publication, please write: Faith Alive! 3211 Fourth St. N.E., Washington, D.C. 20017-1100.

In a Nutshell

The building may or may not have architectural merit. The living church of people may have moved out of the neighborhood long ago. Yet the building holds so many memories that we can hardly bear to see it go.

The catechism mentions another meaning of the church building, its "eschatological significance." "The

A teen-age boy started a fire in the servers' sacristy of St. Peter's Church where I am now pastor on Thanksgiving 1991. While it was fortunate that the fire was contained to that section of the building, smoke damage throughout the rest of the church was extensive.

That was a couple of years before I was assigned to the parish in Mansfield, Ohio. But from many discussions with parishioners, I can attest to the fire's impact.

For nearly six months Sunday Masses were held in the school auditorium. When folks finally returned to the church building, there was incredible joy and excitement. For many it was like seeing a long-lost friend again.

St. Peter's was built in the early part of this century, a mixture of Romanesque and Renaissance architecture. With brilliant stained-glass windows, artistic paintings throughout and white marble statues, it is a place regularly visited by people of all religions.

The fire gave St. Peter's parishioners an opportunity to review the importance of any church building.

What they said could be summed up in these words: "It's a holy place."

What makes this building a holy place?

For some, the church is holy because of the holy events that have taken place in it. Those holy events primarily concern celebrations of sacraments: baptism, marriage, first Eucharist, even reconciliation.

I find it amazing how many sons and daughters of the parish who now live elsewhere have chosen to be married here, not simply because of the church's beauty, but because it is the "place where our family celebrates" these events.

For others, the sense of a holy place is that it provides comfort and solace.

Although the servers' sacristy (and any other place that might invite an arsonist) are locked all day, St. Peter's is open from morning until evening.

parish assemblies there.

The church building's role becomes clear when the church community gathers. A full church and a festive liturgy have a special power for any participant.

As I reflect on the special ownership of this church building by this parish, I also think back to St. Thomas More, the university church where I spent 10 years.

St. Thomas More was as different as Dozens of people stop by to pray and meditate. For them the building is a quiet place offering refuge from the outside world's craziness.

The building also stands for a commitment to faith. In repainting and cleaning the church after the fire, the present generation had a little taste of what their ancestors went through in constructing the building.

The price paid — in money and energy — to provide such a building is itself a symbol of commitment to faith.

Yet again, this church building is regarded as a holy place because the possible in architecture and decor from St. Peter's. But it too was a holy place.

There were no statues or paintings there except for a modernistic carving of Jesus on the cross. Instead of stained-glass windows, there was tinted glass with no images. The seats were moveable chairs, gathered around the altar. It was not a place that attracted tour buses looking at art, as happens at St. Peter's.

Yet young folks prayed there night and day. Many times notes were left in the petition book by troubled college students, indicating their joy at finding this safe haven for a confusing time in their lives.

Sunday celebrations had a special joy and festivity as people enthusiastically gathered around the eucharistic table.

I recall the night the Persian Gulf War began — Operation Desert Storm. Someone came to my office to say that there were students in church and that maybe I should see if they needed attention.

I found 15 or 20 young men and women scattered around the church. Some were huddled together in muted prayer. Others sat alone. A few were crying.

"I found 15 or 20 young men and women scattered around the church. Some were huddled together in muted prayer. Others sat alone. A few were crying."

After talking to a number of them, I invited all to the altar for prayer. Afterward, some continued to stay in the holy space because they simply didn't want to go back to their rooms.

That was a reminder to me of how much people need a holy place to come to.

Certainly the church body is greater than the building, and without a doubt people will always have differences regarding the types of buildings that inspire them.

What can be said universally, however, is that the church building is called to be a place where one can dwell in the holiness that is experienced as humans encounter God.

(Father Weber is pastor of St. Peter's Parish in Mansfield, Ohio, and a freelance writer.)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

"Walls have ears," it's been said. But do walls also speak?

If church walls spoke, they'd tell what kind of "place" this is — a place where:

—A community of God's people gathered with the grieving parents of a child who died.

—Young couples celebrated the start of a new life together.

—Priests helped to re-ignite hope for individuals in crisis.

For while a church is a building — a physical structure with strength, permanence and beauty, and the message its design and art convey — it isn't "only" a building.

Church walls would have stories to tell about:

—Newly arrived people in search of welcome.

—People with a troubling situation who simply sought support and understanding, and —Those whose roots here nourished them with happiness.

The walls of this building would echo the sounds of the silence people often want when earnestly seeking God. And they would echo the clamor of teens setting out together to serve the poor and the loud noise of the Sunday community singing out the Eucharist's "Great Amen."

Where the early Christians worshiped

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

If there was one thing early Christians did not have to worry about, it was church architecture. A distinctive building would have called unwelcome attention to themselves.

In the Jewish culture where Christians originated, they were shunned as intolerable heretics.

In the Roman world in which the Christians later flourished, they were an illegal sect that refused to worship the gods of the state. As such the Christians were liable to capital punishment.

The early Christians worshiped in the privacy of their own homes. Actually this was not too bad. Their congregations were small, and the people got to know and love each other. The atmosphere was intimate, conducive to strong community bonds and to the sense of belonging.

Gathered around a common table where all social and economic distinctions vanished, the early Christians prayed. They felt involved in what took place. Far from being mere spectators, they actively participated in the liturgy.

In Rome, the early Christians were quite literally an underground movement. They gathered in catacombs, which were subterranean cemeteries. This may seem like a morbid setting, but it was not.

Were the catacombs churches? Well, they were places the Christian community assembled.

Many of the people buried in the catacombs had been martyred because of their faith. These heroic men and women were now feasting at the heavenly banquet. And for those who now gathered there, the Eucharist joyfully anticipated what awaited them.

This means that the early Christians felt close to their victorious brothers and sisters who had died. A strong sense existed of what we call the communion of saints, the fellowship of all the baptized, alive or dead.

When in the fourth century the emperor Constantine became a Christian, he legalized Christianity. Then the Christians no longer had to hide. Constantine and subsequent rulers donated royal palaces, basilicas, for worship. This was not an unmixed blessing.

Of course, the religious freedom was greatly welcome. But gathering in these huge and often awesome buildings, some worshipers tended to get lost in the crowds; the sense of community, togetherness, was sometimes dulled.

Today, newly built churches frequently try to reflect, through their architecture, Vatican Council II's emphasis on the church as the pilgrim people of God. Pews often are grouped in a semicircle around the altar to aid the people's active participation in the liturgy and their sense of community.

Together in this place, people listen and respond to the word of God. Together they share in the gifts transformed into the body and blood of the risen Christ.

Inside a church, people are a vibrantly alive, personally involved community of worship.

Sponsor a Child at a Catholic Mission. It's Affordable!

Little Corina lives in a small mountain town in Honduras. Her mother is blind and her father abandoned them. Your concern can make a difference in the lives of children like Corina.

Your opportunity to help a very poor child is much too important to miss. And Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), an international Catholic child sponsorship program can show you the affordable way.

Through CFCA you sponsor a child for the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide one poor child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to sponsor at a level you can afford. CFCA will see to it from other donations and the tireless efforts of our missionary partners that your child receives the same benefits as other sponsored children.

Your sponsorship pledge helps provide a poor child at a Catholic mission site with nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

And you can be assured your pledge has its greatest impact because our programs are directed by dedicated Catholic missionaries with a long-standing commitment to the people they serve.

To help build your relationship, you receive a picture of your child (updated yearly), information about your child's family and country, letters from your child and the CFCA newsletter. But most important, you'll receive the satisfaction of helping a poor child.

First-Grade Artist Wins $10,000 For Catholic School

DUBUQUE, Iowa (CNS) — Most artists are long gone before their works of art begin to bring in the big bucks.

Not so for 7-year-old Michael Burbach, whose drawing of a smiling monster recently won $10,000 for his school and an all-expense-paid trip to Florida for his family.

A first-grader at St. Anthony School, Michael won the prizes by placing first in a national art contest.

It all started last fall, when Michael's parents, Tony and Mary Burbach, spotted the magazine ad, “Enter and Make a Monster Smile,” sponsored by M&M/Mars Candy Company. And so Michael started drawing.

When the family, which also includes son Tony, 13, and daughters Elizabeth, 11, and Annie, 4, recently returned home from a Florida vacation, they received a letter announcing that Michael had won the contest.

“The kids were jumping around and screaming as I read the letter aloud,” Mary Burbach told The Witness, Dubuque's archdiocesan newspaper.

“They were thrilled about the school getting the money, but they were just as thrilled to find out that we'd be going back to Florida so soon,” she said.

Michael, who unfortunately didn't make a copy of his drawing before sending it in, described his monster as “real fat with huge eyes, a big smile, stripes, with bugs made of candy wrappers flying all over him.”

His classmates have been patting him on the back and his mailbox has been filling up with cards of congratulations.

“He's really special, and we're all very proud of him,” said Lori Hermesen, principal.

According to his teacher, Jill

Hohmann, Michael is an expressive child who takes his art seriously.

Mary Burbach said the encouragement of Elaine White, Michael's mentor with the school's Gifted and Talented program, has helped him immensely.

School officials are planning to buy materials for that program, including art supplies and computer software. The money will also be used for the school's art appreciation program, for new books for the media center and for a new computer scanner.

Another talented member of the family, Elizabeth, also just won the citywide Earth Day poster contest.

“I really think Michael got his start by observing Elizabeth,” his mother said. “He would watch her draw by the hour.”

Michael's grandfather, Paul Frommelt, is especially proud of his grandson. As director of educational development for the Dubuque Archdiocese, his responsibilities include informing people of the importance of generously supporting Catholic education.

“I've been fund-raising for Catholic schools all my life,” he said, “so learning that my grandson was responsible for his school receiving such a generous gift was quite a thrill.”

He said he and his grandson, whom he affectionately calls, “Spike,” have always shared a special rapport.

“Actually he reminds me a lot of myself at that age,” he smiled.

When Michael is asked what he thinks about all the fanfare around him, the pint-sized artist just shrugs his shoulders.

“I think he's getting a little tired of the attention,” quipped his mother.

“Michael stays enthused as long as something interests him,” she said, “but to him this is old news and now he's

Pope Formally Declares Blessed Edith Stein Will Become Saint

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II formally declared that Blessed Edith Stein will be made a saint at a date still to be named.

The pope's declaration came during a late May consistory, a gathering for high church authorities that usually takes place before any canonization. In this case, the meeting concerned the sainthood causes of Blessed Stein and Blessed Hedwig.

Pope John Paul II is to canonize Blessed Hedwig in Poland during his May 31-June 10 pastoral visit.

Canonization for Blessed Stein in Poland “has been ruled out, because it is too soon,” according to Carmelite Father Simeon Tomas Fernandez, her official promoter.

Blessed Stein was born in 1891 in what is now Wroclaw, Poland, and died in the Auschwitz death camp near Krakow. The pope's upcoming trip starts in Wroclaw and ends in Krakow.

1997 Greenville Marian Conference — August 1st & 2nd

Dear Friends,
Our Lady is calling a second Marian Conference to Greenville, and we give praise and thanks to Jesus for this great grace! The conference will be at the Peace Center for the Performing Arts in Greenville, in the main concert hall, on August 1 and 2. Hours on Friday are 4:30-9 p.m. On Saturday, the conference hours are 8:30 a.m.-10 p.m. Speakers, vocalists, the Mass and rosary are part of each day.

David Parkes, the well-known singer from Ireland who's pro-life song, "Let Me Live," is heard all over the world, returns as Emcee for the conference. Fr. Stephen Barham, one of the most sought-after Marian conference guests in the U.S., is our Friday night keynote speaker. Fr. Barham developed four programs for KNXT-TV in Fresno, California, and has appeared regularly on EWTN. Jane Rice, renowned vocalist, also from California, returns to delight and soothe us all with her clear, angelic voice as she sings many of our treasured Marian hymns, as well as her own composition, "Padre Pio, Your Children Love You." Greenville's own Fr. Paul Williams, OFM, will celebrate the opening Mass on Friday. We love his down South'ern homilies, and you will soon understand why his Sunday Masses are being broadcast on radio!

Who doesn't remember Donna Cori Gibson at "An Evening for Our Lady" at St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Church? She accompanied Matthew Kelly, one of the dynamic and captivating speakers from the 1995 Greenville Marian Conference when Matthew returned for his second speaking engagement in South Carolina in May of 1996. Donna, coming to us from Auburn, Washington, will again lead us in Our Lady's Musical Rosary. Larry and Mary Sue Eck, editors of Medjugorje Magazine, and organizers, for years, of Marriage Encounter weekends, also return. A number of people who were very moved by Larry and Mary Sue's "Hands of a Priest" original poem, which they shared with us at our last conference, called afterwards to inquire about getting copies of their beautiful poem.

New to the Greenville Marian Conference this year will be Char Vance, coming in from Louisiana, and also among the most sought-after of Marian conference speakers. She may best be described as the "Erma Bombeck" of the circuit. Inspire you, she will, but scheduled as the late Saturday afternoon speaker, you may well find yourself chuckling all through our dinner hour. Char's powerful, moving, and as she tells it, humorous, conversion story, was featured on television's "Unsolved Mysteries" and "The Geraldo Show."

Bud MacFarlane Sr., who speaks across the U.S. churches and conferences, is also new to Greenville. The Mary Foundation distributes his widely acclaimed "Marian Apparitions Explained" audiotape. Bud, who comes to us from New Jersey, is considered an expert on the subject and has spoken in Columbia, S.C. Those of you who have read the Catholic best-seller fiction book, "Pierced by a Sword," written by his son, Bud McFarlane, Jr., may like to know that the fictional character of Tom Wheat bears a close, real life resemblance to Bud Sr.

Fr. Robert Faricy, SJ, is a professor of spirituality at Gregorian University in Rome and is widely respected as a lecturer, author and theologian. It is a special grace and honor that Father Faricy has accepted the invitation to travel from Rome to attend this conference. Fr. Faricy will be the main speaker Saturday evening and will conclude the conference with a healing service.

There will be an Adoration chapel during the conference, as well as opportunities for confession. The Peace Center will not provide food vendors and food cannot be brought into the concert hall. Therefore, conference packets will include information about nearby food establishments for lunch and dinner, or you may choose to bring your own food and picnic on the grounds outside the Peace Center.

I believe that a Marian conference is an evangelical tool used by Our Lady to win hearts and souls for her Son. It is something that must be experienced to fully understand. Many of those who heard of the last conference, afterwards, have said, "If I had only known what it was, I would have been there!" Please pray about supporting this effort about support this effort — with your presence, and as a conference patron. Conference patrons may be an individual or a commercial business who makes a donation of $200 or more to the conference. Individual patrons receive mention in the program and reserved seating, may request up to four tickets and will be given PATRON conference pins. Commercial business patrons may have one-quarter page ads printed in the program (similar to those in Sunday bulletins). Donations to MMIC, Inc. are tax deductible.

Finally, please keep the success of this conference in your prayers. Please pray for those working for the conference, the speakers and vocalists, and for those who plan to attend — that they may be guided and protected by Our Lady and the heavenly court of angels and saints for the glory of God. God bless you. Thank you all for your encouragement and support. In Christ's Peace and Love,

Carleen Maher

High Schools Prepare For Commencement Exercises

Graduating candidates of the Diocese of Charlotte's two high schools will attend baccalaureate Masses with Bishop William G. Curlin presiding and will be conferred their diplomas during upcoming commencement exercises in Charlotte and Winston-Salem.

For the graduating seniors of Charlotte Catholic High School, Bishop Curlin will preside as principal celebrant and homilist at a 7:30 p.m. Mass on June 4 at St. Gabriel Church.

The CCHS commencement ceremony will take place the following evening, June 5, at 7:30 p.m. in Ovens Auditorium. Class valedictorian Kristen Grauman and class salutatorian Lorraine Elliot will address the graduates in speeches. Mercy Sister Paulette Williams, principal, will present the graduates while Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor, and Dr. Charles LeBlanc, superintendent of the Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools system, will confer the diplomas.

On June 7 at 7:30 p.m., Bishop Curlin will celebrate the liturgy for the graduates of Bishop McGuinness High School at Holy Family Church in Clemmons.

Graduation exercises are scheduled for June 8 at 2 p.m. at the Stevens Center in downtown Winston-Salem. The graduation speaker is Father Jim Scherer, a marriage and family therapist and certified clinical social worker from the Archdiocese of Atlanta who currently works in Greensboro. Officiants will be Father West; Dr. Michael Skube, diocesan superintendent of schools; and George Repass, principal.

Stolen Religious Vessels May Face Auction

By J.J. SMITH

HAMBURG, N.Y. (CNS) — Possible legal ramifications have stopped a small suburban Buffalo police department from giving stolen chalices and other religious vessels, recovered two years ago, to the Diocese of Buffalo.

Hamburg town attorney Richard G. Boehm is going to the state court for some guidance on how it should deal with the property, said Det. Sgt. Thomas Biersbach of the town's police department.

Boehm needs to do that because the American Civil Liberties Union has threatened to sue the town if it donates the items to the diocese, Biersbach said.

In May 1995, Hamburg police seized 200 religious artifacts from Gary A. Heinaman, 58, when he was caught breaking into a Franciscan friars' residence.

The artifacts, valued at about $240,000, were found in a car being used by Heinaman, who had escaped from a South Dakota prison where he was serving a 10-year sentence for burglarizing churches there.

All the items were believed to have been taken about a month before Heinaman's capture when he was breaking into churches and synagogues in New York and Pennsylvania, according to Biersbach.

Police recovered chalices and chalice bases and stems — many inscribed with names — ciboriums and ciborium covers, patens, 31 silver plates, plus Christian and Jewish artifacts from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

Heinaman, who is serving a 7- to 15-year sentence for the latest thefts, has refused to cooperate in returning the items, Biersbach said. When his sentence is complete, Heinaman will be returned to South Dakota to finish his original sentence as well as face escape charges, he added.

In the two years Hamburg police have held the items, 150 have been returned to their proper owners, but the department's storage space is limited and they can't keep the items forever, the detective said.

Normally, the would have been sold at auction along with other unclaimed evidence, but because of the items' nature, the Buffalo Diocese asked they not be sold.

"The Hamburg Police Department was very gracious; they listened to our concerns and decided not to sell them," said Msgr. David Lee, diocesan communications director.

The police considered donating the items to the diocese, and Bishop Henry J. Mansell said he is willing to accept them and pass them on to the missions, Msgr. Lee said.

"I felt it was a great idea, but legal ramifications have made it impossible to do at this time," Biersbach said.

"I would hate to see this property go to auction, but it's not going to be left to the police department," he added.

In the meantime, while police wait for court instructions, rightful owners can claim their property, Biersbach said, by calling the police department's detective bureau at (716) 648-5118.

LENOIR — Franciscan friars arrived in Caldwell County in 1932. Through their pastorate which lasted until 1960, a number of western North Carolina Catholic communities were ministered to, among them the congregation that came to be known as St. Francis of Assisi Church in Lenoir.

Bishop William J. Hafey invited the Franciscan Fathers of the New York Province to provide missionary resources in the western half of the Raleigh Diocese. Property in central Lenoir was purchased in December 1932, and the house which resided on it became St. Francis Friary.

In January 1933, three Franciscan missionaries gathered in the friary chapel with a four-member congregation to celebrate the first Mass in Caldwell County. Later that month, Bishop Hafey assigned the Franciscans to ministerial work in Statesville, where a friary was established in 1940.

The friars traveled to more than a half-dozen other counties in those early years as well, establishing stations in Blowing Rock, Boone and the Wilkesboro area.

In Lenoir, the friary chapel soon be-isted for three decades in the area.

In 1972 the Diocese of Charlotte was established, and ministerial care of St. Francis of Assisi Church shifted from the Raleigh Diocese. The church underwent renovation work during that period to conform to the new liturgical standards set by the Vatican II Council.

With continued parish development have come new additions for the St. Francis of Assisi family during the past 25 years, including a new residence for its pastor acquired in 1996.

Expansion of the parish has also included ministerial outreach. The Lenoir Soup Kitchen, founded decades ago at St. Francis of Assisi, now exists as an independent service to the community. A number of St. Francis parishioners volunteer at the soup kitchen as well as at the Yokefellow Christian Service Center.

A variety of parish organizations and programs provide parishioners of various age groups with service and social opportunities. Ecumenism is also a highlight of parish life, as St. Francis of Assisi Church joins with local Episcopal and Lutheran churches in Advent services and summer vacation Bible school sessions for children and adults.

Appointed pastor in July 1994, Father Michael Buttner ministers to the 185 families at St. Francis of Assisi Church.

Catholic Schools Lend A Hand To Flood Victims

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Money to aid victims of the floods that devastated the upper Midwest continued to come in, most of it in checks from adults but some in batches of pennies, nickels and dimes from schoolchildren. Catholic Charities USA, which manages the U.S. Catholic bishops' Upper Midwest floods relief program, reported from its Alexandria, Va., headquarters that as of May 20, $143,000 in donations had been sent directly to the agency. Jane Gallagher, Catholic Charities director of disaster response, said the money will be distributed to the Dioceses of Fargo and Bismarck, N.D., Sioux Falls, S.D., and Crookston, St. Cloud and New Ulm, Minn.

Focus On Millennium, Archbishop Foley Tells Journalists

DENVER (CNS) — The upcoming millennium marks the anniversary of the "biggest story in the history of the world," Archbishop John P. Foley told a gathering of international Catholic journalists. "Have a special concern for the approaching year 2000," said the archbishop, president of the Pontifical Council for Social Communications, during a May 21 address to members of the International Catholic Union of the Press. Archbishop Foley told UCIP members, attending their annual meeting May 18-21 in Denver prior to the Catholic Press Association's national convention, that "the celebration of the year 2000 makes sense only in the context of a Christian world view."

North Koreans Starve As West Stands By, Says Caritas Director

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Despite continual appeals from the North Korean government for food aid to prevent massive starvation, many Western governments have chosen not to respond, said a Catholic relief agency official. "At times, there is a 'let them starve' mentality," said Kaethi Zellweger, director of international cooperation for Caritas Hong Kong. Zellweger, who briefed officials at Caritas Internationalis about the ongoing emergency in North Korea, said many governments seem content to blame North Korea's communist regime for the famine. "But people are starving," she told reporters May 22 at the Vatican offices of Caritas Internationalis, the umbrella organization for national Catholic charities.

Land Mines Destroyed — South Africa became the first country in Africa to destroy stockpiles of anti-personnel land mines, blowing up 4,700 of them at a military base May 21. The move was welcomed by the Catholic Church. The country plans to destroy all 250,000 land mines in its arsenal, according to the defense minister.

Bosnia Visit Yields Universal Insight For Charlotte Reporter

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The war in Bosnia-Herzegovina may be over, but for a Charlotte journalist, its reality remains as a vital lesson to the world.

Steve Crump, whose work in television has depicted humanity's extremes, says the 43-month war in the former Yugoslavia offered a mind-boggling perspective of how political, cultural and personal differences can continue to set the stage for a theater of divisiveness and hate.

His take on the war comes from first-hand experience: In March, he went to Bosnia at the invitation of the United States Information Agency to help establish independent print and electronic news outlets in three cities of the war-torn country. The assignment gave Crump an opportunity to share Western insight with the journalistic community in the region.

And while the U.S.-mediated Dayton peace accords officially ended the war in November 1995, Crump says the conflict's effects linger in the minds and hearts of many — including himself.

"I'm sure with time it will ease a bit, but there's not a day that I don't think about something I did or saw over there or walked away with," he explains. "This outweighs anything I've ever seen in terms of ... the environment of devastation."

That devastation, he adds, is not limited to the demolished city buildings and the shell-pocked countrysides. "People are willing to work together in some ways," he says, "but at the same time the wounds are very deep."

An assignment reporter with WBTV in Charlotte for 11 years, he also produces independent news projects that have taken him to South Africa, Ghana and more than a dozen U.S. cities.

Bishop Urges Graduates: Continue To Live In Faith

By MIKE KROKOS

Graduates of both Catholic high schools in the Diocese of Charlotte were recently urged to continue living faith-centered lives as they begin their journey into adulthood.

"Ask God to give you what He wills for your peace and happiness," Bishop William G. Curlin told seniors at Bishop McGuinness High School in Winston-Salem and Charlotte Catholic High School during baccalaureate Masses last week. "Jesus promised to help those who put their trust in Him."

The diocesan shepherd delivered the baccalaureate homily to 148 Charlotte Catholic seniors June 4 at St.

Gabriel Church. On June 7 at Holy Family Church in Clemmons, 72 Bishop McGuinness graduates were encouraged to continue patterning their lives around their faith as well.

"The primary goal of a Catholic school is identical to the goal I professed when I became your bishop: 'to help you find God in yourself and one another,'" Bishop Curlin noted. "If you believe God lives in you, you must believe He lives in those around you."

Father Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor, and Dr. Michael Skube, superintendent of schools, conferred diplomas at the graduations.

During commencement exercises June 5, Mercy Sister Paulette Williams, CCHS principal, told graduates their diploma represented more than academic values and academic success: "It represents many hours of service and many opportunities for a lived faith experience. I think the key word is 'opportunity.' That is what Charlotte Catholic has provided — opportunities to grow in faith, and opportunities to share in faith. Let the calling of your name be a reminder of your baptismal commitment to bring Christ into the world."

Kristen Lorraine Grauman was Charlotte Catholic's valedictorian, and Maria Lorraine Elliot was salutatorian. In her speech, Grauman spoke of the connectedness of the Class of 1997. "Many of us came together as strangers and have grown to be close friends," she said. "This shows that within us, we have an accepting nature, and a willingness to nurture one another. We have gathered for school Masses and retreats, we've done service projects each year. Within us, we have God's holy presence. Within us, we have a giving spirit. We can look beyond ourselves and see the needs of others."

Grauman also encouraged her classmates to take the best of what is within them and use it to help form their future. "I urge you to look within you to discover who you are and what truly matters to you," she added.

BMHS senior Allan Charles Huebner was honored as valedictorian, and Mark Joseph Nalavanko was salutatorian. In his address at commencement exercises June 8, Nalavanko encouraged members of the Class of 1997 to pursue their dreams. "Be confident in your abilities, and be ready and willing to challenge yourself," he said. "It's the challenges in life that bring out the most in a person's potential. There's no reason to think life is only meant to be endured. Striving for your own, individual excellence is what it's all about."

Father Jim Scherer, a marriage and family therapist and certified social worker from the Archdiocese of Atlanta who currently works in Greensboro, was the BMHS graduation speaker.

In closing the baccalaureate Masses, Bishop Curlin offered a prayer to all graduates: "God grant you His peace always. Wherever there is nobility of character, Wherever there is greatness of spirit, Wherever there are all those things that make for goodness and light, there may you always find your home."

Journalist Hopes First-Hand Look Leads To Understanding, from page 1

Kentucky University. He's worked in television in Georgia, Florida, Kentucky and Michigan, as well as North Carolina.

In recent years, the parishioner of Charlotte's Our Lady of Consolation Catholic Church has received two Emmy Awards from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences — the most recent in February 1997 for coverage on WBTV of the Matthews-Murkland Presbyterian Church burning in June 1996.

Crump's recognitions further include a Gabriel Award, presented last year by the national Catholic broadcasters association Unda-USA, for an independent piece on black photographers who shot the American civil rights movement.

While conducting journalism training in Bosnia's capital city of Sarajevo and the towns of Tuzla and Banja Luka to the north, Crump visualized another documentary.

"I was trying to seize an opportunity of a lifetime," he says, "not only as a journalist, but as somebody who has always had a great deal of curiosity."

A result of that interest is "Healing of a Nation," a half-hour program scheduled to air on Charlotte's PBS affiliate, WTVI, on June 23 at 8:30 p.m.

The documentary chronicles Bosnia as a region still torn between its need for internal reconciliation and the continuing tension between its people. "The conflict put neighbor against neighbor, but with the peace friendships are renewed — part of the effort of mending the pain," says Crump.

With just under 8,000 U.S. military troops still stationed in poverty-ridden Tuzla at the time of filming, the program suggests that the experience and aftermath of war have weighed heavily on the international peacekeeping factions as well. A Catholic priest — chaplain of the military tent city in Tuzla — mentions men and women in their late teens being faced with "questions of ultimate reality."

Crump agrees with the minister's sentiment, adding that the American presence could lead to growth not only for Bosnia's inhabitants, but for the troops, too. "I think in some respects, people will leave with more questions than answers," he says.

Questioning is an element of the faith that continues to play a vital role in Bosnia's mending. Amidst that scarred landscape of locales both urban and rural are a number of places of worship lying in various stages of destruction, victims of random and intentional acts of violence.

During one segment of the program, a Catholic congregation gathers for Mass while a blown-out stained glass image of the crucified Christ serves as a silent witness to the damaged surroundings. Near Tuzla, Muslims join for worship in a newly built mosque that replaces a 300-year-old structure lost in the war.

Such resiliency marks the hope of the collective Bosnian population, while issues of refugees, war criminals and sectarian hostilities still threaten an at-times fragile peace. Pope John Paul II's visit to Sarajevo in mid-April, just days following Crump's departure, further underscored the ongoing blend of the dangers of ill will and the call for peace in Bosnia. Almost two-dozen mines were discovered along the pope's motorcade route in the capital's streets; later, the pontiff celebrated Mass for a welcoming crowd of 50,000.

For Crump, the complexity of the Bosnian conflict provided occupational insight. "As a journalist," he says, "you're always taught not to take a stand; you're taught to remain in the middle."

Charlotte reporter Steve Crump recently spent a month in Bosnia to help establish independent print and electronic news outlets in three cities of the war-ravaged country. He also produced a documentary chronicling his visit that airs June 23.

You're taught not to point fingers unless someone is so blatantly wrong.

"But, in some ways, being (in Bosnia) evokes a certain amount of humanity. It inspires a certain amount of understanding, and perhaps it leads people to question why the violence happened and what people can do to better understand each other."

June 13, 1997

Dear Friends in Christ,

Once again, we are about to participate in the annual Peter's Pence Collection for the works of the Holy Father. The 1997 collection theme, "Proclaiming Jesus Christ, the Same Yesterday, Today and Forever," reflects the theme of the first year of preparation for the Jubilee. As we prepare for the new millennium and a new springtime of holiness and service, let us join the Holy Father in his mission to serve as a "witness to human dignity, a witness to hope, and a witness to the conviction that the destiny of all nations lies in the hands of a merciful Providence" (1995 address to the U.N. General Assembly).

Our contributions to this special collection enable Pope John Paul II to respond to victims of disaster, to continue his pastoral care for the Church, and to spread the Gospel message throughout the world. With our support, he can continue to bring God's love to all nations.

In preparation for the Third Millennium, we are challenged to strengthen our commitment to a deeper pursuit of holiness, wider community participation and a stronger witness of faith. Please give generously to support the works of the Holy Father when the collection is taken in our diocese the weekend of June 28-29.

Wishing you God's blessings, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

Bishop Curlin And Fellow Jubilarians To Be Honored

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Bishop William G. Curlin is among 10 priests serving in the Diocese of Charlotte celebrating their priestly jubilees while another retires from active duty in 1997. Parishioners from the 46-county diocese are invited to join in the yearly celebration at a special Mass June 25 at 11 a.m. at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte.

William G. Curlin was born in Portsmouth, Va., and moved with his family to the nation's capital at age 9. During high school, he began to explore the possibility of a vocation. He entered Baltimore's St. Mary Seminary in 1951, and on May 27, 1957, was ordained into the priesthood by the late Cardinal (then Archbishop) Patrick O'Boyle of Washington.

For 37 years, Father Curlin practiced his priestly ministry in parishes throughout the Archdiocese of Washington. With assignments as assistant pastor and pastor of five parishes, he also served as archdiocesan director of vocations for men; as director of a seminarian house of formation at The Catholic University of America; as director of a program for inner-city elderly people; and as founder of the Mount Carmel House for homeless women.

In December 1988, Father Curlin was ordained as auxiliary bishop of Washington and regional bishop of an area in southern Maryland. His ministry brought him to North Carolina in 1994, when in April of that year he was installed as the third shepherd of the Diocese of Charlotte. Bishop Curlin celebrates 40 years a priest in 1997, during the jubilee of the diocese he now serves.

Celebrating his 60th anniversary is Benedictine Father Bernard Rosswog, a monk of Belmont Abbey whose ministerial work in North Carolina surpasses a half-century. Ordained on June 13, 1937, Father Rosswog has served within western North Carolina as pastor, rector of Belmont Abbey College and Cathedral, and teacher.

Msgr. Arthur Duncan celebrates his 50th anniversary this year. Ordained into the priesthood of the Raleigh Diocese on May 1, 1947, he has ministered as pastor to a number of Tarheel parishes. In addition, he served as director of the Home Missions Apostolate's Western Division, as a diocesan consultor and as director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

Also celebrating his 50th anniversary is Msgr. Anthony Kovacic, a native of Bizeljsko in the former Yugoslavia. Ordained on April 6, 1947, in Rome, he has served as pastor in parishes throughout North Carolina, as a diocesan consultor and as director of the permanent diaconate. Although retired, Msgr. Kovacic continues to serve as director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

Redemptorist Father Francis Sands, currently parochial vicar of St. James Church in Concord, is another 50th anniversary honoree. He was ordained on June 22, 1947, in a New York Redemptorist seminary. Among his years of priestly service was pastoral work in Puerto Rico for nearly a decade. He arrived in Concord in March 1996.

Msgr. Joseph Kerin, who commemorates 40 years as a priest in 1997, was ordained on May 30, 1957, in Wilmington, N.C. From North Wilkesboro to Tryon, Winston-Salem to Charlotte to Huntersville, he has served as pastor in several parishes. He also served as the Diocese of Charlotte's second chancellor, and last month was appointed pastor of the diocese's newest parish, St. Mark Church in Huntersville.

Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father John Murphy is also being honored for 40 years as a priest. Ordained on June 8, 1957, in Wilmington, Del., he served as a minister and teacher at parishes and schools in Pennsylvania until arriving in North Carolina in 1977. He has served as pastor of Our Lady of the Highways in Thomasville since then.

Jesuit Father Lawrence Hunt was ordained 40 years ago in Maryland. His priestly service has included such appointments as administrator of a Jesuit novitiate in Pennsylvania; as educator and pastor in a number of locations in India and the eastern United States; and as director of a social welfare center in the state of Bihar, India. He currently serves as pastor of St. Benedict the Moor Church, Winston-Salem, and its mission, Good Shepherd Church, King.

Jesuit Father Francis Gillespie celebrates 25 years as a priest this year. He received his master's of divinity from Woodstock Jesuit College in 1972 as well, and his ministry has included pastoral and educational work in several Latin American countries. In the U.S., he continued as an educator, researcher and administrator before coming to North Carolina in 1993. He has served as pastor of Our Lady of the Assumption in Charlotte since 1994.

The second of the silver jubilarians is Father Carlo Tarasi. He was ordained in May 1972 for service in the Missionary Society of the Holy Apostles in Cromwell, Conn. He was later incardinated into the Diocese of Charlotte. He has served several Catholic congregations in western North Carolina as pastor of St. Dorothy Church, Lincolnton; and Our Lady of the Annunciation, Albemarle.

Also among those to be honored at the June 25 liturgy is Father Conrad Kimbrough, administrator of Holy Spirit Church in Denver, N.C., who is retiring this year from active service. A former Episcopalian, this convert to the Catholic faith was ordained by Bishop Michael J. Begley of Charlotte in February 1978. In addition to his work in Denver, he has served as pastor of churches in Lenoir, Lincolnton, Hendersonville and Greensboro.

'97 Graduates Move On

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Stresses Evangelization In World Mission Sunday Message

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The approach of the year 2000 highlights the duty of every Christian to evangelize among the millions of non-Christians in the world, Pope John Paul II said in a World Mission Sunday message. While not all Christians are called to work in missionary territories, each can and should effectively evangelize in their daily lives, the pope said. The text was released May 28 at the Vatican. World Mission Sunday this year is celebrated on Oct. 19 in most dioceses.

Pope, Walesa Pray Before Our Lady Of Czestochowa Icon

CZESTOCHOWA, Poland (CNS) — A world-famous portrait of Mary and the baby Jesus gazed down as Pope John Paul II and Poland's former president, Lech Walesa, knelt together in prayer.

They were praying in front of a bejeweled icon of Our Lady of Czestochowa, also known as the Black Madonna, and the pope later addressed his remarks to Mary.

The Pauline monks who live at the Jasna Gora monastery said Walesa used to pray there often when he was in office.

This time, he came as something approaching a private citizen. With his wife Danuta and their 12-year-old daughter Brygida, he sat in the back of the sanctuary, intently reading a prayer book. On the lapel of his dark blue suit, Walesa wore a pin bearing the image of the Black Madonna and the logo of Solidarity, the Polish trade union he headed.

A curtain of sculpted silver and gold covered the Black Madonna.

About 150 Pauline monks and priests stood in lines along the sides of a red carpet leading from the sanctuary to the door.

The monks started to sing, and some applauded. Pope John Paul made his way down the aisle, sharing small gestures of affection and stopping to talk with a few of the older men.

As a student, he used to make pilgrimages to this chapel. As Father Karol Wojtyla, and later as bishop and cardinal, he led processions here. His last visit was for World Youth Day in August 1991.

He reached Walesa and greeted him warmly, clasping his hand. The pope embraced Walesa's daughter and greeted her mother before moving toward the ebony altar housing the portrait.

As the pope and others in the sanctuary knelt, a fanfare sounded from the back of the chapel, and the curtain covering the Black Madonna was raised slowly. Gem by gem, the glittering portrait came into view. When the curtain reached the eyes of the images of Mary and Jesus, there was only silence.

The pope hunched over the prie-dieu, his head bare. After a few minutes of silent prayer, he spoke.

Pope John Paul's message was addressed to Our Lady of Czestochowa, whom he had made protector of his homeland. He prayed first in the name of all people, in particular the young, and implored Mary to encourage his compatriots in "the wise use of regained freedom, in the spirit of what is most beautiful in our Christian tradition."

"May desire for the common good prevail over selfishness and divisions," he said. "May all who exercise public service see in you the humble handmaid of the Lord; may they learn to serve and to recognize the needs of their fellow countrymen, as you did at Cana in Galilee, so that Poland may become a nation in which love, truth, justice and peace reign."

Afterward, in a greeting to hundreds of thousands of pilgrims outside the monastery, the pope said that kneeling before that famous icon, Poles had long "found the strength to remain faithful to the Church, when she was persecuted, when she had to keep silent and suffer."

"We always said 'yes' to the Church, and this Christian attitude has been a great act of love for her."

He urged his listeners to follow Church teachings faithfully.

"For it is Christ who speaks, who forgives and who sanctifies," he said. "A 'no' said to the Church would at the same time be a 'no' said to Christ."

Letters

Dear Bishop Curlin,

Through the Apostolic Nunciature, you forwarded the sum of $51,699.68 as the Peter's Pence offering of your Diocese.

The Holy Father has now asked me to thank you for this latest gift. He realizes that the individual donations required effort and were motivated by faith and love; he is grateful for the sentiments that prompted your people to contribute to the works of the Apostolic See.

While assuring you of his prayers for yourself and your people, His Holiness cordially imparts his Apostolic Blessing to all the Church in the Charlotte Diocese.

With sentiments of fraternal regard, I remain
Sincerely yours in Christ,

Angelo Cardinal Sodano
Secretary of State

Dear Editor,

I was saddened to read the recent article in The Catholic News & Herald where a Catholic nun pointed to a lack of assistance given by the Catholic Church during the Nazi Germany Holocaust. This is not true.

The Feb. 1997 issue of This Rock magazine featured an article, "How Pope Pius XII protected the Jews," by James Akin. It recounted the many examples of aid that Pope Pius XII quietly gave the Jews.

For starters, the article quoted the book Three Popes and the Jews by Pinchas Lapide. It said the final number of Jewish lives in whose rescue the Catholic Church had been instrumental is close to 860,000.

To set the record straight, why not print salient excerpts from the above article?

Light One Candle

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

Keeping The Fire Alive

There is a much-photographed statue of Prometheus at Rockefeller Center that I often walk past. The other day I stopped to recall the Greek myth. Prometheus, one of the Titans, gave humanity the gift of fire. This gift, according to the legend, angered the gods because fire gave humankind a new existence. The gods believed it was too powerful for mere mortals, raising them above other creatures, drawing them close to the divine life.

In the Judeo-Christian experience, we have no angry gods, but the One True God who has given us a share in His Divine Life. This gift comes to each of us through the fire of compassion. What else but God's compassion for His people sent Jesus to live and die and live again to save us for eternity?

It is a gift that is constantly available for us to share with one another. Compassion is an immediate participation in the suffering, the being of another to such a degree that you forget yourself and your own safety, and do what you can to help. An act of compassion involves our humanity at the highest level of caring. It is a blessed selflessness and it can even reach heroic levels.

But it is possible, I think, that our innate capacity for compassion can become numbed in a time that stresses immediate personal gratification, and anesthetized in a world whose daily horrors overwhelm us and isolate us into a state of inaction. "There is so much need, what can I do?"

We are constantly bombarded in the media with obvious and not so obvious calamities: Earthquakes and hurricanes, flood and fire destroy lives, homes and businesses in a brief convulsive spasm. Vicious, mindless terrorists blow apart buildings and people. War, disease and famine torment men, women, and children.

Then there are the people right around us: The elderly house-bound person, someone in mental and emotional crises, a young person pressured by peers and culture, those facing serious illness, raising a family, paying debts, or loss and loneliness. You just have to pay attention to see that these neighbors, family members, friends and strangers need your compassion.

Compassion, you see, is not about self. It's about value — seeing the value, the share in the divine life that is in another, and responding to it at the most basic level. So you and I offer a shoulder to cry on, a hand with chores, our prayers, our time or our money. Occasionally one of us heroically even lays down a life for another. We already know what needs to be done.

But sometimes, between the awareness and the response, a veil may be drawn. Some hearts even turn to ice, the fire vanquished.

A friend of mine who had gone to Peru was struck with the poverty and beauty of the children. He spoke with a celebrity who was there. Her response was, "Well, you know, they have chosen to be poor in this lifetime." My friend told her: "I rather think that if they chose to be poor, they did so to arouse our compassion." "Well, if that's the way you see it," and back she went to a life of comfort and coldness.

Most of us try harder than that even though we get tired and apathetic. Still, I wonder, why do we forget that none of us can handle God's gift of fire without being ourselves warmed and illuminated?

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Who Doesn't Get To Heaven?

Q. My dad is an agnostic and my mother is Southern Baptist. I became a Catholic a few years ago.

Recently, my wife and I took my mother with us to Mass, then went with her to her Baptist service. After detailing the beauty of the golden streets of heaven, the pastor there said: "Some things you won't see in heaven. You won't see Adolph Hitler.... You won't see Jeffrey Dahmer."

We took offense to that. Who is anyone to tell us who is in heaven and who is not? What is the Catholic Church's position on heaven, who goes there and who doesn't?

A. I'm not sure how that pastor's remarks square with Baptist teaching, but they do not reflect the belief of the Catholic Church nor, I think, of most other Christian denominations.

The church teaches, and always has, that human beings have it in their power deliberately and completely to turn themselves away from God. They can reject his invitation to friendship and life by a radical selfishness which definitely separates them from other people and from God.

Thus, hell is theoretically possible for any of us if we end our lives totally closed off from goodness, from God.

The question is whether any human being has ever ended life on earth in this condition. We do not know; nor can any human insights or knowledge tell us.

Certain men and women are seen from our perspective to be good candidates, among them perhaps Hitler or Stalin or Dahmer or Judas. But the secrets of their hearts are hidden from us, nor can we have a clue about what the powerful grace of Christ might have accomplished in their final moments and hours.

Pope John Paul II movingly speaks of this mystery in his book "Crossing the Threshold of Hope." "Can God, who loves man so much," he asks, "permit the man who rejects him to be condemned to eternal torment?"

"The silence of the church is, therefore, the only appropriate position for Christian faith.

"Even when Jesus says of Judas, the traitor, 'It would be better for that man if he had never been born' (Mt 26:24) his words do not allude for certain to eternal damnation" (p. 186).

Again, we simply do not know.

Q. Is it permissible for a Catholic to be buried in a non-denominational cemetery?

The one I speak of has a separate section for members of the Jewish faith. Other sites mingle people of all faiths.

Also, may a non-Catholic spouse be buried with her in a Catholic cemetery? I know it is done, but there seem to be restrictions where I live.

Vocation Problem or Management Problem?

"One out of 20 parishes in our country is without a priest. By the year 2000 the already relatively small number of priests will be reduced 40 percent. It's worse elsewhere. More than 65 percent of the church worldwide does not have ordained priests.

"At least currently we have one priest for every 1,000 Catholics, but in the Third World there is one priest for every 40,000 Catholics.

"Vatican statistics show that of 368,000 parishes in the world, 157,000 have no resident priest.... Since 1966 the number of seminarians in the United States has fallen by four-fifths" (Father William J. Bausch, "The Hands-On Parish").

Looking at those statistics I am not sure whether we have a vocation problem or a management problem.

Now 65, I will not live to see the crisis looming in the future, but I am concerned about the well-being of our younger priests.

In 1988 the bishops' Committee on Priestly Life and Ministry issued a report that said many of the 53,000 priests in the country are "overworked, lonely and sexually troubled." We are now down to approximately 50,000 priests, many of whom are over 50.

What's more, priests today are being asked to double up on their jobs. I give retreats to priests all over the country, and I have seen places where new priests are given two parishes to pastor, some with a mission church thrown in for good measure.

I wonder what the burnout rate will be if this pattern continues. More than 15,000 priests actually left the active ministry in recent years, and more will surely follow.

There are potential seminarians who see all this, but they are afraid to commit. Can anyone blame them? No one wants to fail in his or her vocation. Vocation directors are being asked to perform miracles.

Some say, "Not to worry, this is the age of the laity." However there are mixed reviews on lay involvement.

"By stimulating an expansion of lay leadership, Vatican II rejected a pattern of 'clericalism' in the church.... But as clericalism fades, a new problem emerges — the clericalism of the cre-dentialed laity and lay cliques which may exercise the same kind of centralized power associated with the old-fashioned pastor. In one Southeastern parish, a handful of couples is actually known as 'the clique'" (Msgr. Joseph Gremillion and Jim Castelli, "The Emerging Parish: The Notre Dame Study of Catholic Life Since Vatican II").

Many of today's parishes are served by a cadre of dedicated lay staff members and volunteers. Without them, the priests could not function. We are most grateful to them for their invaluable help, but more is needed.

The problem is too immense to place the blame on any one group. Many priests feel abused by the system, and they wonder if anyone in authority is really paying attention to their needs. Precious little seems to result from the expensive surveys they commission about priests.

I wonder what Jesus would say about all this?

Ministry Founder to Speak At Evening Of Recollection

CHARLOTTE — The founder of a ministry promoting the sacramental life will focus primarily on the Eucharist during a visit to Charlotte's St. Gabriel Church on June 19.

Mary Ellen Lukas, a resident of Hazelton, Penn., is the founder of Our Father's Work ministry and is the inspiration for its extension, the pious union called Missionaries for the Eucharistic Christ. A wife and mother of three daughters, Lukas is also the author of the forthcoming Summit and Source of Life: The Holy Eucharist.

Granted an audience with Pope John Paul II in 1996, Lukas in recent years has been invited to speak in many parishes throughout the United States and overseas. Her topics explore religious matters such as the power of the sacraments, the need for repentance and the relationship between the faithful and the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Lukas will address the Charlotte congregation following rosary and Mass. She will then invite any individuals wishing to do so to meet with one of the priests in attendance for a blessing and to proceed to her for a greeting and prayer. The events begin at 6:30 p.m. and are detailed in the Diocesan News Briefs (p. 14) under the "Evening of Recollection" headline. All are invited to attend.

Correction

The May 30 issue of The Catholic News & Herald incorrectly listed the summer Mass schedule for Sacred Heart Church, Brevard (p. 16). The correct times are as follows: Daily: 9 a.m., T.-F.; Sat.: 4:30 p.m.; Sun.: 8:30, 10:30 a.m.; Holy Days: vigil - 7 p.m.; 12 p.m. on holy days.

If you are considering college, consider one of the best!

High Point University

Both the 1996 and 1997 editions of America's Best Colleges, a publication of US NEWS & WORLD REPORT, list High Point University among the top tier of regional liberal arts colleges in the United States.

In both 1995 and 1996, High Point University was featured in US NEWS & WORLD REPORT as one of the two most efficient regional liberal arts colleges in the South and as one of the twenty most efficient regional liberal arts colleges in the United States. Efficient institutions are those which have achieved quality while keeping costs low.

The 1996 Peterson's publication Smart Parents Guide to College, written by Dr. Ernest L. Boyer, former president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, features High Point University.

High Point University has been listed on The John Templeton Foundation Honor Roll of Character-Building Colleges (1993).

Twenty-four percent (24%) of the entering freshman are Roman Catholic, making Roman Catholics the largest religious group on campus.

Maryfield Honors Volunteer Leaders

HIGH POINT — Maryfield Nursing Home honored a pair of noted volunteer leaders recently at its annual Volunteer Appreciation Brunch. Dorothy "Dot" Hockett received statewide recognition as Volunteer of the Year by the North Carolina Association of Non-Profit Homes for the Aging (NCANPHA), and Raymond Mileski was named Maryfield's Volunteer of the Year.

As president of the Maryfield Blue Ladies, Hockett oversees the facility's volunteer program. She gave in excess of 1,900 volunteers hours to Maryfield in the past year (May 1996-April 1997), and is a previous recipient of the Melva T. Price Volunteer of the Year Award.

In addition to her work at Maryfield, Hockett assists the Mobile Meals project and volunteers at her church. David Piner, president of NCANPHA, made a special presentation honoring Hockett during the brunch.

NCANPHA is a Raleigh-based state association of not-for-profit providers who offer quality care, housing, health, community and related services to the elderly. It is the only North Carolina association that exclusively represents not-for-profit long-term care facilities. The association's Volunteer Achievement Award recognizes individuals and groups who have enhanced the quality of life of elderly persons served by member organizations through volunteer work.

Poor Servants of the Mother of God Sister Lucy Hennessy, Maryfield's administrator, announced Raymond Mileski of High Point as the recipient of the Melva T. Price Volunteer of the Year Award. Mileski has contributed some 1,200 volunteer hours in the past year at Maryfield. He lends his musical skills by playing the organ during the nursing home's daily Mass, and served on the steering committee that built the Eucharistic Adoration Chapel, completed earlier this year.

The Price award, Maryfield's highest honor, was established in memory of Melva T. Price, one of the first High Point citizens to meet the sisters of Maryfield upon their arrival in the Triad during the late 1940s. She founded the Blue Ladies volunteer organization, and served as the chairperson of the advisory council and the finance committee at Maryfield. Price died in December 1991.

Maryfield's many volunteers, whose combined donated time totaled 10,498 hours over the past year, were honored at the brunch. Featured was guest speaker Father Andrew Draper, a priest serving in Virginia whose parents, Irene and Bob Draper, reside in the Maryfield Acres retirement community.

Documentary Effort Shifts From Recording Poverty To Ending It

A young girl helps keep her neighborhood clean in a documentary on revitalizing inner cities. "Block by Block," by filmmaker Ginger Wolf, is airing on PBS affiliates.

in Newark, which was co-founded by Msgr. William Linder, pastor of St. Rose of Lima Parish there, and has housing, child care, and retail interests in its neighborhood.

"The people are more important," Msgr. Linder says. As a result, he adds, "you'll do things you wouldn't ordinarily do to make it work. And you stick with it longer."

Wolf, in a telephone interview with Catholic News Service, said poverty has been a recurrent theme in her adult career, beginning with her first job after college working among the poor in Puerto Rico.

"I started off wanting to do children and families in poverty" for a TV documentary six years ago, Wolf said. But she started hearing good things about community development corporations. "Five years ago, it was not anywhere near the (visibility) it has now," she added.

"I changed my focus and thought, 'Jeez, this is a wonderful story.'"

Wolf chose her seven cities to show that the face of poverty is "not just African-Americans on the East Coast." Also featured are Appalachian whites lured by the promise of a better life in Indianapolis, Chinese residents of San Francisco, and Hispanics in New York and Los Angeles.

In the taping process, Wolf said, she loved "the passion in all (whom) I met. I would just get wired, rejuvenating from meeting all those charismatic, dedicated people, and trying to tell each one of their stories."

There were more stories than could be fit into an hour-long show. In four of the seven cities profiled, Wolf will also direct a local follow-up program with major players in the process — mayors, community groups and funding organizations.

"My goal was to do them in lots of cities over the country. They've become big projects," Wolf said. And at a cost of $65,000- $75,000 each, "funding has become a major issue."

Her next projects include finishing a promotional video for Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of Washington, and a fund-raising video for the Knights of Malta and their efforts to institute a capital campaign for the Holy Family Childhood Hospital in Bethlehem.

But after those are completed, "I think I would like to do another video on neighborhood economic development," Wolf said.

"I think there are some exciting things on neighborhood entrepreneurship, and how that is playing out."

By MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Any documentarian can do a television show about poverty, but Ginger Wolf did a documentary on people rising out of poverty.

"Block by Block," Wolf's hour-long program on the successes of urban neighborhoods, zeroes in on churches as being a mainstay in neighborhoods where other institutions have pulled out.

It has aired on public television in about 20 cities by her estimation. But people in most of the seven big cities featured in her documentary have yet to see it.

Wolf traveled to New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, Indianapolis, Baltimore and Newark, N.J., to record the efforts of community development corporations to rid neighborhoods of poverty and other ills.

As Father Charles Dahm, pastor of St. Pius X Parish in Los Angeles and a key participant in the Pilsen Resurrection Development Corp., says in the special, "The challenge is to build a healthy community, not move into one."

Narrated by celebrated actor James Earl Jones, "Block by Block" was funded in part by the Catholic Communication Campaign.

Among programs profiled in the show is the New Community Corp.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Breaking the Waves" (1996)

Provocative but uneven drama set in Scotland, where a mentally confused woman (Emily Watson) comes to believe God will cure her paralyzed husband (Stellan Skarsgard) if she has sex with other men, a morally bizarre concept leading to dangerous situations and a seemingly miraculous outcome. Danish writer-director Lars Von Trier's contrived yet absorbing narrative centers in the emotional saga of a simple-minded, deeply religious heroine who goes over the edge trying to save her husband by sacrificing herself, with ambiguous results. Restrained sex scenes and sexual references, brief nudity and occasional rough language and profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"A Pocketful of Miracles" (1961)

Colorful Damon Runyon story about how a band of Manhattan hoods and grifters (headed by Glenn Ford) turn poor old Apple Annie (Bette Davis) into a socialite so her daughter can marry into a wealthy family. Director Frank Capra's last movie is an embarrassingly sentimental remake of his 1933 "Lady for a Day" and, despite the fine cast, seems little but silly. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Zeus and Roxanne" (1997)

A dog and a dolphin form an unlikely friendship while the dog's widowed owner (Steve Guttenberg) and a single mom (Kathleen Quinlan) who happens to be a scientist studying the dolphin are nudged towards love and marriage by their enterprising children. Director George Miller accentuates the postcard-pretty Caribbean setting, but the romance is highly contrived and the cuteness of the animals relentlessly stressed. Brief intense menace. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Trial And Error

Richards Pleads His Case With Courtroom Antics

NEW YORK (CNS) — An actor impersonates a lawyer in the phony courtroom comedy, "Trial and Error" (New Line).

Days before he's to wed the boss's daughter, ambitious Los Angeles attorney Charles Tuttle (Jeff Daniels) is sent to Nevada to get a continuance in a fraud case against a distant relative of his future in-laws.

Tuttle's best friend, would-be actor Richard Rietti (Michael Richards), meets him there for a bachelor's party and by morning Tuttle is too stiff to make it into the courtroom.

Feeling responsible, the well-meaning but dim Rietti passes himself off as Tuttle but can't stop the judge (Austin Pendleton) from starting the trial.

And a trial it is for the audience as the case drags on with the fuming Tuttle trying to coach the bumbling Rietti as the prosecutor (Jessica Steen) presents the evidence against their grimacing con-artist client (Rip Torn).

Though there are a few comic moments, the predictable proceedings lack wit and grow increasingly tiresome.

Even worse is the contrived romance which develops outside the courtroom as Rietti falls for the shapely prosecutor and Tuttle tumbles into bed with a dreamy waitress (Charlize Theron) who's opened his eyes to the wonders of the Nevada landscape.

These charmless characters, however, prove as bogus as the trial and as shallow as the plot.

Directed by Jonathan Lynn from the script by Sara Bernstein and Gregory Bernstein, the result is a slickly packaged, slightly soiled comic misfire.

Part of the problem is the laborious, heavy-handed treatment given to such lightweight material.

The chief drawback, however, is none of the characters are sympathetic enough to root for either in the trial proceedings or the romantic posturing outside the courtroom.

There's nothing heart-warming about these empty stock figures and their silly antics.

Because of sexual situations and occasional profanity, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Reading Isaiah with new eyes

By Dr. Eugene J. Fisher
Catholic News Service

If you were asked to choose five books of the Hebrew Bible that were most important for the spiritual and liturgical life of the church, which would you choose?

Most Catholics would start with Genesis and Exodus, which give us our basic notions of the meaning of human life, of creation and what it means to be "people of God."

"Isaiah helps us to see that our suffering, like Jesus' and the Suffering Servant's, is only a way station on the way to the Promised Land."

What next? Responses may differ.

I would point to Isaiah and Jeremiah. These two are often relied upon by the New Testament authors. St. Paul derived his notion of a "new covenant" from Jeremiah, and the book remains essential to the liturgy of the Catholic Church to this day.

So, too, Isaiah. One cannot conceive of Advent or Lent without the writings of these prophets.

For Christians, there are no more theologically pregnant texts than Isaiah's Suffering Servant passages.

To us Christians, Isaiah speaks of Jesus' suffering and death. Isaiah gives meaning to those events within the framework of biblical Israel's history.

How could the one we proclaim as the Messiah, the vindicator of Israel, suffer the humiliation of ignominious crucifixion at the hands of a merely human and transitory empire such as ancient Rome? We read what God says to us through the prophet:

"Here is my servant whom I uphold, my chosen one in whom I am well pleased, upon whom I have put my spirit; he shall bring forth justice to the nations" (Is 42:1-4).

Over the centuries, Christians have taken comfort in the hope offered in Isaiah that Christ's death was not the end, but only the beginning of a story leading to the ultimate vindication not only of ourselves but of all suffering humanity.

Isaiah helps us to see that our suffering, like Jesus' and the Suffering Servant's, is only a way station on the way to the Promised Land.

♦ ♦ ♦

Biblical scholarship tells us something that the Jews have always known. There is more than one way to read the Suffering Servant texts.

—The texts can refer to an individual Messiah. Much of Jewish and Christian tradition understood this.

—The texts can refer to the people of Israel, who suffer defeat, exile, rebirth and vindication over the centuries.

—By extension, therefore, the texts can — for Christians — refer to the church.

Are such differing interpretations compatible?

Jews speak of the "70 faces" of their sacred texts.

Medieval Christianity in much the same way spoke of "multiple levels" of meaning, from the literal to the mystical, different but not contradictory.

And the Catechism of the Catholic Church, while stressing the importance of the Isaiah texts as prophecies fulfilled by Jesus, also speaks of the biblical text's "inexhaustible riches."

There is a wonderful rabbinic story in which Moses comes back after centuries to witness a debate among the rabbis. At first he is confused because he cannot understand the Talmudic reasoning. Then one of the rabbis cites a biblical text, and Moses is comforted. But the debate goes on. Passage after passage is cited. Logical rules are applied. The issue goes back and forth.

At one point, the "bat kol" (voice of God) intervenes to settle the argument in favor of one side. But both sides protest: The Law has been given to humanity, they argue, and the debate continues!

Finally, the "bat kol" intervenes again, declaring (in defeat?): "These and these are the words of the living God." Both sides, God declares, are right.

God's word is not a "dead letter," but a living reality for each successive generation of God's people. So, too, with the depth of riches of the Suffering Servant texts.

In the late Middle Ages, Jews and Christians held formal disputations to argue over whether the prophecies of Isaiah and other Hebrew biblical prophetic texts referred to Christ or to the Jewish people.

Usually, and sadly, these were staged affairs in which Christians imposed unfair rules on the Jewish participants to ensure a Christian "victory."

I would argue that in such debates, both sides lost, certainly the Christians who were deprived of the rich heritage of Jewish reflection on the sacred texts, but also Jews who might have profited from Christian reflection as well.

The sacred texts have remained sacred to generations of Christians and Jews precisely because they touch multiple, ever deeper levels of human and spiritual realities.

As one working full time in the field of Catholic-Jewish relations, I believe that today Jews and Christians — who alone in all the world hold to the sacredness of the Hebrew Bible — need each other to provide the necessary dialogue for full understanding of it.

For, as the rabbis say: "These and these are the words of the living God."

(Dr. Fisher is associate director, Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs, National Conference of Catholic Bishops.)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Is poetry the language of God's kingdom? Maybe so, which may explain why the prophet Isaiah will never go out of style.

Isaiah helps us put the kingdom of God into words — and it's poetic. In a Mass reading for Sunday Sept. 7, Isaiah will be heard to say:

"(God) comes to save you. Then will the eyes of the blind be opened, the ears of the deaf be cleared; then will the lame leap like a stag, then the tongue of the dumb will sing" (35:4-7).

Isaiah wants people to know — also that "the Lord of hosts ... will destroy death forever" (25:6-8; Dec. 3 Mass).

Isaiah gives us so many words we use to speak of the Messiah, such as these words Catholics keep for Christmas: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him who brings glad tidings, announcing peace, bearing good news, announcing salvation" (52:7; Christmas Mass).

Then there is the theme of hope. Irresistibly, the prophet assures us that we'll "soar as with eagles' wings" if we "hope in the Lord" (40:31; Dec. 10 Mass).

For Isaiah, peace is possible — a time when "one nation shall not raise the sword against another" (2:4-5; Dec. 5 Mass); rather, "the wolf shall be a guest of the lamb" (11:6-7; Dec. 2 Mass).

No wonder the church feels so at home with this Hebrew prophet.

David Gibson, Editor, Faith Alive!

In a Nutshell

The Old Testament authors saw God's hand at work in the events of their history — salvation history.

The Hebrew Scriptures still put faith into words for Christians. They reveal God's presence in our world, for example; they interpret the meaning of suffering and are filled with the promise of hope.

In the footsteps of Moses

By Father David K. O'Rourke, OP
Catholic News Service

I find the history of Moses and of the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt greatly appealing. Let me explain why by telling a story.

Last Sunday I was working in the kitchen at our parish, where we serve dinner twice a month to the hungry. We had a big crowd — around 250 men and women of all ages and descriptions, along with some children.

The parishioner working at our big, black stove was a curmudgeon of an old friend named Pete, with a temperament as spicy as the chili he was stirring.

After stopping to rest from the sheer effort of maneuvering the two-handed paddle through 20 gallons of thick chili, he told me to "git out there in the hall and git me a count, and then come back here and taste this. I think it needs something."

As I strained to paddle the handfuls of chili powder and garlic we both agreed was needed, I looked out into the hall. I was struck again by how many were out there and by their diversity.

"What do they all have in common?" I wondered aloud.

"They're hungry," Pete said.

That tells it all: why they were there and why we were there.

It also brings us back to the biblical Book of Exodus. For, in Exodus, as Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt through the desert to the Promised Land, they ran out of food.

In desperation, and anger, and hope, and terror — the same emotions we experience when things fall apart — they cried out to God.

What happened? There was a miracle — the miracle of the manna. Something nourishing fell from the sky early in the morning, and this happened each day until the people cause they were hungry.

What a wonderful image this gives us of what God does, as well as of what the church does: feeding the hungry; providing people with the most basic necessities when hope is running out.

got back on their feet again.

What did God do for them when they were hungry?

God didn't give them thunder, or rainbows, or rose petals. What happened was much more down to earth: God gave them something to eat be-into many different kinds of care because all around us we have people who experience hungers of different kinds.

—There is the hunger for purpose and direction in life.

Just as Moses led the Israelites toward freedom and integrity, so all of us try to make our church communities places where God's purpose and guidance are clear and available.

—There is the hunger for a community to belong to.

Today in our churches we try to open our doors to the strangers among us, remembering that we, too, have been like wanderers at times and have longed for the welcome of home.

—There is the hunger for fairness and decency and security in our families and our lives.

Again, we and our church believe we should take stands on the side of justice and decency.

The dinner our parish served that afternoon included fresh salad, chili beans with rice and all sorts of desserts. Twenty gallons is a lot of chili, but it all disappeared.

You offer to feed hungry people — as God had Moses do in the desert — and they will take you up on your offer.

Discovering the salvation in our history

By Father John J. Castellet
Catholic News Service

The world's bishops at Vatican Council II laid down some basic principles for reading the Bible. One basic principle is to bear in mind that not all the Bible's books are to be read on the same level.

The bishops referred, for instance, to "various types of historical writing," recognizing that not everything that looks like history is history.

For example, the indication that the universe was created in just six days is not as reliable as the fact that the Babylonians sacked Jerusalem and dragged the people into exile.

Professional historians are the first to admit that their enterprise is not an exact science. "History" has been defined as "the remembered past," and much depends on who remembered what and why they recorded it.

Of course, the more remote the events are, the more difficult it is to recover them.

C.H. Dodd, a noted historian, described history as "event plus meaning." History is not just a flat record of events, but an interpretation too.

The fact that biblical history involves an interpretation does not make it any less reliable. A good historian looks for patterns in past events.

Biblical authors discerned patterns in God's dealings with people. The fact that an ancient people saw God's hand at work is already an interpretation on their part — an interpretation based on their faith in God as Lord of history.

With the insight of faith they saw God leading the people in stages toward attaining a divine purpose. This process is called "salvation history."

Accordingly, the bishops at Vatican II wrote that "the books of Scripture firmly, faithfully and without error teach that truth which God, for the sake of our salvation, wished to see confided to the sacred Scriptures."

The key phrase here is "for the sake of our salvation." A knowledge of specific details is not necessarily conducive to salvation, and the record of such details is not guaranteed to be "without error."

The central event of the Israelite people's history was their liberation from slavery in Egypt. Without it their whole subsequent history is simply unintelligible.

In fact, this event was so impressive a sign of God's power and saving love that the account developed into a religious epic with embellishments of all kinds:

—The 10 plagues.

—The parting of the Red Sea.

—Manna raining down from heaven.

—Water from the rock.

All these details have some basis in fact, but as recorded are not literally factual.

The exodus itself is solidly factual; the details of the description serve to interpret it as one of epic import: "event plus meaning."

(Father Castellet is a Scripture scholar, author, teacher and lecturer.)

People In The News

Poll Says Many Romans Have Low Religious Interest

ROME (CNS) — A poll on religious attitudes in Italy said that 40 percent of Rome residents have little or no interest in their faith.

The results, published in late May, were greeted with skepticism by some church experts.

The study was conducted in 1995 and the results interpreted in a recent issue of Sociological Studies, a journal of the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart in Milan.

The poll involved a nationwide sample of 4,500 people who responded to a questionnaire about their religious attitudes. The responses were then matched with five markers of religiousness, ranging from "none" to "high."

The study found 19.1 percent of Romans responding showed no interest in religion, twice as high as the national average. Another 21.4 percent showed little interest in religious matters, it said.

Rome residents indicating a medium interest in religious faith made up 35 percent of the sample, while 13.9 percent fell into the "medium-high" range and 10.6 percent in the "high" category.

The results indicate that only one in four Romans follows religious affairs closely, particularly in regard to their personal attitudes and behavior, Roberto Cipriani, a professor of sociology at Rome III University, wrote in an article.

Another sociologist, Sister Enrica Rosanna, challenged the interpretation, however.

"To speak of Rome as an atheistic city is nonsense," she told the Italian newspaper Avvenire. She said religious attitudes were too complex to be reduced to simple categories.

Sister Rosanna, who teaches at a Rome pontifical institute specializing in education, said the questionnaire did not aim to measure the vitality of the Church in Rome, which she said was high, but rather the general attitudes of the whole population. She said the results reflected some typical and sometimes ambivalent attitudes on religion in modern society.

New Labor Secretary Praises Anti-Sweatshop Initiatives

ARLINGTON, Va. (CNS) — U.S. Secretary of Labor Alexis M. Herman said she looks forward to working closely with Newark Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick and other religious leaders nationwide to eliminate garment industry sweatshops. Archbishop McCarrick, who chairs the U.S. bishops' Committee on International Policy, is creating a "no sweat" archdiocese. "In September — just in time for back-to-school — he will launch an 'anti-sweatshop' classroom instruction effort for every one of the 188 elementary and high schools in the archdiocese," Herman said May 30 at Marymount University in Arlington.

Abortion No Constitutional Right, Says Justice Scalia

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (CNS) — Neither abortion nor the right to die are guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, despite efforts by some jurists to create constitutional rights where none previously existed, said U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin J. Scalia. Scalia, speaking to almost 500 members and guests of the Justinian Law Society in Providence in late May, said that those rights were never addressed by the original framers of the Constitution and should never have become rights through the court system.

Knights Founder Gets Postulator For Sainthood Cause

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (CNS) — A postulator has been named for the cause of sainthood for Father Michael J. McGivney, founder of the Knights of Columbus.

Hartford Archbishop Daniel A. Cronin designated Dominican Father Gabriel B. O'Donnell as postulator and notified Supreme Knight Virgil C. Dechant, according to an announcement from the Knights.

The naming of a postulator is a preliminary step toward canonization. According to canon law, the postulator has the authority to begin an investigation of the candidate's writings, practice of heroic virtue and devotion to God.

Promoters of Father McGivney's cause sought permission from Archbishop Cronin because the priest lived and worked in what was the Diocese of Hartford. It will be the work of the archdiocesan investigation to study any possible miracles performed through the intercession of the late priest.

Father McGivney was born in Waterbury, Conn., on Aug. 12, 1852. He was ordained a priest on Dec. 22, 1877, and while serving at St. Mary's Parish in New Haven in 1882, he founded the Knights of Columbus. In 1884 he was named pastor of St. Thomas Parish in Thomaston. He died from tuberculosis at age 38 on Aug. 14, 1890. His body is interred at St. Mary's in New Haven.

During the U.S. Catholic bishops June 19-21 meeting in Kansas City, Mo., Archbishop Cronin is to seek the approval of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops on the appropriateness of initiating the priest's cause, according to norms established by the Vatican Congregation for Sainthood Causes.

Cardinal Denounces 'Official Amnesia' Over Important Irishman

ROME (CNS) — Daniel O'Connell, who in the 19th century fought anti-Catholic laws in Ireland and Britain, has become a "victim of official amnesia," said Cardinal Cahal B. Daly, retired archbishop of Armagh, Northern Ireland.

Speaking at the Irish College in Rome in late May, the cardinal said O'Connell, who died 150 years ago May 15, was "not only one of the greatest Irishmen of modern times, but also a great European and world figure."

He said that the study of O'Connell and his pioneering use of nonviolent demonstrations were vital to understanding modern Ireland and to resolving the present problems of Northern Ireland.

"He seems to be one of today's many victims of official amnesia, whereby whole periods and events of national history are deleted from the record because they do not fit into the secular image which 'public and official Ireland' seeks to give itself and to project to the world at this time," Cardinal Daly said.

"O'Connell did not see his struggle for civil and political rights for Catholics in sectarian terms. He saw Irish Protestants as potential allies rather than enemies," the cardinal said.

This year the Irish Republic celebrates the 75th anniversary of the foundation of the state, but many Irish politicians and businesses are ignoring O'Connell, who won the right for Catholics in the then British-ruled Ireland to hold high office.

A spokesman for one large business, the Dublin Corp., said that in 1991 the corporation held a major lecture marking the 150th anniversary of O'Connell's election as lord mayor of Dublin.

O'Connell is known in Irish folklore as "The Liberator" because of his work to defeat laws that barred Catholics from the judiciary, the senior civil service and public office in Britain and Ireland.

He was also known as "King of the Beggars" for the work he did for the poor.

His ideas were enthusiastically adopted in mainland Europe, particularly his notion that a person could be loyal to a nation and a practicing Roman Catholic.

"Surely the future in Northern Ireland lies with leaders who subscribe to O'Connell's principles of non-violence and non-sectarianism. The example and the message of Daniel O'Connell need to be recalled and need to be followed in the North at this time," Cardinal Daly said.

O'Connell was made a papal knight for his efforts in securing Catholic emancipation. He was traveling to Rome on a pilgrimage and to ask the Vatican for further famine relief when he died in Genoa, Italy.

At his request, his heart was cut out, embalmed and taken to Rome, where it still remains in an honored place in the Irish College.

A Visit To Well Of Mercy Retreat Facility Will Quench Spiritual Thirst

HAMPTONVILLE — A visit to the well, the Well of Mercy, that is, may be just the thing to quench the thirst for spiritual healing and relieve the stresses of modern-day life.

Well of Mercy is a brand-new, 109-acre retreat facility located just an hour's drive from Charlotte. Mercy Sisters Donna Marie Vaillancourt and Brigid McCarthy, co-directors of this unique facility, are dedicated to providing psychological and spiritual growth opportunities for all who go there.

The idea for Well of Mercy began at Mercy Institute on the former Sacred Heart College campus, where counseling programs have helped thousands deal with contemporary challenges and personal pain over the years. But Sisters Donna and Brigid envisioned a more private place — somewhere less clinical that was, instead, nurturing and quiet, healing and inspiring.

The pair located the perfect place, surrounded by woodland trails and wild flowers, alongside Hunting Creek. It was purchased in December, 1991, with the blessing of the entire community of the Sisters of Mercy.

After years of hard work and dedication, the facility was ready for dedication on June 8, 1997. It includes two cottages, a two-story central building and two six-bedroom guest houses accommodating up to 22 adults. Stays are limited to five days.

All are invited to come to the well — just like the Samaritan woman — to drink in the Creator's unconditional love and acceptance.

A. From the beginning, Christians have been concerned that funeral rituals and burial of their dead brothers and sisters reflect their beliefs about the sacredness of the human body and the resurrection.

For this reason they set aside special spaces for their dead, a custom the Church continues today.

However, this policy is not so strict as to rule out either option you mention.

Canon law provides explicitly for Catholic burial in other cemeteries. Where possible, sections in civil or other religious cemeteries may be set aside for Catholic burial.

Where this is not practical, individual graves are blessed at the time of a Catholic burial (Canon 1240).

People of other faiths (spouses who are not Catholic are a common example) may be buried in a Catholic cemetery. This practice is common.

Each diocese or province may have its own policies on these matters, however, so it's best to ask your parish priest about details.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about receiving the holy Eucharist is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions for this column should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

New Diocesan Policy Requires Yearlong Preparation For Marriage

WILMINGTON, Del. (CNS) — Beginning next January, Catholic couples wishing to marry in the Diocese of Wilmington will be required to participate in a three-stage preparation process that will take a year to complete, Wilmington Bishop Michael A. Saltarelli has announced. These changes are part of the newly revised diocesan Marriage Preparation Policy and Guidelines. Bishop Saltarelli said this expanded process is intended to help couples better prepare to enter a lifelong commitment.

Cara Reports Enrollments In Seminaries, Ministry Programs

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The number of post-college U.S. Catholic seminarians rose by 120 last year, the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate said. It said there were 3,292 seminarians in theology or pre-theology programs at the start of the 1996-97 school year, up from 3,172 the previous year. It reported that there were at least 2,183 men preparing to become permanent deacons and more than 20,000 Catholics enrolled in lay ministry formation programs. Nearly two-thirds of those in lay ministry formation were women. The figures, released in late May, were contained in the first edition of the CARA Catholic Ministry Formation Directory.

Pressures On Family Raised As Main Concern At Laity Meetings

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The concerns of people trying to figure out their responsibilities as Catholic laity increasingly begin at home, according to participants in workshops on the role of lay Catholics in the world. At one of a series of sessions being held around the country on the subject, Tom Donnelly of the National Center for the Laity said a surprising percentage of participants are most concerned about how to balance the pressures of job and family. In the past, those involved in the center placed greater emphasis on the struggle to represent Christian values in the workplace, he explained. Donnelly was part of a panel that discussed some of the current trends in lay participation in the Church at a May 31 conference in Washington.

Retired Archbishop Not Eligible For Synod Post

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. bishops have been notified that Archbishop John R. Quinn, whom they elected last November as one of their 15 delegates to the special Synod of Bishops for America, is ineligible for the post because he is retired. Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, said in a letter to bishops that Rome's rules for the synod do not allow retired bishops to serve as elected delegates. He said a replacement for Archbishop Quinn would be elected when the bishops meet June 19-21 in Kansas City, Mo.

Bishops Reject Legalization Of Euthanasia In Colombia

BOGOTA, Columbia (CNS) — The Colombian bishops have condemned a Constitutional Court's decision that allows euthanasia in Colombia. Archbishop Alberto Giraldo Jaramillo, president of the Colombian bishops' conference, called the decision "a legal absurdity and a human monstrosity," adding that "nobody has the right to decide on the moment to terminate life, not even his own." In May, Colombia's Constitutional Court, which acts as the country's supreme court, determined that physicians who end the life of a terminally ill patient upon the patient's request would not go to jail, thus approving the practice of euthanasia.

Vatican Newspaper Says Fertility Monitors Can Be Acceptable

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican newspaper gave a qualified endorsement to high-tech fertility monitors, saying their use for natural family planning is acceptable as long as a couple's intentions are right. Computerized mini-monitors which "read" a woman's cycle through hormone measurement were recently introduced in Italy. The devices indicate several days each cycle in which couples should abstain from sex to avoid pregnancy, and manufacturers claimed a 94 percent success rate.

Polish Church Leaders Hail Tribunal Ruling On Abortion Law

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — Leaders of Poland's Catholic Church have welcomed a Constitutional Tribunal ruling that the country's 1996 abortion law violates the constitution. However, supporters of legal abortion said they would try to overturn the decision in a national referendum. "This decision comforts those who never accepted the new law's formulations," said Bishop Stanislaw Stefanek of Lomza, chairman of the church's Family Commission. "Doctors and lawyers spoke against this law, while many gynecologists, faced with conflicts between their conscience and imposed procedural and legal norms, refused to kill children. The decision has given light to all these initiatives and attitudes."

Theological Commission Says No To New Marian Dogmas

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Members of an international theological commission, meeting at the Vatican's request, unanimously agreed that the Roman Catholic Church should not solemnly define new teachings about the Virgin Mary. "The response of the commission, purposefully brief, was unanimous and precise: It is not opportune to abandon the road marked out by the Second Vatican Council and proceed with the definition of new dogma," said a June 4 announcement in the Vatican newspaper. In recent years, the newspaper said, Pope John Paul II has received petitions from "certain circles" asking that Mary be formally proclaimed as "Mediatrice" (Mediator), "Corredemptrix" (Co-redeemer) and Advocate.

Diocesan School Board Openings:

The Diocese of Charlotte School Board has four board member positions to be filled. The term is for three years. The Board is responsible for proposing policies to Bishop Curlin to enact in governing 17 schools. The Board meets monthly from Sept.-June on agreed upon dates from 6:30-9 p.m. The Board meetings are held in a different school each month. Interested applicants should send by June 20 a letter and resume detailing parish and/or school involvement and state why you would like Bishop Curlin to appoint you to serve on the Diocesan School Board. Please send information to: Dr. Michael Skube, Superintendent of Schools, 1524 E. Morehead St., Charlotte, NC 28207.

The Mustard Seed

Jesus said, "To what shall we compare the kingdom of God, or what parable can we use for it? It is like a mustard seed that, when it is sown in the ground, is the smallest of all the seeds on the earth. But once it is sown, it springs up and becomes the largest of plants and puts forth large branches, so that the birds of the sky can dwell in its shade." With many such parables he spoke the word to them as they were able to understand it. (Mark 4:30-34)

Our Lady of the Mountains

HIGHLANDS — Bishop Vincent S. Waters of Raleigh purchased the present property of Our Lady of the Mountains Church in July 1945. Before the church was built five years later, local Catholics gathered with priests from Waynesville for Masses in a playhouse theater. In 1954, Father Charles O'Connor, pastor in Brevard, extended his ministry to Highlands Catholics. From then until 1972, Our Lady of the Mountains Church was staffed by diocesan clergy of Sacred Heart Church in Brevard.

Additions to the church buildings marked the mid-1960s, and a small apartment was built onto the structure in 1972.

That year, ministerial responsibility for Highlands shifted from Brevard to Franklin. Glenmary Father Michael Langell, pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Church, served the two communities for a decade before diocesan priests were assigned to the Franklin parish in 1982. During Father Langell's pastorate in Highlands, the church patio and basement parish hall were constructed.

In December 1986, Father John Hoover became administrator of Our Lady of the Mountains Church, a development which carried parish status for the Highlands congregation. St. Jude Church in Sapphire Valley was also placed under Highlands' pastoral care.

The church building was renovated in 1987, and a rectory was constructed the following year. As the congregation grew, especially during summers, the need for more worship space became a pressing reality. In October 1989, the addition of a two-story wing was completed, providing another 100 seats in the sanctuary and parish hall.

When the Our Lady of the Mountains family celebrated its 40th anniversary in 1990, a bell and tower were added to the church grounds. Throughout the two acres of property, an effort has been made to provide parishioners and visitors with opportunities for prayer and contemplation in a peaceful mountain setting. In addition to the sanctuary, churchgoers visit a grotto dedicated to Mary, a meditation garden, a fish pond and a small grove of trees.

In the fall of 1992 Father Hoover was succeeded by Father Joseph Ayathupadam, now pastor of Our Lady of the Annunciation in Albemarle. After Father Ayathupadam, Father Raymond Berg became the parish's third resident pastor. Father Berg retired in the summer of 1996.

Our Lady of the Mountains again assumed mission status in July 1996, when its care — and that of St. Jude Church in Sapphire Valley — was returned to the clergy of Franklin. Father Richard T. McCue, named pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Church in 1994, now serves the three churches of the two-county parish along with Father James Collins, parochial vicar since 1995.

Bishop Ordains Two New Priests For Diocese

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Family members, friends and parishioners of the Diocese of Charlotte filled St. Patrick Cathedral beyond capacity on June 14 as they witnessed two men pass from one phase of their faith journey into another: the ministry of priesthood.

Jose Arturo DeAguilar Lopez and Walter Ray Williams, respectively serving as transitional deacons since June and October of 1996, were ordained to the priesthood during a liturgy filled with solemnity, music and a multicultural flavor.

Bishop William G. Curlin presided over the liturgy at which DeAguilar, a native of Mexico, and Williams, who grew up in the Asheville area, promised humble obedience not only to their diocesan shepherd, but to Jesus himself.

Almost 50 priests serving in and visiting the Charlotte Diocese joined in concelebrating with Bishop Emeritus Raymond W. Lessard of the Diocese of Savannah and Father Mauricio W. West, the Diocese of Charlotte's chancellor and vicar general.

During the rite of ordination following the Liturgy of the Word, Father Frank O'Rourke, diocesan director of vocations, presented the candidates to Bishop Curlin and the assembly.

The bishop then began his homily, explaining the relationship between priests and their congregations. "No one can deny that today we are living in a world filled with so many troubles," the bishop said. "Family life is being attacked. Morals are being attacked. Vision and idealism are being attacked.

"And God's holy people look to their priests for the inspiration, example and encouragement they need to bear and overcome these attacks. They look to their priests for that strength of the Gospel that their priests preach to them."

Reminding the candidates of the dedication of the late Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, Bishop Curlin pleaded with them to recommit themselves daily to Jesus. "To be a priest is to absorb the attitude and the mind of Christ through prayer, through times of Eucharistic adoration, through your personal devotion, through the study of the Scriptures, (and) through sharing with brother priests your high ideals....," he added.

During the examination of the candidates, Rev. Mr. DeAguilar and Rev. Mr. Williams assured their bishop that they faithfully intend to celebrate Christ's mysteries, to preach the Gospel, to explain the faith and to consecrate their lives in service to God's people.

After the men vowed obedience and Bishop Curlin prayed that God will bring their priestly work to its highest potential, the candidates prostrated themselves as the crowd prayed the Litany of the Saints.

In a solemn moment, Bishop Curlin and the concelebrating priests silently laid their hands upon the head of each kneeling candidate. Surrounded by his brother priests, the diocesan shepherd began the prayer of consecration, invoking God's guidance in the lives of the two men. At this point the deacons sacramentally entered into the fullness of their vocation.

Bishop Curlin anointed Father Williams' and Father DeAguilar's hands, a sign of preserving the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit. He then watched as the priests were invested with their stoles and chasibules, the outer vestments they will wear while celebrating Mass.

The priests joined their fellow clergy in concelebrating the Liturgy of the Eucharist. Father Williams and Father DeAguilar dispensed the Eucharist to family members and assisted Bishop Curlin and Bishop Lessard in administering the sacrament to the congregation.

A reception in the gymnasium of St. Patrick School followed the recessional, during which the newly ordained were showered with applause and smiles.

For Father O'Rourke, the ordination joyfully reminded him of his ministerial responsibilities. "I see my role as vocation director placing me in a privileged position to minister for and with our

Why Are U.S. Catholics So Pro-Death Penalty?

By CAROL ZIMMERMANN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — If the jury deciding Timothy McVeigh's sentence were made up of all Catholics, there's a pretty good chance the convicted bomber would still have been given the death penalty.

That's because polls showing the general public's approval of the death penalty also reveal that Catholics feel the same way.

"Catholics are caught up in the culture in general," said Daniel Misleh, policy adviser for criminal justice issues for the U.S. Catholic Conference.

And the culture in general, as highlighted by the focus on the Denver courtroom in early June, is big on retribution.

McVeigh was found guilty June 2 in the April 1995 bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building that killed 168 people and was called the worst act of domestic terrorism in U.S. history. The next week, the same jury recommended that he should die by lethal injection.

In the days before the penalty phase of his trial, McVeigh essentially became the poster boy for the death penalty issue. National news magazines ran his photo on their covers with the caption, "Should He Die?"

"If you are going to have a capital punishment, that's a perfect person to use that punishment against," said Oklahoma Gov. Frank Keating, a Catholic, about McVeigh shortly after the verdict.

Most Americans voiced the same opinion, pointing to the heinousness of the crime and McVeigh's visible lack of remorse.

But some lone voices in opposition to the death penalty in this case were the U.S. bishops. In television interviews, letters to their dioceses and columns in their diocesan newspapers, the bishops repeatedly defended the sanctity of all human life and the possibility of redemption even for mass murderers.

"The Catholic bishops of the United States, in union with the teaching of Pope John Paul II, have come to see that the death penalty perpetuates a terrible cycle of violence, diminishes respect for human life and ultimately fails to ease the pain of those who grieve," wrote Archbishop Eusebius J. Beltran of Oklahoma City.

Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., chairman of the bishops' Domestic Policy Committee, said, "We are called to seek justice without vengeance."

And Archbishop Charles J. Chaput of Denver told reporters covering the McVeigh trial that the only real solution to the violence "is to find some way of forgiving."

...the Church has been unable to get across the basic principle that each human life has dignity, not just in its stance against abortion, but in providing for the poor, ensuring health care, welfare legislation and opposition to the death penalty.

Church's Evolving Position Requires Education Of Faithful

The bishops' statements reflected the Church's evolving position on the death penalty.

The "Catechism of the Catholic Church" says public authorities can impose the death penalty "in cases of extreme gravity." But it adds that "if bloodless means are sufficient" to protect life and public order, they are "more in conformity to the dignity of the human person."

Pope John Paul II's 1995 encyclical "Evangelium Vitae" had virtually ruled out capital punishment, saying cases meeting the necessary test today were "very rare if not practically nonexistent."

Thus, future editions of the catechism will be revised to reflect the Church's stronger reservations about the death penalty.

So why hasn't this message been accepted in the pews?

Father Jerry Lowney, a criminologist and chair of the sociology department at Carroll College in Helena, Mont., attributes it to the "cafeteria Catholic" mentality of picking and choosing Church teaching and also to a lack of understanding about the Church's position.

He said when he has spoken about capital punishment in homilies, people have come up to him afterward saying they were "unaware there was a Church position on the death penalty."

"We have to drill home the consistent ethic of life," he said in a June 20 telephone interview.

He said the Church has been unable to get across the basic principle that each human life has dignity, not just in its stance against abortion, but in providing for the poor, ensuring health care, welfare legislation and opposition to the death penalty.

To those who quote the Bible as a defense for capital punishment, he suggests looking at the Gospel of Matthew where he says the teaching of "an eye for an eye" was "overturned."

Misleh agreed that "we need to do a lot better job of educating Catholics," saying if Catholics realized that many death penalty cases are arbitrary or racially based, they'd begin to see that "there's something to the issue of human dignity."

The public in general needs more understanding of complexities and misconceptions about the death penalty, said law professors Fred Bennett of The Catholic University of America and Alan Raphael of Loyola University of Chicago.

Both have represented death-row inmates and are convinced the growing public approval of death penalty will not diminish until cases are publicized where innocent people were wrongly sentenced to death.

Today 38 states have the death penalty and there are more than 3,000 death-row inmates. In the last 20 years there have been 392 executions.

As the death sentence becomes more prevalent and courts do not intervene, Bennett told CNS that people become even more accepting of the policy and "say it's all right."

With strongly held positions justifying the death penalty, seeing the other side seems almost impossible.

"Forgiveness is a strong moral challenge," wrote Archbishop Francis T. Hurley of Anchorage, Alaska, in a column for the June 29 issue of Catholic Commentary, a weekly archdiocesan publication.

He said the two sides of the death penalty debate are based on two morally defensible positions.

"Capital punishment," he writes, "is a classic case of two schools of thought both expressing respect for life but each making a different application of the principle to practical situations."

Remember His Will In Yours.

"A valid Will stands as a continuing expression of our concern for loved ones, as well as an ongoing commitment to the Church and the community in which we live."

Bishop William G. Curlin

You can express your commitment to your Church by making a bequest to the Diocese of Charlotte or to your parish. Simply have the following statement included in your Will:

"I leave to the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte (or _____ parish, city) the sum of $ _____ (or _____ percent of the residue of my estate) for its religious, educational and charitable works."

For more information on how to make a Will that works, contact Jim Kelley, Diocese of Charlotte, Office of Development, 1524 East Morehead St., Charlotte, NC 28207, (704) 331-1709 or 377-6871.

seminarians," he said. "Arturo and Ray's ordination has me marvel at the uniqueness of each of these men, and at the same time they are making the same response to an inner calling to serve that is shared by all priests."

"It's humbling to be caught up in the mystery of their lives and in this gift of priesthood that has been given to us."

Father DeAguilar, who presided at his first Mass the next day at St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton, will serve as parochial vicar of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville. Father Williams has been appointed the parochial vicar at the Cathedral of St. Patrick. He also celebrated his first liturgy the next day, at his home parish of St. Eugene in Asheville. Both assignments are scheduled to begin on July 9.

The two men now enter a new stage of faith, one which their bishop hopes will be met with a zealous desire to embrace their ministry. "You cannot live on the surface of priesthood," Bishop Curlin said. "You cannot believe, my two dear brothers, that putting on vestments, lifting a chalice, giving a blessing, or preaching the Gospel will (in itself) heal a soul."

"You will save souls by living like Jesus Christ, because it's not your priesthood — it's his priesthood that you live."

Parents influence vocation choices

Parental encouragement plays a significant role in whether people consider a religious vocation (priest, brother, sister). Catholic teens say:

When parents haven't encouraged vocations

- 67% Never considered a vocation
- 33% Considered a vocation (5% are still open to it)

When parents encouraged vocations

- 41% Never considered a vocation
- 59% Considered a vocation (15% are still open to it)

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Speaks Of "Extraordinary" Trip To Poland

Dear brothers and sisters,

My recent pastoral visit to Poland centered on three celebrations. In Wroclaw, I celebrated the concluding Mass of the International Eucharistic Congress, an occasion of deep reflection and prayer on the mystery of the real presence of our Savior — the one who has made us free (cf. Gal 5:2) — in the sacrifice and sacrament of the altar. In Gniezno I joined in the celebration of the millennium of the martyrdom of St. Adalbert. Gniezno was the site of an important congress held in the year 1000 which marked Poland's entrance into a united Europe, a fact symbolized by the presence of the presidents of the countries associated with St. Adalbert's life and work.

At Krakow, with great joy I presided at the canonization of Queen Hedwig and took part in the celebration of the 600th anniversary of the establishment of the theology faculty at the Jagiellonian University. These and other events, including the canonization of the Franciscan Jan of Dukla, and the beatification of Blessed Maria Bernardina Jablonska and Blessed Maria Karlowska, were all very festive occasions and especially significant for the life of the church in Poland.

I am very grateful to the church and state authorities and all who made this pastoral visit possible. Above all, I thank almighty God for the many blessings granted to my homeland over the last thousand years.

I am pleased to greet the distinguished members of the World Psychiatric Association meeting in Rome. May your important work of healing always be inspired by an integral vision of the human person and respect for the inviolable dignity and transcendent vocation of every individual. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially those from England, Ireland, Malta, South Africa, Australia, Indonesia, the Philippines and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Fujimori, Former Hostages Meet With Pope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori and six former hostages from the four-month drama in Lima met Pope John Paul II in mid-June. A statement released by the Vatican said Fujimori spoke with the pope and with Cardinal Angelo Sodano, Vatican secretary of state, about the hostage crisis and issues of mutual interest to Peru and the Holy See. The statement said the president thanked Pope John Paul "for the personal interest with which he followed the recent painful events in Peru" and for the work the Catholic Church has done to further his country's spiritual and material progress.

Pope Says European Church Must Promote Church Social Doctrine

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II told Catholic teachers that the Church in Europe needs to do everything it can to ensure that justice and morality figure into social planning. "In the daily culture of contemporary Europe, there's a strong tendency to 'privatize' ethics and to negate the public relevance of the Christian moral message," the pope said to members of a June 20 conference of church social doctrine teachers. "The social doctrine that the Church represents in itself refutes such privatization," he said, "because it brings to light the authentic and decisive social dimensions of faith, thereby illustrating the ethical consequences."

Is This for Real?

It's time for a round of "Is this for real?" — a time when I review a few items I've found in the media. I have long maintained there's always something new under the sun, and items like these prove it.

Consider this one. A 57-year-old woman in Pasadena, Calif., found herself in big trouble for the terrible crime of feeding pigeons. Yes, you read it right. A woman living on disability checks had, since 1972, been spending $10 a day for birdseed to feed the crowds of birds who come each morning to her home.

Now here's the problem. Someone apparently dusted off a 1964 ordinance that makes feeding pigeons on public streets a misdemeanor. The woman has been breaking a law! She was due to stand trial. If convicted, she faced a maximum sentence of six months in jail and a $500 fine.

An Associated Press story in May quoted the woman saying: "God is with me. These are his pigeons. God's side is with me." Somehow I think she's got it right!

Then there was the Cincinnati, Ohio, grandmother who was convicted of a misdemeanor for "interfering with an officer trying to ticket overdue cars." Of course, she didn't know she was committing a crime. She thought she was doing random acts of kindness. She had seen two overdue parking meters, and to spare the owners, albeit strangers, a ticket, she put a dime and a nickel into both meters.

Obviously this is serious business because she had to get a lawyer to defend her in court. The municipal court jury convicted her of "obstructing official business," but acquitted her of misdemeanor disorderly conduct. Because of the conviction, she faced up to 90 days in jail and a $750 fine.

I side with what her lawyer said: "She was doing a good deed (and) should be congratulated for her act, not punished."

Has something gone haywire in this land of ours when a random act of kindness — which many are rightly touting as a good thing — can land you in jail?

Now here's another one for the books. Shops near a campus of the University of Maryland offer a 10 percent to 20 percent discount to students who sign a pledge not to cheat.

Meryle Freiberg, education chairwoman for the student honor council, in a New York Times article acknowledged that signing a pledge will not guarantee the end of cheating, "but it will at least get them to think about integrity."

I hate to reflect on what this says about our values when moral behavior is no longer chosen because it is the right way to act, but because it is the most profitable.

One final note: A sign I saw in a small restaurant in Cape Coral, Fla., gave me a smile for the day: "If you are grouchy, irritable or just plain mean, there will be a $10 charge for putting up with you."

They may be on to something — that people should have to pay for their bad behavior!

Taking A Risk, Taking Time

Laura Schroff took a risk that gives us pause. It was the kind of gamble that could have easily backfired and made even her closest friends doubt her good judgment.

The sales executive was steps away from her Manhattan apartment when an 11-year-old boy approached her and asked for a quarter to get something to eat. She started to go around him but took a second look. "He had huge sad eyes. His sweatshirt and sweatpants were dirty. And he was just a child."

So she took him to McDonald's. While they were eating, she learned the young panhandler's name, Maurice Mazyck, and that his mother, two older sisters and four other relatives were crammed into one room at a nearby welfare hotel. He wasn't going to school regularly and seemed destined for the shadowy margins of society. That is, until Laura Schroff made another decision.

She invited him to her home for dinner once a week. Laura used the opportunity to teach him table manners and how to handle simple chores like washing dishes. Afterwards, Maurice opened up his books and worked on his homework. Then she sent him off with extra food she had prepared for his family.

Five mornings a week the boy stopped by to pick up a bagged lunch. Maurice confided that he was thrilled to bring a packed lunch bag to school because it showed that "someone really cares about me."

The road ahead was not smooth. After about three years, Maurice's mother was imprisoned for drug possession, his family was moved to Brooklyn, and Laura herself married and went to the suburbs. Yet, Laura kept in contact with Maurice on a regular basis, helping him to grow into manhood self-assured and resilient.

It has been 11 years since they first met. Maurice is married with a 3-year-old son, and holding down a decent job. His sisters are working full time. His mother successfully underwent drug rehabilitation.

Ironically, as always seems to be the case in Good Samaritan stories, Laura Schroff claims to be the most blessed by what happened on that busy street in midtown Manhattan. "People tell me that Maurice was lucky to have met me at such a critical time in his life. But I believe I was just as fortunate. Maurice taught me to be grateful for what I have. And he showed me that a little compassion can go a long way."

By what special grace and courage do people like Maurice and Laura live and breathe? And what did Laura Schroff's involvement cost her? Some money, yes. Certainly trust and commitment. But perhaps the most priceless element by modern standards is the one thing most of us would hold back: Time.

This is an era when people walk away from a problem because they don't want to spend the time to help solve it. Every precious minute of every precious day is accounted for: This much for work — that's number one, the big priority, we say. Then home and family. Let's not forget the leisure we deserve. You know what? That's all true, as far as it goes. It just doesn't go quite far enough.

Because every once in a while people like Laura Schroff and Maurice Mazyck remind us what happens when we stop staring at the face of a clock, and seek instead the face of God.

To Go or Not Go to a Child's Wedding

Q. We have a situation in our family that is painful for many of us. We hope you can give some advice.

Our granddaughter is to be married later this year to a Protestant young man, in his church, without permission or dispensation from the Catholic Church.

We have other children and many grandchildren, and are concerned that we do not send the wrong message to them by attending the wedding or otherwise doing something that might imply approval.

I wrote to her expressing our hope she would be married with the blessing of the Catholic faith. We've always had a good relationship, which may be the reason she responded to her aunt, knowing I would probably get the message.

She said she was sorry for the hurt she was causing, but since slipping away at college she some time ago stopped attending Mass altogether.

They are going together now to his church. She enjoys the services, says she is happy to belong there with her husband, plans to raise her children in that faith and claims to have no intention ever to return to the Catholic Church.

We don't wish to alienate her or any of the family, but we want to do what is right. We hope you can give us a firm answer.

A. Neither I nor anyone can give you the clear final answer you might wish. But I can give you a few important things to think about.

First, I admire your faith, and your concern about everyone involved. Your desire not to break relations with her or others in the family is healthy, and somehow whatever you do needs to be done with every possible attempt to preserve your closeness.

It is important, too, to remember you have as much right to your convictions, and sense of responsibility, and commitments of faith as she does.

Be open with her, and with your other children and their families, about your concerns, your love for them and your reasons for whatever you decide to do or not to do. If they love you they will accept what you feel you must do in your love for them.

Another factor which may be some consolation and help is that, according to present canon law, her marriage may well be recognized by the Catholic Church.

Normally, the marriage of a Catholic — in order to be married validly according to church law — must take place in the presence of the bishop or a priest or deacon delegated by him.

However, former Catholics who have left the church "by a formal act" are not bound by that law (Canon 1117).

In other words, their marriage by a minister or judge would be as valid in the eyes of the Catholic Church as any other legal marriage of two non-Catholics who are free to marry each other.

What exactly such a "formal act" might be is not clearly defined. But your granddaughter's words indicate a fairly definitive statement that she no longer considers herself a member of the Catholic faith.

You might talk to your parish priest, or one in the diocese where she is to be married, to ask his evaluation of the case.

I realize this cannot heal the hurt that she will not share the faith that is so important to you and others in your family. At least you will know that her marriage is recognized by the church.

These are always difficult decisions, and others will come. Do the best you can. Recognize and accept that there are some things which simply are not under your control.

In these situations there is usually no black and white, right and wrong answer. It's a matter of weighing all your concerns as prayerfully as you can, then deciding what you think will be best in the long run for everyone involved.

Celibacy For Gays Unjust

To The Editor,

I'm writing in response to an article printed in a recent edition of The Catholic News & Herald entitled "Salvation for Gays Requires Celibacy," taken from the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano.

My first question is, why did you choose to print this particular article among the many that are available from that specific newspaper? I feel angry because such statements support prejudice against homosexuals in the name of Jesus the Christ.

How can a church, specifically the diocesan church here in Charlotte, which is calling upon its pastors to reach out to the homosexual community, print such a negative statement? Why doesn't the article state that heterosexuals can attain salvation if they remain celibate? Wouldn't that be an equal statement, a "just" statement? Where is the "good news" or "gospel" for those who are gay and Catholic? The "limitations" and "wounds" of being gay come more from the church and society than from God.

I look forward to reading more positive articles in The Catholic News & Herald regarding the goodness and the holiness of my lesbian and gay sisters and brothers.

Stewardship Profile

St. Peter Church Donates To Community Causes

CHARLOTTE — In 1988, Jesuit Father John Haughey, who was the pastor of St. Peter Church at the time, presented a proposal to parish leaders asking them to consider becoming a tithing parish and to agree to give 10 percent of their offertory to charitable causes outside the parish.

Father Haughey thought that becoming a tithing parish was important for several reasons. First, he felt that the church needed to give to others and share its blessings according to the biblical tithe — 10 percent of one's income in gratitude for God's blessings. He also believed that since the parish had recently begun promoting stewardship as a way of life it should set a good example for the parishioners. And Father Haughey agreed with the Diocesan Synod, completed the year before, which emphasized the importance of parishes tithing their offertory to the community.

The parish leaders concurred with their pastor and decided from then on to give 10 percent of the parish offertory to charitable causes. They have remained faithful to that commitment ever since.

Today, under the pastoral leadership of Jesuit Father James Devereux and the dedication of parochial vicar Jesuit Father Gene McCreesh, St. Peter Church continues to commit 10 percent of its offertory to those in need. At the end of each month, 10 percent of the month's offertory is set aside in a special fund to be dispersed by the tithing committee. The parish has decided to tithe all gifts to the parish, whether they are regular offertory or other donations.

The tithing committee, chaired by Pam Foltz, meets quarterly to consider requests and allocate funds. Agencies requesting funds must send a letter specifying their request. If the agency does not provide adequate background information, or if it is not known to at least one of the committee members, a member is required to research the agency or program.

When allocating funds, the tithing committee places its primary emphasis on organizations with a long-term repetitive commitment and those working toward political or structural change. According to Foltz, special consideration is given to requests from parishioners for their favorite charitable causes. She adds, "There is so much need and so little resources; this entire process must be firmly rooted in prayer."

St. Peter parish funds a variety of agencies or programs, primarily in the Charlotte area but also across the diocese and overseas. During the first three quarters of this fiscal year, the committee funded 30 programs. Some of the local projects included: Crisis Assistance Ministry, The Uptown Shelter, Friendship Trays, Charlotte Emergency Housing, Loaves and Fishes, Charlotte Has Heart, and The Center for Urban Ministry. The funds have supported special projects with Catholic Social Services and parishes with special needs such as St. Andrew the Apostle in Mars Hill. Working through "A Child's Place," the committee helped provide child-care for a woman with four children who wanted to get back on her feet and return to work. Outside the country the parish helped a parish pastor in India who is working to improve the plight of women by providing sewing machines.

St. Peter Church is committed to tithing the parish offertory. That commitment resulted in help for the agencies who, in turn, have helped thousands of individuals and a parish that takes the call to live out faith in action seriously.

Lincolnton Family Receives Knights State Award

The Randall Marcum family, pictured at left with the N.C. State Knights of Columbus Family of the Year Award, is noted for its dedication to service.

LINCOLNTON — Officers and members of the North Carolina Knights of Columbus State Council honored the Randall J. Marcum family of Lincolnton with the N.C. State Family of the Year Award at the Knights' 77th annual state convention last month at the Adam's Mark Hotel in Winston-Salem.

Sir Knight Randall Marcum and his family received the award after being nominated by their local council, 8664 of St. Dorothy Church. Taken into consideration was the involvement of each member in five areas of service: church, community, council, family and youth.

"It's very difficult to get a 'no' out of them," chuckled Gary Montgomery, Grand Knight of Council 8664. "The Marcums are on fire to help people. They are true examples of Christian giving, and are an inspiration to all who come in contact with them — and that is quite a crowd."

Randy Marcum serves Council 8664 as Deputy Grand Knight, youth director and chief counselor of the Squires, the Knights-sponsored youth organization. He is also an officer in his Fourth Degree Assembly.

An active member of St. Dorothy parish, he serves on the parish council, and is a Eucharistic minister, greeter, religious education teacher and hospital minister. In addition, he has coordinated the Youth Quest group, an outreach of the Renew program which focuses on small-group faith sharing. In his community, Randy delivers Meals on Wheels, assists the elderly, volunteers at Iron Station Elementary School, participates in Operation LAMB for the mentally handicapped, and serves as president of his neighborhood Homeowners' Association.

Randy and his wife, Carolyn, are the parents of four children. Carolyn serves her parish through Eucharistic ministry and the religious education program. She also assists in coordinating the parish's Angel Tree Christmas project, serves on the parish festival committee and mentors for the Adopt An Underprivileged Child community program in addition to a variety of other activities.

The oldest of the Marcum children, 18-year-old Angie, participates in parish and community life as a Eucharistic minister, Christian Ministries volunteer, Youth Quest member and parish festival helper. She also finds time to volunteer at the local hospital.

Amy, 15, is active in parish life as well, serving as a reader, Christian Ministries volunteer, Youth Quest member and festival helper.

Thirteen-year-old Mandy serves as a greeter at Mass, a Christian Ministries volunteer and festival helper. She enjoys aiding the elderly as well.

Joey, 10, is an altar server, Christian Ministries volunteer and festival assistant. During the summer months he ministers to the elderly, mowing grass for those who need his services.

Father Richard Farwell, pastor of St. Dorothy Church, said the Marcum family is a credit to the values of stewardship, evangelization and family life. "They personify what St. Dorothy tries to promote: family-centered witness to the Gospel," he added. "They are a blessing."

The Marcums have also been nominated for recognition as Supreme Family of the Year, to be announced in August.

In other state convention news, Grand Knight Mike Farrell of Council 9499, Clemmons, was named the Knight of the Year, and Daniel R. Wanken of Council 8857, Hope Mills, was honored as Golden Knight of the Year.

The Supreme Service Program Awards were presented to the following councils: Pinehurst Council 11103 for service to church; Wilmington Council 1074 for service to community; Clemmons Council 9499 for service to council; Garner Council 11266 for service to family; and Kernersville Council 8509 for service to youth.

The State Deputy Award was given to a number of councils in three divisions. The winners for large council are: Greensboro Council 939; Fayetteville Council 2838; and Hope Mills Council 8857; for medium council: Lincolnton Council 8664; and Lenoir Council 9570; and for small council: Wendell Council 10892; and Roxboro Council 11235.

Among the other award winners were 18 councils which received Honor Council status and 39 councils which received Distinguished Council status.

State officers were also elected or moved up one chair for the new fraternal year. The elected officers are John Harrison of Clemmons, state deputy; and Phil Lamendola of Kernersville, state warden. Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Holy Family Church, Clemmons, was appointed state chaplain.

Dos nuevos sacerdotes fueron ordenados en la Catedral

Por LUIS A. WOLF

CHARLOTTE -El 14 de junio, la Catedral de San Patricio se llenó de familiares, amigos y sacerdotes que asistieron a la ordenación de José Arturo de Aguilar López y Walter Ray Williams como nuevos sacerdotes de la Diócesis de Charlotte.

El Excelentísimo Monseñor William G. Curlin, Obispo de la Diócesis de Charlotte fue el celebrante de esta solemne ceremonia, teniendo como concelebrantes al Excelentísimo Monseñor Raymond W. Lessard, Obispo Emérito de Savannah y al muy Reverendo Mauricio W. West, Vicario General y Canciller de la diócesis.

Después de la presentación de los candidatos, Arturo de Aguilar y Ray Williams, entre otras cosas, el Obispo Curlin dijo en su homilía: "Yo les suplico, mis queridos hermanos que han venido a esta Catedral de San Patricio para ser sacerdotes, que hoy se digan a ustedes mismos: 'Yo quiero ser más que un sacerdote ordenado. Yo quiero alcanzar en pleno lo que Cristo me pide en esta ordenación que observe y cumpla. Yo quiero ser un sacerdote santo'".

El Obispo dijo también: "Ustedes no pueden vivir en la superficie del sacerdocio. Ustedes no pueden creer, mis dos queridos hermanos, que poniéndose las vestimentas, elevando el cáliz y dando una bendición o absolución o predicando el Evangelio van a salvar un alma... Ustedes salvarán almas viviendo como Jesucristo porque no es vuestro sacerdocio, es el sacerdocio de Jesucristo el que ustedes viven. San Pablo dijo, 'Debemos tener en nosotros el espíritu de Cristo. Debemos pensar como Cristo, y si pensamos como Cristo, viviremos, actuaremos y hablaremos como Cristo'".

El Obispo Curlin les recordó las promesas que hicieron de servir a Cristo y al prójimo. Les recordó los muchos sacrificios que tendrán que hacer, la vida de celibato y continuó diciendo que "cuando pongan sus manos en mis manos y prometan obediencia no es a mí solamente a quienes se lo dirán. Ustedes le estarán diciendo a Jesús, 'Yo te obedeceré. Yo iré a donde tenga que ir como sacerdote. Yo haré cualquier sacrificio que la Iglesia me pida. Esa obediencia es mi SI a ti Jesús por el resto de mi vida'".

El Padre Arturo de Aguilar celebra su primera Misa

Por LUIS A. WOLF

MORGANTON -La Iglesia de San Carlos Borromeo fue el escenario de la Misa de Acción de Gracias que el Padre Arturo de Aguilar celebró, con la asistencia del diácono Dean Cesa, después de su ordenación como sacerdote en la Catedral de San Patricio, en Charlotte, el día anterior.

Como el día antes en la catedral, la iglesia estaba abarrotada con los feligreses de la parroquia y personas que vinieron de diferentes lugares de la diócesis.

El Reverendo Kenneth Whittington, pastor de la iglesia, ofreció una homilía muy emocionante en inglés y en español.

Antes de la bendición final, el Padre Arturo dio las gracias todas las personas que hicieron posible que él estuviera ahí a través de las oraciones, del apoyo, de la amistad y del cariño que le proporcionaron y dijo que todo esto había llegado, de cierto modo, a su término al completar sus estudios en el seminario pero que ahora era el principio de una nueva etapa.

El Padre Arturo le dio una muy encarecidas gracias al Padre Frank O'Rourke, director de vocaciones, quien lo apoyó desde el principio y a quien considera un gran amigo. También le dio las gracias al Padre Ken Whittington por haberle abierto las puertas, no solo a él sino a la comunidad hispana.

A continuación le dio las gracias a su familia, que desde que entró en el seminario a los doce años, lo apoyó en todo momento y presentó a su mamá, la señora Hortensia López, a sus hermanas Blanca, Verónica y Alejandra, así como a sus sobrinas y sobrinito y también a sus cuñados, José De la O y Bonifacio Melo y a sus tías que vinieron de México para esta ocasión.

El Padre Arturo aprovechó la oportunidad para felicitar al Padre Fidel Melo que celebraba su primer aniversario como sacerdote y presentó a los sacerdotes y diáconos que estuvieron presentes en esta celebración Eucarística de Acción de Gracias.

Para finalizar, el Padre le dio las gracias a la comunidad de San Carlos Borromeo por lo mucho que lo apoyó en todos los aspectos y que esperaba lo siguiera apoyando y orando por él.

Después de la Misa hubo un gran picnic en los terrenos de la iglesia preparado por los feligreses de la parroquia y amenizado con música de mariachis. También los niños bailaron unas danzas típicas mexicanas.

Para finalizar la familia del Padre candidatos se postraron completamente sobre el piso de la catedral mientras todos cantaban la Letanía de los Santos. Más adelante cada uno se arrodilló delante del Obispo Curlin mientras éste imponía sus manos e invocaba la fuerza del Espíritu Santo. El Obispo Lessard y todos los sacerdotes presentes también impusieron las manos sobre los recién ordenados.

Después de ser investidos con la estola y la casulla el Obispo les ungió las manos con el santo óleo y les entregó un cáliz, subiendo más adelante al altar para continuar con la Liturgia Eucarística, donde por primera vez pronunciaron las palabras de la consagración: "éste es mi cuerpo... ésta es mi sangre".

Al finalizar la ceremonia el Obispo se dirigió a los familiares de los ordenados y les dio las gracias por haberlos apoyado y entregado a la vida sacerdotal. También le dio las gracias al Padre Frank O'Rourke por su trabajo como Director de la Oficina de Vocaciones y también agradeció la presencia de los sacerdotes y de toda la comunidad que asistió a esta ceremonia.

El Padre Ray Williams ha sido asignado a la Catedral de San Patricio, en Charlotte y el Padre Arturo a la Basílica de San Lawrence, en Asheville, donde también trabajará con la comunidad hispana del área.

Un momento muy emocionante fue cuando al final el Obispo Curlin le pidió a los Padres Williams y De Aguilar que lo bendijeran. Aquí vemos el momento en que el Obispo le besaba las manos al Padre Arturo después de que éste oró sobre su cabeza.

Cuarto Mandamiento:

Honrarás a tu padre y a tu madre

Continuando con los mandamientos de la Ley comentamos sobre el cuarto mandamiento.

El orden que desde el principio quiso Dios como norma de conducta para los seres humanos, no se limita a nuestras relaciones con Dios mismo, sino que se extiende a nuestra relación con la creación en general y, en especial, con nuestros semejantes.

Encabeza este orden el Cuarto Mandamiento que nos manda a honrar a quienes colaboraron con Dios para darnos la existencia, esto es, a nuestro padre y a nuestra madre.

Este deber viene inculcado con frecuencia en la Sagrada Escritura y tenemos en Jesucristo el mejor ejemplo de su perfecta observancia.

El cumplimiento de este deber es fuente de bendiciones divinas, aun en el orden temporal, para los individuos, para las familias y para las comunidades.

Actitudes equivocadas – Aparte de la concreta falta de respeto y consideración hacia los propios padres, podemos recordar: el falso concepto de obediencia, considerada como contraria a la propia independencia y a la libertad personal; el falso concepto de autoridad, asumido no como verdadero y desinteresado servicio, sino como forma de dominio.

Actitud cristiana – Es natural en todos aquellos que, como hijos, aman, respetan y obedecen a sus propios padres: rezan por ellos, los rodean de amorosos cuidados en sus necesidades y nunca los abandonan o los tratan en forma ofensiva o irreverente. Los recuerdan con cariño hasta después de la muerte.

La relación hijos y padres es básica en el cumplimiento de este mandamiento, pero no la agota. De hecho, cumplen con este mandamiento los mismos padres, buscando una nueva educación humana y religiosa para sus hijos e hijas; los hermanos y las hermanas, apreciándose y agradeciéndose mutuamente.

Los estudiantes, respetando a sus maestros; los maestros cuidando que sus alumnos aprendan la verdad y se preparen para el futuro; los ciudadanos, procurando cumplir con las leyes moralmente justas; los súbditos, respetando toda legítima autoridad; los que tienen autoridad, buscando y procurando el mayor bien para cuantos dependen de ellos.

Mensaje del Padre

Rev. Vicente H. Finnerty, C.M.

Hermanos y hermanas:

Al reflexionar sobre el sacerdocio en estos días, por la ordenación de nuestros hermanos Arturo de Aguilar y Ray Williams, recuerdo algo que escribí hace años cuando me tocaba dar retiros a jóvenes que se iban a ordenar. Es una modificación de las Bienaventuranzas y lo quiero compartir con ustedes.

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes sencillos

—porque harán posible que Dios se transparente a través de sus palabras, de sus miradas, de sus gestos, de su libertad interior y de su veracidad.

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes humildes

—porque pensarán sin dificultad que todo lo han recibido de Dios;
—porque serán constructores de reconciliación y de paz en las comunidades;
—porque no les importará sufrir cualquier desprecio, ya que en su corazón no anidará ni la ambición ni el deseo de ser alabados.

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes sobrios y austeros

—porque les resultará fácil ser felices con cualquier cosa;
—porque no se lamentarán de verse privados de algo;
—porque nunca se quejarán de carecer lo que los pobres jamás han tenido

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes limpios de corazón

—porque el amor a Dios, a sus hermanos sacerdotes y a los pobres colmará ampliamente su necesidad de amar y ser amados;
—porque disfrutarán de una gran armonía entre su interior y su exterior.

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes que aman la pobreza

—porque valorarán más la confianza en Dios que la comodidad;
—porque serán reconocidos por los pobres como sus siervos;
—porque comprenderán que son más importantes las personas que las cosas.

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes obedientes

—porque el Espíritu les revelará el Misterio de Cristo obediente al Padre hasta la muerte;
—porque sentirán con más fuerza la llamada de los pobres que la llamada de su egoísmo;
—porque su rostro reflejará la alegría de la disponibilidad y de la generosidad.

Bienaventurados los sacerdotes que aman su vocación

—porque llenarán de paz y de Dios el corazón de muchos pobres;
—porque se sentirán alentados y guiados por el ejemplo de María;
—porque de ellos será el Reino de los Cielos.

Hermanos y hermanas, que el Señor nos dé a Arturo, a Ray y a todos nosotros los sacerdotes la gracia de vivir plenamente estas bienaventuranzas.

Arturo quiso agradecer las atenciones recibidas ofreciendo una pequeña presentación artística, en la que la madre del Padre Arturo bailó una danza regional mexicana y dos de sus sobrinitas una versión mas moderna de la misma danza. También su hermana Alejandra deleitó a la concurrencia con algunas canciones.

Reforzando las redes del ministerio hispano

Quien ha tenido la oportunidad de celebrar la Eucaristía con distintas comunidades hispanas, se ha dado cuenta que las canciones y ritmos musicales de una Misa mexicana, portorriqueña, salvadoreña o cubana pueden ser muy distintos. Sin embargo hay una canción que se puede escuchar en cualquier parte de los Estados Unidos y que, al parecer, la gente nunca se cansa de cantar. Esta canción, que incluso se ha traducido al inglés, habla de un llamado personal, de una mirada a los ojos, de embarcarse con Jesús y de redes: Pescador de hombres y mujeres.

El mensaje central de tan popular canción se refiere al encuentro personal con Jesús, conversión, y a su invitación a caminar con El hacia el Reino de Dios, envío. Por otro lado, las redes se refieren a los medios o instrumentos por los cuales la Iglesia pesca, evangeliza.

Redes grandes y fuertes. — Si aplicamos la imagen de las redes a la pastoral hispana en Estados Unidos, se puede decir que los tres encuentros nacionales de pastoral hispana y el Plan Pastoral Nacional para el Ministerio Hispano, han sido redes grandes y fuertes para una pesca abundante en los últimos veinticinco años. Gracias a estas redes, la participación de los hispanos en la vida de la Iglesia ha ido en aumento y las estructuras del ministerio hispano se han multiplicado y fortalecido.

Desde la promulgación del Plan Pastoral Nacional en 1987, el número de oficinas diocesanas para el Ministerio Hispano ha aumentado significativamente. Además, se han creados diversas organizaciones nacionales como la Asociación Nacional de Directores Diocesanos para el Ministerio Hispano, la Organización Nacional para Catequesis Hispana y el Concilio Nacional Católico para el Ministerio Hispano. Las organizaciones nacionales que ya existían se han mantenido y, en algunos casos, se han afianzado.

Crecimiento y nuevos retos. — Durante la última reunión del Comité de Obispos para Asuntos Hispanos, en enero pasado en Dallas, Texas, el monseñor Agustín Román, obispo auxiliar de la Arquidiócesis de Miami, Florida, hizo referencia al gran éxito del III Encuentro Nacional Hispano de Pastoral y cómo éste fue posible gracias a que se contó con una estructura adecuada y a un espíritu de Pastoral de Conjunto.

No cabe duda que los recursos con que cuenta el ministerio hispano hoy en día, son más numerosos que lo que había disponible en tiempos del III Encuentro. Por ejemplo, el Comité de Obispos para Asuntos Hispanos es ahora permanente; La Asociación Nacional de Directores Diocesanos para el Ministerio Hispano, con su representación regional, tiene un gran potencial de trabajo y coordinación con las oficinas regionales ya existentes; el número de organizaciones hispanas y de profesionales trabajando en las estructuras eclesiales es mucho mayor.

Sin embargo, el crecimiento y diversificación en la estructura, las caras nuevas en el ministerio hispano en todos los niveles y la realidad global de la misma, han superado el consenso una vez logrado.

Las distintas organizaciones parecen tener el mismo objetivo, pero aún no se ha logrado un objetivo común.

Hacia un nuevo consenso. — La necesidad de continuar fortaleciendo la red estructural de la pastoral hispana a todos los niveles ministeriales es de vital importancia para toda la Iglesia. Con más de veinte millones de católicos hispanos y en la alborada del Tercer Milenio, el reto de una Nueva Evangelización viene con una nota de urgencia para quienes llevan el liderazgo de la pastoral hispana a lo largo y ancho del país.

Como una respuesta a este reto, durante los próximos tres años, el Comité de Obispos para Asuntos Hispanos y el Secretariado para Asuntos Hispanos, dedicarán una buena parte de su tiempo y energías al fortalecimiento de la estructura nacional del Ministerio Hispano.

El obispo Gerald Barnes, presidente del Comité de Obispos para Asuntos Hispanos, enfatiza la necesidad de un proceso para fomentar las nuevas relaciones interpersonales y organizacionales que ayude a crear la visión del futuro y el nuevo consenso para el Tercer Milenio. La iniciativa de fortalecer la red del ministerio hispano, es un gran signo de esperanza para la comunidad católica hispana y para la Iglesia de los Estados Unidos. En ella se refleja un análisis adecuado de la realidad nacional y se expresa un entusiasmo contagiante por caminar juntos y fortalecidos hacia el nuevo milenio.

Una buena oportunidad para comenzar. — Este compromiso se extiende al resto del liderazgo en el país. No es una casualidad que la Asociación Nacional de Directores Diocesanos haya elegido como tema de su próxima conferencia: "Del Tercer Encuentro al Tercer Milenio". Esta convocatoria, la cual se llevará a cabo del 23 al 25 de junio de 1997, en Denver, Colorado, puede ser un buen comienzo para generar una dinámica de encuentro y colaboración que apunten hacia una Pastoral de Conjunto renovada. Quizás este evento sea el primer paso hacia un IV Encuentro; hacia la creación de otra gran red que traiga abundante pesca. Quizás de lugar a una canción que los hispanos católicos, en compañía de sus pastores y del resto de la Iglesia, cantan con mucha armonía, la canción del Pescador.

Para ello contamos con una rica historia y una cultura católica, elocuentemente descritas en la publicación más reciente de los obispos sobre los hispanos: La Presencia Hispana en la Nueva Evangelización en los Estados Unidos. Contamos con la iniciativa de los obispos; con una red ministerial con gran capacidad de crecimiento y, sobre todo, con la compañía y las promesas de nuestro Señor Jesucristo, el pescador por excelencia que nos ha llamado a buscar junto a El otro mar: el del Reino de Dios.

St. Gabriel Parishioner Receives Senior Of The Year Award

CHARLOTTE — At a recent commemoration of 155 teen-agers' dedication to academics and community, Myers Park High School senior and St. Gabriel Church parishioner Sarah Rapisardo received the Mecklenburg County Senior of the Year Award.

Rapisardo, 18, is one of seven high school seniors from across a 15-county region so honored at The Charlotte Observer 38th Annual All-Star Scholars Banquet last month at the Westin Hotel. Members of the group were chosen by high school officials and were judged by a panel of local university, college and newspaper representatives. Award winners each received a $500 scholarship.

Attending the banquet were 155 students from 76 public and private schools in the Carolinas. Individual schools selected their "all stars," nominating one of them for the Senior of the Year Award. From the field of 19 Mecklenburg County candidates for the award, Rapisardo was declared the winner.

A volunteer with the Muscular Dystrophy Association and the Red Cross, Rapisardo also serves her parish community through her teaching in the faith formation program. She is a member of the International Baccalaureate program at Myers Park High. A Pepsi-Cola Scholar Athlete, she is also an avid soccer player and cross-country runner.

Noted by the judges for her sense of humor and "a remarkable appreciation of the complexity that makes issues tough," Rapisardo graduated among the top 10 students of her class earlier this month.

Father Dennis Kuhn, parochial vicar of St. Gabriel Church, knows Rapisardo as a person of faith and service. "She has been very dedicated to teaching preschool for the parish religious education

Graduating CCHS Senior Named Morehead Scholar

CHARLOTTE — For the first time in three decades, a graduating senior of Charlotte Catholic High School has been named a Morehead Scholar.

Barton Walker, 18, was recently named a 1997 recipient of the prestigious full scholarship to the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill. The senior class president is among 68 North Carolina high school seniors chosen for the award, and is the first Charlotte Catholic student to be so honored since 1967.

"Especially with my going to a Catholic school, it was great," Walker said of his hearing the news. "I really felt proud that I am associated with everyone in the diocese and with Catholic schools. I've been glad to have the opportunity to reflect on everything that everybody has done for me."

The Morehead covers all costs of attending UNC-CH and provides opportunities to participate in summer enrichment programs. In July he will venture to Montana for a three-week Outward Bound program, sponsored by the Morehead Foundation.

An intensive inquiry process began in May 1996, when the CCHS administration nominated Walker for consideration by the selection committee. As part of the process, Walker wrote three essays on leadership, ethics and an expression of art having a lasting effect on him.

He also listed his extracurricular activities, which have included tutoring; serving as a member of the anti-drug advocacy group The Standout Club; and leading a senior-run peer group.

From a field of 12 students, Walker was one of four regional candidates selected in March to advance to the final stage of consideration in Chapel Hill, where the Morehead Foundation provided the finalists with an activity-filled weekend and the chance to familiarize themselves with the campus environment.

Following a final battery of interviews, Walker was named one of 68 recipients from the group of 120 finalists.

Charlotte Catholic administrators note that Walker has demonstrated those qualities that the Foundation sought while making its selection: physical vigor, scholastic ability, moral character and leadership.

Mercy Sister Paulette Williams, CCHS principal, also called Walker a "quiet leader" who has dedicated himself "in everything from campus ministry to sports."

"His great contributions to Charlotte Catholic are his service as role model to his peers and his willingness to stand for the same Christian values that (his high school) upholds," she added. "By example, he fosters mutual respect and responsibility."

Walker has been a member of the National Honor Society, and he graduated among the top 10 students in his class. He has also served as co-captain of the CCHS varsity football team, an all-county member of the baseball team, and a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. In addition, he utilized his leadership skills through his position as campus ministry coordinator of the Big Brother/Big Sister program.

Charges Dismissed Against School Of The Americas Protesters

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Charges have been dismissed against 12 people who took part in an April 28 protest at the Pentagon against the School of the Americas. The charges were dismissed with prejudice earlier this month at the U.S. District Court in Alexandria, Va., near the Pentagon, meaning they could be refiled if those arrested engage in further misconduct. "That could come back to haunt us," Marie Richardson, director of the Washington office of SOA Watch, told Catholic News Service. The group is planning a massive civil disobedience action at Fort Benning, Ga., home of the School of the Americas, on Nov. 16, the eighth anniversary of the Jesuit murders in El Salvador.

Bishops Ask Theologians to Help Articulate Catholic Vision

MINNEAPOLIS (CNS) — Two bishops leading workshops at a gathering of North American theologians asked the theologians to help articulate a Catholic vision that will lead the church into the next century. Both cited the phenomenon of religious illiteracy among U.S. Catholics today as an obstacle to church life. Bishop Donald W. Wuerl of Pittsburgh, criticized the "silencing or at least muting of the voice of Catholic institutions of higher learning in the national debates dealing with significant moral issues." He and Archbishop Oscar H. Lipscomb of Mobile, Ala., were among leaders of group sessions during the June convention of the Catholic Theological Society of America in Minneapolis.

Chinese Catholics Welcome Hong Kong Reunification With Prayers

HONG KONG (CNS) — The Catholic Church in China is welcoming Hong Kong's July 1 reunification with China with prayers and special activities. The government-approved Bishops' Conference of the Catholic Church in China issued a letter requesting that Catholics throughout the country make June a special month of prayer for the reunification. "We will pray for the stability and continual prosperity of Hong Kong after the handover," Bishop Joseph Zong Huaide of Jinan and Zhoucun, president of the bishops' conference, told UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand.

Both the 1996 and 1997 editions of America's Best Colleges, a publication of US NEWS & WORLD REPORT, list High Point University among the top tier of regional liberal arts colleges in the United States.

In both 1995 and 1996, High Point University was featured in US NEWS & WORLD REPORT as one of the two most efficient regional liberal arts colleges in the South and as one of the twenty most efficient regional liberal arts colleges in the United States. Efficient institutions are those which have achieved quality while keeping costs low.

The 1996 Peterson's publication Smart Parents Guide to College, written by Dr. Ernest L. Boyer, former president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, features High Point University.

High Point University has been listed on The John Templeton Foundation Honor Roll of Character-Building Colleges (1993).

Twenty-four percent (24%) of the entering freshman are Roman Catholic, making Roman Catholics the largest religious group on campus.

Vicariate: Winston-Salem

Pastor: Father Thomas D. Stott

Number of parishioners: 400

MOUNT AIRY — In the early years of the 20th century, the 10 or so Catholics living in Mount Airy were ministered to by clergy from Winston-Salem. As the dawn of the 1920s approached, members of the faith had increased to a number warranting the construction of a new Catholic Church, Holy Angels.

Until 1919, Mount Airy Catholics either traveled to St. Leo Church in Winston-Salem or welcomed clergy from that town into their homes and a local opera house for liturgies. By the mid-1910s, sporadic visits by Benedictine priests since 1907 were being met with an increasing Catholic population in the area.

Addressing the need for a permanent place of worship, Bishop Leo Haid, the Benedictine abbot of Belmont Abbey and vicar apostolic of North Carolina, purchased a site for a new church in Mount Airy in November 1919. The church, built with white granite found in the region, was dedicated by Bishop Haid in May 1921. Benedictine Father Alphonse Buss was named pastor.

Holy Angels Church gained parish status from Bishop William Hafey of Raleigh in 1930. The first resident diocesan pastor was Father Aloysius Adler, who made his home in the rectory built in 1929.

The Great Depression of the 1930s brought financial hardships to Mount Airy, and the granite quarry from which the stone used to build Holy Angels Church was taken came close to shutting down. Many residents, Catholics among them, were forced to relocate to find work, and the congregation of Holy Angels Church dwindled.

The parish did recover, and by the 1950s a number of converts were adding to a growing population of Catholics in Surry County. Appointed pastor in 1953, Father Maurice Spillane also played a key role in the construction of a church about 35 miles to the southwest, St. Stephen in Elkin.

Also during Father Spillane's pastorate, parishioners living along Highway 58/221 in Virginia began making their way to Mount Airy for Mass. Several years later they began a parish centered in Woodlawn, Va., and built a church placed under the patronage of St. Joseph.

Acquisitions of property during the 1960s-'70s broadened the church grounds in Mount Airy. The church, rectory and a house used for catechetical and social events were refurbished as well.

Father Arthur Duncan arrived at Holy Angels in November 1980. For the next 14 years he ministered to a growing congregation, and during his time there he was named a prelate of honor (monsignor) by then-Bishop John F. Donoghue of Charlotte. Msgr. Duncan led efforts to build a parish hall; parishioners broke ground in June 1993 and the hall was dedicated in January of the following year. Named the Duncan Center, the hall honors the pastor who served as shepherd in Mount Airy until his retirement in December 1994.

Following Msgr. Duncan's retirement, the Holy Angels family continued to enlarge. A variety of parish programs have been added during the pastorates of Father Richard Contiliano and Father Thomas Stott.

Father Stott, present pastor, assumed responsibility for the parish in July 1996. In addition to an active Knights of Columbus council and ongoing financial support of diocesan seminarians, parish outreach also includes an active ministry for the Hispanic community in Surry County, whose members compose about 30 percent of the Holy Angels congregation. A collection of about 200 saints' relics is also located at the church, and is available for public veneration. The relics, obtained by Father Stott over the years, were featured in a recent issue of Extensions magazine, a publication of The Catholic Church Extension Society.

About 400 Catholics make up the registered congregation of Holy Angels Church, one of the northernmost parishes in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Court's Last Round Leaves Workload For Church Interests

WASHINGTON (CNS) — One effect of the Supreme Court's last flurry of rulings this June is that they created lots of work for Catholic and public school administrators, religious rights activists, and opponents of assisted suicide.

In the last few days of the court's 1996-97 term, the justices ruled in major cases having to do with physician-assisted suicide, federally funded education programs in religious schools, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, and censorship of the Internet.

The week's tally left plenty of work in responding to those rulings at the national and local levels of the U.S. church for attorneys, school administrators, pro-life activists and state Catholic conference lobbyists.

In the most far-reaching case, the court on June 26 unanimously upheld state laws prohibiting assisted suicide, while leaving open the possibility that states might decriminalize the act.

The cases arose as terminally ill patients from New York and Washington and their doctors challenged long-standing laws making assisted suicide a crime. The 2nd and 9th U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals found a right to physician-assisted suicide under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

The nine justices rejected those decisions, saying the state laws prohibiting suicide remain valid. But within the 112 pages of main and supporting opinions, they left open the possibility of future rulings permitting assisted suicide under circumstances other than those presented by Vacco vs. Quill and Washington vs. Glucksberg.

Some analysts say that might include upholding a law like Oregon's 1994 voter initiative legalizing doctor-assisted suicide, which is currently on appeal to the Supreme Court, and is again on the ballot for this November.

Mark Chopko, general counsel to the U.S. Catholic Conference, which filed friend-of-the-court briefs in favor of upholding the Washington and New York laws, said the opinion was "a better decision than I had reason to hope for."

Despite the openings he agrees the opinions leave for state laws that might permit assisted suicide, Chopko said he was encouraged by the emphasis in the rulings on alternatives to suicide, such as better palliative care and sedation for those nearing the end of their lives in pain.

In response to the rulings, pro-life groups said their focus must be on public education as states individually are likely to begin considering laws to legalize or decriminalize assisted suicide.

And physicians acknowledged that their profession and medical schools need to work on better training about end-of-life issues such as depression, loneliness and pain that lead some people to consider assisted suicide.

In a case likely to have more subtle but also far-reaching effects, the court on June 25 said Congress had no constitutional right to try to get around the Supreme Court's religious rights rulings by passing the Religious Freedom Restoration Act.

In a 6-3 opinion in a case involving a Catholic parish in Boerne, Texas, in the San Antonio Archdiocese, the court rebuked Congress for overstepping its constitutional authority with the 1993 law.

The case arose when St. Peter the Apostle Parish in Boerne relied on the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, known as RFRA, to challenge a historic preservation law preventing it from tearing down and rebuilding its church.

RFRA was passed after a bipartisan, ecumenical collaboration to reverse the effects of the Supreme Court's 1990 Smith vs. Employment Division ruling, which said the religious rights of an employee to smoke peyote during a Native American ritual were superseded by an Oregon state law making the hallucinogenic substance illegal.

While St. Peter's still has legal options for pursuing its expansion plans, the Supreme Court's action quickly raised a call to arms from Congress and a diverse coalition of religious and civil rights organizations.

"The Supreme Court has thrown down the gauntlet," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. "We intend to pick it up."

Most congressional members of the coalition said they would seek a new law restoring RFRA's key points, but others pressed for a controversial constitutional amendment to defend religious rights.

From Los Angeles, Cardinal Roger M. Mahony issued a statement calling for a constitutional amendment.

"Without such an amendment, there looms the ominous threat of governmental intrusion into the spiritual affairs of individuals and religious bodies...." he said.

The USCC has stayed out of discussions about a constitutional amendment on religious freedom.

Principals of Catholic schools were likely to be closely following a third case, Agostini vs. Felton.

In it, the court ruled 5-4 that teachers on the public payroll no longer have to stay off the grounds of religious

Empowering the Leader Within

Institute Fosters Life Skills For Teens

"Say not, 'I am too young.' To whomever I send you, you shall go; whatever I command you, you shall speak. Have no fear before them, because I am with you to deliver you...." Jer 1: 7-8

GASTONIA — In the Book of Jeremiah, the prophet was assured that adolescence does not interfere with carrying out God's work. During a recent summer week, the 20 teens who attended the 1997 Christian Leadership Institute in Gastonia learned a similar lesson, along with development and empowerment skills that should serve them for a lifetime.

"The youth are not the church of tomorrow, but the church of today," said Father John Schneider, pastor of St. John the Baptist Church in Tryon and spiritual director of the 16th annual institute, held last month at St. Michael Church.

The Christian Leadership Institute is designed to help participants realize their full potential as members of today's church. Facilitated by faith formation directors and volunteers, the program consists of skills workshops, discussion groups, prayer and worship time, and planning sessions allowing the teens to put their newly learned skills into action.

"These are skills that apply across the board," said Paul Kotlowski, diocesan director of youth ministry. "(The teens) are going to be better communicators, and they come away understanding interpersonal dynamics. That's going to affect their families, their friendships, their jobs — wherever they're relating to people."

schools when they teach in the Title I remedial education program.

The ruling was praised by public and private school educators as ending a system of mobile classrooms and bused students that had swallowed up hundreds of millions of dollars of funding that could have been used to include more needy children in the program.

Supporters of voucher programs to provide state funds that may be used for tuition at parochial schools also were hoping that the court left them a legal door open in the wording of the majority opinion.

More immediately though, school administrators, teachers and parents are looking at how to take advantage of Title I remedial courses for the first time; where to put teachers for the program now that they no longer are consigned to buildings off campus; and how to comply with new regulations about keeping the role of Title I teachers entirely secular while they're on duty at religious schools.

The USCC also followed the Internet decency case, in which the Supreme Court said a federal law designed to protect children from sexually explicit material on the Internet is unconstitutional.

The unanimous opinion in Reno vs. ACLU said the law's prohibitions against "indecent" and "patently offensive" materials were too vague and swept too broadly over adult's rights in an effort to protect children.

It left opponents of pornography wondering what the next step will be in trying to keep the Internet safe for minors.

What is needed is "legislation that effectively and constitutionally protects children from unsuitable and dangerous material," Chopko said in a June 26 statement.

Calling the Twelve

"Jesus summoned the Twelve and began to send them out two by two, and gave them authority over unclean spirits. He instructed them to take nothing for the journey but a walking stick — no food, no sack, no money in their belts. They were, however, to wear sandals but not a second tunic.... So they went off and preached repentance." (Mark 6:7-13)

Institute Helps Youth Understand Leadership Roles, from page 1

Kotlowski added that an immediate result of the teens' involvement in the institute is the practical use of their skills in the context of parish-based youth ministry.

The ministry director said an emphasis is placed on a "win-win situation," rather than a competition. He and the facilitating team focus on means of communication that promote the participation of every person involved in decision making. What follows is individual awareness of strengths that can enhance every aspect of a person's life.

Understanding leadership roles is a process that involves a number of phases, Kotlowski said. The program explores many aspects of that learning, from analyzing different styles of leadership to discussing consensus-seeking skills.

Jeremiah Linn, 17, will have the opportunity to exercise those skills during the upcoming school year. He was recently chosen to chair the Diocesan Youth Council for the 1997-98 term. Linn and about one-third of this institute's participants are members of the council.

"I've significantly learned from this, definitely," Linn said. "I've learned a lot about how not to use roadblocks when communicating with people."

As a leader, Linn added, one must be sensitive to the thoughts of others.

"You've got to be able to put your feelings at the same level as theirs, because you are just another member of the group," the parishioner of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro said. "It's important to hear everybody out."

The participants also spent time assessing ways to intensify their spiritual lives. Daily prayer and worship played as significant a role as the learning sessions, and the teens had opportunities to address matters of faith that need development as well.

"I came here to learn how to become a better Christian leader — and partly to better understand my faith and do something good for myself that involved God," explained Michael Antalejo, 14, a member of Sacred Heart Church in Burnsville.

While participants may attend the institute only once, several have returned to assist the facilitating team. Their stories convey an appreciation for the skills they learned and still put to use. "Everything that you learn here you can apply every day," said Philip Dagostino, who attended the 1989 institute as a parishioner of St. Therese Church in Mooresville. "The program has made such a difference in my life that I've come to give back some of the same things I got from it then."

July 11, 1997

Dear Friends in Christ:

Evangelization — the proclaiming of the Gospels — is a priority in the Catholic Church. Since 1885, the Home Mission Collection (the Black & Indian Mission Collection) has been a tremendous help to dioceses that otherwise would have a serious problem promoting evangelization. The faithful have been very generous and the Church has advanced in many parts of the U.S. because of this collection.

The 1997 Home Mission Collection will be taken in our Diocese the weekend of July 12-13. We ask your support and generosity that once again, needed assistance may be available to areas of our land that still are mission areas. What began over a century ago, and has been a tremendous success for the Church, is needed today more than at any time.

In the United States today, there are priests, sisters, deacons and laity bringing the Church to people who do not have a financial base. People in their areas are very poor, work is scarce and for the Church to be available to the people, these parishes must receive financial assistance. That is the reason for the Home Mission Collection; it is an opportunity for each of us to be part of the missionary program of the Church here in our own land.

Thanking you for your generosity and wishing each of you God's blessings, I am

Sincerely in Christ,

Very Rev. Mauricio W. West, V.G.
Chancellor

American Life League Testimony

On May 2, 1997, Sheena Talbot, Public Policy Director for ALL, testified before the National Bioethics Advisory Commission regarding cloning. Talbot said, "The power over human beings belongs alone to our creator, God. Humans have no right to exert such extreme authority over the life and well-being of other humans simply because they are too small to be seen. Such an attempt to elevate oneself to the level of God is certain to bring with it inherent disaster."

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Pope Says Mary's Assumption Recognized Her Role In Redemption

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider the dogma of Mary's Assumption. The church solemnly teaches that the Immaculate Virgin, by a special privilege, was taken up, body and soul, into heavenly glory upon the completion of her life on earth (cf. "Lumen Gentium," 59). In our own century, Pope Pius XII, after broad consultation among the faithful, defined the dogma of the Assumption as a divinely revealed truth which must be firmly believed by all the sons and daughters of the church. The ultimate basis of the church's belief in Mary's Assumption can be found in the New Testament's witness of Mary's perfect union with her son. As the new Eve, fully united to Christ in his life and saving work, Mary shares, body and soul, in the mystery of her son's Resurrection and glorification in heaven.

I extend a warm welcome to the pilgrims from the Archdiocese of Melbourne in Australia and from the Archdiocese of Nairobi in Kenya who have accompanied their new archbishops for the reception of the pallium. I also thank the choirs for their praise of God in song, especially the Choir of Lincoln College, Oxford, and the Cathedral Choir of St. Louis, Mo. Upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrims from Scotland, Ireland, South Africa, Indonesia, Japan and the United States, I cordially invoke the joy and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope, in Letters To Netanyahu, Arafat, Urges Renewed Talks

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Saying he was "deeply worried" about the stalled Middle East peace process, Pope John Paul II urged Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian President Yasser Arafat to relaunch negotiations before uncontrollable violence breaks out. The pope's appeal came in separate, strongly worded letters to the two leaders. Dated June 16, the texts were made public at the Vatican 10 days later.

Pope Sends Message Of Support To Hong Kong Catholics

HONG KONG (CNS) — Pope John Paul II has sent a letter to the bishop of Hong Kong expressing solidarity with Catholics in the territory as the United Kingdom prepared to cede control of Hong Kong to China. In his message dated June 24, just a week before the reunification of Hong Kong with China, Pope John Paul assured Cardinal John Baptist Wu Cheng-chung of Hong Kong that he is confident evangelization efforts in the diocese "will surely increase" in the future.

Kuralt Leaves Legacy Of His Example

About a month ago, I sent a letter to one of my favorite people. Included was a copy of the newspaper article I'd written on his recent visit to his home state of North Carolina to deliver the commencement address at Belmont Abbey College.

My letter thanked Charles Kuralt for his years of reminding us that "to be, rather than to seem" is a model of perfection we should all strive to achieve.

Never one to enjoy the spotlight, Kuralt garnered worldwide fame and respect for his life on the road. What he did enjoy was meeting those people who embrace some kind of faith, be it in God, humanity, some cause, effort or project.

And on July 4, Kuralt's awe-inspiring journey came to an end.

People have called him the champion of the ordinary, the best storyteller of his generation, the bard who conveys keen observations of what makes America a good place despite its shortcomings. To me, he was an inspiration whose love for people and experiences transcended time and place, politics and social status, race and culture.

As a youngster, I took an early interest in Kuralt. Even then, I was enchanted with what he did without peer. This native Tar Heel developed essays like no one else could, stories that illustrate what is admirable about the people of this world. Most times, he showed us those stories are easily there for the finding — right in our neighborhoods, at roadside produce stands, at community Independence Day celebrations.

Though saddened to hear of Kuralt's death on this Independence Day, I couldn't help but manage a smile during that hot and humid afternoon. I had traveled to Durham to take in a regional music festival. Between performances, the Carolina crowd received the news that Kuralt had passed away that morning.

I thought of him throughout the remainder of the day. I thought of his instantly recognizable rhythmic manner of speech that sent goosebumps down my spine every time hearing it, and of his writing that has inspired me again and again. Most of all, I thought of this unaffected, genuine, charming man who found joy in extolling the virtues of the "conspiracy of good people" that he invited Belmont Abbey College's graduating class to join.

I did not have the privilege of knowing this great traveler, although my brief interaction with him in Belmont remains one of my most treasured memories. On that day, I was afforded a spot just feet away from Kuralt as he received an honorary doctorate of laws degree. From that same place during his address, I heard him convey his pleasure in knowing those who uphold "the standards of the graceful and worthy life."

Meeting up with him after the ceremony, I shook his hand and offered my congratulations on receiving the degree. In retrospect, what I was really commending was his example.

"Your companions on this earth need you, and you must put your talent and aptitude at their service if your own life is to have meaning," he told the graduates that day under the spires of Belmont Abbey Church.

I'll never know whether Charles Kuralt had the chance to read my letter and article. If he did, I hope they brought him a smile, for I wanted him to know how fitting I found his message. He looked for the good in all of us, and by his very work he called us to do the same.

A Declaration Of Dependence

Where do we get our rights of free speech? Where do we get freedom of conscience? From what authority do we claim the right to own property? What is the origin of our right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness? The Declaration of Independence? Think again.

The Declaration of Independence states: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all (men and women) are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." Note the source: The Creator has endowed men and women with the rights and liberties. In other words, we are dependent on God! All that initial dependence is the foundation of our independence.

In these days when everyone talks of rights and few of duties, it is important to recall that the Declaration of Independence is also a Declaration of De- pendence on God, and dependence on law as derived from God.

Archbishop Fulton Sheen, a renowned Catholic presence on the American stage in the middle of this century believed: "Democracy is based on the divine rights of persons. Each person has a value because God made him, not because the state recognizes him. The day we adopt in our democracy the already widespread ideas of some American jurists that right and justice depend on convention and the spirit of the times, we shall write the death warrant of our independence. When we deny God as the foundation of our rights, we shall no longer have rights."

Sheen's position squares perfectly with the Declaration's author, Thomas Jefferson, who insisted: "The God who gave us life gave us liberty. Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed a conviction that these liberties are the gifts of God?"

In the rhetoric characteristic of vintage Sheen: "There is no such thing as saving democracy alone. Democracy is a branch, not a root. The root of democracy is the recognition of the value of a person as a creature of God. To save democracy alone is like saving the false teeth of a drowning man. First save the man and you will save his teeth. First preserve belief in God as the source of rights and liberties and you will save democracy. But not vice-versa."

Many think that God must serve democracy. It is time to affirm the contrary. Instead of judging religion by its attitude toward democracy, we should judge democracy toward religion. A Declaration grounded in a radical dependence on God demands a democracy obedient to a justice born of God and not of expediency, a democracy that gives equal protection to all. Citizens freed from injustices are free to serve God.

Some teach that freedom of speech and freedom of press constitute the essence of democracy. They are not. They safeguard democracy.

But George Washington said that "Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles."

The Fourth of July is a terrific time to celebrate the connection of religious principles and our national ethic. And to be reminded that it is our shared dependence on God that breathes continued life into our Declaration of Independence.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

When Divorced Catholics Remarry Each Other

Q. Some friends of ours, both practicing Catholics, were divorced. Neither has remarried.

After much reflection and help, they are considering remarrying each other.

We are delighted, but wonder about their status in the church. Do they need an annulment to be remarried at Mass?

Does the remarriage negate the divorce? Will they be able to receive the sacraments?

A. Your questions reflect some misunderstandings of Catholic law concerning marriage, but surprisingly they are not uncommon.

Civil law differs much from church law in these matters. If they are legally divorced, they are no longer legally married. If they wish to remarry the state will require a marriage license and a ceremony before an authorized person, a judge, for example, or perhaps a Catholic priest.

On the other hand, according to church law they are still validly married to each other, even though they have a civil divorce.

If they wish to remarry, technically they need only the civil marriage ceremony I mentioned. No new Catholic wedding is needed or, strictly speaking, even possible.

Obviously, however, considering the hardships their relationship has experienced and their need for every spiritual help possible to successfully go on with their lives together, a Catholic ceremony of some kind makes sense.

They should receive the sacrament of penance. They could attend Mass, or they might ask their parish priest if a special Mass is possible, to renew their marriage vows, receive the Eucharist together and get their life back on track with God.

To summarize, a new civil marriage is required. No new Catholic marriage is necessary for them to return to full practice of their faith as husband and wife.

Q. The pope's recent positive statements about evolution have caused consternation among some Catholics. My question might be equally disturbing.

The book of Genesis (6:4) says "there were Nephilim on the earth in those days, after the sons of heaven had intercourse with the daughters of man, who bore them sons. They were the heroes of old."

Are there physical beings elsewhere of some higher development? How do we explain such statements?

A. For a long time scholars suspected that a variety of myths and legends popular in the cultures surrounding the Hebrew people had greatly influenced the Genesis pre-history stories one way or another.

During the past 50 years or so, discoveries of large ancient Middle East libraries and a multitude of other documents and artifacts have proven the truth of this assumption.

Storytellers and writers who handed down those early parts of Scripture incorporated references to such myths to help make their points about creation and the relation of our world to God.

In fact, the stories in Genesis 1 and 2 contain what is almost a point-by-point refutation of elements in some early pa-

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Name-Calling Not The Norm In Family Relationships

There is a TV commercial that, in an attempt to appeal to typical families, ends with two siblings exchanging insults, respectively blurting "Dweeb!" and "Dork!" at each other. While name-calling and sibling enmity may be characteristic of family life, they don't represent the best of family life or what families aspire to. We have a rule around our house that when we are angry at another person, we call them by their first name — not even their nickname or pet-name — only their first name. It's a discipline that started when we were dating. It's become a cardinal rule that has garnered good results for us as a couple and for our family. We know too that this rule, for it to be followed by our children, must be strictly adhered to by us parents. Seldom are we tempted to call each other

"dork" or "dweeb." Our name-calling rule has worked well to keep us from attacking that way, though there are times in our anger that we negatively label each other and our kids: "You're lazy!" "Look at your room! You live like a pig!" "You don't care about anyone but yourself!" In our anger and frustration we have blurted such statements at each other and the kids and we're not proud of it.

However, our name-calling rule keeps such negative labeling to a minimum. And we try to counteract the negative labeling with positive labeling. In the heat of the moment we try to look for esteemed qualities about the person. As we address the problem those positive qualities help us to reprimand in healthy ways, putting our attention on the behavior without attacking the person. Then we purposely invoke their given name.

Remembering to call each other by our given names reminds us of something very important and fundamental about each of us. For each of us, there is a story behind our given names. When we were given our names, it was in love and with great hope and expectation for our futures. The love that poured over us when we were given our names was pure and unconditional, not unlike the love of God. In the heat of anger, remembering to call out the given name instead of an epithet or a negative label, sets us straight about when the person is that we are angry at: a child of God, a holy creation born with inalienable dignity and always deserving of respect. Many families do this. For some it may be invoking the first and middle names, for others it may be the entire name. We think it's not for the benefit of the person being reprimanded, but for the one who is reprimanding to remind themselves of whom they are addressing.

When we hear our children lash out at each other with insults, we remind them of the rule. And in doing so, we remember, even in the heat of anger, their given names and their inherited dignity as children of God.

CHARLOTTE — Among them, they represent more than four centuries of service to the priesthood. On June 25, 11 priests who serve in the Diocese of Charlotte — including Bishop William G. Curlin — were honored at a Jubilee Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral.

Monsignor Joseph Kerin, pastor of St. Mark Church in Huntersville who celebrates 40 years as a priest, delivered the homily to fellow jubilarians and 45 brother priests who attended the celebration. In his message, Msgr. Kerin encouraged his brother priests to celebrate their lives as followers of Christ.

The jubilarians honored were Benedictine Father Bernard Rosswog, celebrating 60 years of priesthood; Msgr. Arthur Duncan, Msgr. Anthony Kovacic, and Redemptorist Father Francis Sands, all celebrating 50 years of ministry; Bishop Curlin, Jesuit Father Lawrence Hunt, and Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father John Murphy, all celebrating 40 years of priesthood; and Jesuit Father Francis Gillespie and Father Carlo Tarasi, both celebrating 25 years of priestly ministry.

Also honored following his recent retirement from full-time ministry was Father Conrad Kimbrough, who served the diocese for 19 years after converting from the Episcopal faith.

In his homily, Msgr. Kerin said priests are instruments who carry out the Lord's work.

"Once we recognize the reality of our total incapability to complete the work of God by ourselves, we can be at peace because God takes over," he said. "The work of Christ will be successful, and we are a part of that work."

In his examination of the mystery of the priesthood, Msgr. Kerin also spoke of the joy that must accompany the ordained life.

"How can a priest preach the joy of salvation in Christ and be sad? How can he preach Christian hope and be discouraged? How can he preach the peace of Christ and be disturbed? How can a priest preach eternal life and be lifeless? How can he preach the loving forgiveness of God and be condemning?" he asked.

"This life does not really have to be one of fear," Msgr. Kerin continued, "but rather, it can be one of gratitude and celebration for that wonderful gift that God has given us, which is life that begins in this world and continues for eternity."

Bishop Curlin, who presided over the liturgy, encouraged his fellow priests to build, nourish and protect the unity they have in Jesus Christ.

"Don't let anything interfere with it. Don't let the pettiness of the world come and poison our hearts and divide us," the bishop said. "We must care for one another. We are priests in Jesus Christ. We're bound by something which is indescribable — and that unity, that love should be the bridge of all things."

'Out To Sea' — Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon pair up as Charlie and Herb in the comedy "Out to Sea." The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13.

"Face/Off" Calls For Audience About-Face

NEW YORK (CNS) — John Travolta and Nicolas Cage do real star turns with dual roles in "Face/Off" (Paramount), but the movie's violence quotient knows no bounds.

Director John Woo knows how to mount a sleek production, set a breathless pace and pack in stunts and action sequences aplenty — but not when to draw the line.

When shoot-outs and explosions occur so frequently and are as protracted as they are throughout this film, they exist for their own sake, not to advance the story. This is murder and mayhem magnified and glorified, even if it is done by a deft director.

The intriguing premise has Travolta as covert federal agent Sean Archer living only to capture Cage's Castor Troy, a sociopathic terrorist who accidentally killed Archer's little boy while aiming at Archer.

Six years later the agent finally gets his man, but as prisoner Troy lies in a coma, it is discovered Troy and his newly imprisoned brother Pollux (Alessandro Nivola) had hidden a time bomb somewhere in Los Angeles capable of killing thousands.

Archer agrees to a crazy plan to have his own face surgically removed and preserved, and have comatose Troy's face put on so he can visit Pollux in prison posing as his brother so he can find out where the bomb is hidden. And only the surgical team and another agent will know it's actually agent Archer in jail.

The plan backfires when Troy wakes up faceless and — absurdly — is able to call his thug pals to kidnap the surgical team and the agent, get Archer's face sewn on, kill the witnesses and then visit Archer in prison, assuring him he will rot there as no one else knows he's not the criminal murderer he appears to be.

Evil and on the loose, Troy poses as the agent, gets his brother released in a plea-bargain deal, and chooses to disarm the bomb, thus becoming a national hero — who can write his own ticket getting rid of rival terrorists so he and his brother can have the field all to themselves.

Nor does Troy neglect sleeping with his nemesis' wife (Joan Allen), who is fooled, but puzzled by his suddenly seductive personality.

Meanwhile, in another far-fetched action scene, prisoner Archer breaks out and phones his look-alike vowing deadly revenge. The stage is set for the first of many face-offs where the two meet, bullets and bodies fly, glass shatters shimmeringly and cars, boats and buildings blow up, as the two enemies continue to survive for yet another shoot-out, accompanied by ear-splitting explosions.

Cage and Travolta are in top form switching identities, but the several different escapes they individually engineer are simply not credible. The manipulative plot also has a little boy in mortal jeopardy during a fusillade, only to be conveniently adopted in the end as if he could simply substitute for the same-aged boy the agent and his wife lost to violence.

A warped sense of humor is on display as the bogus agent Archer gives his teen-age daughter a switchblade to defend herself on a date — and instructs her on how to do the most damage in one thrust.

Catholics as well are unlikely to be amused by the villain, dressed in priestly garb, acting like a foul-mouthed lecher, and by how a Catholic church is the setting for the final round of shoot-out slaughters.

In this summer of action movie gone overboard on violence, maybe "Face/Off" is the one that will call for an about-face on supporting such crass cinematic overkill.

Due to excessive violence with brutality and gore, sexual references and much profanity and rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is O — morally offensive. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"Beverly Hills Ninja" (1997)

Dopey comedy in which a klutzy American (Chris Farley) raised in a Japanese martial-arts school trails a mysterious blonde (Nicollette Sheridan) to Los Angeles intent on rescuing her from a gangster boyfriend. Directed by Dennis Dugan, the Farley vehicle is more silly than funny as his awkward physical comedy fails to compensate for the witless script. Much comic violence and some sexual innuendo. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"The Crucible" (1996)

A group of girls stir hysteria in 1692 Salem, Mass., when they confess seeing some of their neighbors consorting with the devil, but matters get out of hand after a Boston magistrate (Paul Scofield) arrives and the number of accused grows to include the wife (Joan Allen) of a farmer (Daniel Day-Lewis) denounced by a teen-age girl (Winona Ryder) who wants to marry him. Directed by Nicholas Hytner from Arthur Miller's adaptation of his 1953 play, the drama vividly re-creates the period's fear of witchcraft and the children's exploitation of it, though the personal level of the tragedy lacks the same emotional conviction. Period violence including torture and hangings, brief nudity and a few coarse words. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Fierce Creatures" (1997)

Zany comedy in which the staff (headed by John Cleese) of an English zoo resists the efforts of their venal new owner and his son (Kevin Kline in a dual role) as well as their corporate representative (Jamie Lee Curtis) to commercialize their beloved animals. Co-directed by Robert Young and Fred Schepisi, the zippy comedy broadly satirizes rampant commercialization in the unlikely setting of a bucolic zoo, but the proceedings never quite achieve the intended level of madcap lunacy. Much sexual innuendo, brief comic violence and an instance of rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Jackie Chan's First Strike" (1997)

Comic action thriller taking the likable Hong Kong supercop (Jackie Chan) to Eastern Europe and Australia on a wild espionage caper involving a nuclear warhead stolen by the Russian mafia. Directed by Stanley Tong, the plot is loaded with double agents and energetic stunt work, but the fun is more violent than some might want. Martial arts violence, a flash of rear nudity and occasional coarse language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

"Shiloh" (1997)

After lying to his stern but loving father (Michael Moriarty) in order to save an abused puppy from its cruel master (Scott Wilson), an 11-year-old lad (Blake Heron) learns the painful consequences of dishonesty. Writer-director Dale Rosenbloom uses the appealing bond of boy and dog to probe the father-son relationship in a meaningful way but the narrative is too slow-paced and repetitive to be entirely successful as drama. Strong threat of animal abuse and domestic tensions. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Summer School" (1987)

A gym teacher (Mark Harmon) becomes a reluctant remedial English instructor whose nonconformist tactics finally produce positive results with a group of impudent teen-agers forced to spend their summer in school. The deals which are struck between teacher and student in writer-director Carl Reiner's light comedy address social and sexual issues requiring a mature perspective. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents are strongly cautioned that some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Ready to be surprised by the Bible

By Father Eugene LaVerdiere, SSS
Catholic News Service

I spend a lot of time with the Bible, especially with the New Testament. You would think I would know some of its stories extremely well. As a younger man, I thought I

Here are two stories, two parables told by Jesus, that I continually rediscover. Both stories are in Luke's Gospel, and both are in a little commentary (11: 5-13) provided by Jesus on the Lord's Prayer (11:2-4).

One time, when Jesus was praying, one of the disciples asked that he teach them how to pray. Jesus'

Jesus speaks to us. That "you" is plural. From the start, Jesus introduces us into the parable.

The parable is about a friend — a friend of ours.

In the parable, we go to our friend at midnight with a request. Another friend has arrived at our home from a journey, and we have nothing to offer him.

In the New Testament world, hospitality requires offering something to eat. It is not so different in our modern world.

So we go to our friend, asking for three loaves of bread.

speaking, a little host is not enough to sustain us.

Jesus' parable in Luke points in another direction.

In the parable we do not go to a friend to request the bread we need for ourselves. What we request is bread to offer to someone else, a friend who has come in from a journey.

According to Jesus' little commentary, therefore, when we ask for our daily bread, we are asking for what we need in order to extend hospitality to others. That bread includes the Eucharist, the sacrament of hospitality.

Praying the Lord's Prayer together when we gather for the cel-

"The story suggests that we address God as Father not so much because we know what it is like to be a child who has a father, but because we know what it is like to be a father who gives life — or mother, or life-bearer in some other way. Surprised?"

The rest of the story focuses on the need to persevere. Our friend is already in bed. He does not want to wake up his children.

Jesus assures us: "I tell you, if he does not get up to give him the loaves because of their friendship, he will get up to give him whatever he needs because of his persistence" (11:8).

Remember that Jesus' parable on perseverance in prayer is a commentary on "Give us each day our daily bread."

What is "our daily bread"? The expression in the original Greek refers to the bread that is distinctive of a Christian community.

Some say this refers to what we need to sustain us as human beings. The prayer recognizes that what we need ultimately comes from God.

Some say it refers to the eucharistic bread we need as Christians.

At the beginning, the difference was not as great, since the Eucharist was celebrated as a full meal. Today the meal is symbolic. Physically celebration of the Mass, therefore, we are asking to be a welcoming people, a people of hospitality, as Jesus was.

2. The second story Jesus tells in his little commentary on the Lord's Prayer also deserves a rereading. It is about what a father would hand to his son (11:11-13).

The story is symbolic. It could have been about a mother. Instead of a son, it could have been about a daughter.

And Jesus includes us in the story: "What father among you would hand his son a snake when he asks for a fish?" The story is meant to inspire confidence in God our Father in heaven.

But through this story we see what an adult prayer the Lord's Prayer is.

Like all of Jesus' parables, the story has a point of departure in human experience.

Recall that in Luke the Lord's Prayer begins with just the word "Father." The story suggests that we address God as Father not so much because we know what it is like to be a child who has a father, but because we know what it is like to be a father who gives life — or mother, or life-bearer in some other way.

Surprised? So was I! Something to ponder for the 21st century.

knew them. Today, I am more circumspect.

Each time I reread a story I discover something new that makes a big difference for understanding it and what Christian life today is all about. But for that I have to approach New Testament stories with an open mind, ready to be surprised.

Stories in the Bible are bigger than we are.

response includes the Lord's Prayer. But that is only the beginning. Teaching someone to pray requires more than a formula of prayer.

1. The first parable is about someone who went to a friend and asked him for three loaves of bread (11:5-8).

From the theme, we know right away that Jesus is commenting on the petition, "Give us each day our daily bread." From Jesus' application, we also know that it is about persevering in prayer.

But the parable also holds a few surprises, especially for people who think they know what "our daily bread" is all about.

Here is the parable: "Suppose one of you has a friend ..."

Jesus is speaking to the disciples. When we read the parable today,

In a Nutshell

- The Bible is always new. For example, parables are open-ended and speak powerfully to all times.
- "Suppose one of you has a friend ...," says a parable in Luke. Thus the contemporary reader is introduced into the story. The friend is not just any friend — but our friend.
- The lessons of the parables still apply.

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

Why do you think the Bible, which is ancient, can still connect with your modern life?

"It seems that everything that was written is still relevant. For example, when I pray, the Bible says, ask and you shall receive, and that has worked in my life many times." — Ramona Giromini, Armarillo, Texas

"Biblical characters demonstrate to us the benefit of prayer, the power of forgiveness and the value of charity, either through their ability or through their failure to perform certain deeds." — Arden J. Love, South Hadley, Mass.

"Because most of the things that are in the Bible — guidelines for marriage, children, morals and everyday living — apply to me as well as to the people of ancient times." — Henrietta L. Jones, Atlanta, Ga.

If the biblical "shoe" fits, wear it

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

Gospel parables come with an unspoken message: If the shoe fits, wear it.

Jesus intended the parables for his immediate hearers. The Gospel writers used the parables to communicate to their readers. And today's ministers of the word apply the parables to their communities.

The lessons still apply.

Parables, of their nature, are open-ended, capable of speaking powerfully to people in various ages and cultures.

Luke recorded a parable about a mustard seed — the smallest of seeds (Mark 4:30-32). What is remarkable is that when it's fully grown it's like a tree; all the birds come to nest there.

It's a story for anyone needing patience. The story also prompts us to view the slow pace of some developments from God's point of view.

This parable takes small beginnings seriously. It might encourage teachers and parents not to underestimate the small beginning a child makes in some area of learning. The story might discourage others from slighting the small step taken by an adult who — for the first time? — is beginning to respect himself or herself as God's friend.

It is a good story, too, for anyone discouraged by the realization that so many people still don't grasp the Christian message. After 20 centuries, shouldn't the church be more "successful"?

But to say that is to view things from our perspective, which is boxed in by time and space. The church, however, is the work of God.

In God's perspective, 20 centuries is a drop in the bucket and the mustard seed has immense value.

In another story Luke tells of a rich man who lives in almost obscene luxury (Luke 16:19ff). At his gate lies a beggar. The rich man and his friends walk around him with eyes averted.

Eventually both men die, and their situations are completely reversed.

It is a striking story, with meaning for every age. Most instructive is that the rich man and his friends do not abuse the beggar; they simply ignore him!

Our affluent society witnesses a distressing tendency to remove the sick and homeless from public view. But disregard for suffering human beings will have frightening results.

On a more positive note, the fourth Gospel records the allegory of the vine and the branches (John 15:1-10). Christ is the vine and we are the branches, intimately joined to the vine as to draw life itself from it. This sharing of the same life-force is the source of our unique Christian identity and dignity. But implicit in it is the vital need to grow in union with Christ. Apart from him we are pathetically helpless.

(Father Castelot is a Scripture scholar, author, teacher and lecturer.)

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

One of the Bible's wonders is that it doesn't get old. More than that, it remains new.

I can say I've heard the Bible before, yet I'm about to hear it again — and differently.

How does this work? Maybe in hearing the story before I didn't notice its complexity; I focused on something about it. But now I notice "something" more; perhaps my present circumstances prompt me to notice this.

There is the story in Luke (8:40-56) about Jairus, who asks Jesus to rush to his house because his daughter is dying. Jesus arrives; the family believes she is dead.

For years, what I heard — what I took from this story — was a message about Jesus' healing power. He tells the child to rise, and she does.

It took becoming a father to add the real sound of Jairus' voice to my hearing of this story, thus recognizing another of its levels.

Today I'd also remark upon the thread of the story dealing with the girl. Her worth and personhood are in full view.

"Her breath returned," we're told, as Jesus took her hand. Then he instructed the others to give her something to eat.

Agricultural lessons from Jesus

By Father Paul J. Schmidt
Catholic News Service

The church is made up of sinners:

- Some of these sinners are trying to live a sinless life.
- Others are trying but have not succeeded.
- Still others have not set sin aside.
- And some do not even know what a sin is.

The fact that good and evil coexist in the church is not surprising. But is it surprising that the owner of the field allows the situation to continue?

There are those in the church today who express a great deal of disappointment. Each parish seems to have a to save. Surely we are not to give up on our efforts. We must continue to struggle with sin in our lives and our structures.

But we need patience. Don't think that good cannot be done until evil is totally eliminated. We must do the good we can and not get fixated on the evil. We must succeed even while we fail.

Witnessing evil means that we have to cherish the good all the more and work to promote it. Seeing evil in the world does not mean that we give up hope. We must recognize the Spirit at work alongside it, bringing about the kingdom in many surprising ways.

Recognizing this ambiguity gives us humility. The work of the kingdom is not ours alone. Here another parable, from Mark 4:26-29, can give us insight. The seed planted in the earth grows in a mysterious way.

"Jesus' description captures the essential wonder of the development of a stalk of grain. A hidden power guides the process."

We know more biology than people did in Christ's time and can explain the process of germination in considerable detail. But Jesus' description captures the essential wonder of the development of a stalk of grain. A hidden power guides the process.

So, too, the kingdom of God grows in a manner not totally explainable. It grows "we know not how" in the power of the Holy Spirit.

We may think that allowing weeds and wheat to grow side-by-side is no way to run a kingdom or a church. But how much of someone's anger at the church could be diffused by acknowledging that God's ways are not our ways?

The other thing demanded by this strange manner of running things is forgiveness. If God's kingdom is going to come in this way, we will have to forgive a lot.

For parables on forgiveness, see Luke 15.

(Father Schmidt is director of Priests Personnel for the Diocese of Oakland, Calif., and a free-lance writer.)

In the parable the servants want to pull up the weeds. The owner refuses to do so. He gives a strange reason: "In gathering the weeds, you would uproot the wheat with them." Somehow, the mystery of evil is to accompany the kingdom until the harvest.

It is strange to propose that a risk exists of destroying what we are trying group of conservatives, moderates and liberals, who squabble with each other. The human weaknesses of church leaders and members become public scandals dissected by the media. And some stop going to church because of what Father So-and-So did or what Mrs. Such-and-Such said.

A couple of Jesus' agricultural parables can help us deal with this situation.

In Matthew 13:24-30, Jesus tells of weeds growing in a wheat field. "An enemy has done this," the owner of the field says. The servants sowed good seed, but the enemy added weeds.

Jesus says this is how God's reign comes to the earth. The kingdom of God comes in a world mixed with good and evil.

Sponsor a Child at a Catholic Mission. It's Affordable!

Little Corina lives in a small mountain town in Honduras. Her mother is blind and her father abandoned them. Your concern can make a difference in the lives of children like Corina.

Your opportunity to help a very poor child is much too important to miss. And Christian Foundation for Children and Aging (CFCA), an international Catholic child sponsorship program can show you the affordable way.

Through CFCA you sponsor a child for the amount you can afford. Ordinarily it takes $20 a month to provide one poor child with the life-changing benefits of sponsorship. But if this is not possible for you, we invite you to sponsor at a level you can afford. CFCA will see to it from other donations and the tireless efforts of our missionary partners that your child receives the same benefits as other sponsored children.

Your sponsorship pledge helps provide a poor child at a Catholic mission site with nourishing food, medical care, the chance to go to school and hope for a brighter future. You can literally change a life!

And you can be assured your pledge has its greatest impact because our programs are directed by dedicated Catholic missionaries with a long-standing commitment to the people they serve.

To help build your relationship, you receive a picture of your child (updated yearly), information about your child's family and country, letters from your child and the CFCA newsletter. But most important, you'll receive the satisfaction of helping a poor child.

Please don't miss this opportunity to make a difference. Become a sponsor for one poor child today!

Christians Celebrate Oneness At Ecumenical Event

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

WINSTON-SALEM — St. Benedict the Moor Church and the diocesan African American Affairs Ministry recently united with several Protestant churches as Christians, and African Americans.

Rev. Mr. Curtiss Todd, vicar for African American Affairs, was encouraged by the spirit of those who attended the weekend celebration entitled, "People of God Uniting — African American Catholics and Protestants Gathering to Celebrate Our Oneness in Jesus."

Likened to an old-fashioned tent revival, the event uniting African American Christians resulted from an inspiration during a night of prayer. Rev. Mr. Todd shared the idea with Mable Stevenson, director of Host Homes (a Catholic Social Services ministry) and also the wife of Grace Presbyterian Church pastor the Rev. Samuel Stevenson. With their support and encouragement, the celebration had a host church and an enthusiastic congregation to carry out the details.

Members of Baptist, Episcopal, Presbyterian (USA), Roman Catholic, United Church of Christ and United Methodist congregations attended the gathering. Many saw it as the beginning of a continuing dialogue which could strengthen the Christian voice within African American communities.

"We should become educated on our differences. There are many myths and stereotypes among denominations which must be eliminated before we can truly come together to focus on the unchurched," Rev. Mr. Todd said. "There are not only stereotypes within denominations, but also among races." The deacon sees this celebration of oneness in Jesus as a way to overcome misconceptions about religion and race.

The guest speaker for the service was Franciscan Father Paul Williams, pastor of St. Anthony of Padua Church in Greenville, S.C., and vicar for African American Catholics in the Diocese of Charleston.

Father Williams has served as chairman of the Provincial Committee on African American Ministry, vice president of the National Black Catholic Seminarian Association (NBCSA), and in 1985, was the delegate for NBCSA to the International Eucharist Congress in Nairobi, Kenya. He described the Winston-Salem ecumenical event as a type of revival, bringing Protestants and Catholics together to praise God so they can come together to do His work.

"We need to preach to the unchurched in a unified voice. There are so many people in need of salvation," he added.

If you are considering college, consider one of the best!

High Point University

Both the 1996 and 1997 editions of America's Best Colleges, a publication of US NEWS & WORLD REPORT, list High Point University among the top tier of regional liberal arts colleges in the United States.

In both 1995 and 1996, High Point University was featured in US NEWS & WORLD REPORT as one of the two most efficient regional liberal arts colleges in the South and as one of the twenty most efficient regional liberal arts colleges in the United States. Efficient institutions are those which have achieved quality while keeping costs low.

The 1996 Peterson's publication Smart Parents Guide to College, written by Dr. Ernest L. Boyer, former president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, features High Point University.

High Point University has been listed on The John Templeton Foundation Honor Roll of Character-Building Colleges (1993).

Twenty-four percent (24%) of the entering freshmen are Roman Catholic, making Roman Catholics the largest religious group on campus.

New Survey Shows Adults Think Youths Devoid Of Values

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A majority of American adults think teen-agers are facing a moral crisis, and view young children in a negative light, too, describing them as spoiled and out of control, according to a new survey. The survey also showed that adults think much of the blame for youths' attitudes rests with their parents. But respondents also acknowledged it is harder than ever to be a parent today and said they still care about the well-being of America's youngsters. The survey, titled "Kids These Days: What Americans Really Think About the Next Generation," was conducted by the Public Agenda, a New York-based, non-partisan public opinion research organization. It was funded by the Ronald McDonald House Charities and the Advertising Council.

Blind Lector Says She Enjoys Sharing The Word

RIVER FALLS, Wis. (CNS) — When the time comes for Patty Slaby to turn pages as she reads from Scripture at St. Bridget Church, she faces a challenge that other lectors do not. It's harder for Slaby, who is blind, to locate the corners of the Bible pages, which are more numerous because of the larger Braille print and are heavier, she said. For these reasons, Slaby spends extra time practicing the last sentence of a page and memorizes the first sentence of the next page, in case turning the page proves difficult. Aside from these and a few other minor difficulties, lectoring has been a job she enjoys and does well, she told the Catholic Herald, newspaper of the Diocese of Superior. "It just clicked right away. I enjoy sharing (the Word) with others and with other people at church."

Inmate Executed In Kentucky Found Hope In Faith

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (CNS) — Before he became the first death-row inmate to be executed in Kentucky in 35 years, convicted killer Harold McQueen Jr. vowed to die with the peace of Christ in his heart. McQueen's attorneys filed a flurry of appeals but three hours before the convict's July 1 execution in the electric chair, the U.S. Supreme Court announced it had denied all remaining appeals. McQueen was ready, said Paul Stevens, a lay Catholic who serves as a chaplain at the Kentucky State Penitentiary in Eddyville.

U.S. Religious Leaders Declare America In Constitutional Crisis

WASHINGTON (CNS) — America is in a constitutional crisis, some 40 U.S. religious leaders declared in a July 4 statement. Among the mainly Catholic, Evangelical and Orthodox signers were Cardinals John J. O'Connor of New York, Anthony J. Bevilacqua of Philadelphia and Adam J. Maida of Detroit. The statement was made public July 1 by the New York-based Institute on Religion and Public Life, headed by Father Richard John Neuhaus. Titled "We Hold These Truths," the 10-page statement urges an end to "judicial usurpation" of America's constitutional government.

Priest Offers Inactive Catholics A Sympathetic Ear In Cyberspace

ST. LOUIS (CNS) — Do you know someone who won't practice the faith because of a perceived problem with the Catholic Church? Now there is a sympathetic ear in cyberspace where inactive Catholics can get things off their chests and perhaps begin the healing process that might lead them back into the fold. Redemptorist Father William F. McKee, who has spent 14 years ministering to inactive Catholics, recently created his own Web site for this same purpose. He is inviting inactive Catholics and all who are dissatisfied with the church to contact him via the Internet at <http://www.jcn1.com/william>.

Giant Card For Youth Convention Signed By Bishops

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (CNS) — When thousands of U.S. Catholic youths gather in Kansas City this November, a giant greeting card will let them know their bishops cared enough to send them their very best. The card — made of six hinged panels about six feet high by four feet wide — is now filled with messages of love and good wishes from the nation's bishops to the 15,000 teen-agers and their sponsors who are expected to converge on Bartle Hall in Kansas City for the Nov. 20-23 National Catholic Youth Conference.

Northern Ireland Parish Suspends Masses In Peace Effort

BALLYMENA, Northern Ireland (CNS) — A Northern Ireland parish has suspended its Saturday night vigil Masses at the request of police. Announcing the suspension of vigil Masses at Our Lady the Mother of Christ Church in Harryville, a section of the largely Protestant town of Ballymena, County Antrim, parish priest Father Sean Connolly said the move was in the interest of "the greater good of the community." The Saturday evening Masses were to be canceled from June 21 to Sept. 6. For the past 42 weeks, loyalists, who are predominantly Protestant and who support continued British rule in the province, have been picketing Saturday evening Masses at the church.

Vatican Academy Issues Detailed Report Condemning Human Cloning

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican issued a detailed condemnation of human cloning, saying the technique would violate a number of ethical norms and turn the human being into an "industrial product." Human cloning would exploit women, bring suffering to the cloned person and lead humanity further down the road to eugenics, or selective breeding, said the statement from the Pontifical Academy for Life.

HAMLET — In the early years of the 20th century, the few Catholics in Richmond and Scotland counties were ministered to in their homes by visiting priests from Southern Pines, Fayetteville and Wilmington. In 1910, one priest led the effort to build the church in Hamlet that came to be known as St. James parish.

Father William B. Hannon had traveled north in search of donations for the Richmond County church. He was successful not only in attaining funds for construction, but also helped acquire the stained glass windows that still adorn the present church.

Construction began, and in July 1910 Bishop Leo Haid, vicar apostolic of North Carolina and Benedictine abbot, dedicated the new church, placing it under the patronage of St. James.

By the mid-1910s, the church had already experienced its first major renovation: It was moved a half-block after the town of Hamlet decided to extend its Main Street. The church property lay directly in the path of the proposed extension, and thus the church building was relocated.

Father Paul G. Termer became Hamlet's first resident Catholic pastor in 1919, the same year a rectory was built alongside the church. His pastorate lasted for 12 years.

The parish grew through the years, albeit slowly, and the need for priests in the area became more widespread. Less than 20 miles to the northeast of Hamlet, Camp McColl was established in the town of Hoffman during World War II. In addition to the regular Hamlet parishioners, priests celebrated Mass for the servicemen, not only in St. James Church, but in local movie houses and a funeral home chapel.

An increase in seating capacity and the addition of a choir loft highlighted remodeling work in later years. In 1967, the Oblates of Mary Immaculate arrived in Hamlet to begin a pastorate that extended into the 1980s.

Parish and community ministries have been established and developed during the past few decades, including volunteering at the local soup kitchen and assisting area elderly.

In 1983, the parish purchased a house located behind the church and began utilizing it as a parish hall and for religious education classes. The hall was dedicated to Oblates Father Fred Gilbert, who served St. James parish from 1972-1986. Father Gilbert played a key role in establishing a building fund that would serve the St. James community in the years to come.

Another expansion for the parish came in 1985. With the help of Father Gilbert and the hope of building a new church, the parish purchased just over eight acres of land next to Richmond Community College on Highway 74. Plans became reality in November 1989, when Bishop John F. Donoghue of Charlotte dedicated the newly constructed St. James Church.

That same year, the original church building on Main Street was sold to a Hamlet area resident, who remodeled the sanctuary and rectory into a restaurant. Father William Evans assumed the pastorate of St. James on July 9. He now serves as the shepherd of a Catholic community whose organizations include a Knights of Columbus council, Altar Society, Over 50 Club and choir, in addition to the parish and finance councils that assist the operations of the parish.

Fund-raisers highlight parish life as well, with annual events such as a chicken and pork barbecue, food booths during races at Rockingham Motor Speedway, and a parish yard sale providing parishioners and community residents opportunities for stewardship.

Almost 300 parishioners compose the congregation of St. James Church, the parish which lies in the southeasternmost corner of the Diocese of Charlotte.

Charlotte Delegation Visits Sister City in Poland

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Wroclaw has withstood war, changes in government and the test of time to become one of Poland's top cultural, industrial and religious centers. And recently, a delegation from Charlotte — including two parish priests — embraced many facets of life in a region steeped in history and culture.

Part of a six-person delegation, Spiritan Father Ed Vilkauskas and Father Frank Cintula traveled to the Polish city, host of the 46th International Eucharistic Congress. At the invitation of the mayor of Wroclaw, the Charlotte Sister Cities Committee delegation were guests of the city government during the Congress.

"We were in the ambiance of a city filled with 20,000 people in Wroclaw for the Congress," said Father Vilkauskas, pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Monroe and its mission, Sacred Heart Church in Wadesboro. "But there were also many opportunities for dialogue, and it was a rather broad exposure to the social, cultural, political and religious sense of the place." As in generations past, Wroclaw's culture also involves a vibrant appreciation for art and music and history that applies to citizens of all age groups.

Wroclaw was designated a sister city of Charlotte in 1993. The Sister Cities Committee is a private, non-profit organization responsible for coordinating the exchanges between citizens of Charlotte and the seven cities sharing official relationships formed by municipal governments.

Plans for this summertime visit began a year ago, when Bodgan Zdrojewski, mayor of Wroclaw, invited Peggy Wesp, Charlotte Sister Cities executive director, and five others to attend the Congress and sample the city. Composing that group were Father Vilkauskas, Father Cintula, and Charlotte area Catholics Carlos Salcedo, Jeannine Clark, and Johanna McCloskey, each claiming Slavic roots.

The group's schedule, organized by the Wroclaw mayor's office, included several events of the Congress, meetings with municipal leaders, and guided sightseeing tours. But both priests were struck by simple encounters of the regional charm and its inhabitants.

The entire region of Silesia, for example, is a historic area located in east central Europe along the Oder River basin in southwestern Poland. Wroclaw is one of Silesia's most important cities, founded in the 10th century and serving as capitol of the region during the 1100s. The city has withstood two world wars, centuries of political upheaval, and — since 1991, when the communist government yielded to a democratic one — a period redefining that encompasses every aspect of life.

A central highlight of the visit was the Corpus Christi celebration, where Father Cintula and Father Vilkauskas participated in the Eucharist procession as thousands lined the streets.

Father Vilkauskas, who also serves as diocesan director of evangelization, said the procession epitomized the week-long celebration of the Eucharist — and the ongoing, ingrained faith that exists in Poland, still a predominantly Catholic country despite the adjustments experienced as a result of democracy's taking hold.

"The church functioned for the longest time as the pivotal, most vocal, public and only voice of opposition to the communists," Father Vilkauskas added. "Now the church has to take its own place in the new freedom of Poland. It's a critical moment; the society at large is in a major transition."

The Charlotte group had other encounters with various aspects of the faith in Poland, too. At Wroclaw's city hall, Wesp met with Pope John Paul II upon his arrival to town, and the members were part of the congregation of 200,000 for the pontiff's Mass that closed the Congress on June 1. And numerous conversations with Wroclaw citizens helped delegates understand the view of the faith

Fr. Houseknecht Appointed As Vocation Director

By JIMMY ROSTAR
Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Bishop William G. Curlin has appointed Father Eric Houseknecht, parochial administrator of St. Margaret Church in Maggie Valley, the new vocation director for the Diocese of Charlotte.

Father Houseknecht succeeds Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of Holy Family Church in Clemmons, who took part in the young priest's formation as a seminarian. Father Houseknecht was ordained a priest in 1995.

"I express my sincere gratitude to Father O'Rourke for his years of devoted and zealous service as director of vocations for the priesthood,"

Father Eric Houseknecht

Bishop Curlin said. "I look forward to Father Houseknecht's continuing to foster, encourage and nurture vocations in that same spirit."

Father Houseknecht begins his new assignment at a time when 29 men are entering or attending seminary to serve the Charlotte Diocese.

"I'm thrilled and excited," said Father Houseknecht, whose first priestly assignment was as parochial vicar of St. Patrick Cathedral. He has served in Maggie Valley since August 1996.

"I look to maintain a consistent contact with our seminarians, letting them know that they're not forgotten and that there is somebody out there who cares," he added. "Those are things I appreciated as a seminarian myself."

Father Houseknecht explained that he also approaches his new responsibility as a means of enhancing his own priestly ministry. "Consistently, we're always called to reconnect with what motivated us to become priests," he said. "The sacredness of our callings is truly a remarkable and humbling experience to share with another person. Anytime you minister to another, you yourself are ministered to."

A seminarian's preparation, he hopes to remind parishioners of the diocese, is truly a joint effort. "In a special way, it gives the parish community a sense of pride to know that they are going to be part of that development and formation as well."

Young Adults Celebrate Their Catholic Roots

Donna Richardson and Andy Getz provide the music for the Mass celebrated by St. Gabriel pastor, Father Ed Sheridan.

By KATHY SCHMUGGE
Correspondent

HICKORY — Chris Keenan is a professed "cradle Catholic." Born and raised in the faith, Keenan grew up in Rhode Island where there "was practically a Catholic Church on every street corner."

Living in North Carolina, where Catholics compose 3 percent of the population, has taken some adjusting to for the transplanted northerner. "I feel more challenged being away from such a strong Catholic community," she noted.

Keenan was among the more than 20 young adults from St. Gabriel Catholic Church who spent a recent weekend at the Catholic Conference Center taking part in a retreat entitled "Catechism 101".

Like Keenan, the group of young, single adults in their late 20s, 30s and early 40s shared a desire to step away from their busy lives and focus on what is truly important — learning more about the Church and their faith.

Roberta Ayers professed that she had always had a strong faith but didn't have all the explanations or background she needed as an adult believer. "During this retreat, I hope to rediscover my (Catholic) roots," she noted.

Darrin Williams admitted that he became distracted with outside interests in high school, and his Catholic education "dropped off." He felt challenged as a minority religion in North Carolina and needed answers to the many questions asked by non-Catholic friends.

The workshops, led by Andy Getz, St. Gabriel parish's adult education coordinator, ranged from basic truths about the faith to attempts to explain some of the greatest mysteries, including "Why did God create man?"

Father Ed Sheridan, pastor at St. Gabriel, celebrated Mass with the retreatants. Before the service, upon request, he offered a lesson on his vestments and their significance.

During his homily, Father Sheridan related the Gospel reading where Jesus calms the sea to every day struggles. "In our lives, we experience turbulence. We can pray, but we need to recognize we need other people." His message encouraged the young adults to be like Christ and offer that calming influence for others who may be having difficulties.

The participants left with many answers and may have more questions as they begin to assimilate the information they received. Donna Richardson especially enjoyed the discussion on church tradition. "It is important to remember that the Christian message began as an oral message," she said.

As adults exploring Catholicism, the parishioners found that faith is indeed a God-given gift which requires much from those willing to learn enough about it to truly live it.

Multiplying Loaves

"Jesus said, 'Have the people recline.' So the men reclined, about 5,000 in number. Then Jesus took the loaves, gave thanks, and distributed them to those who were reclining and also as much fish as they wanted. When they had had their fill, he said to the disciples, 'Gather the fragments left over, so that nothing will be wasted.' So they collect them and filled 12 wicker baskets with fragments from the five barley loaves...." (John 6:10-13)

Church, Community Continue To Pray For Teen's Safe Return

Kristen Modafferi

CHARLOTTE — St. Matthew Church community is joined by parishes across North Carolina and other parts of the country in offering prayers for the safe return of a missing teenager.

Kristen Modafferi, 18, the daughter of Robert and Debbie Modafferi, has been missing in California since June 23. A North Carolina State student attending summer school at the University of California-Berkeley, Kristen disappeared one day after saying she was going to the beach.

Her parents flew to San Francisco earlier this month and spent two weeks searching for their daughter. The FBI and local law enforcement officials have uncovered no substantial leads, and the family has also hired a private investigator.

Back in North Carolina, area parishes have rallied to assist the family in its time of need. On July 16, the St. Matthew council of the Knights of Columbus turned a summer family barbecue into a benefit for the Modafferis. More than 550 parishioners and friends attended the event, which was put together in 48 hours. Approximately $5,500 was raised.

"It was really a spontaneous outpouring of support from so many people," said Capuchin Father Edmund Walker, St. Matthew pastor.

At the gathering, Robert Modafferi thanked everyone for "their loving, moral support."

Grand Knight John Norton, who organized the effort, said other parishes are becoming involved as well. "St. Gabriel Church donated a check and are printing and distributing cards," he said.

Father Ed Sheridan, pastor of St. Gabriel, said his parishioners immediately wanted to reach out and help the Modafferis. "One of our own is suffering tremendously," he said. "We want to assist in any way we can."

To date, the parish has donated $5,000 to the case and is sending fliers and letters to churches in the Archdioceses of San Francisco and Oakland, Father Sheridan added.

St. Matthew and St. Gabriel churches also recently joined together in a fast. "We asked our parishioners to fast for three consecutive days (July 22 - 24), asking for Kristen's safe return," Father Sheridan said.

According to Father Walker, the family hopes to keep the efforts to find Kristen before as many people as possible. Fliers are being distributed in Catholic churches in North Carolina as well in hopes of uncovering new leads. "This needs to have as much media attention as possible, especially out West," he said. "The chances of finding something out are much greater by keeping Kristen's picture in the news. If someone has a lead, they might come forward."

"Prayer is the most important thing (people can offer)," Father Walker added.

An Internet page has also been set up for Kristen and is linked to a missing-persons network. The web site is located at www.yahoo.com. Once entered, type in Kristen Modafferi.

A fund has been started to help defray the costs of private investigators and trips to California. To contribute, send checks to: "Kristen Fund", c/o St. Matthew Church, 8015 Ballantyne Commons Parkway, Charlotte, NC 28277.

Anyone with information in the case is asked to call (800) 521-0917, extension 237, anytime.

among the Polish people — faith not only in God, but in themselves and their causes as well.

"To come out of all that country has experienced as well as it has really says something about the strength of its people," said Father Cintula. "Deep faith still exists, they embrace their culture;

we can truly learn from their example."

"Some of the most religious people I have ever met in my life are the Poles," added Wesp, herself an Episcopalian. "Their spirit is indomitable. Throughout their history, they have always persevered, and that is a great example to the world."

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Ecumenical Movement Is Unstoppable, Pope Tells Lutherans

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Improvements in Catholic-Lutheran ties are irreversible and the ecumenical movement unstoppable, Pope John Paul II told a global Lutheran gathering in early July. "The progress made in our relations over the years since the Second Vatican Council is a sign that the Lord is blessing our efforts," the pope said in a message addressed to the Rev. Gottfried Brakemeier, outgoing president of the Lutheran World Federation. The Geneva-based organization was holding its ninth general assembly in Hong Kong. Organizers reported the meeting attracted an estimated 900 participants, about half of whom were delegates from 68 countries.

Pope, In Letter To Yeltsin, Urges Redraft Of Religion Bill

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In a personal letter, Pope John Paul II urged Russian President Boris Yeltsin to reject a religious freedom bill that would discriminate against Catholics.

The pope said that for the Catholic Church in Russia, the legislation "would constitute a real threat to the normal carrying out of its pastoral activities and even to its survival."

He said the bill's wording makes it appear that "Russian civil authorities want to liken the Catholic Church to a foreign community, without any consideration for its centuries-long presence and action in Russia." He called for a complete redrafting of the proposed law.

The pope's letter, released by the Vatican July 17, was written June 24, shortly after the Russian Parliament passed the legislation. The bill was awaiting Yeltsin's signature to become law.

The legislation, designed to curb the activity of some religious sects in Russia, designates Orthodox Christianity, Islam, Buddhism and Judaism as "traditional" religions "worthy of respect." All other religions, which are not specified in the legislation, would come under a variety of government controls.

Catholic Church officials have warned that the bill, if enacted, could be a powerful tool for limiting the activities of the Catholic Church, which has operated freely only after the 1991 break-up of the Soviet Union.

In his letter, the pope expressed regret that the proposed law does not even mention the Catholic Church.

In a clear invitation to veto the legislation, the pope said he was counting on Yeltsin to be vigilant and "make the appropriate decisions" so that no legal or administrative obstacles are created for Catholics. He reminded the Russian president that a sizable number of Catholics live in Russia and "expect respect and security from civil authorities."

The pope told Yeltsin that while he supported the idea of encoding principles of religious freedom, the Russian legislation had included a number of regulations that go in the opposite direction. The pontiff emphasized the principle that all religions should be equal before the law.

Getting Good Advice

Poking about on the Internet the other day, I saw this interesting notice.

"PEER ADVICE: Although I am only 16, I hope to be a psychiatrist someday. Feel free to e-mail me for advice about your personal problems. Whatever it is — home, school or relationship problems — I can help."

This was just a little scary. Several things could happen when sending in a personal problem for this person's sage commentary.

- He might be a deep, warm, perceptive fellow, who could really help you understand your issues more clearly.

- He could be a very nice guy, but a dope. No matter how well meaning he might be, his suggestions could be useless or worse.

- He might be a 16-year-old creep, who will e-mail all your "confessions" to his buddies just for laughs.

- He possibly could turn out to be a 56-year-old creep, with much more sinister plans than merely making you feel foolish.

You can't tell. This, by the way, is a difficulty with much that is found on the Internet. Much of the information out there is useless or simply wrong. There's no quality control in cyberspace.

But that's probably true for much advice traded in the hallway at school. Another person's thoughts can be useful, but you need to be a wise customer in the advice business.

Just because somebody sounds sure of herself doesn't mean you ought to plan your life according to her proposals.

Here are three tips for judging the value of the advice people give you.

First, the less a person knows about you and your situation, the easier it is to give useless advice. Place more trust with people who take time to listen before they start telling you what to do. If you aren't two sentences into your problem before you get, "Here's what I think you ought to do about that," the suggestion is almost certainly based on the advice giver's preconceived notions, rather than on understanding your life.

Second, lean on people who ask you questions that help clarify your thinking rather than giving you specific answers for life's problems.

For example, "Have you thought about why she would say a thing like that?" is way better than, "I think you should tell her she's a liar and you're finished as friends."

Finally, the best advice is often no advice at all. A really good friend is somebody who's willing to share a long walk while you vent your feelings, asking questions while you rant and rave. When you ask, "What do you think I should do?", this trustworthy friend is likely to say, "I don't know for sure. You really have to decide for yourself."

It's good to have help thinking through a problem or a worry, but in the end you decide on your own. Somebody really good at giving advice always respects your capacity to decide what's right for yourself.

If you want useless advice or worse, go to some stranger on the Internet. For really helpful input, stick with the friends who know you well, and who take time to listen. Sometimes you may decide that a counselor, a pastor or a therapist can be helpful. Still, remember, the same rules apply: The professionals need to listen before they talk; a good question is often better than a good suggestion; and, you still have to make your own decisions in life.

"The Last Breath"

The French essayist Montaigne confessed, "It is not death, it is dying that alarms me." It is an important distinction. Intellectually we admit the inevitability of our own mortality, but thinking about the actual process of dying is another story. It makes us anxious and afraid.

The question of what happens during life's final moments increasingly fuels the best seller lists and television dramas. Authors range from mystical writers, who research near-death out of body experiences to distinguished surgeons, like Yale's Sherwin Nuland, who's How We Die charts the anatomy of the dying process. In my youth, priests and nuns admonished us to make novenas and pray regularly for a happy death as opposed to an unhappy death. A happy death today might take on the serene "passing over" as depicted on TV's Touched by an Angel.

Yet, one of the best-known poems in the English language suggests what may be our truest shared response to the idea of dying: "Do not go gentle into that good night.... Rage against the dying of the light." Dylan Thomas was outraged by his father's death and said so memorably and honestly. He made no attempt to cover up the wound inflicted on his spirit by the brutal finality of death. "Do not go gentle into that good night" brings to mind much of what theology, psychiatry and psychology say about our attitudes toward dying.

They warn that our institutionalized dishonesty about death is destructive. We try to disguise death. We try to repress our true feelings about it. We try to run away and hide from it. The sham, the simulation, the artificiality are destructive forces in our lives, they tell us.

In the funeral parlors, a dead body never looks dead. "Isn't he lifelike?" or "She looks so good!" We have been conditioned to say. I have seen corpses looking 30 years younger and ready to wake up and join the get-together. And the deceased never really die. People "pass away" or "expire." We go to great lengths to avoid seeing and saying death.

Not to embrace death as part of our given life is, finally, not to embrace life. Or as Mark Twain put it: "Each person is born to one possession which outvalues all the others — his last breath."

I am convinced that the sorrow and anxiety that come from thinking about dying are caused not only by fear of the unknown but also an unacknowledged sense of guilt. We remember the postponed good intentions, the unhealed animosities, the failures in kindness and understanding.

It is important for us to understand that one of the sources of sorrow at a funeral is the pain of self-disclosure of having to think about and make decisions about our own lives all over again. If we fail to honor death for what it is we will likewise fail to honor life for what it is. And we will never, on this earth, know who we are and what we ought to do.

But Christians face death squarely by kneeling before what must be the most vivid depiction of the dying process: Jesus the Christ crucified on a wooden cross. There one finds the strength to go gentle through the darkness of that good night with honesty and dignity. There God gives us the strength to be at peace when, at last, we say, "It is finished."

First an ending, then a new awakening. First Good Friday, then Easter morning.

Outdoor Weddings

Q. Our daughter and her fiance found a beautiful outdoor place for their wedding and reception. But our priest told them he could not have the ceremony there, since they are both Catholic.

Why can't a marriage be performed in the beauty of God's creation? Is this just a rule in our state?

A. The Catholic Church has great respect for our church buildings. They are sacred places where the most sacred events of our Christian life should happen, and marriage is one of them.

The general law of the church is that marriage between two Catholics or between a Catholic and a baptized non-

Catholic, in other words a sacramental marriage, is celebrated in a parish church.

Thus, not only because it is an act of worship, but because a marriage is a solemn action that should not be trivialized in any way, a church is the preferred location.

Specific permission may be granted by the local bishop for marriage elsewhere. Sometimes, for example, at least one of the baptized parties has so little connection with or respect for religion that a marriage somewhere else could be equally appropriate.

If the non-Catholic party is not baptized, the wedding may be held in church or another suitable place (Canon 1118).

Exceptions may be made, as I said. The usual and general policy, however, is the one explained by your priest.

Q. Several weeks ago your column dealt with Communion in the hand. You said that extending our hands to receive Jesus could be a meaningful symbol of trust, openness and desire for the Eucharist, among other things.

Don't you know you are contradicting Mother Teresa? According to a magazine I receive, a priest in New York asked Mother Teresa what is the most destructive and evil thing in the world today.

She answered, receiving Communion in the hand. Why are you and the church at odds with such a holy person?

A. I received several letters quoting the same priest and the same periodical about Mother Teresa.

I continue to be amazed by people's gullibility. Can you honestly imagine Mother Teresa, who has seen and cared for the worst misery this earth can con-

Why Catholics Conform To All Values Of Our Culture?

This letter is in response to your recent article entitled "Why are U.S. Catholics so Pro-Death Penalty?" (June 27 issue).

I pose a more general question: "Why are U.S. Catholics so conforming to all of the values of our culture?" Could it be 30-plus years of failing to expose our children, in the home and through religious education programs, to the true and complete teachings of the Church? Do recent generations of Catholics understand the truths regarding the teaching authority of the Church and our moral obligations regarding this authority?

If the "cafeteria Catholic" mentality continues to be explicitly and/or implicitly fostered in our youth, is it realistic to expect a significant difference between Catholics and society in general regarding matters of morality?

Editor's Note: Following is a sampling of the letters received in response to Marco Cipoletti's comments printed in the June 27 edition of The Catholic News & Herald. Cipoletti's letter addressed an article entitled "Salvation for Gays Requires Celibacy" taken from the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano.

Christians Called To Live Chastely

This is in response to Marco Cipoletti's letter in which he expresses anger against the "prejudice" he perceives in the Church's statement that those with homosexual tendencies remain celibate in order to attain salvation. He asks why heterosexuals are not held to the same standard.

The answer lies in the Church's teaching that sexual intercourse is reserved for marriage alone (Corinthians 6: 18-20), marriage being the sacramental union of a man and a woman (Matthew 19: 4-6). Not all men and women, of course, are called to the vocation of marriage. Some are called to priestly or religious life, in which case they are called, also, to be celibate (i.e., unmarried). Others are called to live out their Christian vocation as single lay people. Each of us, however, regardless of our sexual "orientation" are called to live chastely.

The writer states that he looks forward to reading more "positive" articles regarding the "goodness" and "holiness" of his lesbian gay brothers and sisters. Surely that goodness and holiness will shine forth not only from homosexually oriented Catholics but from heterosexual Catholics as well when we all begin again to live according to our Lord's holy will.

Laws Apply Equally To Everyone

I have always understood that the laws of God apply equally to everyone.

As I understand it, sex outside marriage is either adultery or fornication — this applies to heterosexuals or homosexuals.

If one is not married, one stays celibate. That seems simple and straightforward — but not necessarily easy.

St. James Parishioners Lay Foundation For Future

The endowment fund at St. James serves the church family today and will leave a legacy to future generations.

CONCORD — Redemptorist Father Daniel Carboy likes to plan for the future.

As pastor of St. James Church, he is always looking for ways to keep the parish on financially sound ground. A fund drive begun in 1991 helped build a new parish center nearly three years ago, but the center's dedication in 1994 also produced another avenue for Father Carboy and parishioners to serve the faithful for generations to come.

"Bishop Curlin was here for the dedication with some friends and afterward, I was talking to one of the Washington D.C. priests visiting," Father Carboy explained. "We got on the subject of money and the pastor said he had $20,000 a year coming into his parish 'free' every year. I asked him how and he told me they had a $400,000 endowment."

Soon thereafter, Father Carboy was presented with the opportunity to create an endowment for St. James in the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte when a parishioner donated $4,000. "I asked her if I could use the money to start an endowment and she agreed," he said. Since that initial donation in the summer of 1994, the endowment has grown to nearly $30,000.

The money will continue to generate funds for the church because, as an endowment, the principal is never used. At St. James, the church also reinvests income generated by the principal.

"I think having an endowment is very important to the life of the church," Father Carboy said. "As a parish grows, so do its needs."

Each year, parishioners are given two opportunities to earmark donations specifically for the endowment; second collections are taken at Easter and in August (to commemorate the church's anniversary). "We have special envelopes we provide, and I explain the endowment process in the bulletin a few weeks before each collection. I tell them how this will better prepare the church for the future," Father Carboy said.

"Parishioners have been very generous," he added. "It's a challenge to convince people of something that might happen 20 years from now, but I keep on trying to educate our parishioners,"

Father Carboy said. "I try not to talk about money much, but they seem to be responding."

Although the endowment's funds have not been earmarked for a specific purpose yet, the pastor said it will serve the St. James family for many years.

"I think it's a great legacy to leave the next generation," he said. "The endowment keeps producing. And we can use the assets from it and it's still there. I like that idea."

Father Carboy

Many churches do not plan for the future, but according to Father Carboy, creating an endowment is something he recommends other parishes to consider.

"It's almost like a young family," he said. "They start out with their jobs and have 'x' amount of money earmarked for food, clothing, electricity and other necessities. They also need to plan for the future. The church is no different. We need to be prepared for the future as well."

CHARLESTON, S.C. — The five bishops from the Atlanta Province met in the see city of the Diocese of Charleston July 6-9 for a working session of sharing and coordinating.

The bishops gathered in Charleston were host Bishop B. Thompson, Archbishop John F. Donoghue of Atlanta, Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte, Bishop J. Kevin Boland of Savannah and Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Raleigh.

Archbishop Donoghue presided at a noon Mass at the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist July 8, with the other four bishops concelebrating. In his homily, the archbishop noted that he and his fellow prelates receive "much comfort from the notion that we are united in faith."

"We stand together as Catholics. We can weather the storm and come out on top," Archbishop Donoghue stated.

"In today's world, we are up against powerful forces indeed. But we shouldn't allow ourselves to be discouraged," he stressed.

The Atlanta prelate emphasized, "We keep alive the attitude with which Christ met his accusers. Let us pray for those who cannot surrender to the love of Christ."

Following their working sessions, the bishops dined as guest of Bishop Thompson and toured the Lowcountry.

"Contact" Presents Philosophical Concepts, Optimistic Outlook

NEW YORK (CNS) — Jodie Foster solidifies her Oscar-winning career playing an astronomer willing to sacrifice her life to be the first human to visit alien life in "Contact" (Warner Bros.).

This sweeping movie, which tries and to some extent succeeds in blending entertainment with loftier philosophical questions, has at its center the driven character of astronomer Ellie Arroway (Foster).

First seen as an only child whose widowed father (David Morse) encourages her interest in radio transmissions and astronomy, Ellie is orphaned by age 9 and grows up solely consumed by science and the determination to discover if there is life out there.

While doing pure research in Puerto Rico at the world's largest radio telescope she meets former seminarian Palmer Joss (Matthew McConaughey), who is exploring the relationship between science and faith.

He is wary of technology but a firm believer in God, and she is just the opposite. Yet they manage to put aside their differences for one passionate night, but the next day she leaves to continue her research from New Mexico.

After four years of ridicule for monitoring radio signals from deep space, she succeeds in taping audio communications and then video images from the distant star Vega.

Revealing her findings, Ellie is immediately surrounded by powerful White House players with their own agendas. James Woods as the national security adviser wants to militarize any response while Ellie's ambitious former mentor, David Drumlin (Tom Skerritt), is eager to usurp her glory and take charge.

And Palmer, now the president's spiritual adviser, is also key to determining who will be the first human to make alien contact — in person. It seems the intergalactic message is a blueprint for an elaborate space vehicle with room for one human only to make the historic voyage to Vega.

Drumlin campaigns to be the chosen one and uses Ellie's refusal to say she believes in God as a deterrent against her, as does Palmer, whose motivations are more complicated.

Although Drumlin wins the seat in "The Pod" spacecraft, waiting in the wings is the techno-mogul (John Hurt) who funded all the years of Ellie's research, and who is convinced she should be the one to make first contact.

Oscar-winning "Forrest Gump" director Robert Zemeckis blends science fiction, romance, political intrigue and spiritual concerns into his two-hour and 22-minute movie, based on Carl Sagan's 1985 best-selling novel.

It's an ambitious project and certainly a more serious and sophisticated approach than recent comic alien-themed movies where extraterrestrials are deadly killers as in "Independence Day," "Mars Attacks" and "Men in Black."

As the besieged scientist, Foster is tense and intense, and thoroughly believable as someone for whom human connections are secondary to nonhuman connections in the name of science.

But McConaughey is less credible as a hunk who left the seminary when celibacy proved a problem and somehow ended up as a charismatic New Age-type guru whose spoutings about technology's impact on society have the rapt ear of the president. Together Foster and McConaughey seem more like sheer symbols of science and religion than lovers who are trying to find common ground.

Yet the movie makes pains to stress neither science nor faith are mutually exclusive, as Ellie experiences a spiritual awakening of sorts based on her experiences that cannot be empirically proved.

Woods, and Angela Bassett as another presidential adviser, are brittle characters of little definition, and Hurt as the billionaire techno-nut seems mostly to provide whimsy in the narrative and the financial means for Ellie to persevere.

Viewers will hardly fail to notice many Gumpian touches throughout the movie, as when President Clinton appears alongside the cast, or in a climactic scene by the Washington Mall's Reflecting Pool.

But it seems almost anti-climactic when the crucial in-person contact is finally made, given what the breathlessly awaited alien verbal response is.

However, visually the movie never disappoints, from telling close-ups of Ellie caught between conflicting political infighting to glorious linked vistas of mammoth dish-shaped radio telescopes in the desert to the remarkable-looking circular revolving space vehicle to in-flight views of other golden galaxies.

Zemeckis seems hard-pressed to balance the basic story of making alien contact with the philosophical issues raised and at the same time keep a dubious romance going and the subplot of Ellie being dished out of credit for her discovery by the devious Drumlin. It certainly keeps the long-running film moving along but some may wander out wondering just what the message of the movie was anyway.

This is the kind of movie that is involving because it is very open to personal interpretation. Its ultimate outlook is one of great hope and optimism, but a few may find it presents religion negatively as some of religiously oriented characters are fanatics.

Jodie Foster stars as an astronomer willing to sacrifice her life to visit alien life in "Contact." The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

On the other hand, the script makes a point of stressing that 95 percent of humanity believes in a Higher Power and Ellie is scorned for her staunch atheism unless she gets scientific proof of God's existence.

"Contact" is surely one of the more interesting movies of the year in daring to actually present philosophical concepts, even if the conclusions are superficial at best.

Because of some sexual innuendo and fleeting violence, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

"Destry Rides Again" (1939)

Western sheriff (James Stewart) uses his wits rather than his dead aim with a six-shooter to rid a lawless town of its ruthless boss (Brian Donlevy). Director George Marshall mixes humor and action in equal measure neatly meted out by a good cast including Marlene Dietrich as a saloon singer ("See What the Boys in the Back Room Will Have") who shows her mettle in a knockdown brawl with Una Merkel. Stylized gunplay and fisticuffs. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Broken Arrow" (1950)

Thoughtful Western set in 1870 Arizona, where an ex-Army officer (James Stewart) persuades the warring Apache leader, Cochise (Jeff Chandler), to make peace, then takes an Apache bride (Debra Paget) who's soon killed by vengeful whites out to break the treaty. Directed by Delmer Daves, the fact-based story has plenty of colorful period action, some Indian lore and a bit of romance, but was notable at the time for its sympathetic treatment of Native Americans as fellow humans rather than howling savages. Frontier violence in a meaningful context. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Glenn Miller Story" (1954)

James Stewart gives an ingratiating performance as the trombone player who starts his own band, discovers the "sound" that makes it a national favorite, then dies in a World War II flight over the English Channel. Directed by Anthony Mann, the story's interesting and the acting good (June Allyson as his supportive wife) with plenty of examples of Miller's music and appearances by many of the era's musicians. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Spirit of St. Louis" (1957)

Meticulous but lengthy re-creation follows the thoughts and reflections of Charles Lindbergh (James Stewart) while making aviation history in 1927 as the pilot of the first nonstop flight from New York to Paris. Directed by Billy Wilder, Stewart manages to hold viewer interest on the solo flight across the Atlantic, partly because of the journey's dangers en route but mostly because of the character's courage and determination in accomplishing this feat of early aviation. Some threatening situations. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

A Way To Say Thanks

Thanks to the parishioners of the Charlotte Diocese, priests serving in western North Carolina will be assisted in their retirement years by the people they have faithfully served.

Annual Collection Help Provides Needed Retirement Benefits For Priests

In a recent interview with The Catholic News & Herald, Bill Weldon, diocesan fiscal manager, talked about the priests retirement policy and about changes affecting the annual collection.

During the weekend of August 9-10, the annual diocesan collection for the priests retirement will be held. What is this retirement fund?

The priests retirement fund provides monthly retirement benefits for our retired priests. However, it is more than just a retirement plan; this is our way of providing for the priests who have served us for so many years.

Does the retirement plan provide for all priests serving in the diocese?

The provisions of the diocesan retirement plan provide each of our retired diocesan priests with monthly benefits. However, the diocese is keenly aware of the significant contributions of religious order priests. Thus, we help support the retirement funds of the representative orders. The contributions to religious orders comes from the annual collection as well.

The dollar amount needed from this year's collection is significantly more than the amount collected last year. Why the increase?

Changes to the benefits package for retired diocesan priests and increased funding of the retirement programs of religious order priests have significantly increased the amount needed. The plan provides our retired priests with a substantial increase in benefits this year. This will bring them up to a more amenable level, that, combined with social security benefits, can provide our priests with a livable retirement. It is important to note, that this year's increase is only a portion of the enhanced package. The overall increase includes an annual cost of living adjustment every year, based on the consumer price index. Additionally, our contribution to religious order priest funds will approximately triple from the amount contributed for last year.

How is the amount needed determined?

Funding of the retirement plan for diocesan priests is determined by an actuarial firm hired by the diocese. They perform an actuarial valuation of the plan from which the amount needed is derived. This involves projecting the future retirement benefits of all diocesan priests based on anticipated benefit levels and the projected years of retirement. These costs are factored over the priests' working years to determine the annual funding needed. Essentially, we are providing for the future retirement of those priests who are currently working. This insures that the funds are available when a priest becomes eligible for retirement benefits.

The contribution we make to religious orders' retirement funds is derived from our own plan experience. Based on the diocesan plan, we calculate the "per priest" amount needed for the year. We then make contributions to each of the religious orders who serve the diocese approximately equal to that "per priest" amount times the number of priests serving in the diocese.

What does this mean for the parishioners, parishes and missions of the diocese?

To help insure the needed funds are raised, the total amount needed has been assigned to each parish in the diocese based on 3 percent of their 1996 total offertory. This represents a significant increase over the amount collected last year. If the amount collected falls short, the parish will make up the difference. Thus, we are appealing to all the faithful of the diocese to be as generous as possible.

Collection To Ensure Retired Priests' Well-Being

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

As Father Mark Lawlor prepares for his new priestly assignment as parochial administrator of Our Lady of the Americas Church in Biscoe on Aug. 1, he admits planning for retirement is an obligation not at the top of his list.

"In a sense, it is not the first of my priorities," says the 36-year-old priest of pondering retirement, which in this diocese averages at 70 for clergy. "But through discipline and professionalism, I know that I do need to consider those plans now."

Thanks to the parishioners of the Charlotte Diocese, Father Lawlor, his brother priests of the diocese and religious order priests serving in western North Carolina will be assisted in their retirement years by the people they have faithfully served.

The annual diocesan collection for the Clergy Retirement Plan is Aug. 9-10. As in past years, the money taken in will support retired priests in a variety of ways, health care and housing among them. And this year's efforts come with added emphasis to upgrade the benefit for retirees.

"I pray that our brothers and sisters in this diocese show their appreciation for the many years of service that our retired brother priests have given," says Bishop William G. Curlin, himself celebrating 40 years of priesthood in 1997. "This collection enables our retired priests to have adequate funds to live out their final years in well-deserved dignity and needed support."

The projected goal of this year's drive is $583,000, of which $194,000 is intended for the pension funds of the religious orders whose members also serve within the diocese. All told, this year's collection drive appeals to the stewardship of all parishioners like never before.

In order to meet the proposed funding, diocesan officials recently announced that every parish and mission has been assigned a target goal, 3% of its annual offertory, which officials hope will be met in the pews during the second weekend in August. Church communities not meeting that goal through the collection will be responsible for making up the difference.

"Our priests have served us very well, and in many cases for long periods of time," says Rita Stefani, a parishioner of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point. "They are deserving of a (comfortable) retirement where they don't have to worry about medical expenses and a place to live."

"I am a product of 16 years of Catholic education, and I certainly have always felt that way. I very strongly support retirement programs for all members of the clergy. It's a way to give back something to them," she adds.

In the fall of 1996, the Chancery established a task force of lay people, clergy and diocesan staff to study the benefits offered in the retirement plan.

Following an intensive series of meetings, a scenario was developed that would increase priests' monthly retirement income from the diocese by 25 percent for the new fiscal year.

The plan also includes modifications that, over time, will increase the monthly benefit annually.

"We recognize that as people grow older, the cost of health care and other considerations increases," says the Very

Rev. Mauricio West, vicar general and chancellor. "Though our priests' standard of living is modest in their retirement years, their existence should be without worry."

With the revised plan, retired priests will continue to receive monthly installments for life. That money combined with Social Security benefits, investments and savings in most cases compose the priests' retirement income.

For Francis Manley, dedicated ministry in western North Carolina is a vocation he has witnessed for decades. "The priests' whole lives are their parishes," says the lifelong parishioner of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville.

Manley counts the church he was baptized in as being "blessed with excellent, very caring pastors," adding that they — like all who have made the priesthood their life plan — "should be taken care of in their retirement."

While the amount expected from each parish is vastly higher than the collection has yielded in past years, Father Lawlor agrees the effort will ensure the comfort and well-being of his fellow priests as they retire. "It's 34 years away for me," he says, "but in the next decade or so, we're going to have quite a number of retirements — perhaps exceeding ordinations."

Appreciative of the assistance he will someday receive from the retirement program, Father Lawlor is also thankful for the gifts of his predecessors. "Especially for my older brother priests who are approaching or entering retirement age, this fund is a gracious and grateful way for all of us to support them in their needs," he says.

Priests Continue To Serve Church In Retirement

"Many of us will be working beyond our time because of the shortage of priests ....and even though we are retired, we continue to try to fill in and help when we are able." Father Patrick Gavigan, retired priest living at Maryfield

HIGH POINT — Without the desire to accumulate material assets, these men dedicated their lives to a career which would leave them without the security of material wealth upon retire-would like to return to his first love, parish work. In three short months Bishop Begley, with true determination, has already began to take steps with a specialized walker. "He just won't give up," smiled a friend, Father Patrick Gavigan, also a retired priest living at Maryfield.

Even though Bishop Begley is limited, not only with neuritis but a heart condition, he enjoys being able to minister in his current residence. "It brings me great joy to be able to concelebrate Mass daily, take prayer requests, give advice and hear confessions," he said. Even in the retirement home, he keeps abreast of the concerns of the diocese. He is currently trying to think of ways to raise money to send young men to seminary and try, in some way, to repay the diocese for his care at Maryfield.

Only a corridor away is a retired priest of 43 years, Father Gavigan, stricken with Parkinson's disease. It was diagnosed nine years ago and has left him in a very weakened state. With Bishop William Curlin's authorization, Father Gavigan is able to have the Blessed Sacrament in his room, which is a source of comfort for him as he struggles with this debilitating neurological disease.

"Many of us will be working beyond our time because of the shortage of priests. This is part of the dedication that comes with being a priest. Even though we are retired, we continue to try to fill in and help when we are able," he said.

Father Gavigan has also given much to the diocese. In 1953, he became a trappist monk, and after 22 years at the monastery, decided to become a diocesan priest. Originally assigned to a parish in Memphis, Tenn., he was offered a position in North Carolina. Without hesitation, he accepted because of his love of the mountains. His first assignment was at St. Mary Church in Shelby, and he moved to several other parishes until his last job as an associate at St. Benedict Church in Greensboro. He lived in an apartment for a few years until the progressive symptoms of his disease ultimately brought him to Maryfield.

"A retirement fund is the sensible way to go, especially for those priests who are unable to support themselves," said Father Gavigan, who sees it now as his "livelihood."

It may never be possible to repay these men for their contribution to the diocese. Their works are far reaching and impact the entire church. Fortunately the church has a tradition of honoring those great saints of the past who carved the present road by their Christ-like example.

With just a little effort and financial assistance, these retired priests and the many to follow, who have unselfishly dedicated their lives to service, can have the dignity and honor they deserve for a job well done.

Father Bernard Manley, 75, is shown celebrating Mass July 20 at Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Lexington. Although he retired from the priesthood in 1996, Father Manley continues to fill in throughout the diocese. "Retired priests can be a great help," he says. "We just don't have enough priests." Father Manley, who is in residence at St. Eugene parish in Asheville and celebrates Masses there one weekend a month, also celebrates Masses frequently at St. Joseph's Hospital. "I just want to stay active," he adds.

Senior Pastors Hope To Serve Church Into Next Millennium

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

Father Ed Kirsch, pastor of St. William Church in Murphy and Immaculate Heart of Mary mission in Hayesville, is nearing retirement, but like many older priests, hopes to continue serving the Church well into the next millennium.

"I can request to retire next May, but I don't know when my ultimate retirement date will be. I can't see around that corner yet," he said.

With the shortage of priests in the diocese, Father Kirsch, 74, is eager to minister for as long as possible. "I plan to fill in whenever needed," he noted.

Ordained nine years ago, Father Kirsch was called to his vocation later in life after a lengthy career in pharmaceutical management. While he is approaching a second retirement, the pastor feels the clergy retirement collection is an important component for priests who have dedicated their entire lives to ministry.

"It relates to individual situations. Often you have priests who have no family," he said. "I do have family, but I wish not to prevail upon them, so I like the opportunity of a pension through the diocese."

Like other retirees, priests face the ever-increasing costs of healthcare, housing and other variables that make it incumbent to have a framework laid for their future, Father Kirsch added.

"Retirement from ministry is no different from lay retirement," he noted. "It's a matter of keeping body and soul together with whatever resources are available."

Msgr. Richard Allen has served the Catholic Church in North Carolina since 1956, and like Father Kirsch, plans to continue being active in ministry for several more years.

"I am 67 and eligible to retire in the year 2000, but I don't see myself retiring," the St. Ann pastor said. "I'll continue to work as long as I can."

Ordained for the Diocese of Raleigh 41 years ago, the priest served the late Bishop Vincent S. Waters until Father Allen's appointment as rector of St. Patrick Cathedral in the newly formed Charlotte Diocese in 1972. All of Msgr. Allen's priestly assignments in the Tar Heel state have been off the I-85 corridor, except for a stay in Smithfield.

Msgr. Allen points to insights shared by Msgr. Charles Fahey, director of the Third Age Center at Fordham University, when discussing his future. Msgr. Fahey's paper, "The Graying of Clergy," addresses the priestly retirement issue.

"The whole concept of Third Age is that priests don't really retire, they shift their emphasis of ministry," Msgr. Allen explained. "We need to come up with ways in which older priests can somehow be involved in ministry beyond retirement age. They can help at schools, hospitals, hear daily confessions; there are so many ways priests can continue to stay involved."

"Many older priests have never known anything but ministry and the Catholic priesthood," he added.

While other careers see individuals retire at age 65 or earlier, priests are asked to serve until age 70 and beyond, Msgr. Allen noted.

Charlotte there are:

priests in their retirement.

ment. It did not matter to them, because with trust, they willingly chose to respond to God's call and become a Roman Catholic priest, a vocation, where their investing would be in others. The retired priests in the Charlotte Diocese, some with failing health, will look to God for their future care.

"Once ordained, I placed my life in the hands of my bishop. I knew that he would be responsible for me," said Bishop Michael J. Begley, bishop emeritus, one of the better known retired clergy in the area. Bishop Begley, the founding bishop of the Charlotte Diocese, honored during the diocese's 25th jubilee celebration in January, has an impressive past which all began in 1926, as a young high school graduate from Massachusetts with a vocation. He has contributed much in his 63 years as a priest, building from scratch, many of the North Carolina parishes he was assigned. From 1972 to 1984, he was the bishop of the Charlotte Diocese starting with only 34,200 Catholics.

After spending most of his retired years assisting at St. Ann Church, Bishop Begley recently moved to Maryfield Retirement Home in High Point. Because of neuritis, inflammation of nerves which has caused immobility in his right leg, he undergoes daily physical therapy and gets the extra care he needs at the home. Known by the staff and residents as "Bishop", people gravitate to him because of his faith which keeps him upbeat and optimistic.

"I hope to be back on my feet so that I can continue to help the diocese," said the 88-year-old retired bishop who

Surveys Uncover Widespread Catholic Confusion On Communion

A man receives Communion during Mass at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington.

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (CNS) — An ongoing series of discussions about the Eucharist in Rochester parishes has already reached one conclusion — there's a lot of confusion about Communion. "A lot of people have a little of the truth, but not everybody has all of it," said Joan Workmaster, director of the Office of Liturgy of the Diocese of Rochester.

"Even some of the priests of the diocese say (of some teachings), 'No, that can't be true.' Oh, yes it is." Liturgy office staff members discovered confusion over a central teaching of the Catholic Church — that during the Mass the bread and wine become the body and blood of Christ. "There's a lot of confusion over the whole issue of real presence, how that is defined and understood," Workmaster said.

Couple Helps African-Americans Forge Strong Marriages

By DEIRDRE DALY O'NEAL

CHICAGO (CNS) — Andrew and Terri Lyke, married for 22 years, know that all couples face an uphill battle in trying to build satisfying, long-term marriages.

The Lykes

But African-Americans face a number of additional difficulties and obstacles that may combine to make the dream of a happy marriage seem like "an elusive fantasy," Terri Lyke said in an interview.

Some of those obstacles include the prevalence of guns and the influence of gangs in many black neighborhoods, the destructive impact of drugs, and the lingering effects of racism manifested in diminished educational and career opportunities.

Additionally, the large number of children growing up in "father-absent" households means that there are few role models of successful, two-parent families for young black men and women to emulate, the Lykes said.

To combat the many forces working against the formation of successful marriages among African-Americans, the Lykes have served since 1982 as co-ordinators of the Marriage Ministry to the African-American community for the Archdiocese of Chicago.

In addition, in 1986 they established "Lyke to Lyke Consultants," through which they offer a variety of workshops, retreats and seminars that can take anywhere from a few hours to several days.

These programs include the

"Kupendana" workshop, an eight-hour, one-day workshop for engaged couples. "Kupendana" means "love one another" in the Kiswahili language, Andrew Lyke said.

Among the discussion topics covered in the Kupendana workshop are: effective communication, marriage roles and adjustments, intimacy, techniques of negotiation, marriage as a sacrament and vocation, and "God as the center" of any truly happy marriage.

Also offered are the "Ushuda" (witness) workshops, which generally last three to four hours, and the "Arusi" (marriage celebration) weekend retreat, in which "couples retreat from their day-in, day-out routine to focus on their marriage," Andrew said.

The Lykes acknowledge that they are not professional marriage counselors or therapists.

But they feel that what they may lack in professional counseling credentials, they make up for in 20-plus years of marriage experience and a "just plain folks" ability to identify with the people who come to their seminars.

Andrew Lyke, 44, is a member of the campus ministry team at DePaul University in Chicago and worked for 23 years for Ameritech Services Inc., formerly Illinois Bell Telephone Company. Terri Howard Lyke, 43, is supervisor of the medical sonography department at Community Hospital in Munster, Ind.

They have two children, Andrea, 15, and Martin, 12.

In 1995 their work with African-American engaged and married couples was recognized by the Archdiocese of Chicago with the Augustus Tolton Award, given annually to those who have made a "significant contribution" to the

Pope To Preside Over Celebrations With Youths During France Trip

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II will preside over liturgies and an evening celebration with young people from all over the globe during his Aug. 21-24 visit to conclude World Youth Day ceremonies in Paris. During his stay, the pontiff also will beatify Frederic Ozanam, founder of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, and meet French civil authorities. He will travel briefly to the nearby town of Evry to pay a visit to the modern cathedral there. The Vatican announced the detailed schedule for the pope's trip, which centers around celebrations for the 12th annual World Youth Day.

Plant Images Show Shroud Is From Jerusalem, Botanist Says

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Images of flowers and pollen samples that appear on the Shroud of Turin are those of plant species that grow in the area of Jerusalem, says an Israeli botanist. "The assemblage of plants ... shows (the shroud) could only come from the Middle East, and the best fit is Jerusalem," said Hebrew University Professor Avinoam Danin, an expert in the flora of the Holy Land. Some 96 percent of the 28 flower species identified on the shroud grow between Jerusalem and the Qumran Caves. Add the southern Dead Sea area to the equation and 100 percent of the species can be found, said Danin.

Bishops Launch Catechism For Filipino Catholics

TAGAYTAY CITY, Philippines (CNS) — Excitement surrounded the July launching of the catechism for Filipino Catholics, crowning 13 years of teamwork by lay and religious. "I am proud to present the catechism for Filipino Catholics with a sense of achievement, history and gratitude," Archbishop Leonardo Z. Legaspi of Caceres, Philippines, told UCA News, an Asian church news agency based in Thailand. The catechism was presented at the start of the 75th plenary assembly of the Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines in early July in Tagaytay, about 35 miles southeast of Manila. The Holy See approved the text last January.

Black Catholics Honor Priest As 'The Father Of Us All'

QUINCY, Ill. (CNS) — "For black Catholics, he is the father of us all," Benedictine Father Cyprian Davis said at ceremonies marking the 100th anniversary of the death of Father Augustus Tolton. Hundreds of pilgrims from Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Indiana, Tennessee, Louisiana and New York came to Quincy July 12-13 to honor Father Tolton, the first U.S.-born African-American priest and founder of the first black Catholic church in Chicago. "Father Augustus Tolton was a fighter. He was a follower, just as the disciples were followers of Christ. He was a bridge builder," said Father Davis, author of "The History of Black Catholics in the United States."

Vatican Denies It Held Gold Smuggled From Croatia At End Of WWII

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican denied a report that it had been a repository for gold smuggled out of Croatia by Nazi allies at the end of World War II.

"This news has no basis in reality," Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said in a statement about the assertions in a recently declassified U.S. Treasury Department memo reported in the international media July 22.

"The presumed information, lacking any documentation, is based only on 'an authoritative Italian source' which, if it exists, remains unidentified, and whose authoritativeness is more than doubtful," Navarro-Valls' statement said.

The government memo, discovered by the producers of a television documentary, states that the Vatican was used to funnel cash and gold coins for members of the puppet government established by the Nazis in Croatia. That government was run by members of the Croatian Fascist organization, Ustasha.

Ustasha leaders were responsible for the murder of hundreds of thousands of Serbs, Jews and Gypsies, along with the looting of their property, during the war. After Nazi Germany collapsed, a number of Ustasha officials escaped to other countries.

The document valued the cash and coins at 200 million Swiss francs, which would make them worth about $170 million today. Written in October 1946 by a Treasury agent to his superior, the memo was classified until last December. It quotes a "reliable source in Italy" saying 200 million Swiss francs which the Ustasha confiscated had not been accounted for and were being held at the Vatican.

Speaking to members of the Vatican press corps, Navarro-Valls said any transfer of money would have been done through the Institute for the Works of Religion, the Vatican bank.

"There is no trace" of such funds, he said.

"It is a serious matter," Navarro-Valls noted. "So we had to say something, even if just to point out that there is no foundation for it."

Cardinal Commends TWA Victims' Families For Keeping Faith

By TRACY EARLY
NEW YORK (CNS) — Cardinal John J. O'Connor July 17 commended family members of victims of last year's TWA crash for "the way you have kept faith with God."

He spoke at a memorial Mass celebrated at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York on the first anniversary of the crash of Flight 800 that took 230 lives.

Cardinal O'Connor, of New York, told family members that they would not yet be able to feel the tragedy was over, but he encouraged them to let God work his healing power.

The Mass at the cathedral, the site of funerals for several crash victims and of a memorial Mass one month after the crash, was part of a series of events marking the year that has passed since the flight went down off the southern coast of Long Island.

The cardinal, who spoke at the end of the Mass, took note of the presence of non-Catholics among the families and friends in attendance and said he had received many letters from them revealing that they were keeping faith within their various traditions. In both Christian and Jewish theology, he said, suffering "can be offered to Almighty God and used in ways we never dreamed of."

When plans for the St. Patrick's Mass were made, Cardinal O'Connor expected to be out of the city that day so a priest at the cathedral, Father John T. Ferry, agreed to be the celebrant and homilist.

The Mass proceeded as planned, but the cardinal was able to change his schedule at the last minute to be there.

Father Ferry called for remembering not only the deaths of those on Flight 800 but "how they lived." While their goodness goes with them, it also "remains with us," he said.

New York Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani and FBI Director Louis J. Freeh were among a number of public officials present.

Giuliani spoke at the conclusion of the Mass, and said the loss of Flight 800 affected not only New York but the nation and the world. It was among those extraordinary occasions that "you remember where you were when you learned about it," he said.

He also acknowledged the frustration felt by family members and others in still not knowing a year later what caused the crash. "To this day we don't have an answer," he said.

But the mayor said they all now know the importance of the love that has bound them together and the strength that has come from relying on each other.

"Many waters cannot quench love," Giuliani said, quoting from chapter eight of the Song of Solomon as he recalled the 230 lives suddenly and inexplicably lost in the Atlantic.

Following the Mass at St. Patrick's, family members and friends gathered at trive, saying that Communion in the hand is the biggest evil in the world?

After awhile, however, the volume of mail prompted me to ask an official of her community about it.

Her answer: The Missionaries of Charity respect the freedom given by the church to receive Communion either on the tongue or in the hand.

Their general practice is to receive on the tongue, but they are free to receive in the hand when necessary. Obviously, Mother Teresa does not consider it the greatest evil.

Regardless of that, some will continue to believe anything, no matter how ridiculous, if it's what they want to do.

Internet Mass Creates Interest, Raises Questions

RALEIGH, N.C. (CNS) — News stories about a weekly Mass available on the Diocese of Raleigh's World Wide Web home page aimed at homebound Catholics have generated lots of interest and raised some questions. After a recent article by the Raleigh News & Observer daily newspaper was picked up by The Associated Press, phone calls from news media around the country flowed into the diocesan Catholic Center. "After the article passed through several organizations," said diocesan communications director Frank Morock, "the story began to read as if we were offering the opportunity for Catholics to meet their Sunday obligation on the Internet. Clearly that is not possible. However, for those who cannot attend Mass because of illness, age, infirmity or incarceration, the use of the Internet Mass can be a valuable tool for their spiritual well-being."

Divorced Have Gifts For Church, Gathering Told

NOTRE DAME, Ind. (CNS) — Catholics who have gone through separation or divorce can be a gift to the church, Trinitarian Brother Loughlan Sofield told an international gathering of the North American Conference of Separated and Divorced Catholics. About 50 men and 175 women attended the conference at the University of Notre Dame's Center for Continuing Education. Brother Sofield, a specialist in lay ministry development, described to the group various ways divorced people have witnessed to him levels of spiritual discernment and sensitivity to others which have resulted from their learning to come to grips with the pain and challenges of divorce.

Plant Images Show Shroud Is From Jerusalem, Botanist Says

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Images of flowers and pollen samples that appear on the Shroud of Turin are those of plant species that grow in the area of Jerusalem, says an Israeli botanist. "The assemblage of plants ... shows (the shroud) could only come from the Middle East, and the best fit is Jerusalem," said Hebrew University Professor Avinoam Danin, an expert in the flora of the Holy Land. Some 96 percent of the 28 flower species identified on the shroud grow between Jerusalem and the Qumran Caves. Add the southern Dead Sea area to the equation and 100 percent of the species can be found, said Danin.

Full-Communion Plan By U.S. Protestants Draws Catholic Notice

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As four U.S. Protestant denominations move closer to full communion with each other, how they are making that move is drawing interest from a leading Catholic ecumenist. Rather than merge, the denominations — the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the United Church of Christ, the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. and the Reformed Church in America — are working toward sharing congregations, clergy and sacraments. "We may discover new forms for us of relating to them in new ways, while respecting their characteristic distinctions," said Father John Hotchkin, executive director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs.

Parish Profile

CHARLOTTE — During the 1970s, the Catholic community that became known as St. Thomas Aquinas parish celebrated Masses in dormitories, apartments, a Lutheran church and a rest home chapel before settling in its first church in 1979. Now, with nearly 1,600 registered families, the St. Thomas Aquinas parish gathers as a rapidly growing congregation in one of Charlotte's largest sanctuaries.

The roots of St. Thomas Aquinas Church lay in the soil of the nearby campus of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. Consolata priests ministered to Catholic students there prior to the founding of the Charlotte Diocese in 1972. By the mid-'70s, the student congregation was being ministered by Oblates of Francis de Sales Father Joseph Travers, then Catholic campus minister.

The diocese soon announced plans to establish the ninth parish in the see city, and Father Travers began preparing to build a church with money donated by an anonymous benefactor. Catholics from northern Mecklenburg and southern Cabarrus counties were invited to join the students as the founding members of the new parish.

Oblates Father Joseph Zschmidt succeeded Father Travers in August 1978, and building efforts continued. A nearby house was purchased that month for use as a rectory, and the 250-seat church was completed in March 1979. Bishop Michael J. Begley dedicated the structure in April, giving the St. Thomas Aquinas community official parish status. The registry jumped to 40 families.

St Thomas Aquinas Church

By the mid-'80s, booming growth in northern Charlotte led to the need for larger worship space for St. Thomas Aquinas parishioners. A multi-purpose building including worship space for 350 was dedicated in 1985. Although the new church served parishioners well for a few years, it, too, was outgrown by decade's end.

Father Ray Berg was pastor at the time of a third groundbreaking ceremony, in June 1994. Construction proceeded during the pastorate of Msgr. John McSweeney. At the invitation of Bishop William G. Curlin, Capuchin Franciscan Friars assumed responsibility of the parish in January 1995. The new 1,116-seat sanctuary was dedicated by the bishop in November of that year. The original church is now used as the parish office, and the second building is utilized as the parish hall.

Among the church furnishings are ones that once adorned the sanctuary at St. Francis Seminary in Newton, N.J. They include the three-ton marble altar, the tabernacle and its altar, the sanctuary lamp, holy water fonts, and Stations of the Cross. New York craftsman Don Shephard designed these items, which placed first in a liturgical art competition in the Vatican pavilion at the 1964-65 World's Fair in New York.

Shephard also designed the church's stained glass windows, originally crafted for St. Francis Seminary as well.

Another highlight is the large crucifix located above the altar. Crafted by a local parishioner, the wooden cross measures more than 15 feet in length. Hanging from it is a seven-foot-tall, custom-made corpus of Christ from Italy, designed in the San Damiano style.

Spiritual and educational outreach are active throughout a variety of faith groups and efforts. Students attending UNCC continue to play an important role in the vitality of the parish through "Chi Rho," the campus ministry. A faith formation program involves more than 1,300 children and 100 volunteers. A Mother's Morning Out program includes 145 children. A Men's Group, Women's Group, charismatic prayer group, youth ministry group, and RCIA program meet regularly to share and learn in faith and friendship. Parishioners attend weekly exposition of the Blessed Sacrament in the chapel, and monthly nocturnal adoration begins the first weekend in August.

In February 1997, Bishop Curlin dedicated the latest addition to the St. Thomas Aquinas church grounds, the Family Life Center, which includes a full-sized basketball court, classrooms and offices. The addition marks steady growth of a parish — ministered by Capuchin Fathers Ignatius Zampino, pastor, and Martin Schratz, parochial vicar — located in a continually expanding area of Charlotte.

Knights, Parish Dedicate Memorial To Unborn

By MIKE KROKOS

Editor

ASHEBORO — If not for the strong faith of his mother, Bishop William G. Curlin could have been one of the victims.

"I remember a story of a woman who lost a child. She had a tragic accident and was going to have another child, but someone in the medical profession suggested she might want to terminate the pregnancy because it could endanger her life," the bishop said.

"But that woman believed in the sanctity of human life," he continued. "She had the child. And I thank God for that woman. She was my mother, and I was the child."

Bishop Curlin's comments were delivered to a crowd of more than 100 people who gathered at St. Joseph Church July 26 for a Pro-Life Memorial Dedication.

At the bilingual ceremony, parishioners from St. Joseph, members of the Knights of Columbus and pro-life advocates from across the state watched as the bishop blessed two monuments adjacent to the church. The marble monuments' inscriptions read: "In Loving Memory of Unborn Children" and "Life: God's Sacred Gift."

"Our Holy Father begs us to be witnesses to Jesus Christ. Not just by prayer, but by public professions of faith," Bishop Curlin said.

The project, sponsored by Asheboro Knights of Columbus Council 10891, began last November, said Ardist Holyfield, Grand Knight. "This is being done by (K of C) councils throughout the state and nation," he added. In the Diocese of Charlotte, more than 25 parishes have dedicated monuments to the unborn.

Bob Smith, the Council's pro-life chairman, said Father Joseph Mack, St. Joseph pastor, urged the Knights to take the project one step further. "We told Father Mack we wanted to put up a (pro-life) memorial, and Father said he'd really like to have two monuments," Smith said.

St. Joseph parishioner Ad van der Staak, an artist, helped design and erect the monuments.

John Harrison, state deputy of the Knights of Columbus, called the memorial "a great example of our dedication to the pro-life movement, and in the fight for the unborn in our society."

Barbara Holt, president of N.C. Right To Life in Greensboro, said pro-life supporters should use the dedication of the monuments as a "time of rededication on our part to the cause of life."

"Let us look for opportunities to be messengers of the Gospel of life to our own families, friends, co-workers, elected officials, and all with whom we come in contact," she added.

The N.C. Right to Life president said the monuments represent a stand against euthanasia as well.

"If euthanasia gains a foothold, it will be because of lack of dili-

McDermott Begins Work As Director Of Campus, Young Adult Ministries

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — College students, young adults and campus ministers throughout the Diocese of Charlotte have a new advocate. Her name is Colleen McDermott.

Colleen McDermott

The campus ministry veteran, former camp director and teacher assumed her role this week as diocesan director of campus ministry and young adult ministry. The ministries are two forms of outreach that McDermott says can help shape lives.

"Being with people as they figure out how to live a life where faith is very important is exciting," she says.

Her insight comes from first-hand experience: In addition to serving as Charlotte Catholic High School's campus minister and religion teacher for the past year, she has nearly a decade of teaching and campus ministry work in Georgia and California to her credit, supervised a household of new mothers and their infants, and overseen a summertime diocesan youth camp ministry.

After earning her bachelor's degree in mathematics from Augusta State University in 1987, she moved on to the University of San Francisco. There she served as a campus ministry intern and resident minister before being named the school's associate director of campus ministry in 1992, the same year she received a master's degree in theology.

Ministering to young adults, she says, presents an opportunity to reach out to those who are encountering significant transitions. "It's a time in people's lives when it seems that everything is up for grabs," she explains. "They sift through all the values that they've been taught and they begin to internalize them."

As diocesan director of the two ministries, McDermott will coordinate efforts across western North Carolina, where there are 14 Catholic campus ministries and several parish-based young adult groups currently in existence.

Her appointment came after a year-long review conducted by the diocesan education vicariate. Results of that research included the decision to hire a diocesan director of campus as well as young adult ministries. Father James Hawker, education vicar for the Diocese of Charlotte, says McDermott's variety of experience will serve her well in her new role.

"This is very much a new beginning (for the diocese), whereby we have a person who is being asked to coordinate both ministries," Father Hawker adds. "There will be a natural connection between the two."

As director of campus ministry, McDermott's pastoral and administrative duties include providing support to the diocese's Catholic campus ministers. The director cites professional development of the ministers as a primary objective, as well as reaching out to students attending colleges without campus ministries. She will also plan and coordinate a retreat program, mentor to those ministers and students seeking to enhance the ministry, and continue to develop an overall vision for campus ministry as it exists in the Charlotte Diocese.

Father Hawker stresses that young adult ministry is equally as vital to the diocese. "First, it creates a setting in which young people can come together to be nurtured spiritually, educationally and socially," he says.

"Secondly, these settings would be useful in assisting young adults deal with their needs, questions and concerns within the perspective of faith."

McDermott plans to meet with representatives of the existing young adults groups to help evaluate how to effectively build communities of faith at the local and diocesan levels. Experience has taught her that providing a diversity of occasions for enrichment — spiritual retreats, socials, involvement in parish life, for instance — often appeals to a larger group of people.

Like Father Hawker, McDermott sees young adult ministry as an extension of campus ministry. "It's very similar in terms of education and searching for God and understanding our Catholic tradition," she says.

And as has been the case in her past, McDermott looks forward to journeying with young adults in their walk of faith. "It's those conversations you have with people from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m., the ones exploring who God is and what we should believe. That's what's really exciting," she says.

"Once people ask those questions, they begin to realize how to live their lives — to put things into action."

gence and commitment on our part," she noted. "Diligence and commitment require that we act when the call to action comes. That diligence and commitment will not be easy, but will be rewarding in this life and the life to come."

Bishop Curlin agreed, adding that abortion and euthanasia are the revelation of a deeper decay in society. "The lack of respect for life is the great tragedy of our day," the bishop said. "As Christians, we believe that Jesus lives in the people around us."

"And if we truly believe this, how can we turn our backs and keep from professing the sanctity of God in all stages of human life?" he added.

Hickory Parishioner Brings Suitcases for Kids

HICKORY — Twelve-year-old Aubyn Burnside is on a mission. The St. Aloysius Church parishioner has volunteered for a service project to collect a suitcase for every boy and girl who faces the reality of life in foster home after foster home. About 300 children currently live in foster care in Catawba County alone.

Aubyn founded the ongoing effort, called Suitcases for Kids, after learning that the average child in foster care moves seven to eight times while in the program, and that he or she often has only a garbage bag to carry belongings from one home to another.

"I thought it was horrible that the children had nothing to carry their things in and that they moved so much," she said. "I wanted to make them feel special by giving them something of their own to keep. I tried to put myself in their place and think how I would feel."

The project is being sponsored by the Families for Kids program of Catawba County Social Services.

Aubyn got started by asking members of her Junior Girl Scout Troop 211 and her 4-H Club to help. She contacted local churches to publish the request in bulletins, and made several in-person appearances in front of congregations. Her efforts have also included putting up posters in the community.

The campaign has received statewide attention as well. Aubyn recently addressed the annual meeting of North Carolina Foster Care Directors in Burlington.

As the scope of the project has increased, Aubyn enlisted the help of Chris Young of Sardis 4-H Club, naming the 15-year-old co-chairman of the drive. The two recently received Catawba County's 1997 4-H Achievement Awards.

The volunteer corps is growing as surrounding counties are becoming involved. Blue Skies 4-H members Charles and Isaac Meadows, 14 and 11, have been named Caldwell County chairmen. Ten-year-old Laura Rhinehart is chairman for Alexander County. And Hickory resident John Laughter, 13, organizes deliveries to other nearby counties.

Aubyn says that response to the project has been positive. The entire stock of suitcases in the Caldwell County Salvation Army store — 31 in all — was purchased and given to the drive, for instance. The volunteer group has received local press, too, and has been nominated for the 1997 Governor's Award for Outstanding Volunteer Service.

Nearly 2,700 suitcases have been collected to date, and Aubyn continues to implement the project in an ever-growing area. The coordinator has begun drives in two South Carolina counties and has contacted Girl Scout councils in Virginia and Tennessee.

Some of the luggage will be donated to children's relief services in other regions of the globe, including Russia and Bolivia.

While the project has met success thus far, Aubyn and her friends still carry on their mission. Anyone who has suitcases, large duffel bags or backpacks is encouraged to participate in the Suitcases for Kids project.

To donate hard or soft luggage or for more information, call Aubyn Burnside, (704) 328-3645, or Chris Young, (704) 462-1028. The collected suitcases will be distributed in Catawba County and the surrounding counties through their Social Services departments.

Diocese Gears Up For Aug. 9-10 Collection

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — The annual collection for the Diocese of Charlotte's Clergy Retirement Plan is Aug. 9-10, and parishioners are asked to be as supportive as possible as diocesan officials have set an unprecedented goal to support the priests who have given their lives in service to western North Carolina parishes.

Following a period of task force research and meetings which resulted in increased benefits to retired priests, the diocese announced that the targeted amount for this year's collection is $583,000. Of that, $194,000 will support the pension funds of religious orders represented in the Charlotte Diocese.

"Historically, there has been an annual collection to fund the priests' retirement plan, but the proceeds would not be enough to fund the revised plan adequately," said Bill Weldon, diocesan fiscal manager. "What we have done this year is ask parishes to try to raise more money, and we have assigned an amount to each parish."

The amount to be collected, 3% of every parish's and mission's annual offertory, will provide peace of mind to priests serving in the diocese.

"During my 40 years as a priest, I have frequently seen many of my brothers outlive their families," said Bishop William G. Curlin, offering just one example of how the fund benefits clergy. "This collection is a wonderful way to recognize the devoted service given by our priests, both of this diocese and of religious communities."

This year's collection comes at a time when vocations are thriving in the western part of the Tar Heel State. By the fall of this year, 29 men will begin or resume preparations for priesthood in the Diocese of Charlotte. There are currently 61 diocesan priests serving, and 46 religious order priests join them in active ministry in western North Carolina.

But priestly retirement is a reality that both clergy and parishioners are faced with as well. In the past two years alone, eight diocesan priests have retired from full-time ministry. And as the median age of priests serving in the diocese is 55, those numbers will continue to rise within the next several decades. The average retirement age for priests is 70.

The collection is the only funding vehicle for the plan, which supports retired priests in a variety of ways, housing and health among them. Thus, the fund ensures the well-being of retired diocesan and order priests of both today and tomorrow.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Mary Shared Fully In Life Of Church From Beginning, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's remarks in English at his weekly general audience July 30.

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we now consider her as she is described in the words of the Second Vatican Council: "a pre-eminent and altogether singular member of the church" ("Lumen Gentium," 53). Together with the disciples, Mary was present in the upper room at Pentecost and she shared fully in the life and prayer of the church from the beginning (cf. Acts 1:14; 2:42). Her holiness, placed at the service of her brothers and sisters, is a powerful incentive for Christians to live in a way worthy of their calling. As the Mother of all the Lord's disciples (cf. Jn 19:26), Mary offers her intercession and aid to all who journey towards the fullness of the Lord's kingdom. As the Bride and Temple of the Holy Spirit, she encourages us to imitate her openness to the workings of the Spirit and to live in constant, loving communion with the Blessed Trinity.

I am pleased to greet the visitors from St. John's University in New York, including the recent graduates of the University's Rome Center.

Pope Meets O'Dell's Widow, Sister Prejean At General Audience

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — At the end of a general audience, Pope John Paul II met and consoled the widow of Joseph Roger O'Dell III, who was executed for murder in Virginia despite protests in Italy and a papal message to the U.S. president. Lori Urs, who married O'Dell eight hours before his death, was traveling with U.S. Sister of St. Joseph Helen Prejean, the capital punishment opponent and author of the book "Dead Man Walking." Sister Prejean was at O'Dell's side just before his death July 23. Urs and Sister Prejean attended the pope's July 30 general audience at the Vatican. They were to proceed from Rome to Palermo, where O'Dell was to be buried the next day.

Mary's Assumption: God's Call to Come Home

It is one thing to say, "Yes, I believe!" It is quite another to explore what the belief means to me, to those I love, to the Church that I call home.

The belief in "The Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, upon the completion of her earthly life, body and soul, into the glory of heaven" was defined by Pope Pius XII on Nov. 1, 1950, after centuries of requests from bishops and countless numbers of lay people.

But what does this teaching mean?

It means that Mary paved the way. She is now with the Resurrected Lord Jesus, her Son. We are called to follow. In a world of division and disintegration, the Son who created the Mother then called the Mother home to himself for all eternity.

The Feast is not about the powers of an autonomous Mary who should be worshipped to the detriment of the honor due her divine Son. This feast is about the woman who bore the Author of Life, and thus was herself freed from the bodily corruption that accompanies death.

We honor Mary as a special saint and intercessor, but certainly do not worship her as a god. She who was an integral part of God's plan of salvation was one whose life was a definite "yes" to this plan.

Her yes to the message of the Archangel Gabriel could have only been a continuation of the smaller yet significant yesses of her childhood faith.

Mary's yes to tenderly rocking the cradle of Jesus at Bethlehem led to her incredibly painful yes to tenderly rocking her dead son in her arms when he was taken down from the cross.

The many yesses in between reveal a Mary who was a simple Jewish peasant woman and the wife of a working man — a Mary whose daily steps led her through the dusty alleys of Nazareth, to the synagogue where her son would preach age-old scriptures referring to himself, to the cliff where those who hated him would like to cast him off.

The yesses led Mary from the celebration of the wedding at Cana to the desolation of Calvary — a disaster to those who understood not, but the consummate act of suffering and redemptive love to those who did.

We Catholics firmly believe that all of Mary's yesses — from before the cradle to years beyond the cross — give us hope as we struggle with our "No's": "I can't!" "I won't!" "It's too hard!" "Not now, Lord!"

This Mary of the "Yes, be it done to me as you will" was no plastic saint, isolated from the daily pangs and anguishes of life, but a deeply courageous young teenager (probably 14) who allowed her first yes to God to become a pattern of a lifetime, a living gift to us for all eternity.

To celebrate the Assumption of Mary is to take nothing away from Christ. In fact, it is to honor and remember her as Jesus wishes.

What does this Feast of the Assumption mean for you? Ultimately, that's up to you to decide. But let us not divorce faith from reality, for faith is the cornerstone and the key to the understanding of reality:

* Many today struggle with the possessions they seek to own and then gradually realize their possessions own them. Mary died as she lived — detached from the world, deeply loving all those in it.

* Many today worship the creatures and creations of God and yet fail to recognize the Creator. Mary's life was focused, centered, and given to the Son to whom she gave biological and physical life, just as he gave her spiritual life.

* Many today try to forget the past and the painful, only to be oppressed by it tomorrow. Mary treasured all that she experienced in her heart, seeking to understand everything in terms of faith and God's will.

The Assumption of Mary, then, cannot be seen as an isolated event, but in the context of the plan of a loving God who invited but did not force her to play an incredible role in the salvation of all those who came before her and all those who would follow.

Could Jesus have done it without her? Certainly. But he chose not to. And in a world where women are often degraded and children are often disregarded, that makes all the difference. Welcome home, Mary!

'Nobody Ever Died Of Old Age'

As a loyal viewer of ABC's newsmagazine 20/20, I have long admired Hugh Downs's concern for issues affecting our elderly. So I was delighted to talk with him about his interest recently on our weekly television program, Christopher Closeup.

You may be surprised to know that Downs holds a post-Masters degree in gerontology, a certificate in geriatric Medicine, and is currently co-chairperson of the Research and Education Committee in the Geriatrics Advisory Council of Manhattan's Mount Sinai Medical Center. He also wrote a valuable sourcebook a few years ago titled Fifty to Forever.

He is committed to encouraging older people to make the most of their lives. More than that, Hugh Downs wants to demolish the false images of aging, the stereotypes and misinformation about the elderly that so many of us accept unthinkingly. He believes that "Nobody ever died of old age. The causes are accident, disease, electrolyte depletion, etc., but never old age."

He argues that many problems once thought to be caused by age are really caused by poor health habits. A balanced diet and regular exercise can improve health at any age. One group of 70-year-old men who took part in an exercise program had the physical reactions of men of 40 at the end of a year.

Younger people often think that large numbers of older people are in nursing homes. In reality, only 5 percent of those over 65 live in nursing homes at any one time. A cure for Alzheimer's disease would cut that number, possibly by as much as half. "By simple mathematics, you can see that 75 to 80 percent of our elders are in relatively good health and able to function independently in society."

One myth that really gets to Hugh Downs is the idea that mental ability declines with age. He points to a mountain of evidence showing that the great majority of people who continue to use their minds actively and have absorbing interests do not decline in intellectual ability.

Examples: Artist Pablo Picasso was still producing drawings at 90 — and his painting became more innovative with the years. Pianist Arthur Rubinstein gave one of his greatest recitals at 89. Actress Jessica Tandy won an Academy award at 80 for her performance in Driving Miss Daisy. Congressman Claude Pepper of Florida was still actively championing the rights of the elderly and the poor at age 88.

I learned that Hugh Downs believes, as do more and more of us, that we can do a lot to contribute to our own well-being. Still, we cannot control all the variables that dictate health of mind and body — at any age. Life will never be that simple.

I was especially touched by Hugh's reflection on the vital role that personal spirituality has on one's longevity. "Again, the evidence is overwhelming. Those, who have the ability to let go of personal losses, to live in the present moment with passion, clearly experience spiritual growth and perspective. Those without a spiritual resource sort of hit the wall and fall apart."

"To let go of personal losses, to live in the present moment with passion" — there's a challenge, however old we are or whatever circumstances we face.

Let's try to take care of ourselves and those around us. And live, really live, each day God gives.

Question Corner

Father John Dietzen

Mass Intentions

Q. Our 24-year-old son died three years ago. Since then, we have had several Masses said for him.

Sometimes his name is mentioned at Mass, which makes us happy; sometimes it is not. Is there any way to request this? It means a lot to hear his name.

A. As our Eucharistic Prayers and other parts of the Mass make quite clear, we believe that every celebration of the Eucharist is as far-reaching, as universal, as the first offering of that sacrifice on Calvary.

It embraces the whole human family.

The church always has been concerned not to cloud that belief. Especially since the custom began (about 1,000 years ago) of giving offerings for particular intentions at Mass, it has tried to avoid any misunderstanding of what these offerings mean.

Thus, statements that a Mass "is being offered for" an individual are generally considered inappropriate. Some mention of a special intention, however, is surely not objectionable. Certain parishes announce something like, "Jane Jones is being especially remembered at this Mass."

Others include the name in the general intercessions that day. Either of these would seem to respect the desires of the family, and the traditions of the church concerning the eucharistic celebration.

Q. Our normally insightful pope and your normally insightful column have endorsed the theory of evolution — just as it is collapsing.

Studies have proven gradual evolution is impossible. It is kept alive to disprove everything biblical and godly.

How can the church pretend to accept evolution, which denies God and creation?

A. I don't wish to go into the whole evolution matter again, but one point you make needs to be addressed.

The theory of evolution in no way contradicts belief in God. Nor does it imply that God did not create the world, that the cosmos came into existence somehow by itself rather than through a divine creative act.

Some theorists may hold those unorthodox positions, but most do not. Certainly such matters of faith have no essential connection with the position that human bodies developed over the ages from other pre-existing living beings.

Those Christians and people of other faiths who believe the weight of evidence points to an evolutionary process also believe that God created the universe and all that is in it.

How he created it in the beginning, or how the energies placed in the cosmos by the Creator work to move all things toward greater and greater complexity — or simplicity — is not part of

Family Reflections

Andrew & Terri Lyke

Finding Christian Fellowship While On Vacation

We recently returned from our annual family excursion to Macinac Island. Since 1979 this island between Michigan's Lower and Upper Peninsulas has been a regular family getaway, first for us as a couple, then as a family with children. There's not much we haven't seen or done there. Yet there is nothing trite about our summer vacations there. It's where we best leave our routine, reconnect with our spirit and bond as a family. There's something magical about this simple stretch of land that is 430 miles from our northeastern Illinois home and is no more than about eight miles in diameter. Macinac Island has proven over the years to be able to take us farther away than we've ever traveled.

In the last 10 years or so we have always stayed at the Small Point B&B, a late 19th century manor that is situated far enough from the tourist bustle in town to experience the quiet stillness of nature. Yet it is close enough to the attractions and restaurants that we can be anywhere we want to go within minutes on our bicycles. The hosts at Small Point, John and Lois Findley, have become dear friends over the years. We look forward to spending a few days catching up with each other each year.

This year we met another family touring the island. The Davis family of Detroit, Floyd and Jennette, their son Brian and nephew Darius was visiting Macinac Island for the first time. We had the pleasure of sharing with them our love for the island, and we suggested a few attractions. Floyd and Jeanette joined us for dinner while our kids watched theirs, taking them to skip rocks on the lake and later watched a movie and had pizza in the room.

In our conversation with Jeanette and Floyd we found that we shared similar values and interests. Not long into our discussions we also discovered our shared love for the Lord. Sharing the many ways God has blessed us and the challenges of being followers of Jesus in a society driven by individualism and materialism, we found ourselves rapt in prayerful praise and thanksgiving. What started as warm and friendly chitchat became very quickly a wonderful time of Christian fellowship.

How appropriate it was for us to find such fellowship on Macinac Island, a place where we've always felt so close to God. Over the years we have found warm hospitality, memorable sunsets and sunrises and family bonding. We appreciate that our children, at the ages of 15 and 12, are still fascinated by the island and look forward to the next family vacation there.

Possibly next summer our daughter, Andrea, will work at Small Point B&B. We are confident that John and Lois will look after her and keep her on her toes. And though we don't usually keep in touch with people we encounter while on vacation, the depth of our conversation with Floyd and Jeanette suggests that the Spirit will bring us together again.

Good Shepherd Employees Win Home Care Awards

Bill Smith, president of the board of directors of the North Carolina Association for Home Care, honors Tom Taaffe as the 1997 Administrator of the Year.

Smith presents Ernie Zapetis with the 1997 Medical Social Worker of the Year award.

HAYESVILLE — Two Good Shepherd Home Health and Hospice Agency employees have won prestigious awards from the North Carolina Association for Home Care (NCAHC).

Social worker Ernie Zapetis was named 1997 Medical Social Worker of the Year, and Thomas J. Taaffe, executive director, was honored as 1997 Administrator of the Year. The awards were recently received in Raleigh at the annual NCAHC conference.

Zapetis graduated summa cum laude from Western Carolina University with a Bachelor of Science degree in Social Work and completed a Master's degree in Social Work at East Carolina University. He taught social work policy at WCU.

"Ernie exemplifies professional competence as a social work practitioner with a strong base of knowledge, skills, principles and experience," said supervisor Jean Anderson, clinical manager of Good Shepherd's Hayesville office. "His clients are his top priority, and he is dedicated to providing resources for their environmental, financial, social and emotional needs."

Taaffe joined Good Shepherd in 1986. At that time, the staff numbered less than 20 and provided only home health services. Since then, the agency has grown to 80 staff members and provides a full range of services including home health, hospice, and rehabilitation therapies from two locations. In addition to his responsibilities at the agency, Taaffe served on the North Carolina Association for Home Care's Board of Directors from 1988 to 1993 and as the association's president in 1991 and 1992.

Appointed by Gov. Jim Hunt in 1993, he currently serves on the North Carolina Medical Care Commission. He continues to actively serve and lead the home care industry through his advocacy and involvement in Medicare Reform, serving on the National Prospective Payment System Work Group. Since 1994, Taaffe has served as chairman of the Medical Care Advisory Committee of the North Carolina Medicaid Program. He was recently appointed to the Board of Hospice for the Carolinas. Locally, he serves as president of the Tri-County 2000 Community Health Project.

"Tom has a unique leadership style and the ability to see not only obvious issues, but also small and important peripheral issues," said Judy Wilson, director of operations for the agency.

Good Shepherd has provided home care in Western North Carolina under the leadership of the Diocese of Charlotte since 1977. The agency serves approximately 750 patients each year. Bishop William G. Curlin serves as the chairman of the board, and the Very Rev. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor, serves as secretary/treasurer of the board of directors.

Welcome To "Good Burger" May I Take Your Order?

NEW YORK (CNS) — The recipe for a secret sauce causes no end of complications for newfound buddies in "Good Burger" (Paramount).

The comedy is based on characters from Nickelodeon TV's sketch comedy series, "All That." Ed (Kel Mitchell) is a shy, good-hearted innocent who cooks at the Good Burger fast food joint and has personally concocted a zesty hamburger sauce that is drawing customers back from the glitzy new rival across the street, Mondo Burger.

With an eye more for a fast buck than fast food, Ed's new co-worker, Dexter (Kenan Thompson), recognizes the sauce's potential and gets trusting Ed to sign a partnership contract — with 80 percent of the profits retained by Dexter.

Meanwhile, over at Mondo Burger, where the eats are immensely oversized and served up with soulless technological efficiency, maniacal owner Kurt (Jan Schwieterman) orders his mean-spirited minions to stop at nothing to steal the sauce recipe so Good Burger will shutter forever.

Checking out Mondo Burger for themselves, Dex and Ed discover illegal chemicals being added to make the burgers swell to bursting. Before they can call in the cops, Mondo's minions catch them, ship them off to a nuthouse and poison Good Burger's stockpile of sauce.

Somehow the lads must exit the asylum before Good Burger opens its doors and kills its customers.

Brian Robbins directs in airy fashion suiting the silly shenanigans on-screen. The proceedings are mostly innocuous broad comedy showing more heart than craft.

In fact, the movie betrays its TV origins in that the plot unreels like abbreviated back-to-back sitcom episodes.

But the two leads give breezy performances that are hard to fault and Abe Vigoda adds an amusing comic touch as a 77-year-old co-worker who's got a real beef with the monsters over at Mondo.

Sinbad and Shaquille O'Neal have cameo roles as well, and by and large the light-hearted tone of the comedy is appealing even if the movie is not otherwise remarkable.

Due to some slapstick violence, mild sexual innuendo and a few crude expressions, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

"The Eighth Day" (1997)

Separated from his wife and family, a depressed salesman (Daniel Auteuil) is transformed by a young man (Pascal Duquenne) afflicted with Down syndrome whom he finds on the road and has difficulty returning to a mental institution. Writer-director Jaco Van Dormael's French movie about a man finding his inner child by opening his heart to a needy innocent is a bold blend of affecting drama, colorful fantasy sequences and unabashed sentimentality. Subtitles. Ambiguous treatment of a suicide, brief violence, a restrained bedroom scene and a few crude gestures. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-IV — adults, with reservations. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Mikey and Nicky" (1977)

Nicky (John Cassavetes) is a bookie who steals some money from his boss and, fearing he is marked for death, contacts the only man he can trust to help him, his boyhood friend Mikey (Peter Falk). Writer-director Elaine May follows their odyssey through the course of one wild evening but the complications encountered along the way are entirely predictable, buoyed only by the strong performances of the principals. Some violence, rough language and a frank treatment of sex. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation" (1962)

Uneven comedy in which a St. Louis banker (James Stewart) makes the best of things when his wife (Maureen O'Hara) insists on using a friend's West Coast beach house for a holiday with their two children and two grown daughters with their spouses and offspring. Directed by Henry Koster, the comic complications range from the saccharine (Fabian romances their 14-year-old daughter) to the heartwarming (a father-son sailboat misadventure), with some daffy interludes along the way (notably birdwatcher John McGiver and wife Marie Wilson). The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Relic" (1997)

Gruesome horror flick in which a genetically altered creature goes on a murderous rampage at a gala museum party while a homicide detective (Tom Sizemore) and a biologist (Penelope Ann Miller) at the gathering work to kill it before they all die. After much murky plotting, director Peter Hyams' dark monster movie delivers a final half-hour of suspenseful jolts. Graphic fantasy violence with shots of decapitated heads, some rough language and intermittent profanity. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Rendezvous in Paris" (1996)

Three droll anecdotes of the mating game involve a law student (Clara Bellar) and her unfaithful boyfriend; a woman (Aurore Rauscher) who insists on meeting a suitor in out-of-the-way parks; and a painter (Michael Kraft) infatuated with a woman (Benedicte Loyer) he follows into a museum. Writer-director Eric Rohmer playfully spins each tale around the fragile, uncertain relationships between intelligent people with more on their minds than sex. Subtitles. Mature themes. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Smilla's Sense of Snow" (1997)

Convinced the death of a little Inuit boy in her Copenhagen apartment building was murder, a reclusive mathematician (Julia Ormand) is aided by a mysterious neighbor (Gabriel Byrne) in uncovering a fantastic conspiracy going back three decades that puts their lives in danger. Director Bille August creates a remarkable tale whose visuals are filled with mystery and echoes of a Native culture being exploited for reasons involving a jarring plunge into the realms of melodramatic science fiction. Brief sexual innuendo, some violence and intermittent rough language. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"Turbo: A Power Rangers Movie" (1997)

Inane action fantasy from the children's TV series has the teen rangers trying to stop a power-mad Valkyrie (Hilary Shepard Turner) and a volcano monster from wreaking havoc on the entire universe. As clumsily directed by David Winning and Shuki Levy, the lame result is a choppy mix of formula mythic characters, derivative situations and extended martial-arts battles. Special-effects violence and stylized mayhem. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

The astonishing apostle to the gentiles

By Father Paul J. Schmidt
Catholic News Service

Ann Landers and Abigail Van Buren are famous letter writers. Daily they pour out answers in letter form to newspaper readers with problems and questions.

It is interesting to read their answer first and see if one can figure out what question the reader had asked. For example:

"Wake up and smell the coffee" usu-

Paul's shortest letter, the Epistle to Philemon, is a good place to start. It resembles a letter one of us might write. It has a salutation, a message and a sign-off. It deals with a particular situation.

Paul does not directly condemn sla-may be compilations of shorter letters.

If we take them bit by bit, however, we see that Paul often is answering questions and solving problems which emerged in the communities he established.

At the beginning of Chapter 7 of First Corinthians, he states clearly, "Now, concerning the matters about which you wrote ..." He goes on to give advice to married, unmarried and widowed people.

Earlier in First Corinthians, Paul addressed the problem of quarreling factions in the community, a situation reported to him (by letter?) by "Chloe's people" (1:11).

In Chapter 5 he condemns a case of incest, gives practical advice about dietary restrictions (Chapters 8-11), reprimands the people for misbehaving at the Lord's Supper (Chapter 11),

Our conduct is always seen as a response to the unfathomable love of God.

Paul often strays from his topic into associated topics, personal reflections or biographical information. At these places we see the personality and spirituality of the great apostle to the gentiles:

—We witness his struggle with sin, similar to the struggle each of us experiences (Romans 14-25). He writes, "I do not understand my own actions."

—He tells the Galatians about his conversion and ministry (Galatians 2:14).

—He recounts the lows and highs of his life as an apostle (2 Corinthians 11:23-12:10): "When I am weak, then I am strong."

The whole Letter to the Philippians speaks of Paul's deep affection for his first converts in Europe, "whom I love and long for, my joy and my crown" (4:1).

Sometimes we puzzle over the complexity of Paul's letters, but so did the author of the second Epistle of Peter, who wrote that in Paul's writing "there deals with the matter of charisms and gifts of the Holy Spirit (Chapters 12-15), and answers questions about Jesus' resurrection and the resurrection of believers (Chapter 15).

Paul wrote two Epistles devoted primarily to the subject of the law, Galatians and Romans.

Galatians is a kind of rough draft of Romans. It is written in anger and shoots from the hip: "You foolish Galatians! Who has bewitched you?" (3:1)

Paul was angry at the truth squads which followed him around and contradicted his teaching that faith in Jesus Christ brought salvation.

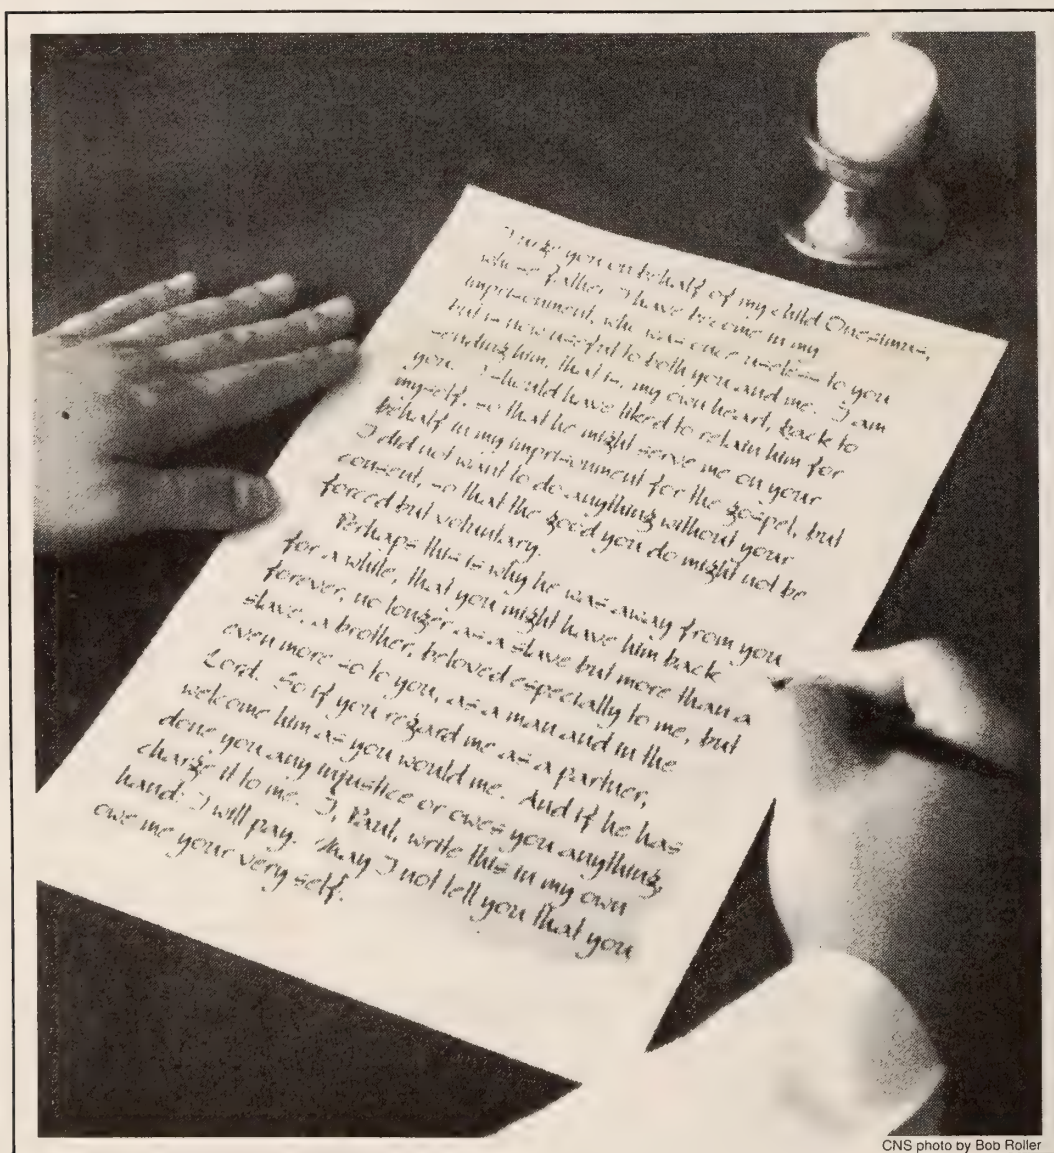

By the time Paul wrote Romans, he had calmed down and was able to make a more moderate presentation of his arguments. This time he was also introducing himself to people he had not met (1:11-15) rather than correcting errant converts. And he had spent time reflecting on Israel's role in salvation history (9-11) and was able to outline Christian teaching in a way that should have ended anti-Semitism once and for all.

Paul's approach to moral life is evident in the prescriptions given at the end of most of the epistles.

are some things hard to understand" (3:14-17).

But we find in these letters most of all the astonishing person who was their author: a man of wisdom and passion, weakness and strength, a spirit on fire with the Holy Spirit, a teacher who answers questions we still ask.

"Ten lashes with a wet noodle" means the reader has improved on the columnist's own advice.

Reading the New Testament letters of St. Paul is very much like reading Ann or Abby backward. In Paul's letters, we have the answer. What we do not have in written form is the question — the situation that caused Paul to write.

We have to figure that out — with the help of knowledgeable Scripture scholars.

very, simply taking it for granted. But while acknowledging that Onesimus is Philemon's slave, Paul appeals beyond that to a new fact: Onesimus is now baptized.

Paul sends Onesimus back to Philemon. But Paul asks Philemon to receive Onesimus "no longer as a slave but more than a slave" — as a brother. And Paul hints that Philemon may want to set Onesimus free and send him back to be of service to Paul, who at this point was imprisoned.

The other New Testament letters of Paul are more complicated. Some circulated from church to church. Some

In a Nutshell

- The books of the New Testament were recognized by the early Christians as containing the proper understanding of Jesus and his meaning.
- First Thessalonians is the earliest Christian writing we possess.
- In his letters, St. Paul often is answering questions and solving problems which emerged in the communities he established.

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

Tell of a letter you once received that remains vivid in your memory. What made it unforgettable?

"It was a letter from my dad that I received when I was 10 or 11 years old. At the time our family was living apart because of a health crisis. I treasure that letter because it's a link to my dad. It's the only letter I still have from him — and he's been gone 20 years now." — Kathy Henry, Madison, Wis.

"I received a letter out of the blue once from someone I only talked with occasionally on the phone. That she took the time to write really touched me and made me feel good." — Laurie Boyle, Andover, N.J.

"My father wrote me long letters when I went away to college. I loved to get his letters because he filled me in on all the events of the previous week.... He was an avid fisherman and hunter and often wrote of his experiences. Those letters brought back the memories of our time together." — James Harmon, Richmond Heights, Ohio

"My younger brother was away at summer camp in 1970. He wrote: 'Dear Carole, How are you? How is your cat? Send money. Love, Ernest.' He's in his 30s now, still a man of few words, and still asking for money!" — Carole Greene, Baltimore, Md.

Overview of the letters Paul wrote

By Father John J. Castelot
Catholic News Service

The seven letters unquestionably written by St. Paul himself are First Thessalonians, Galatians, First and Second Corinthians, Philippians, Romans and Philemon.

First Thessalonians, written from Corinth, is the earliest Christian writing we possess. Paul wrote it to the Thessalonian Christian converts to encourage them in their trials and to clarify their confused notions about Christ's second coming. Those still alive when Christ returns will enjoy no advantage over Christians who died before then, Paul explains.

The letter to the Galatians was written from Ephesus. It pleads with the Christians there, recent converts, not to be taken in by some Jewish Christians who insisted that, if the Galatians wanted to be saved, they had to become Jews first.

Quite different is Paul's affectionate letter to the Philippians. It was originally a thank-you note, for they had sent him a care package when he was briefly imprisoned at Ephesus. Two other short letters to them were added to the thank-you note to form our present Letter to the Philippians. It is a gem, especially the hymn to Christ in Chapter 2:6-11.

Also written from Ephesus were the two letters to the Corinthians.

First Corinthians attempted to respond to alarming reports about a situation in Corinth and also to reply to questions submitted to him.

Paul treated a wide variety of subjects in this lively letter: factions in the community, a scandalous case of incest, participation in pagan sacrificial meals, the abuse of spiritual gifts, worship — especially the Eucharist — and mistaken notions about the resurrection.

Apparently this letter did not satisfy the Corinthian Christians, and Paul made a "flying" visit to settle matters in person. While he was there, someone publicly insulted him, making light of his role. And when Paul got back to Ephesus he wrote the Corinthians a no-nonsense letter. He later referred to it as a "letter written in tears." This letter no longer exists independently.

Titus was sent to deliver the no-nonsense letter. But before Titus could report back to Paul, the apostle had been driven out of Ephesus.

When Paul and Titus crossed paths as Titus returned from Corinth, the apostle received encouraging news. Titus reported that the Corinthians had received the bitter letter well.

Paul was so relieved that he sat down and wrote Second Corinthians, expressing his relief and warm concern for them.

But Second Corinthians as we now have it is a composite of several letters. And many scholars feel that what I labeled Paul's "no-nonsense" letter is now found in Chapters 10-13 of Second Corinthians. The tone of these chapters is much different from the rest of the letter.

Back again in Corinth, at a crossroads in his career, Paul wrote his masterful letter to Rome's Christians. It is a leisurely exposition of his position on justification by faith, the wonder of God's grace, the Spirit's work in their lives and Christian conduct in their pagan city.

Paul's shortest letter, a charming, remarkably delicate note to a Christian named Philemon, appeals to him to welcome a runaway slave as a brother and to consider freeing him.

Back to the beginning

By Father Lawrence E. Mick
Catholic News Service

I enjoy offering adult education talks and courses on the liturgy. Usually my presentations include some history of the liturgy. This helps people understand the changes experienced since Vatican Council II.

Many things that seemed new to us were actually ancient practices of the early church. What we assume in looking back to the beginning is that those unity in Christ. Some people were eating well, even getting drunk, while others had nothing to eat.

Should this concern us?

Paul goes on to remind the Corinthians of the meaning of the eucharistic meal, and his teaching applies to our liturgy as much as to the first-century liturgy in Corinth.

Paul first recalls the origin of the Eucharist in the action of Jesus himself at the Last Supper. He reminds the Corinthians that this meal is linked to the death of Christ: "For as often as you eat this bread and drink the cup, you proclaim the death of the Lord until he comes" (vs. 26).

Next he warns the Corinthians that receiving the body and blood of the Lord unworthily is a serious matter. He urges them to examine themselves before sharing in this sacred meal. "For anyone who eats and drinks without discerning the body, eats and drinks a judgment on himself" (vs. 29).

Scholars tell us that the concern here is that the people were not recognizing that the worshiping community was the body of Christ. Since Christ died to reconcile all people to the Father and to each other, celebrating the meal that proclaims his death should unite us with God, yes, but also with each other.

To celebrate the meal while ignoring our brothers and sisters violates the Eucharist's fundamental meaning.

In our era we have relearned the ancient truth that the Eucharist unites us not only with Jesus but also with all our brothers and sisters. This crucial insight has been central to the reform of the order of the Mass and continues to challenge us.

(Father Mick is a priest of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a freelance writer.)

who were close to the time of Christ had a good sense of what he intended the church to be.

A similar impulse leads the church to rely on the Scriptures as a touchstone of our faith.

Among various writings of those early centuries, only certain texts were included in the canon of the New Testament. These writings were recognized by the community of believers as containing the proper understanding of Jesus and his meaning for us.

Since that time these writings have served as a constant reference point for Christians, and they offer useful insights for our own time.

Consider St. Paul's first letter to the Corinthians. In Chapter 11:17-34, he addresses a problem that arose in the liturgy of the church in the Greek city of Corinth.

The liturgy in Paul's time still included a full meal, and Paul notes that the Christians were not sharing their food with each other, even though such sharing would represent a mark of their

St. Paul spoke eloquently, but pointedly. Paul told it like it is, for example, in cautioning that even if we speak in "angelic tongues," we are nothing but "a resounding gong or a clashing cymbal" if we do not love (1 Corinthians 13:1).

He went on to present what may be our most familiar definition of "love," which is patient, kind, not jealous, not pompous and "does not rejoice over wrongdoing" (Cf. 1 Corinthians 13:4-5).

Paul, our counselor, advised:

— "If you go on biting and devouring one another, beware that you are not consumed by one another" (Galatians 5:15).

— "Let us not grow tired of doing good, for in due time we shall reap our harvest if we do not give up" (Galatians 6:9).

Paul urged Christians to "rejoice with those who rejoice, weep with those who weep" (Romans 12:15), and to "welcome one another" (Romans 15:7).

For we ought to remember that we need each other, Paul thought. He said: "The eye cannot say to the hand, 'I do not need you'.... Indeed, the parts of the body that seem to be weaker are all the more necessary." But this wasn't an anatomy lesson. Underscoring his point, Paul concluded: "You are Christ's body, and individually parts of it" (1 Corinthians. 21-22; 27).

Brennan Dies: Was One Of Nation's Most Influential Jurists

Pallbearers carry the casket of the late Supreme Court Justice William Brennan down the steps of St. Matthew's Cathedral in Washington July 29. Brennan, who died July 24 at age 91, was eulogized at the funeral Mass by President Clinton.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Retired U.S. Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan, who died July 24 at the age of 91, was one of the nation's most influential jurists and for 30 years the only Catholic on the nation's highest court.

In his 34 years on the court before ill health following a stroke forced him to retire in 1990, Brennan wrote some 1,200 opinions — more than any justice except William O. Douglas.

A stalwart defender of individual liberties whose views had shaped the direction of the court since 1956, he opposed capital punishment, said the Constitution supported a right to abortion, upheld religious liberties and church-state separation and advanced affirmative action and civil rights for minorities.

In a 1987 interview with National Public Radio, he described himself as a "devout Roman Catholic" who attended Mass every Saturday evening.

Last year he fractured a hip and contracted pneumonia during his recovery. He had been living in a nursing home in the Virginia suburbs of Washington.

Born April 25, 1906, in Newark, N.J., Brennan was one of eight children of an Irish immigrant worker who became an important labor leader.

He earned his law degree from Harvard University, practiced law in New Jersey and was a judge on the New Jersey Supreme Court when President Eisenhower named him a Supreme Court justice in October 1956.

As a recess appointment, he began serving on the court immediately, although the Senate did not confirm him until the following spring.

As only the sixth Catholic to serve on the high court, his religion became a source of controversy in the confirmation hearings.

The Senate Judiciary Committee, at the request of the National Liberty League, asked him how he would act on the court if faced with a conflict between his religious convictions and U.S. laws or constitutional principles. It was the first time a Supreme Court nominee was questioned on the issue.

He responded, "In everything I have ever done, in every office I held or that I shall ever hold in the future, what shall control me is the oath that I took to support the Constitution and laws of the United States and I shall so act upon the cases that come before me for decision."

At the time of his retirement in 1990, he was one of three Catholic justices — Antonin Scalia had joined the Supreme Court in 1986 and Anthony M. Kennedy in 1988 — and the so-called "Catholic seat" on the court was no longer an issue.

Brennan was considered a primary influence in the court's 7-2 Roe vs. Wade ruling that legalized abortion nationwide in 1973, although he did not write the majority opinion.

Because of his views on abortion as a clear constitutional right, he was the object of pro-life protests when he made public appearances for speaking engagements or academic honors.

In a major ruling on religious freedom in 1963, he wrote the majority opinion citing "compelling state interest" as the test government had to meet to justify interfering with religious liberties.

In 1987 he wrote the majority ruling ordering Florida to grant unemployment benefits to a Seventh-day Adventist who was fired from her job for her religious refusal to work on the Sabbath.

In one of his last opinions before his retirement, he wrote the dissent from the court's 6-3 ruling in 1990 upholding a government ban on religious use of peyote in a Native American sacramental rite.

The majority ruling in that case was widely regarded as significantly eroding religious rights and provoked Congress to respond with the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993. This June the current court struck down RFRA as unconstitutional.

Brennan was author of the majority opinion in 1985's Aguilar vs. Felton, striking down use of public teachers on parochial school grounds to provide federally funded remedial education for poor children. This year the high court reversed that ruling.

He could be counted on to write passionately, and often eloquently, in defense of the rights of prisoners, the poor or the mentally handicapped to the constitutional rights enjoyed by other citizens.

After the high court reinstated the death penalty in 1976, he continued to vote consistently in dissent against all rulings in support of capital punishment.

In his National Public Radio interview in 1987, he reacted sharply to a question about allegations that he was hostile to religion.

"Oh my — that could not be more wrong," he said. "It could not be more wrong. 'Course I'm not hostile to religion. My heavens, I'm a devout Roman Catholic."

He described his position on religion as simply "that under our Constitution, government has to stay away from trying to regulate religion. And religion has to stay away from butting in on matters that are for government."

Pope To Baptize Teen In Paris

OGDEN, Utah (CNS) — Megan Lynn Costello was all set to be baptized and confirmed on Pentecost Sunday this spring when she had a sudden change of plans. She was selected to be baptized by Pope John Paul II in Paris Aug. 23 along with nine other youths from around the world. "This has all happened so quickly," she said. "I think the only thing that's real to me right now is my dress." The 15-year-old student at North Ogden Junior High School in Utah had already made plans with other members of the St. James Parish youth ministry group to visit Paris for World Youth Day. But she had no idea until May 13 — five days before Pentecost — that her request would be granted to be received into the church by the pope himself during the event. The Aug. 23 ceremonies will mark the first time that the pope has conducted a baptism as part of World Youth Day observances.

Knights Set New Records For Donations, Volunteering

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (CNS) — The Knights of Columbus contributed more than $105 million and well over 48 million hours in service to church, community and youth programs last year. The total monetary donation of $105,976,102 is the highest in the organization's 115-year history.

Couples Urged To Bring Others Into Marriage Encounter

SAN ANTONIO (CNS) — Archbishop Patrick F. Flores of San Antonio urged the thousand-plus couples and their families attending the 26th Worldwide Marriage Encounter International Convention to seek out other couples to attend Marriage Encounter weekend gatherings. "We need to bring in people of all nationalities and all colors," Archbishop Flores said. "Our love for each other is the thermometer that measures how much you love God." The archbishop spoke at the opening ceremony of the recent convention in San Antonio.

Cardinal Praises New York's Abstinence Education Plan

NEW YORK (CNS) — Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York applauded Gov. George E. Pataki's recent proposal for a $7 million program to teach New York state teens the benefits of sexual abstinence. "We are pleased the governor recognizes the benefits of providing children with the tools they need to resist the pressures of today's society and to engage in healthy behaviors," he said in a statement. "Surely parents want and need this kind of support and leadership from elected officials," said the cardinal, president of the New York State Catholic Conference, the public policy arm of the state's bishops.

Seventeen students and teachers from Bishop McGuinness High School in Winston-Salem recently traveled to Europe, visiting Berlin, Prague, Budapest, Vienna, Munich and Heidelberg. Sponsored by BMHS' history department, the visit was designed to expose students to the cultures they had studied during the school year. Pictured with Archbishop Donato Squicciarini, papal nuncio, whom the group met in Vienna, are junior Barrett Norris, teacher Kim Eads, junior Jim Tillery, teacher Mike Streich, and senior Anna Goings.

Southern Catholic Conference Sponsors Catechetical Conference As First Event

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The Diocese of Charlotte is co-sponsoring a province-wide catechetical leadership conference Oct. 17-18 at White Oak Baptist Conference Center.

Catechetical facilitators of the Atlanta Province's five dioceses have joined in a collaborative project called the Southern Catholic Conference, and the October event is the first of its kind sponsored by the group. Participating with the Charlotte Diocese are the Archdiocese of Atlanta and the dioceses of Columbia, S.C.; Savannah, Ga.; and Raleigh, N.C.

The schedule of events includes Mass presided over by Bishop Kenneth Untener, shepherd of the Diocese of Saginaw, Mich., since 1980. Bishop Untener is nationally recognized for his concerns for the poor. He will present a keynote speech at the event as well.

Father James Hawker, education vicar of the Charlotte Diocese, and Joanne Frazer, director of the Charlotte Diocese's Office of Justice and Peace, will also take part in the conference as facilitators. Jean Marie Hiesberger, a 30-year veteran of religious education and former director of the Institute of Pastoral Life, will lead group sessions.

Grayson Warren Brown, a liturgical composer, author and recording artist, will perform a concert and give a keynote speech.

The theme is "Visioning Discipleship." Topics include "The Church: A Future Full of Hope" and "Many Spokes, One Center."

The cost for the event is $35 before Sept. 15; afterward, the fee is $45. Singlerooms are available for $46, double rooms for $40 per person. Meals are included. For meals only, the cost is $15.

For information or registration, contact the Diocese of Charleston, Dept. of Christian Formation, Attn.: Conference, 1662 Ingram Rd., Charleston, SC 29407.

Patterson Named CEO And President

House of Mercy continues to help those living with AIDS.

BELMONT — Stan Patterson has been appointed president and chief executive officer of the House of Mercy, a residential facility for men and women in the end stages of AIDS. He replaces Mercy Sister Margaret Straney.

"The House of Mercy has an excellent reputation, and I am pleased to be associated with this important and unique ministry of the Sisters of Mercy. I look forward to working with the staff and board of directors in furthering this mission first begun in 1991," Patterson said.

Patterson most recently served as vice president of Carolinas Physicians Network, part of the Carolinas Health Care System in Charlotte. Prior to that, he served as president of Mercy Medical Services, Inc., which was part of Mercy Health Services, Inc.

A graduate of the University of North Carolina-Charlotte, Patterson also earned a Master's degree in Public Administration from UNC-Chapel Hill. Additionally, he is past president of the Carolinas Society for Health Care Planning and Marketing and a member of the Medical Group Management Association and the American College of Health Care Executives. He and his wife, Jane, live in Charlotte with their two sons.

Mercy Sister Mary Rosalind Picot, president of the Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina regional community, said Patterson's credentials made him the right person for the position.

"He combines the necessary enthusiasm for, and an extensive knowledge of the health care industry," she said. "These are essential qualities to the administration of a ministry such as this. We are confident that he will move the House of Mercy forward while retaining efficient, accountable caregiving practices."

Mercy Foundation Announces $763,000 in Grants to 13 Area Organizations

CHARLOTTE — Sisters of Mercy of North Carolina Foundation announces grant awards totaling nearly $763,000 to 13 non-profit organizations located in Mecklenburg, Gaston, Burke, and Cabarrus counties in North Carolina, and York and Spartanburg counties in South Carolina. These awards are being made following the close of the Foundation's second grant making cycle for 1997, which began on April 1.

The grant funds will be used for a variety of purposes by the organizations for the economically disadvantaged. Supported programs include education for children, services for the disadvantaged, community advocacy, medical services, legal assistance and housing.

The Sisters of Mercy Foundation was established in 1995 and operates from a mission to support non-profit healthcare, educational and social service organizations in the Charlotte metropolitan area and in North and South Carolina. Its program focus is on services benefitting women, children, the elderly and the economically poor. The Foundation is particularly interested in promoting systemic change and the quality of life for unserved and underserved populations.

The 13 organizations that will benefit from the Foundation's grantmaking activities are as follows:

- Catholic Social Services, Charlotte, will receive $150,000, over a three-year period. In partnership with the United Way of Central Carolinas, the grant will be used to establish a Hispanic Resource Center that will reach the underserved Hispanic community by providing an umbrella of services including case management, immigration assistance, translation/interpretation services and employment services.

- Broughton Hospital, Morganton, will receive $17,800. This grant will be used to purchase equipment for the Enola Learning Center, which provides education for children who are patients at Broughton Hospital. The center serves emotionally and behaviorally disturbed children between the ages of 12 and 21.

- Charlotte Organizing Project, Charlotte, will receive $57,500 over a three-year period. This organization provides community organization and training in Charlotte's low-income and minority communities. The grant will assist in organizing and training participants to address lack of compliance with the city's housing code by landlords who rent substandard housing.

- Charlotte Pregnancy Care Center, Charlotte, will receive $26,000 over a two-year period. The grant will assist with operating expenses for a medical clinic. Charlotte Pregnancy Care provides alternatives to abortion through crisis and peer counseling and limited medical support.

- Children's Law Center, Charlotte, will receive $150,000 over a three-year period. This grant will be used for the Abused/Neglected Children Project which provides legal representation for abused and neglected children.

- Communities in Schools of Rock Hill/Fort Mill, Rock Hill, will receive $75,000 for the Teen Mothers Program. This program helps teen mothers complete their high school education by providing an onsite nursery, transportation to and from school and assistance in providing for the basic needs of participants and their children.

- The Community Free Clinic, Concord, will receive a grant of $20,000. The clinic's purpose is to improve accessibility to primary medical care, prescription medications and counseling for Cabarrus County residents who are without private insurance, Medicare, or Medicaid coverage.

- Family Housing Services Inc., Charlotte, will receive $30,690. Family Housing Services provides comprehensive housing counseling to eligible families. The grant will be used to extend mortgage default and rental delinquency/eviction counseling to families who are in danger of losing their homes.

- Family Service, Inc., Gastonia, will receive a grant of $36,000. The organization works with families and the community to overcome various problems. The grant will provide for a Domestic Violence Program Coordinator who will deliver group services and coordinate services with the court system, agencies and victims.

- The Foundation for the Multihandicapped, Blind, and Deaf of South Carolina, Spartanburg, will receive $51,000. The School provides education and assistance to individuals who are sensory disabled and to their families. The grant will provide for assistance devices which will help sensory disabled students be more self-reliant.

- Johnston Memorial YMCA, Charlotte, will receive $60,000 over a two-year period. The grant will be used to expand the Learning Center which is used by children and adults to learn basic computer skills and to improve academic performance, prepare resumes and search for educational or employment opportunities.

- Kinder-Mourn, Inc., Charlotte, will receive $44,000 over a three-year period to fund the "Helping the Hurt" outreach program which makes Kinder-Mourn services accessible to grieving children in disadvantaged families.

- Legal Services of Southern Piedmont, Charlotte, will receive a grant of $45,000. The organization provides civil legal assistance to low-income people.

Since announcing in October, 1996 that it was ready to begin receiving grant applications, the Foundation has awarded grants totaling more than $1,693,000 to organizations serving unserved or underserved populations. For information concerning the Foundation, call (704) 366-0087.

Pro-life Advocate Helen Alvaré To Speak In Columbia

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Helen Alvaré, pro-life spokeswoman for the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, presents a series of lectures Sept. 3-4 in South Carolina.

She will give three lectures at the University of South Carolina Sept. 3, and a fourth Sept. 4 in Moncks Corner. Although each is intended for a specific audience, all are free and open to the public. Early seating is recommended.

Alvaré, who in 1994 was named by Time magazine as one of the top 50 leaders in America under the age of 40, will address such topics as abortion, euthanasia, assisted suicide and capital punishment.

Her schedule for Sept. 3 follows:

- 2-3 p.m. "Respect for Life: A Radical Proposition?" USC Capstone House campus room. Intended for USC students, faculty and high school students.

- 4-5 p.m. "Euthanasia: Courts Reflect on Aging, Sickness and Disability," USC Law School auditorium. Intended for USC Law School faculty and attorneys.

- 8-9 p.m. "The Third Millennium: Who Will be Free to Live?" Russell House ballroom. Intended for a general audience.

On Sept. 4, Alvaré will travel to Mepkin Abbey in Moncks Corner. She will discuss "Respect for Life: Spiritual Reflections" at 2 p.m.

Most recently, Alvaré has been heavily involved in federal congressional hearings on behalf of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops on the issue of partial-birth abortion.

Alvaré's visit is sponsored by the University of South Carolina and the Diocese of Charleston.

For information about Helen Alvaré's visit, call Dr. Donald Jones in USC's Religious Studies Department, (803) 777-2283.

St. Luke Parish Celebrates Hispanic Culture

By STEVE UZZELL
Correspondent

MINT HILL — More than 50 people joined together at St. Luke Church recently to focus on Spanish celebrations and traditions.

Participants began by sampling delicious ethnic foods. Trying to memorize their names and origins was a challenge for some. For others, it was a homecoming to familiar cuisine.

"Flan," a Spanish egg custard dessert from Spain; "arroz con pollo," a Panamanian rice with chicken dish; and "tamarindo," a bittersweet pod from the Caribbean, were a few of the delights.

Many had as much fun tasting the food as they did meeting the cooks and discovering new recipes.

The crowd then assembled to hear stories, music and presentations from individuals. Through the first-hand accounts and memories of several speakers, Hispanic traditions were shared.

Maria Conrad Duncan began a narrative on religious observances by describing the Puerto Rican celebrations of "Año Nuevo" and "Maria, Madre de Dios" — "New Year's" and "Mary, Mother of God." Sylvia Hilliard told of "Semana Santa," or "Holy Week," in Costa Rica. Olga Montagnino recalled the feast day of "San Pedro y San Pablo" — "St. Peter and St. Paul" — from yesterday in Ecuador.

"It feels like a long time ago. But I have not forgotten how the whole town joined together for the celebration and chased the bulls before the bullfight," Montagnino said.

Julie Courtney shared memories of annual events she experienced while living in Peru. She talked of the September celebration for Santa Rosa de Lima, the first saint of the Americas, and the November feast for San Martin de Porre, the first black saint.

In each of the presentations, a singular message could be heard. It reflected a tradition steeped with honor and reverence for Church and God.

Songs and dances also demonstrated how important movement and music are to bringing spirit and faith alive in the Hispanic culture.

Parishioners and guests enjoy the music as they celebrate Hispanic traditions. The event was the first in a series of multi-cultural events at St. Luke Church in Mint Hill. Photo by Steve Uzzell our faith.

People are free to reject the evolutionary explanation of the development of life if they can figure out how to do it rationally. But they shouldn't attempt to use faith as a club to squeeze or neutralize people's intelligence on the subject. Acceptance of evolution is not rejection of God or creation.

Scientific support for some form of evolution of earthly life is far from collapsing. Just the opposite.

This is what prompted Pope John Paul to remark last year that the growing convergence of evidence for the theory, from several sciences working independently, is a significant argument in favor of it.

Such a scientific theory is not something he would "endorse." Nevertheless, he obviously finds the evidence intellectually weighty.

World And National News Briefs

Center Is U.S. Catholic Think-Tank

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Pope John Paul II Cultural Center will be the premiere U.S. Catholic think-tank as well as a world-class living museum, according to the U.S. cardinal who is the founder and driving force behind the project. At a press conference in Washington, Detroit Cardinal Adam J. Maida said the new facility in the nation's capital "will be a place for exploring the Catholic faith, culture and the impact of papal teachings on current events and issues facing all peoples every day." The $50-million facility, consisting of an intercultural forum and interactive museum, will be built on 14 acres adjacent to The Catholic University of America and the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

TV Portrayal Of Priest Criticized

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Los Angeles priest who was consulted about the pilot episode of a new ABC-TV comedy series centering on the life of a young priest criticized the series and rebuked its producer for implying that the church had approved the show. Meanwhile, the head of the U.S. bishops' Office for Film and Broadcasting called the pilot episode "a mixed bag" and the television reviewer for the Jesuit magazine America said it "looks like the best television series ever produced about the rich and often complicated lives of American Catholics." The series, "Nothing Sacred," is scheduled to air at 8 p.m. Eastern time on Thursdays beginning Sept. 25.

Bishop Pilla Lauds Yeltsin Veto

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Bishop Anthony M. Pilla of Cleveland, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, has praised Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin's decision to veto legislation sharply restricting most religions in Russia. Bishop Pilla also commended the efforts of the Clinton administration to get Yeltsin to veto the bill. "Your efforts in this case are an example of how U.S. foreign policy can help stave off threats to religious freedom around the world," he said in a July 25 letter to President Clinton which was released July 30 by the NCCB.

Caritas Appeals For Flood Relief

ROME (CNS) — The Catholic aid organization Caritas was appealing to people throughout Germany to contribute food, clothing and other donations to flood relief efforts in the eastern part of the country. Flooding that started July 23 forced people in three villages on the German-Polish border, as well as numerous residents along the Oder River, to abandon their homes. "We are doing everything we can to help those who have been displaced," Steffen Mehnert, coordinator for the Caritas office in Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, told Catholic News Service July 31. "But it is not nearly enough."

Bishop Apologizes For Priest's Sex Abuse

DALLAS (CNS) — Bishop Charles V. Grahmann of Dallas offered an emotional public apology July 27 to the 10 young men involved in a sexual abuse lawsuit against the Dallas Diocese. None of the men showed up for the 9:30 a.m. Sunday Mass at Immaculate Conception Church in Corsicana, 55 miles south of Dallas, where the bishop traveled in hopes of meeting some of them. "I want to look into the eyes of each of the victims of this terrible crime perpetrated against them and say, from the most intimate part of my being, that I am profoundly sorry," Bishop Grahmann said in a statement during the Mass. Three days earlier the 10 young men and the parents of an 11th man who committed suicide in 1992 won a $120 million verdict against the diocese — by far the largest amount ever awarded in a clergy sex abuse lawsuit.

GREENSBORO — The Catholic community of St. Paul the Apostle Church was founded in July 1974, when Bishop Michael J. Begley of Charlotte invited the Paulist Fathers to create the fifth parish in the Guilford County seat.

Paulist Father Robert T. Scott, pastor, celebrated St. Paul the Apostle parish's first Mass at Cross of Christ Lutheran Church. While a long-term, three-phase building plan was drawn up in those early days, the congregation first gathered at a number of Protestant churches and a funeral home for liturgies and parish functions.

At a time when the number of families continued to grow from its original 90, the parish set sights on constructing its church. Ground was broken in August 1975 for a multi-purpose facility on the present property, and the parish gathered for its first Mass in the new 450-seat sanctuary in April 1976.

In addition to the central worship space, the new building was also furnished with a chapel, kitchen, and a half-dozen rooms which served as space for a nursery, classrooms, religious education offices and meeting rooms.

Bishop Begley served as principal celebrant at the dedication Mass in May 1976. Concelebrating was Paulist Father Thomas F. Stransky, then president of the Paulist Fathers, who delivered the homily, and Father Scott, pastor. The registered congregation by then numbered 350 families.

While the Paulists ministered to the ever-growing parish of St. Paul the Apostle, they also served in campus ministry to Catholic students attending Guilford College, Greensboro College, and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. That ministry has developed into the Catholic Student Fellowship of Greensboro, and Oblates of St. Francis de Sales Father John Gilvey, priest in residence at St. Paul the Apostle Church, serves as campus minister for students of the three schools.

An ecumenical outreach developed during the Paulist presence in Greensboro as well. The Catholic parish signed a covenant of cooperation with Cross of Christ Lutheran and St. Barnabas Episcopal communities, both of whose churches were utilized by St. Paul parishioners in the early years for parish functions.

Emphasis on community — among the congregation and beyond — has been an important facet of parish life. Father Scott, in the mid-1970s, brought a ministry to the parish for divorced and remarried Catholics. And in 1978, the parish made local news when it "adopted" a family of Vietnamese refugees. A variety of community and ecumenical projects continue today, including involvement in Habitat for Humanity, local bloodmobiles, and several family-related service ministries.

Parish growth continued through the 1980s, both in the number of ministerial efforts and the size of the congregation.

The Paulist Fathers continued their pastorate at St. Paul the Apostle Church until 1991. That year, the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales assumed pastoral leadership, and Oblates Father James O'Neill was appointed pastor.

The parish at that time was composed of almost 1,000 families, and Father O'Neill immediately began plans to enlarge the church facilities. The expansion, which yielded additional worship space, was dedicated by Bishop John F. Donoghue of Charlotte in March 1993.

The parish council has developed a vision statement that stresses St. Paul the Apostle Church's commitment to the Eucharist as the center of each parishioner's life. "Our Vision 2000"

Out Of Africa

Synergy Springs From Global Experience

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

BALTIMORE — When ordained to the priesthood, he will serve the spiritual needs of a still-young and developing diocese. And during an overseas visit that acquainted him with the bleakest human conditions, he saw the necessity for a different sort of development whereby groups of people are often fighting for their very survival.

David Brzoska, a seminarian of the Charlotte Diocese, recently joined eight fellow seminarians this summer in traveling to Zimbabwe, Africa. The journey was part of the 1997 Global Fellows Program, sponsored by Catholic Relief Services and aimed at promoting global awareness for seminarians in the United States.

For Brzoska, it provided an opportunity to encounter the catholicity of humanitarian efforts.

"The Catholic Church has always done a good job with education and support of schools in Zimbabwe," said Brzoska, who is studying at St. Vincent Seminary in Latrobe, Penn. "But especially since Zimbabwe has gained independence (in 1980), the Church's presence is much more service-oriented towards the whole community — not just the Catholic parish, but all of the people."

The Global Fellows were selected through a comprehensive application process including a personal essay from each applicant and recommendations from each seminarian's rector, vocation director and bishop.

In Zimbabwe, the group received a quick introduction to the struggles of a largely agricultural nation fighting health problems compounded by a lack of basic human necessities.

At two Catholic missions — one located along the eastern border, the other in the west toward the countries of Botswana and Zambia — the seminarians met with villagers taking a stand against oppression manifested by economic deprivation, deficiency in education, and devastation from the virus and disease infecting, at the very least, 30% of the national population.

"One of the major problems is HIV and AIDS," explained Brzoska. "It's predicted that by the year 2010, one-third of the children in Zimbabwe will be orphaned. Only now are people coming to terms with the fact that it's a problem."

Brzoska added that education is a vital commodity, and the people of the missions and elsewhere are making efforts to learn more about self-sufficiency in all areas of life.

Children of the Tonga ethnic group pose for this photo taken during a visit to Zimbabwe, Africa, by nine American seminarians through the 1997 Global Fellows program sponsored by Catholic Relief Services.

The missions, sponsored by the Mutare and Hwange dioceses, run self-help projects in agriculture and education with the assistance of Catholic Relief Services. Entrepreneurial endeavors give economic promise, and schools and clinics provide learning and healthcare opportunities. Home-based care programs connect local volunteers with the sick and needy.

"These volunteers, people who live in the area, go around each day visiting those who are ill," said Brzoska of the home-based programs that reach out to many. "They provide medicine, nutrition, education, spiritual support."

While in the Diocese of Mutare, the Fellows met with Auxiliary Bishop Msgr. Patrick Mumbure Mutume to discuss the Church's role in justice and peace issues in Zimbabwe. In addition to his concern with AIDS and healthcare issues, the bishop has made inculturation of the faith a priority in a country where about one-quarter of the population is Christian. Another quarter still adheres to traditional tribal beliefs, while the remaining half is devoted to a faith incorporating elements of both Christian and traditional beliefs.

"One of the problems of the early missionary efforts is that a lot of cultural beliefs and practices really were not taken into account," said Brzoska. "Now the Church realizes that there are positive cultural aspects that need to be fostered."

"In a sense, the program helped me appreciate more what we have here, especially as a Church and a diocese," he added, "and it also emphasized looking at the Church as one global community."

Joanne Frazer, director of the Charlotte Diocese's Office of Justice and Peace, hopes to consult with Brzoska in the future. "By seeing the problems firsthand of the developing Third World," she said, "David will be able to advise us in our local efforts — in how we can be part of the solution by working through our Church."

Despite whatever challenges the people of Zimbabwe face, their conviction largely remains strong, said Brzoska. "I had the opportunity to meet with a lot of different people," he added. "Some of them didn't have much of anything. But they are very proud and very faith-filled at the same time."

The examples of faith in action Brzoska witnessed, he said, truly can have global effects. "We're all neighbors, and if one part of the world grows in faith, it can help all of us grow and pass that experience along to others."

Bishops Approve Home Mission Collection, New Mass Books

By JERRY FILTEAU

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic bishops have approved a new national Collection for the Home Missions and the texts of new official liturgy books for use at Mass.

The liturgy books are the first part of a new Lectionary, which is the book of readings used at Mass, and a new Sacramentary, the book of the prayers at Mass.

The new texts, which must still be confirmed by Rome, mark the first major revisions of the Mass in English in more than a quarter-century.

The bishops' decisions were announced Aug. 11 by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. They were the result of mail balloting conducted in July after votes taken during the bishops' national meeting in June were inconclusive.

Bishops who head dioceses — the only ones allowed to vote on financial decisions — approved the Collection for the Home Missions by a vote of 141-44. At least 130 votes — two-thirds of the diocesan bishops — were needed for passage.

The collection is to be taken up in all U.S. parishes on the last Sunday of April each year, starting in 1998.

Its goal is $7 million a year to assist poorer dioceses in the United States and its possessions and to help fund other evangelization and formation programs, especially those that reach out to Catholic minority groups.

The collection replaces the 40 percent portion of the fall Mission Sunday Collection that used to go to the home missions. Several years ago the Vatican asked bishops of the three remaining countries which kept part of their mission collection at home to phase that practice out and begin devoting all proceeds to the foreign missions.

The mail ballot that concluded four years of work by the bishops on a new Sacramentary consisted of a single vote on a single prayer.

By a vote of 192-48 they approved a change in words the priest uses to invite people up to Communion. Instead of saying, "blessed are those who are called to his supper," he will say, "blessed are those who are called to the banquet of the Lamb."

With that vote the bishops completed work on the new English Sacramentary that had occupied substantial portions of every national meeting since November, 1992, when they adopted special procedural rules to guide them through the review and voting process.

The new Sacramentary must be submitted to the Vatican Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments for confirmation. Approval from Rome is needed before it can be published and distributed for use in parishes.

In their action on the Lectionary, the bishops voted 199-50 to "approve the submission of Volume I of the Lectionary for Mass ... to the Apostolic See for confirmation and authorize, after a period of five years, a full review of the Lectionary with a view to its possible updating."

For both the Lectionary and the Sacramentary, approval required affirmative votes by at least 174 bishops — two-thirds of the active Latin-rite bishops in the country.

The Lectionary vote represented the conclusion — at least for now — of a long struggle over the degree to which horizontal inclusive language is acceptable in English translations of Scripture intended for use in the liturgy.

In 1992 the U.S. bishops approved and submitted to Rome a revised Lectionary based on a partially updated translation of the New American Bible, adapted to reflect criteria for inclusive language in such texts which the bishops had adopted in 1990.

In 1994 the Vatican informed the bishops that changes would have to be made before the Lectionary would be confirmed.

Although most of the negotiations and communications were conducted in secrecy and strict confidentiality, Vatican and U.S. church officials involved said publicly that one of the key issues was the use of certain translation techniques in the proposed Lectionary to make the English text inclusive.

This spring a working group of three U.S. archbishops and several Vatican officials spent a week hammering out differences and agreeing on a compromise text. While inclusive language was kept in the translation of some passages, changes were made in other passages to reintroduce masculine terms.

Because of time constraints, only the first part of the revised Lectionary — containing the texts for Sundays and major feasts — was presented to the bishops for a vote in June. The second part is to be dealt with in November.

The format of the formal motion presented to the bishops left no room for them to amend the compromise translation.

After several bishops took the floor to express strong dissatisfaction with the text, the bishops amended the motion approving the text to add language authorizing a review and possible updating of the text after five years.

Doing The Work Of Catholic Social Services In Your Parish

CHARLOTTE — Catholic Relief Services (CRS) has served as the official overseas relief and development agency of American Catholics since 1943. As a ministry of the Diocese of Charlotte, CRS is directed by the Office of Justice and Peace, which works in partnership with parishes to alleviate hunger, suffering and deprivation throughout the world. At the local level, parishes can support CRS in several ways.

Parishes in the Diocese of Charlotte contributed more than $15,000 during the 1997 Operation Rice Bowl, a Lenten program of prayer, fasting, education and almsgiving. During Lent, families are encouraged to place symbolic rice bowls on their tables to help eliminate the causes of hunger, injustice and poverty by providing material and spiritual assistance in the form of prayer and sacrifice. Of the funds collected, 75% goes to the national office to be used in responding to worldwide human needs, while 25% stays in the diocese.

Work of Human Hands, a collaborative effort between CRS and SERRV International, works with community-based self-help groups of low-income people in Africa, Latin America, Asia, and the United States who make traditional handcrafted products. Work of Human Hands pays the groups in advance and at a fair-market price for their work. Parishes can become part of this direct trading system by holding a Work of Human Hands sale during Christmas season. There is no upfront cost, and the parish keeps 10% of the sales to support other missions or to cover any costs. For information on sponsoring a sale, call Catholic Relief Services at (800) 685-7572.

A mini-grants program of Operation Rice Bowl has been established using the program funds that remain in our diocese. Parishes or other Catholic organizations such as youth ministry, faith formation and campus ministry groups can apply for $500 mini-grants for local initiatives on international issues or projects. Pastors of the diocese received applications in July. Interested parties should submit applications by Sept. 8.

The DEVCAP Shared Return Fund allows for tax-deductible donations of a portion of investment returns to CRS to be used for micro-enterprise efforts in developing countries.

For more information on these and other Catholic Relief Services programs, call Joanne Frazer, director of the Office of Justice and Peace, at (704) 331-1736.

Black Catholic Congress To Dedicate "Our Mother of Africa Chapel" In Washington, D.C.

WASHINGTON — For African-American Catholics and people of African ancestry, Aug. 30 will be a historic and monumental day to remember.

National Black Catholic Congress participants in Baltimore will board buses for a pilgrimage to the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D.C., to dedicate the "Our Mother of Africa Chapel".

The chapel will be located in the crypt level of the shrine between the chapels of Our Lady Queen of Peace and Our Lady of Lourdes.

In January 1994, the National Black Catholic Congress, with the support of the 11 African-American bishops, embarked on an ambitious campaign to raise $2.5 million to erect the chapel and establish an endowment fund. Donations from 13 organizations, 34 major religious communities, 146 dioceses, 675 parishes and 3,687 individuals helped exceed the initial goal and begin construction of the chapel. The endowment will be used to develop programs and materials to assist parishes and provide training programs.

Sculptor Ed Dwight created the statue "Our Mother of Africa and her Divine Son" and a bus relief panel depicting the struggles and challenges of the African-American people. Juvenal Kaliki, a Tanzanian sculptor from the Entebene tribe, and New York sculptor Jeffrey Brosk created the chapel's crucifix. Kaliki carved the figure of Christ and Brosk designed the cross.

More than 3,000 priests, deacons, brothers, women religious and lay persons who minister to or worship in African-American churches will arrive in Baltimore Aug. 28 for Congress VIII. A four-day celebration sponsored by the National Black Catholic Congress, the event will highlight the accomplishments that have transpired within the African-American Catholic community over the last century, particularly within recent years.

From Aug. 28-30, Congress attendees will participate in general sessions, liturgical celebrations, word events and various social and cultural activities. All activities will have "evangelization" as their central theme to prepare participants for the next millennium.

Asheville Priest Receives National AIDS Award

CHICAGO — Father Morris Boyd, pastor of St. Joan of Arc Church in Asheville, has received the Lumina Award from the National Catholic AIDS Network (NCAN).

The highest honor of NCAN, a network of AIDS ministries throughout the country, was presented at the network's annual ministry conference at Loyola University in Chicago.

Father Boyd is a founding member of the Caring Hearts AIDS Ministry at St. Joan of Arc parish. As conveyed in its mission statement, the ministry seeks to provide a Catholic presence and to minister to the needs of the HIV/AIDS community through God's unconditional love.

In his acceptance speech at the conference last month, Father Boyd spoke of the need of parish communities to care for people with AIDS and their loved ones.

"Don't tell people with AIDS that God loves them," he added, sharing the motivation that fuels the Caring Hearts ministry. "Tell them that you love them, for your hands are the only hands God has to touch them with, and your heart is the only heart God has to love them with."

Founded in 1994, the ministry is responsible for organizing food drives for people living with AIDS and other terminal illnesses; a monthly AIDS healing Mass at St. Joan of Arc Church; care teams that provide non-medical but much-needed support to the homebound; and regular meetings featuring guest speakers, education opportunities, spiritual support and fellowship.

In May 1996, Caring Hearts was instrumental in founding Cornerstone, a diocesan network of Catholic parish-based AIDS ministries in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Also among the 350 people in attendance at the NCAN conference was Michele Bennington, a facilitator of the Shepherd's Care HIV/AIDS Ministry at Our Lady of Consolation Church in Charlotte. She served on the conference's planning team and presented a workshop on parish-based HIV/AIDS ministries.

Bennington said this year's conference had the most diverse ethnic population in its 10-year history, and more than one-third of those in attendance have tested positive for the HIV virus.

"Although our diversity in Chicago represents a great step forward," she added, "(NCAN) continues to work towards a more representative community at our conference reflecting the faces of those most heavily impacted by the pandemic."

Bennington noted that this year's conference included the opportunity for youth participation with a workshop for young people living with and affected by HIV/AIDS. She hopes that youth involvement will become an increasing reality not only at the annual conferences, but especially at the parish and community levels as well.

As in years past, the 1997 conference provided time for regional areas to meet and network. Representatives of the Charlotte Diocese are included in a region comprising the Carolinas, Georgia and Tennessee.

Jane de Chantal

Jane Frances de Chantal was born in Dijon, France, in 1562. She married at age 20. The couple was raising four children when her husband died in 1601. At age 32, with three other women and the help of St. Francis de Sales, she founded the Visitation Order for young girls and widows. She continued in her spiritual pursuits despite admonitions from family members to return to the world. The order spread across France and in 30 years more than 60 houses were founded. Jane died in 1641. Her feast is Aug. 18.

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Mary, Church Express Divine Love In Motherhood, Pope Says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here is the Vatican text of Pope John Paul II's remarks in English at his weekly general audience Aug. 13.

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the relationship between Mary and the church, we now consider the words of the Second Vatican Council, which describe the Blessed Virgin as the "eminent and singular example" of the motherhood of the church (cf. "Lumen Gentium," 63). As the mother of the Son of God, Mary cooperates with maternal love in the rebirth and spiritual growth of all the members of Christ's body, the church. Like Mary, the church also is a mother who brings us new life in the Holy Spirit through her preaching and through baptism (cf. ibid., 64). The church, as the spiritual mother of the faithful, has her example and model in Mary's holiness, Mary's openness to God's word and her complete obedience to his will. Through the motherhood of Mary and of the church, may we all be brought nearer to the saving love of God revealed in Jesus Christ.

I cordially greet the groups of young people from around the world who will join me in Paris for the World Youth Day. Dear young friends, how much the world needs your witness to the love of Christ! In the days ahead, may you appreciate ever more fully the beauty of God's gift of faith and joyfully share that gift with others in building a world of justice, love and solidarity. Upon you and upon all the English-speaking visitors, especially the pilgrims from Indonesia, the Philippines, Taiwan, Japan, Canada and the United States, I invoke the grace and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope To Make Private Visit To Grave Of French Geneticist

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope John Paul II plans a private visit a friend's grave during his Aug. 21-24 trip to Paris for World Youth Day, the Vatican press office said. The visit to the tomb of Dr. Jerome Lejeune, a French geneticist who died in 1994, is scheduled for the late afternoon of Aug. 22. After the visit was added to the pope's schedule in early August, a French organization supporting legalized abortion denounced the planned visit as a "provocation" against women who decide to abort abnormal fetuses and as a sign of support for those who want to restrict legalized abortion. Lejeune was a supporter of pro-life causes. The French Family Planning Movement, a group that supports legalized abortion, said the pope's planned visit to the tomb "symbolically and forcefully" shows "his opposition to the rights of women in general (and) to abortion in particular."

Viewing The Position Of Kneeling In Church

In traveling this summer in the Midwest and Middle Atlantic areas, I have stopped at as many churches as I could to look at the design. (A lot of churches are locked.) Judging from the newer churches I've seen, American Catholics still are digesting the liturgical-reform movement.

Among changes that seem to be fully embraced is a new prominence of the sacrament of baptism, especially by immersion. Baptismal pools are found in most new churches. However, we don't know where to put them. Some have them on the altar, others by the church entrance.

Where you put it makes a statement.

Because we want to be able to celebrate baptisms during liturgies, especially the Easter Vigil, many churches have baptismal pools near the altar, on the sanctuary platform. Often they are worked into the pulpit to make a connection between baptism and the "word" as a font of life.

On the other hand, because baptism is the sacrament of "entry" into the church, the people of God, some people think the pool should be near the church entrance. This was most common in ancient churches. One new church in Louisville I visited this spring resolved this dispute with Solomonian wisdom by having two baptismal fountains, one by the door and the other on the altar.

While there is agreement about the new prominence of the sacrament of baptism in the architecture, there is disagreement about whether the congregation should kneel or stand during the Eucharistic Prayer. I think this reflects a larger disagreement about the role of priesthood and the Eucharist in the church.

Many of the modern churches I went to, especially in the Midwest and South, have no kneelers. The people remain standing through the whole Mass, including the Eucharistic Prayer. In some older churches the kneelers have been removed.

The theory, as I understand it, is that since we are all "priests" by virtue of our baptism, we should emphasize our shared priesthood and all stand. Some think this better reflects our Christian dignity.

Whatever the theory, most Catholics don't seem to like it. I've noticed that even in churches where the kneelers have been removed, many people still kneel.

In one huge new church outside Chicago, I noticed that with everyone standing at Sunday Mass, it was impossible to see the priest well. Also the fidgeting of people shifting around as they stood was distracting.

This is not a liturgical change the people were asking for. It has been a trend imposed by experts in liturgy and church design. The average Catholic wants kneelers. Not just for the Mass, but for a few minutes of prayer before and after Mass, and a few moments of adoration after Communion.

Kneeling to most people is a posture of adoration and reverence. We are imitating the prophets, like Isaiah, who fell down in adoration when they found themselves in the presence of the divine, as we do in the Eucharist. Our communal kneeling follows the words of Isaiah's vision of God, the "Holy, Holy, Holy." Only the priest, who necessarily stood at the altar, remained standing because it was his role on behalf of the people. Even he genuflected in moments of adoration. (Often where the kneelers have been removed, I've noticed that the priest does not genuflect anymore, even though it is prescribed in the Sacramentary.)

I don't think this trend of standing is catching on. In fact, in two brand new churches I've seen lately, one not yet completed, the kneelers are back. The people have spoken.

Who? Me?

Just as Mike Davis was setting out to change the world, his own world imploded. And it was there, in the very midst of his agonizing misfortune, that he made a discovery. As in most of our lives, the ways we make a difference do not always happen in the way we envision. It's a story you will not easily forget.

About 10 years ago, less than a decade after graduating from St. Benedict's Prep in Newark, N.J., Mike found himself back at his old high school. This time he had a job maintaining the computers there and at the adjoining Benedictine abbey. He loved his work and delighted in being of service to others.

Looking for additional ways to use his talents, Mike was attracted to the Christopher Leadership course offered in midtown Manhattan. In nine weeks he successfully completed the program, charged with a new sense of his potential for making a positive difference in the world.

His instructors from the Gabriel Richard Institute which conducts the course tell me that Mike applied its principles well before completing it, generously sharing his unique light with his classmates. His sense of self-worth and confidence was contagious as he made new friends who were just as eager to put their ideas into action.

Mike was just getting started on putting his freshly enkindled convictions to work, when he had a seven-second encounter with a gunman. In that brief moment, on the evening of Oct. 12, 1995, the body of Mike Davis became quadriplegic. Yet his mind and spirit were anything but paralyzed. He was still certain that he could "make a difference" in the lives of those with whom God had placed him.

You see, Mike Davis is a remarkable person. With the generous mindset of a Pope John Paul II and the late Joseph Cardinal Bernardin of Chicago, he sought no retribution against the man who shot him: "I don't want revenge. It's impractical. It's not an option."

With peace of soul that only forgiving can bring, he travels the arduous journey of rehabilitation. He is at a point now where he is able to teach his computer to learn his voice commands.

This has enabled him to carry on correspondence with old friends — and new ones as well, including John Cardinal O'Connor of New York.

In fact, in an open-hearted gesture so typical of Mike, he invited all his classmates and instructors of the Leadership course to join him at a special Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral offered by the cardinal for some very special people. Mike, by his regular correspondence, has brought his upbeat and hope-filled perspective into the cardinal's busy life.

Mike's dependence upon others has enabled those around him to make a difference to his life through their talents. It's hard to be the one who always seems to be saying "thanks." But one of the greatest gifts we can give is to allow someone to serve us and to accept that person's care graciously.

The purpose in sharing this story is simply this: The next time you hear the Christopher reminder, "There is nobody like you. You can make a difference," remember Mike Davis before you give in to the temptation to respond: "Who? Me?"

Mike Davis changes the world for the better every day of his life. So can we all.

No Mass Available on Sunday?

Q. Two of our children and their families live in parishes where there is no longer Sunday Mass, except maybe once a month. One of these parishes has a "priestless service" most Sundays. The other has one occasionally.

We always have believed and taught our children that nothing substitutes for the Sunday celebration of the Eucharist. We still believe that, but what do you do when it's not available?

Since these services are not eucharistic celebrations, are we still obliged to attend Mass? Are we excused? Will these services gradually substitute for Mass?

As a committed Catholic I find that impossible to believe. Is that where we're going?

A. No, it isn't where we're going, though it can sometimes look that way. Many millions of Catholics now have the eucharistic liturgy available to them only a few times a year at best.

Even speaking about the possibility of widespread deprivation of the Eucharist seems unreal, something like asking whether the human race will soon be getting along without breathing.

From the beginning, before all the books of the New Testament were written, each Sunday's Breaking of the Bread (probably the first common name for the Mass) was considered the life-blood of Christians.

A Christian who missed several times without a serious reason was thought to have abandoned the community of the faithful or was thought to be a member who didn't understand what it was all about and needed more instruction.

Thanking the Father for his gifts to us through Jesus Christ and uniting themselves to his life, death and resurrection in the Eucharistic Prayer, joined to hearing the word of God proclaimed in their midst — all these elements of the Mass were what gave them strength and unity.

It's no wonder that through the centuries Christians believed one essential responsibility of the hierarchy was to assure, in whatever way necessary, that Christian communities had the eucharistic celebration available to them at least every Sunday.

So your feelings fit very well the tradition of the church.

To answer your specific questions, the obligation to participate in the Mass on Sundays and other holy days still exists. It binds all Catholics unless they are excused for a sufficiently serious reason.

Home Alone

There's been a lot of talk in our home this summer about what my seven-year-old-son, Bobby, would like to be when he grows up. At the end of one of these conversations, I asked my five-year-old daughter, Teresa, "What do you think you want to be when you grow up?" She turned to me, exasperated at my failure to acknowledge a statement she's repeated many times during the past year, and said, "Don't you remember? I'm not going to grow up. I like to be little and I don't want to get old!" Bobby responded before I had a chance, "Well, Teresa, everybody has to grow up and it's not like you're going to be the only person out of every one on earth who gets to stay a kid."

Bobby can't fathom anyone wanting to stay little. He is jumping into the future — literally. Each day his feet leave the ground as his arms stretch high. He jumps. He shoots. He scores. Like thousands of other children across the country, he wants to be just like Michael Jordan when he grows up, and he believes that by jumping and stretching each day he'll grow to Jordan's height.

All this talk of growing up has me feeling a bit uneasy. For months I've been in major denial over the fact that, come September, Teresa will be going off to kindergarten. For the first time in seven years I will be home alone.

In July, I turned 39 without a trace of age anxiety, but the day we went to Teresa's kindergarten orientation this past June, I couldn't help but wonder and worry about where the time had gone. At every opportunity Teresa insists she's going to be a kid forever, but her growing body and mind tell a different story. And her budding confidence and independence indicate that my five-year-old is not only growing up but is more than ready to head down the halls of Ben Franklin Elementary school.

There are milestones in our children's lives that offer us an opportunity to reflect on how swiftly and ably our children are growing up — birthdays, first communions, confirmations, graduations and the start of kindergarten. But there are also the more subtle signs in our everyday lives that let us know time is marching on and our children (with the exception of Teresa) will not stay little forever.

The signs that my two children are no longer little began appearing this past year. The "tippy" cups, the colorful plates with a section for each food group and the child-sized silverware were gradually being pushed to the back of our cabinets. We're now all using the same dinner plates. As we packed for our summer vacation this year, we removed the children's bike seats from the back of our bicycles. For the first time, we all rode on our own bikes. A tell-tale sign for me that life was changing was the request to turn off the kids' sing-along tapes and turn on their Hanson tape — a popular pop music group consisting of three brothers from Oklahoma. And then came the invitation to the kindergarten open house....

For almost seven years I have been home with my children. I was fortunate to have a rewarding professional career before I had my children, and I've been blessed to have a profession where I can work part-time from my home. I understand the importance of having an identity separate from my children's, but I also recognize that through their world of wonder, discovery and love, both my

You Can Succeed Where Presidents Failed

By JIM KELLEY

Two were lawyers...one was a tailor ...the other a professional soldier. The youngest died at 50, the oldest at 67. All died within 20 years of one another. Each was survived by a family. None was wealthy — one left an estate of $230.

Jim Kelley

Abraham Lincoln, Andrew Johnson, Ulysses S. Grant, and James A. Garfield all rose from humble origins to become president of the United States. Yet all died intestate — having failed to make legally valid plans.

With your attorney's assistance, you can make a will or other estate plans that accomplish your personal and philanthropic objectives.

If you fail to make valid plans, the state of North Carolina chooses your heirs according to law. To die without a legally recognized will, revocable living trust, or other such plans can burden your estate with unnecessary costs and taxes that might otherwise be lawfully avoided.

How Does A Will Distribute Property?

Your will designates an administrator, who presents your will for probate (official confirmation of the will's validity). Under the court's supervision, he or she pays debts and taxes owed by your estate and then distributes the remaining assets as your will directs.

The will must describe the benefit each person or organization should receive from your estate. Remembering your parish, Catholic school, Catholic agencies, the diocesan Foundation, or the Diocese of Charlotte helps affirm your gratitude for all of God's blessings. It assures that the good stewardship you practiced while alive continues after your death.

Without a valid will or other legal arrangement, such as a living trust or beneficiary assignment, you cannot benefit charitable, religious or educational institutions through your estate.

Does The Type Of Gift Matter?

Since no one can accurately determine the extent, type, and location of future assets now, you may wish to specify that loved ones and Catholic charities receive percentages of your estate instead of specific dollar amounts.

Or you may remember charitable causes with a residual bequest, directing that the residential assets of your estate be paid to further Catholicism in the Charlotte Diocese. (Residual assets are those remaining after all debts and taxes owed by your estate are paid and any bequests provided to named individuals are distributed.)

It is important to coordinate your will with other legal arrangements for distributing property, life insurance, and retirement plan proceeds. The effects of community property or joint ownership should also be considered.

Tax laws change, as do the extent, type, and location of assets. Individuals you name may predecease you or move away. Thus, plans made only a few years ago may no longer be relied upon to carry out your personal or charitable objectives.

For example, you may now be in a position to increase your gift to your parish, Catholic agencies, Catholic school, the diocesan Foundation, or the Diocese of Charlotte to continue Christ's vital work. Please have your attorney review your will and/or other plans at least every five years or when family circumstances change.

To discuss your plans confidentially, write or call me at the Diocesan Development Office, Diocese of Charlotte, 1524 E. Morehead St., Charlotte, N.C. 28207, (704) 331-1709, or 377-6871.

Cardinal Welcomes Hundreds Of Thousands To World Youth Day

By MAUREEN LEONARD

PARIS (CNS) — Hundreds of thousands of young people from almost every nation filled the Champs de Mars, near the base of the Eiffel Tower, Aug. 19 for the opening Mass and welcoming ceremonies of the 12th World Youth Day.

watched the opening ceremonies, which featured a procession of several hundred bishops, followed by a large banner with the portrait of St. Therese as a young woman.

In his homily, the cardinal urged the young people to look to the life of St. Therese of Lisieux as a role model.

"She set out a century ago, and she found the shortest way: the way of love, the way of Christ," he said.

Reminding the young people of Jesus' words, "To enter the kingdom of heaven, you will have to become like little children," the cardinal said: "It is by becoming small that we can become great in the kingdom of heaven. It is by making ourselves poor that we become rich. It is by making ourselves weak that we become strong."

Hundreds of thousands of young people participating in the opening Mass of World Youth Day on the Champs de Mars in Paris are seen through an arch of the Eiffel Tower Aug. 19.

Cardinal Jean-Marie Lustiger of Paris welcomed the youths from more than 150 countries during the Mass in honor of the centennial anniversary of the death of St. Therese of Lisieux.

"It is Christ who is inviting you: 'Come and see.' It is Christ who is gathering us for this World Youth Day in Paris," he said. "It is Christ whom you are looking for."

The energetic youth, many wearing their native costumes, carried flags and banners from different nations and danced and sang together in the grassy area in the shadow of the Eiffel Tower, along the banks of the River Seine.

"'Catholic' means universal. This event is universal, so I think it's as catholic as you can get," said George Sears, 17, of St. Joseph Parish in Middletown, N.Y. "It's great to see how worldwide the church is. It's alive, really alive! We're it — this is the church right here!"

Seated on the podium with young people all around him, Cardinal Lustiger

Cardinal Lustiger urged the youth to never give up and look to God as the source of all happiness.

"Do not choose mediocrity! God wants the greatest happiness for you!" Cardinal Lustiger said. "In the name of Christ I call you to the highest ambition — the ambition of love, love without limits. It is the only ambition that is not deceptive, it is the only one that is worthy of your deepest yearnings."

St. Therese had tremendous insight into how to make one's life successful, noted Cardinal Lustiger.

"At the cost of considerable spiritual labor, she realized that she was to ask for love," he said. "Love means learning to love, continuing to love, loving always more."

Archbishop J. Francis Stafford, president of the Pontifical Council for the Laity, addressed the gathering at the conclusion of the Mass and relayed a message from Pope John Paul II, who was scheduled to arrive two days later and stay until the conclusion Aug. 24.

"The pope welcomes you to this World Youth Day and said, 'It is important for you to develop your conversation with Christ,'" Archbishop Stafford said. "This World Youth Day is open. Let us move on from here. Let us begin the conversation, 'Master, where do you live? Come and See.'"

Separated only by the barrier of different languages, the young people shared their enthusiasm with one another.

Tom Szyclik, a 20-year-old seminarian from the Diocese of Peoria, Ill., called the Mass "a beautiful and prayerful experience."

A spiritual awakening is how Patrick Waugh, 15, from St. Therese Parish in Alhambra, Calif., described the beginning of World Youth Day.

"Just in the short time I've been here, my relationship with God has gotten so much better," he said.

Summer Campers

MOORESVILLE — More than 50 children in grades k-6 gathered at St. Therese Church recently for the "Camp Courageous — Where God's Love is Contagious" annual vacation Bible school. The group, led by a camp director, four adult teachers and 11 youth counselors, learned ways of living by Christian example.

Sly Surprising As Second-Rate Sheriff In "Cop Land"

NEW YORK (CNS) — Sagging action hero Sly Stallone tries to work out his acting muscles alongside Robert De Niro, Harvey Keitel and Ray Liotta in the gritty drama, "Cop Land" (Miramax).

Although the movie is not very satisfying, the surprise is that Stallone is believable as phlegmatic Freddy Heflin, the middle-aged and unfulfilled sheriff of a sleepy New Jersey town.

His two-bit turf is largely populated by very tight-knit New York cops with Keitel's Ray Donlan as their tough leader. Freddy always wanted to be one of New York's finest, but a heroic act in his teens saved a girl's life but left him deaf in one ear, disqualifying him from the big-city force.

And so Freddy is reduced to scolding bickering schoolboys, investigating garbage disputes and seeing the woman (Annabella Sciorra) he saved and came to love being mistreated by her faithless cop husband (Peter Berg).

The sheriff's sadness is as palpable as his steps are sluggish.

Setting in motion a chain of events that finally cracks Freddy's lethargy is a violent confrontation on the bridge connecting New York and New Jersey, between Ray's cop nephew (Michael Rapaport) and two black men shot dead under confusing circumstances that could get the young cop nailed — except that Ray and his buddies in blue immediately arrive on the scene, instituting a cover-up that includes pretending his distraught nephew committed suicide by jumping off the bridge, his body washed away.

In fact, Ray hides him back home and Freddy finds out, but plays dumb when internal affairs snoop Robert De Niro presses him to rat on Ray. That is, until the sheriff discovers Ray now deems it necessary to kill his nephew to quash the inquiry.

No longer able to deny to himself that Ray is one dirty cop, Freddy must take a stand, but it seems every other NYPD cop in town is just as corrupt — and ready, willing and able to sacrifice anyone who makes waves.

To his credit, writer-director James Mangold stresses character over action in this tale of one man forced to open his eyes to the ugliness of compromised cops abusing their power.

With his newly bloated physique accentuating his hangdog expression, Stallone conveys an over-the-hill failure who feels second-rate, powerless and would just as soon look the other way than face the fact that his town may be controlled by the mob.

Yet many characterizations are superficial: Ray's cop is an unchanging hard case whose colleagues (also including Robert Patrick and John Spencer) tow the line, and De Niro's role is underwritten as a standard-issue internal affairs investigator.

A more interestingly complex character is Liotta's cop, Figgsy, who has always followed Ray's orders, but the strain is beginning to show, especially after his partner winds up dead. Befriending the sheriff, Figgsy seems capable of deceit, betrayal — and perhaps an unlikely heroism. Sciorra and Cathy Moriarty, in smaller but telling roles, register strongly as fed-up cop wives on the brink of desperate action.

However, when Stallone's sheriff is finally motivated to react to all the wrongdoing around him, the script surrenders to a simplistic shoot-out to resolve the conflict. For a movie with a lot on its mind — corruption, arson, adultery and murder — this is a distinct let-down.

Due to intermittent intense violence, sexual references, occasional profanity and much rough language, the U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

Videos

The following are home videocassette reviews from the U.S. Catholic Conference Office for Film and Broadcasting. Each videocassette is available on VHS format. Theatrical movies on video have a U.S. Catholic Conference classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating. All reviews indicate the appropriate age group for the video audience.

In light of the controversy surrounding the new ABC-TV fall series "Nothing Sacred," here's a sampling of movies now on video which have portrayed the lives of priests.

"Boys Town" (1938)

Sentimental but emotionally honest story of how Father Flanagan (Spencer Tracy) built his school for homeless and delinquent youths during the Depression. Directed by Norman Taurog, the Hollywood version centers in the conflict between the priest's charismatic powers of persuasion and a street tough (Mickey Rooney) who only thinks he's hard-boiled. Tracy's Oscar-winning performance was a credible blend of the idealistic and the pragmatic. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"The Devil at 4 O'Clock" (1961)

Turgid melodrama set on a small island near Tahiti where a convict (Frank Sinatra) helps a dyspeptic, worn-out priest (Spencer Tracy) save his flagging faith as well as the children in an isolated leper hospital after volcanic eruptions begin convulsing the island. Director Mervyn LeRoy sentimentalizes the flawed character of both priest and convict, then turns them into doomed heroes long after viewers have lost interest. Much menace and some sexual innuendo. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Fighting Father Dunne" (1948)

Inspirational tale of a Catholic priest (Patrick O'Brien) in 1905 St. Louis who starts a residence for homeless boys, then struggles to find adequate funding as his efforts expand in rehabilitating a growing number of youths, one of whom (Darryl Hickman) proves incorrigible. Directed by Ted Tetzlaff, the subject is certainly worthy but the result suffers from a bland sentimentality which wears thin today. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison" (1957)

Lightweight but good-natured World War II yarn in which a shipwrecked Marine (Robert Mitchum) washes up on a Pacific island, meets an Irish nun (Deborah Kerr) who had stayed behind to care for a dying priest and, when Japanese troops set up a base there, the two take refuge in a cave to await the arrival of the Navy. Directed by John Huston, the story centers on the friendship forged in harrowing circumstances between two people whose very different outlooks on life are the subject of much earnest discussion and some humor. Some wartime violence. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-I — general patronage. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

"I Confess" (1953)

Muddled thriller set in Quebec City, where a murderer (O.E. Hasse) confesses his crime to a priest (Montgomery Clift) who, bound by the seal of the confessional, refuses to answer certain questions of a police inspector (Karl Malden) and winds up on trial for the murder. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock from a play by Paul Anthelme, the situation is made all the more murky by involving a troubled woman (Anne Baxter) from the priest's youth but the suspenseful conclusion is handled with the director's usual flair. Stylized violence, menacing situations and romantic complications. The U.S. Catholic Conference classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. Not rated by the Motion Picture Association of America.

Catholic Musicians To Perform In An Evening Of Music, Prayer And Praise

CHARLOTTE — A tour featuring three popular Catholic musicians includes a scheduled stop in Charlotte for an Oct. 21 concert at St. Thomas Aquinas Church.

"The Table of Plenty Tour: An Evening with Catholic Musicians" features John Michael Talbot, Tony Melendez and Tom Booth. The Charlotte visit is one of 26 concert dates planned for the tour.

Talbot, whose experiences in the music world began 20 years ago, is also a nationally recognized author and speaker. His albums have sold more than one million copies, and his list of best-selling books includes "The Lover and the Beloved" and "The Fire of God."

Melendez has performed for Pope John Paul II, opened concerts for well-known Christian musicians and played before an audience of one million people. Physically challenged, Melendez is noted for his energizing abilities as a singer and guitarist.

In addition to his musical work, Booth is noted for his involvement with the Life Teen youth program, recognized throughout the United States for its vision of teen ministry. Like the other musicians involved in the tour, he hopes his work can touch the hearts of people of all ages.

General admission tickets for the Oct. 21 concert are $15 each. The show begins at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the St. Thomas Aquinas parish office, 1400 Suther Rd., and at Carolina Catholic Bookshoppe, 4410-F Monroe Rd. To order by phone, call (800) 521-0290.

try in the lives of the first generation of Christians.

Because Luke was also a serious historian, he prepared for his work by studying his sources carefully. In an exquisite prologue to his work he tells us he depended on "those who were eyewitnesses and ministers of the word." He decided, after "investigating everything accurately anew, to write it down in orderly sequence ... so that you may realize the certainty of the teachings you have received" (Luke 1:2-4).

Luke's purpose, then, was theological and historical, with his theology determining his selection and interpretation of events. Luke was a good historian, with an eye not just to recording events as he found them in his sources, but to discerning their significance.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Were you wondering whether you'd ever get to talk about the Bible with your child in a way that wouldn't feel awkward or sound like a lecture? So was I.

But my youngest daughter and I recently were presented a great opportunity to spend time with the Bible when her high school English teacher assigned the Book of Ruth.

When my daughter asked about Ruth, I quickly recalled some important points while simultaneously realizing I couldn't recall all the important points.

But I seized the moment, and we dove in.

We learned, for example, that Ruth, even when needy, always remembered the needs of others - like her mother-in-law. I find it noteworthy that in the weeks that followed, several very natural opportunities arose to talk further with my daughter about this key characteristic of people of faith.

Was my daughter bored by our foray into Scripture? I'd say she seemed intrigued by Ruth, who is a definite cut above many role models offered for youth consumption today.

And what did I learn from our experience? To be on the lookout for opportune moments to bring the people of the Bible into the conversation at home.

What do we need the Bible for?

St. Luke's "Acts of the Apostles is our primary source for the history of the primitive church," writes Scripture scholar Father John J. Castelot. Its overall message is "the good news of what God has done for humanity in Christ Jesus and, through the Holy Spirit, continues to do in Christ's faithful followers."

The Acts of the Apostles is our primary source for the history of the primitive church, but we must recognize that it was written by a theologian with a definite point of view.

In that view Jesus' career did not end with his ascension but continues in his followers' lives through the Holy Spirit's action.

Luke expresses his outlook in his ascension scenario, where the disciples are told: "But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit comes upon you, and you will be my witnesses ... to the ends of the earth" (Acts 1:8).

Acts, accordingly, is the story of the spread of the good news under the Holy Spirit's guidance.

A consummate artist, Luke portrays this profoundly spiritual reality in colorful tableaux, like the Pentecost scenario, conveying deeply spiritual realities. And his artistic flair led him to draw parallels between the lives of Christians and that of Christ.

Thus, just as Jesus was empowered by the Spirit at his ministry's beginning, so his followers are empowered at the beginning of theirs. Again, when the apostles are arrested they are arraigned before the same tribunal that tried Jesus.

The greater part of the Acts of the Apostles is devoted by Luke to St. Paul's amazing career, an account corroborated, in the main, by Paul's letters.

The overall message of Luke and Paul is the same: the good news of what God has done for humanity in Christ Jesus and, through the Holy Spirit, continues to do in Christ's faithful followers.

It is this message that is the important thing.

(Father Castelot is a Scripture scholar, author, teacher and lecturer.)

How much history does the Bible contain?

By Father Eugene LaVerdiere, SSS

The Bible takes history very seriously. It also takes faith very seriously.

Take, for example, how Luke introduces the ministry of John the Baptist:

"In the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, when Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea, and Herod was tetrarch of Galilee, ... and Lysanias was tetrarch of Abilene, ... the word of God came to John the son of Zechariah in the desert" (Luke 3:1-2).

There is no mistaking Luke's intention to situate John the Baptist in history.

There also is no mistaking Luke's intention to speak from the point of view of faith.

In an ordinary historical statement, the subject of the sentence would have been "John the son of Zechariah." It would have said: "In the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar, ... John the son of Zechariah appeared in the desert."

But in Luke's historical statement of faith, the subject is not "John the son of Zechariah," but "the word of God."

Luke's reference to "the word of God" transforms what could have been a mere historical statement into a faith statement.

In the Bible historical events are seen through the eyes of faith. In the Bible, nothing is an accident. God has a part in everything.

In the Bible every historical event is also a faith event.

God is revealed in history. Moreover, we respond to God from a historical vantage point.

In the Bible, there is no separating history from faith or faith from history. There is no separating temporal events from a God who is eternal.

The Bible views history very differently from the way the rest of the ancient world viewed it. In the Bible, history ultimately has meaning. We are invited to ponder that meaning through faith.

Outside the Bible, most people in the ancient world saw history as ultimately meaningless, with no rhyme or reason. Trying to account for events, ancient people spoke of fights among the gods or of gods getting together to amuse themselves with helpless humans.

The Bible also views history and faith differently than the modern world does. Today the tendency is to separate history from faith — not that modern historians are necessarily atheists. Some modern historians can be great persons of faith, but they tend to keep history and faith separate and equal.

"The historical books in the Bible are both fully historical and fully penetrated by faith. That does not mean every statement can be taken literally," explains Blessed Sacrament Father Eugene

LaVerdiere.

"We have to discern the literal from the figurative."

In some ways we Christians of the contemporary world are influenced by this point of view in which nature enjoys autonomy from God and history follows its own natural and social laws, not reflecting God's intention for the human race.

That explains why we contemporary Christians even ask how much history we find in the Bible and how much it matters.

For secular historians using the Bible as a historical resource, the questions are important. But pursuing their art, secular historians often find the Bible disappointing from a historical point of view.

In the same way, scholars belonging to the Jesus Seminar, applying secular historical methods to the New Testament, find meager pickings for all their work.

But there is more history in the Bible than meets a secular historian's eye. And in the books that present themselves as historical, everything, in some way, is historical. In the New Testament, that includes the Gospels and the Book of Acts.

What we have in the Bible is the history of salvation, not secular history. There is no history of salvation apart from faith.

The Bible is the word of God. It is also a human word. The Bible is the word of God in human words.

The question is not where the divine leaves off and the human begins. For every word is both fully human and fully divine.

The Bible is like Jesus, who is fully divine and fully human. The historical books in the Bible are both fully historical and fully penetrated by faith.

That does not mean that every statement can be taken literally. Like modern historians, the ancient writers who wrote the history of salvation used metaphors, symbolic and figurative language. Using the art of interpretation, we have to discern the literal from the figurative.

Writing through the eyes of faith, biblical writers had to stretch the meaning of words to the limit. For it is a challenge to speak of God and God's part in our human history, but that does not make it less historical.

The modern tendency is to rely on eyewitnesses. An eyewitness' report is considered primary evidence. But the story of Emmaus contains a salutary warning to that tendency (Luke 24:13-35).

The disciples of Emmaus are presented as eyewitnesses. The story assumes that they were present in Jerusalem and saw Jesus being condemned and crucified. They were also there afterward.

Having been there, they thought they really knew what had happened. Now Jesus showed them that they had no idea what really happened.

Jesus had to give them a lesson in salvation history and in interpreting events. Jesus does the same thing for us if we let him!

FAITH IN THE MARKETPLACE

How would you explain what the Bible is to a young child?

"I'd say it's the stories of Jesus' life, where he's trying to show us how to live and giving us help in our lives." — Cathy Fojtik, Victoria, Texas

"The Bible is the word of God, the rules, stories and examples God has given us to live by." — Bonnie Haegole, Alton, Ill.

"The important thing in explaining to a young child would be to say that the Bible is about the life of Jesus, how he lived it and how he wants us to follow his example."

The history of Grandmother Murphy

By Father W. Thomas Faucher
Catholic News Service

Grandmother Murphy's history was famous. As a young Irish girl, from a poor but good family, she had come around the horn of South America to San Francisco. By doing laundry and sewing she worked her way up to the mines of Idaho, met for the second time a young Irish trader she had known in California, married him and founded a dynasty.

In the pioneer days the priests and even the bishop lived at the Murphy home, and in her old age she was granted a special medal by the pope.

I saw her once when I was very young, and it was like seeing a living saint.

But when one of her great-granddaughters decided to do her college history thesis on Grandmother Murphy, another story unfolded.

Grandmother Murphy was the daughter of an unmarried mother raped by British soldiers. Grandmother came to San Francisco and worked in a brothel, getting pregnant herself.

After the baby was born she and her son traveled up to Idaho to find Mr. Murphy, the father, and force him to marry her. Only then did she begin a life of respectability.

Which "history" of Grandmother Murphy is true — the "actual facts" according to her great-granddaughter's account or the cherished story as Grandmother told it? (Of course, if some of the "actual facts" are wrong, Grandmother is no longer here to clarify things for us.)

Or should people combine the histories and know not only the "actual facts" of her life but the meaning her life came to have for her and for others?

Many historical parts of the Bible are like the history of Grandmother Murphy. There is one version that got printed, other versions that get hinted at, and all are part of a larger story. Added to the mix is divine inspiration.

Biblical history is not like modern history. An old professor of mine used to say, "Biblical history is true like funeral sermons are true. People want to hear a funeral sermon that lets the true reality of the person be understood, a reality that sometimes goes beyond the facts themselves."

When the Bible was written, reality was conveyed in a narrative that reached beyond the limitations of factualism. Also, reality was expressed artistically, as we have done on television where in the past only good guys wore white hats or today villains smoke cigarettes.

In biblical history Elisha goes to heaven in a gold chariot while his arch-enemy Jezebel is eaten by dogs. Are those "actual facts"? What we know is that the account makes perfect moral sense.

Is the Bethlehem star a "white hat" symbol or not? We know for sure that what the star conveys about the marvels of Jesus' birth is certainly true.

In reading the Bible, it is good to bear certain points in mind. For example, to understand the meaning of a line in the Bible, we need also to look at its surrounding lines. Taking lines out of context is risky. (As, for example: "Judas went out and hanged himself.... Go therefore and do likewise.")

Bear in mind also that every biblical author's purpose was to share the truth of God for the people of that time.

What is the truth about Grandmother Murphy? One thing is clearly true: A long life's journey led her to become a woman of great love who transformed many people.

Maryknoll Priest Honored For Efforts To Close Army School

MARYKNOLL, N.Y. (CNS) — Pax Christi USA has named Maryknoll Father Roy Bourgeois as the recipient of its peace award for his efforts to shut down the U.S. Army School of the Americas at Fort Benning, Ga. A Vietnam veteran and former missionary in Bolivia, the 57-year-old priest received Pax Christi's "Pope Paul VI Teacher of Peace Award" during the organization's Aug. 8-10 national assembly at The Catholic University of America in Washington. For more than six years Father Bourgeois has been leading fasts and nonviolent protests to close the school, which he has called the "School of Assassins" for training Latin American military officers later implicated in assassinations and human rights abuses.

Vermont Bishop Says Church Can't Allow Same-Sex Marriage

BURLINGTON, Vt. (CNS) — In the wake of a lawsuit to force Vermont to recognize same-sex unions as marriages, Bishop Kenneth A. Angell of Burlington said that "there can be no confusion" about the Catholic Church's opposition to that idea. "The church's position on marriage is absolutely, clearly defined as a 'faithful, exclusive and lifelong union between one man and one woman, established by God with its own proper laws,'" Bishop Angell said. "The church's opposition to same-sex marriage has also been vocally and adamantly stated." He commented on the issue July 23. The previous day three same-sex couples who were denied marriage licenses sued the state of Vermont and the towns of Milton, Shelburne and South Burlington for the right to marry.

Number Of Catholics Creeps Toward 1 Billion

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The number of Catholics in the world is creeping toward an official 1 billion, according to the Vatican's Central Office of Church Statistics. The newest edition of the office's "Statistical Yearbook of the Church" said the world's dioceses reported a Catholic population of 989.4 million. The statistics office estimated another 4.6 million live in China and North Korea, where government restrictions prevent reporting to the Vatican. The statistical yearbook, reflecting data valid for the year ending Dec. 31, 1995, came off the Vatican printing presses in early August.

69 Arrested At Pax Christi Protest Outside White House

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Pax Christi demonstration Aug. 9 in front of the White House observing the 52nd anniversary of the atomic bombing at Nagasaki, Japan, resulted in 69 arrests. All but one were arrested for demonstrating without a permit. A permit, which had been approved by U.S. Park Police, was revoked on the spot as demonstrators stopped moving and sat down on the sidewalk in the form of a cross. The 69th person was arrested for crossing a police line. Police took nearly three hours to arrest the demonstrators, who were released by evening. Among those arrested were three juveniles, two priests and at least 10 nuns.

Foes Of Assisted Suicide Say Governor Blurring Issue

PORTLAND, Ore. (CNS) — Opponents of doctor-assisted suicide say Gov. John Kitzhaber is blurring arguments surrounding the controversial issue, which this November comes up for a second vote. In early August, the Democratic governor, a former emergency room physician, told The Oregonian daily newspaper that he supports assisted suicide, even though he voted against 1994's Measure 16, which legalized the practice in the state. The governor cast assisted suicide as a matter of patient choice, saying he thinks it unethical to prolong a death. Suicide foes counter, saying that Oregon's Death with Dignity Act calls for ending a patient's life, not simply halting medical procedures.

Churches Host Backyard Bible Club

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

Correspondent

HICKORY — During the summer, most kids try to avoid school, but not three youths from St. Aloysius Church.

Shauna Durhman, Wes Keller and Sally Stone volunteered to be "teachers" for an ecumenical effort to bring Jesus to the "backyard" of underprivileged children. The program, "Hickory Youth Working Together, Backyard Bible Club," was the idea of Mark Menhinick, youth minister of First Baptist Church in Hickory, who invited area churches to participate.

St. Aloysius youth minister Marie Martino could not resist the opportunity to be a part of this ecumenical outreach, which also involved Resurrection Family Church and First Assembly of God, both in Hickory as well.

"When we bring Christ to the church and unchurched, we are doing mission work," said Martino, who recruited participants from St. Aloysius's current confirmation class. The activity will complete the service hours required before the students receive the sacrament.

More than 150 children from Hickory took part in the recent "Backyard Bible

Gigi Fraily, St. Aloysius youth volunteer and catechist, also assisted in the project. She attended the organizational meetings where the youths decided the grade they would teach. They also delegated the normal tasks associated with vacation Bible schools such as Bible lessons, crafts, recreation and refreshments. She and Martino shared suggestions and motivated the youths with their own enthusiasm.

"Often we think mission work has to be out of the country, but it's right here," said Fraily, who attributed the good attendance to the accessibility of the program, literally in the backyard of a low-income apartment complex. The privately owned facility on the outskirts of northwest Hickory is a multi-cultural community filled with more than 150 children. Some residents receive federal subsidies for rent. Many are also faced with the challenge of learning a new culture and language.

Wes Keller helped rally reluctant teen-agers from the complex to participate by inviting them to play soccer. He was surprised by all the opportunities to witness, even on the field. Keller also enjoyed teaching the Bible lesson to the first graders. "The reaction from the kids was great!" he said. "They really wanted to learn about Jesus and meet new people."

Valuable lessons were being taught not only by the volunteers willing to share their faith, but by the young children who were even more eager to learn it. In a young Hmong teen, the seeds of faith were planted. When asked what he learned, the youth replied with a huge smile: "God loves all colors. He loves me."

husband and I have gained a stronger and more independent sense of who we are. They are a reminder that what matters most is the person we grow up to be rather than the profession we choose.

As Teresa steps into her new world, I'll be stepping into mine. For both of us the possibilities of new beginnings will be endless. Each of us will be doing a lot more reading, writing and learning. She'll be in a new classroom and, thanks to my husband's hard work, I'll be in a newly refurbished home office. Still it's difficult to stop the ache that surfaces anytime I wonder how different my day will be without hearing her burst into song each time we hop into the car. My office may have a new look but I'll miss my old cheerful assistant who made me paper clip necklaces and ceremoniously put them around my neck. I will miss our lunch time walks around the block and the way her hand slipped so easily into mine. Most of all I'll miss all her hugs, kisses and expressions of love throughout the day.

Going off to kindergarten certainly doesn't represent the end of parenting, but anyone who's had a child go off to school knows that there's a seismic shift in a parent's relationship with a child once she is in school full-time. While I'm excited about the changes the year will bring in our family's life, I know that there will never be a time as sweet as these past seven years spent at home with my children.

During our vacation last week, Joe and I enjoyed watching the heart-warming scene of toddlers exploring the sand and sea. I asked him if he remembered what Teresa was like when she was a baby at the beach. We were both having difficulty remembering. Then I looked over at a baby sleeping peacefully under a beach umbrella. Her floppy sun hat hid most of her face except for the thumb locked securely in her mouth. I reached for Teresa who was burying my feet in the sand and plopped her on my lap. I pointed to the baby and told her that the baby reminded me of her when she was little. Teresa smiled and I started hugging her, kissing her and rocking her back and forth. For a few brief moments she was my baby again. "I don't want her to grow up," I thought. "I want her to be little forever."

Retrouvaille Brings New Life to Marriages

By REV. MR. NICK FADERO

The old cliché says: "Marriages are made in heaven." However, experienced married couples will tell you that it takes a lot of work to make marriages successful.

We may ask, "Why do so many marriages fail?" There are a variety of reasons, but essentially what happens is that couples stop working as a team. In many cases, husbands and wives become competitors, with one winning and one losing on every issue in their lives.

A study by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops shows divorce rates for Catholic women, ages 18-44, rose from 14.3 percent in the early 1970s to 35.6 percent in the late 1980s. Rates for non-Catholic women increased from 21.1 percent to 41.3 percent. Rates for African-American women increased from 42.5 percent to 57.9 percent, and rates for Hispanic women increased from 26.8 percent to 43.3 percent. Although Catholic women had the lowest divorce rates, the trend was up dramatically for all groups.

Couples who are married in the Church enter into a sacramental union. Those who continue their relationship and include God in their daily lives have much better marriages because they are better able to cope with life's ups and downs.

The Chicago Catholic reported the findings of a study related to church attendance, prayer and marriage stability. Researchers found that nearly one in every two marriages in the U.S. ends in divorce. However, among couples married in a church who continue to attend regularly, the figure drops to one in every 50. For couples who also have a prayer life at home, the number decreases to one in every 1,105. This is convincing evidence that families that pray together stay together.

The amount of marriage preparation a couple receives and their maturity at the time of their marriage are two important factors for marital longevity.

Couples learn far more about themselves and each other through programs like Focus and Engaged Encounter, in addition to the counseling they receive from a priest or deacon.

The Greek word "agape" best describes the true meaning of love — the kind that Jesus taught. "Love is the total dedication to the welfare of another, regardless of sacrifice or personal cost." When husbands and wives dedicate and commit themselves to their spouses in this way, the physical part of the marital relationship celebrates that love to its fullest.

Many couples who struggle to keep their marriages going have trouble communicating their feelings to one another and resolving conflicts as they arise. Over time, some marital relationships develop into no more than convenient living arrangements.

For couples who know their marriages need improvement but don't know how to do it on their own, "Retrouvaille" is a program available to help them get back on track. For marriages that have become unloving and uncaring; for relationships that have grown cold and distant; for couples who engage in little or no meaningful communication and feel only disappointment or even despair, "Retrouvaille" — rediscovery — can help.

A Catholic program open to all faiths, "Retrouvaille" emphasizes communication between husbands and wives. It consists of a weekend gathering and several follow-up sessions. The weekend session is not group therapy, a spiritual retreat, a sensitivity group, a seminar, or a social gathering. It is tough work for couples who want their marriages to be happy again. Maturity and commitment to one's marriage is important to each couple's success, but so is giving the program top priority in one's life. Children, jobs and outside activities all have to take a secondary role to achieve success.

Remember: God helps those who help themselves.

The next "Retrouvaille" program begins Oct. 17. For information, call Nick and Irene Fadero, (800) 470-2230 or (704) 544-0621.

One can assume, I believe, that no bishop would allow a Eucharistless service on Sunday unless a very serious reason prevented the people in that community from getting to Mass.

Such services may be offered instead of Mass, but they can never be a genuine substitute for it. There's a radical difference between the two. The duty to participate in the Mass does not transfer to a service without the eucharistic sacrifice.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about receiving the holy Eucharist is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Questions for this column should be sent to Father Dietzen at the same address.

German Catholic Leaders Applaud Upholding Of Law On Crucifixes

ROME (CNS) — Catholic Church leaders in Bavaria welcomed a ruling by the German state's constitutional court which upheld a law practically requiring the display of crosses in public school classrooms. On Aug. 1 the court rejected three challenges to the December 1995 law, which stated that crosses should be displayed in classrooms except where parents have made a formal complaint and school authorities have supported it. The challenges were brought by a coalition of civil rights activists, a group of nine state legislators and the parent of a 10-year-old student. They could appeal the ruling.

U.S. Cardinal Warns 'Right To Die' Will Become 'Duty To Die'

MOUNT ANGEL, Ore. (CNS) — If Oregon voters this fall again approve of legalizing physician-assisted suicide, the consequences of their action are dire, warned Cardinal George Basil Hume of Westminster, England. "If you give people a right to die, it soon will become a duty to die," said the cardinal, who was in Mount Angel for a summer family conference sponsored by the Benedictine community here. If the measure is again approved on the November statewide election ballot, he predicted an escalation of assisted suicide, identical to the proliferation of legalized abortion worldwide.

First Catholic High School To Open On Hawaiian Island

HONOLULU (CNS) — Fifty years of prayers were answered with the Aug. 4 opening of the first Catholic high school on the island of Kauai in the Honolulu Diocese. St. Francis School Kauai Campus, a satellite of the all-girls St. Francis School on Oahu, is also the first new Catholic high school in the state since Damien Memorial opened in Honolulu in 1962. The new school is coed, year-round and opened the academic year with grades nine and 10 and about 12 students. Grade 11 will be added next year and grade 12 the following year.

California Supreme Court Overturns State Parental Consent Law

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (CNS) — Legislative or constitutional initiatives may be necessary to reverse an Aug. 5 court decision overturning California's parental consent law. In a 4-3 vote the California Supreme Court stuck down the law, which required consent from a parent or approval from a judge before a minor could get an abortion. The court said the law violated the state constitution's right to privacy, which was approved by voters in a referendum in 1972. The parental consent law had been scheduled to take effect nine years ago, but was never enforced after it was blocked by a court order.

Church On Strikers' Side In UPS Dispute, Priests Say

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — The Teamsters' strike against United Parcel Service may have raised questions about its effect on the economy and the role of unions, but Catholic labor experts say there's no doubt about where the church stood on the most fundamental question — workers' rights. "Church teaching is quite clear. Workers have the right to organize and the right to strike," said longtime Washington labor activist Msgr. George Higgins. He said the UPS workers' strike was justified by concerns about job security, pension security and safety issues.

Twenty-One Catholic Schools To Receive Blue Ribbon Award

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Twenty-one Catholic elementary schools have been selected by the U.S. Department of Education to receive its Blue Ribbon Schools awards, the nation's highest honor presented to schools. The Catholic schools are among 262 public and nonpublic schools nationwide selected for the awards, which will be presented later this year. "These schools serve as an example of the excellence that Catholic schools contribute to our nation's educational system," said Robert Kealey, executive director of the elementary school department of the National Catholic Educational Association.

Mass. But by the late 1910s, locals began to host liturgies in their homes.

As the Catholic population in the area grew, such celebrations became more common, and families no longer traveled elsewhere for Mass as often. In addition to homes, a slowly growing congregation gathered for liturgies in a funeral home chapel, a courthouse and a washerette from time to time.

In the late 1930s, Bishop Eugene McGuinness of Raleigh founded and dedicated Rockingham County's first Catholic church, St. Joseph of the Hills in Eden. The Catholic community in Reidsville became a mission of Eden as a result.

Two decades passed before Reidsville Catholics began realizing plans for their own church facility. In 1960, land was purchased for a chapel. The present church resides on that same site.

A Connecticut couple, Mr. and Mrs. John Gaetano, donated funds for construction of the church. Other contributors added financial support, and building was underway. Mrs. Ashby Penn and Mrs. Felix Fournier gave the church tower and tower bell as gifts, and in June 1962 Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh dedicated the new Holy Infant Church.

Father Thomas Clements celebrated the parish's first midnight Christmas Mass in 1964, although the congregation did not have its first resident pastor until 1968. Father Edward O'Doherty, whom Bishop Waters had previously met at the Vatican II Council, held that designation. Father O'Doherty remained as pastor of Holy Infant Church until 1978.

The year 1972 was a significant one for the parish. Not only was Holy Infant incorporated into the newly formed Diocese of Charlotte, but it also welcomed a major expansion: Lufty Hall, a parish hall named for its primary benefactor, Napoleon Bonaparte Lufty.

In 1985, Mercy Sister Pauline Clifford became the diocese's first person other than a priest to be appointed to the administrative care of a parish. During her tenure at Holy Infant Church, the pastor of St. Joseph of the Hills assumed sacramental responsibilities for the Reidsville parish.

The Holy Infant community maintains a close relationship with St. Joseph of the Hills Church. Mercy Sister Bernadette McNamara is administrator of St. Joseph parish, and Father John T. Putnam Jr., parochial administrator in Reidsville, serves the Eden congregation through sacramental ministry.

A highlight of the Reidsville community's ministerial life has been the migrant ministry that was established in 1981 and continues today. With other parishes throughout the Greensboro Vicariate, Holy Infant Church provides weekly meals for the ever-increasing numbers of migrant farm workers.

Many Hispanics are making the area their permanent home as well, thus enhancing the continuing need for outreach. Holy Infant Church celebrates a Mass in Spanish every Sunday, and the parish hosts bilingual Christmas and Easter liturgies.

In addition to his work as sacramental minister in Eden, Father Putnam serves a community of 126 parishioners in Reidsville, where in 1997 Holy Infant parish celebrates the 35th anniversary of the dedication of its church.

Bishops, Young People Discuss Faith Experience In Paris

Above — Pope John Paul II blesses the estimated 1 million people who gathered at Longchamp race track near Paris for the final Mass of World Youth Day Aug. 24.

Inset — U.S. pilgrims to World Youth Day cheer as Pope John Paul II leaves Longchamp race track in Paris Aug. 23. They were among tens of thousands who waited overnight for a Mass the next day closing the worldwide youth gathering.

By MAUREEN LEONARD

PARIS (CNS) — Bishops, cardinals and young World Youth Day pilgrims asked questions and shared their faith experiences in several morning catechesis sessions held throughout Paris.

"Follow the voice of Christ," Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York told thousands of World Youth Day pilgrims who filled Sacred Heart Cathedral for one session.

He was speaking to youths at one of the catechesis sessions, conducted in different languages Aug. 20-22 and led by various cardinals and bishops from around the world.

"Jesus says to each of us, 'I know you can get weary and frightened along the way. I know there are times when you don't know which way to turn,'" Cardinal O'Connor said. "Jesus says 'Follow my voice, don't be afraid and I will bring you home.'"

Cardinal O'Connor addressed about 4,000 youths from several dioceses around Canada and the United States.

He recounted an experience he had while serving as a military chaplain several years ago.

"I was flying through a terrible fog, a very eerie feeling, like we were lost in the sky," he said. "We could land nowhere because of the fog, and we were running out of fuel."

The pilot had to send out a distress signal, the cardinal recalled.

"Suddenly we heard a strong, firm, unshaken, unseen voice that said, 'Don't worry, follow my voice,'" he said. "Isn't that what Jesus says to each of us?"

Another catechism session at the Paris Expo, a large convention center, was led by Archbishop Francis E. George of Chicago. He spoke with about 3,000 young people from Guam, United Arab Emirates, Philippines, Wales, Great Britain, Ireland and other countries.

David Fischer, 19, of St. Mary's Cathedral in St. Cloud, Minn., asked the archbishop what teens could do to spread the word of Christ and to make other people know about their church.

Archbishop George, admitting he was only half-joking, said: "Sometimes I think what we need to do is train bartenders and barbers and taxi cab drivers to talk about Jesus Christ. Those places where people talk is where we have to be."

"You don't beat somebody over the head" with your beliefs, he added.

During the catechesis with Cardinal O'Connor, loud cheers and applause erupted when it was announced from the altar that Pope John Paul II had landed in Paris.

Carlos Rosas of the Bronx told the congregation, "The last words I remember hearing from Pope John Paul II during World Youth Day in Denver (in 1993) were 'Be in prayer always and don't be afraid.'"

He said those words had a long-lasting effect on his life, and he asked the congregation, "What does it mean to be in prayer always?"

"To live a joyful life full of love is the answer," Rosas said. "If we share these qualities with other people, then we share life with them."

Kinan Ventura, 25, from Holy Cross Parish in the Bronx, also shared her thoughts about her Catholic faith.

"Think of the faces you have seen in the streets of Paris, in the churches or in the Eiffel Tower," she said. "How blessed you are to see the face of God during this World Youth Day."

She remembered her experience during the previous World Youth Day in 1995 in Manila, Philippines.

"I saw the awesomeness of our church. I realized the church is not just in my own community in the Bronx, but it reaches the four corners of the earth," she said. "I knew what it meant to be-

Pope Has No Plans For New Marian Dogmas

Pope John Paul II raises the host during Mass for the feast of the Assumption in Castel Gandolfo, Italy, Aug. 15.

By CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Despite continuing requests for Pope John Paul II to proclaim new Marian dogmas, a Vatican spokesman said no such proclamation is planned or even being considered.

"This is not under study by the Holy Father nor by any Vatican congregation or commission," Joaquin Navarro-Valls, the papal spokesman, told Catholic News Service Aug. 18.

The pope will not solemnly proclaim Mary "Corredemptrix" (Co-redeemer),

"It is always necessary...to safeguard the infinite difference existing between the human person of Mary and the divine person of Jesus."

"Mediatrice" (Mediator) and Advocate, Navarro-Valls said. "This is crystal clear."

Navarro-Valls made his remarks Aug. 18, after publication of a Newsweek magazine article reporting on the number of requests sent to the Vatican requesting that Mary be declared Co-redeemer.

At the Vatican's request, an international theological commission studied the question beginning in August 1996.

Its unanimous recommendation against such a move was published in early June by the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano.

"The response of the commission, purposefully brief, was unanimous and precise: It is not opportune to abandon the road marked out by the Second Vatican Council and proceed with the definition of new dogma," the newspaper said.

Marianist Father Johann Roten, who served on the commission, said Aug. 18, "We simply talked about the Co-Redemption at this point."

Father Roten, who heads the International Marian Research Institute at the University of Dayton, said the commission met two or three times in one week. He described it as "an impromptu consultation more than anything else."

He said he was not aware of any Vatican commission studying Marian dogma, but added if the pope were to make a declaration about Mary, he would be likely to appoint a more formal study commission.

In June, L'Osservatore Romano published lengthy commentary on the theological commission's response.

Father Salvatore M. Perrella wrote that the documents of the Second Vatican Council, Pope John Paul's 1987 encyclical "Redemptoris Mater" and his recent audience talks explain why the term "Co-Redeemer" has been avoided for 50 years in papal teaching.

They all point out "that no creature, not even by her active cooperation, can be named on the level with the Word of God in his particular redemptive function," said Father Perrella, a professor at Rome's Marianum Theological Faculty.

In September 1995, Pope John Paul began an exhaustive series of weekly audience talks on the Blessed Virgin Mary and her role in salvation history. He delivered the 59th installment of the ongoing series at his Wednesday audience Aug. 13.

The Vatican newspaper headline over the text of the 10th of his talks summarized a key point in the whole series: "Mary's place is highest after Christ."

During that Jan. 3 address, the pope said his series would sing the Virgin's praises, but in "the proper context."

"With regard to the measure and balance to be maintained in both Marian doctrine and devotion," he said, the Second Vatican Council "strongly urges theologians and preachers of the divine word 'to be careful to refrain ... from all false exaggeration.'"

"This exaggeration," the pope said, "comes from those who adopt a maximalist attitude which seeks to extend systematically to Mary the prerogatives of Christ and all the charisms of the church."

Pope John Paul seemed to rule out the new Marian dogmas when he said, "It is always necessary in Marian doctrine to safeguard the infinite difference existing between the human person of Mary and the divine person of Jesus."

At an audience in April, the pope said, "The church's teaching makes a clear distinction between the Mother and the Son in the work of salvation, explaining the Blessed Virgin's subordination — as cooperator — to the one Redeemer."

Contributing to this story was Barb Fraze in Washington.

In Interview, Pope Tells Young Catholics To Make A Better World

By LYNNE WEIL

ROME (CNS) — In a rare written interview with a French newspaper on the eve of World Youth Day, Pope John Paul II called on young Catholics to be active participants in the betterment of the world.

"I know that (the young) are often preoccupied by their professional future, that many of them have a hard time finding unity and sense in their lives," the pope told the French Catholic daily paper La Croix.

"(But) I expect them to mobilize their generosity, their intelligence and their energy to make the world more hospitable for all; that they put themselves at the service of the happiness and dignity of their brothers and sisters ... that they fully play an active and responsible role in the church and in society, (and) that they are convincing witnesses of the love of God."

During his pontificate, Pope John Paul has given only five other exclusive interviews; two of them were published as books.

La Croix said it received permission for its exchange with the pope only after several months of sustained contact with the Vatican Secretariat of State. Given the green light, five of the paper's editors submitted a number of questions in writing at the start of July. Pope John Paul handed them his written answers in a private audience Aug. 13.

The result was published a week later in the Paris-based La Croix. The French paper is also on sale in Rome.

Meanwhile, hundreds of thousands of young people from around the globe were gathering in Paris for World Youth Day, which the pope was to attend Aug. 21-24.

Young Catholics on a bridge over the Seine River form part of a 23-mile human chain encircling Paris Aug. 23 as part of World Youth Day.

"Young people carry within them an ideal of life," Pope John Paul said. "They thirst for happiness. By their progress and their enthusiasm, the young remind us that life cannot be simply a search for riches, for well-being or for honors."

In response to a question about Catholic faith in France, the pope said he was aware that the numbers of priests and religious had been dropping there, "but you should experience this impoverishment as a purification and, in a sense, a stimulant."

Pope John Paul said "there is no lack of signs of vitality" and that he had "confidence in the Catholics of France because they know their heritage well."

In a discussion of the state of religious belief in Europe, the pope noted that evangelization does not replace respect for individual conscience.

"Religious liberty is above all the reciprocal respect for the beliefs and religious practices of persons and of communities," he said.

"What is more, for a society to permit each person his own means to deepen his spiritual progress is a source of social development," Pope John Paul wrote, "because every person who develops his deeper self is, at the same time, attentive to his brothers."

Asked what message he would like to address to non-Catholic Christians in an increasingly pluralistic France, the pope pointed out that the Catholic Church was undertaking a program of "purification of memory" in anticipation of the year 2000, and that "to recognize the weakening of yesterday is an act of loyalty and courage which helps us reinforce our faith."

"Every Christian community is called to turn itself deliberately toward the future and to take concrete steps in the direction of communion and unity," the pope added.

On the subjects of globalization and nationalism, Pope John Paul said all of humanity has a common patrimony in that human beings were created in God's image, and they all seek liberty and dignity. He said it was natural for people to base their identities in their language and traditions, but this should not keep them from welcoming other cultural influences.

lieve in the one, holy, catholic and apostolic church. I left with a sense of pride that could fill this church of what it means to be a Catholic."

Later the gathering sang "We Are One Body," the theme song from World Youth Day in Denver, linking arms and waving state and Canadian flags as the catechesis session came to a close.

In an interview, David Melvin, 24, of Toronto, called the session "very enjoyable" and said it inspired him to share his faith with others.

"It has helped us to become a very spiritually minded group — talking, sharing our thoughts, and our beliefs," he said.

Jacob Hostetler, 16, of St. John's Parish in the Diocese of Cheyenne, Wyo., said the speeches were "very powerful."

"I am already more excited about my faith," he said.

Basia Wacinski, 23, of St. Peter's Parish in Greeley, Colo., said, "It's incredible and awesome that in this huge gathering and in Paris we can come together in unity and spirit."

The Pope Speaks

Pope John Paul II

Mary's Virginity An Example For All Christians, Pope Says

Dear brothers and sisters,

Continuing our catechesis on the Blessed Virgin Mary, we note that the Second Vatican Council affirms that the church, contemplating Mary's sanctity and imitating her example, "preserves with virginal purity an integral faith, a firm hope and a sincere love" ("Lumen Gentium," 64). This is precisely what St. Augustine refers to as "virginity of the spirit" ("Tractatus in evangelium Ioannis" 13, 12). Mary constitutes a special model of the chaste life lived out of love for the Lord. Thus, she inspires all Christians — young and old, married and single — to rediscover the body as the temple of the Holy Spirit and to respect its noble nature and purity.

"Virginity of the spirit" also means adhering to the faith in its integral fullness, resisting the temptation to accept only part of divine revelation or to give limited, personal interpretations to the word of God. Mary held fast, wholly and completely, to revealed truth. Through her intercession, the church herself will do likewise, ever walking the path of love in the light of faith.

I am pleased to extend special greetings to the English-speaking visitors present at today's audience, especially those from England, the United Arab Emirates, India, Pakistan, Japan and the United States. As I prepare to leave tomorrow for the World Youth Day in Paris, I ask your prayers for this important event. Upon all of you I invoke the grace and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Pope Says He Will Declare St. Therese A Doctor Of The Church

PARIS (CNS) — Pope John Paul II said that for the first time in his 19-year pontificate, he will proclaim a doctor of the church: St. Therese of Lisieux. "Therese's teaching, a true science of love, is the luminous expression of her knowledge of the mystery of Christ and of her personal experience of grace," the pope said, announcing at World Youth Day in Paris that he would make the formal proclamation at the Vatican Oct. 19, World Mission Sunday. The French saint, known as "the Little Flower," will become the 33rd doctor of the church and the third woman to be recognized with the title in honor of her holiness and the influence of her teaching on spirituality in the church today.

The Prison Industry Is Booming

One of the saddest stories of the 1990s will be how the United States dealt with the nation's fear of crime. We simply incarcerated more and more people, built more prisons and never bothered to publicize the fact that more than half of these prisoners are doing time for crimes that involve no violence toward another.

More than half of those currently in prisons are there because they were convicted of a drug-abuse crime. Less than 1 percent of inmates are there for murder.

And here's one more statistic that needs reflection: An African-American man is seven times more likely to go to prison than a white man. Does this say something about race or about our criminal justice — injustice — system?

The boom in prison building is great for politicians. They can give speeches on how hard they are on criminals.

I know this subject is touchy for most people. Some will conclude that I am "soft" on crime. Not true.

I am a student of the criminal-justice system, having done much research on jails and prisons. I have been to many of these places, and I have met many prisoners. I correspond with some serving time.

I have seen that prisoners have sensitivities, feelings, and I believe many can learn from their mistakes and be redeemed.

I have also been the victim of the worst crime that can hit a family — the murder of loved ones. I believe that murderers should serve a life sentence, depending on the circumstances of the crime. I am not "soft" on violent criminals. I want them punished.

But we've seemed to gloss over the fact that the majority of convicts are not violent. Now, sadly, they are in a place where they can be subjected to brutality and learn how to become violent themselves.

As Ann Landers wrote in one column: "Many prisons not only do nothing to discourage crime; they are 'graduate schools' where neophytes learn the real tricks of the trade. I welcome suggestions on what can be done to cure this sick and costly problem."

The National Crime Survey compiled data showing that there has been no significant increase in crime in the past 20 years, yet the incarceration rate has tripled! The escalation in prison building is the fastest growing industry in the country and I think we have to ask "Why?"

There's big money involved here, as last year's convention of the American Correctional Association showed. The New York Times reported that this was the world's largest prison trade show, with "more than 600 booths touting the very latest in prison innovation and technology." So many are profiting!

We also have to ask what gets shut out when big money is allocated by a state for more prisons. Last year New York Gov. George Pataki requested $650 million to build more prisons. Yet the state made cuts in needed human services that might prevent young people from turning to crime: education, drug treatment, family support, child care, mental health and job training. Doesn't anybody care?

Building more prisons does nothing to discourage crime. What we urgently need is more concern and help for non-violent people who get in trouble for using drugs and doing petty crime.

Our humanity demands that we stop thinking of prisoners as "human garbage," a terrible term I have heard many times. For they, too, are children of God. We cannot simply discard them.

Father Thomas J. McSweeney

On Being Human And Human Doing

"When You Stop, You Die." That's the unequivocal title of Tom Cottle's Commonweal article on the human toll of unemployment that appeared a few years back.

A forty-seven-year-old former manager of a small tool company told Cottle: "There's only two worlds: either you work every day in a normal nine-to-five job with a couple of weeks vacation, or you're dead! There's no in-between....Working is breathing. It's something you don't think about; you just do it and it keeps you alive. When you stop, you die."

What's really sad is that this man is not unusual.

William J. Byron, S.J., looked at the lives of men and women in mid-career who had lost their jobs in his book Finding Work Without Losing Heart. He discovered that most people cannot rebound quickly because they feel that they, not their jobs, have been terminated.

That's particularly true here because of what he calls "the great American heresy: What you do is what you are." If you find yourself doing nothing, you conclude you are nothing. For some, termination of employment translates into self-termination. Byron believes that too many individuals "forget that they are a human being, and think and act as if all they have ever been is a human doing."

Peter Maurin, who co-founded the Catholic Worker movement, said that "Labor is related to thought and thought is a spiritual faculty, not a commodity." But where does that leave workers who feel more like a human resource than a human?

The Industrial Age brought with it the image of workers as cogs in a wheel. These days, microchips in a computer might seem more appropriate considering the changes the new technologies have wrought. Some are as useful as they are amazing, but are you supposed to be happy that your boss can call you while you are driving home or beep you while you're at the park with your kids?

With Labor Day coming up, let's reflect on the importance of distinguishing between ourselves and our jobs through an exercise: Whether or not you currently have a job, imagine yourself looking for a job. Write a simple statement of who you are without reference to what you do, have done, or may do.

Then write a more extensive work biography. Include descriptions of what you have done. When you have both, cull from the personal values and principles that are yours whatever you do, the wisdom you have gained that becomes a window of your inner self. You will find that in a certain sense, you are what you value. You will also discover that you do not have to define your potential in terms of on-the-job achievements alone. When we see ourselves strictly in relation to our occupations, we tend to develop a blind spot to the unexplored opportunities in our lives where skills and experience can fulfill our humanity and our human values.

Work is important, but it is only one of many ways we can express the highest values of the human spirit. It might be worth remembering something Indian poet Rabindranath Tagore wrote: "God respects me when I work, but He loves me when I sing."

The Goal of Healthy Spiritual Maturing

Q. We've had many arguments with our teen-age daughter about going to Mass, but she has always gone with us. Recently she was confirmed, says she can now make up her own mind about it and has decided not to go.

It's not that important, according to her, because she was never taught any such obligation in her weekly religion classes. I do know the director of these classes is opposed to "legalism." Do you have any insights that would help?

A. First, even if she didn't hear about an obligation to participate in Sunday Eucharist from anyone else, which I doubt, she certainly heard it from you.

It seems your daughter may be simply experiencing some not uncommon spiritual growing pains of adolescence.

Being "opposed to legalism" can have many meanings, some of them good and some not so good. On the not-so-good side lies the spiritual crippledness of doing things solely out of legal obligation when we should be doing them eventually from inner convictions.

As children we may well view attending Mass and other obligations as something we ought to do because someone — parent, teacher, priest — says so.

As we grow through adolescence into adulthood, however, actions that flow from faith need to be more and more internalized until they become part of ourselves.

This process includes much reflection, questioning, asking reasons, even expressing disagreement with some points. Ultimately, making our faith something inside, part of our personality, is the goal of healthy maturing.

Particularly is this true of our sharing in the Sunday eucharistic sacrifice. It is part of church law now, of course. But the church had no such rules at all for many centuries; it was simply taken for granted that, if peoples' Christian faith was genuine, they would be there.

Father William Sherzer puts it well in his entry in the New Catholic Encyclopedia. Church law in this matter, he says, is more a reminder of this obligation than the cause of one.

Sharing in the Eucharist is rooted in filial love of the Father, the virtue of gratitude and the spiritual needs of the Christian life. "It is more like the need to eat than a duty arising only from positive law" (13:788).

Maybe you can help your daughter look at Mass a little more from this adult perspective, rather than as a younger child whose sense of responsibility arises only from rules and laws.

A free brochure answering questions Catholics ask about cremation and other funeral regulations and customs is available by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Father John Dietzen, Holy Trinity Church, 704 N. Main St., Bloomington, Ill. 61701.

Spirituality for Today

Father John Catoir

How Many People Are Holy?

In a video presentation about Mother Teresa of Calcutta, a reporter called out to her: "Mother, some people think you're a living saint. How do you feel about that?"

Without missing a beat she replied, "You, sir, have to be holy in your position just as you are, and I have to be holy in the position God has put me in. So it is nothing extraordinary to be holy. Holiness is not the luxury of the pure. Holiness is a simple duty for you and me. We have been created for that."

What a marvelous answer. She defused the question without appearing to be boastful and stated a simple fact. We are all called to be holy, and by virtue of the Holy Spirit living in us we are indeed holy.

This is what is meant by the term "the common holiness of the faithful."

The reporter asked a good question, but Mother Teresa refused to be drawn into a self-analysis. If he had more time he might have asked, "What is your definition of 'holiness,' Mother?"

Her answer to this question is just as simple. Holiness is God in us. Holiness is allowing God to use us as instruments of his love.

Of course, you and I know that some people, by the grace of God, are better instruments than others, but the essential ingredient, that is, the Holy Spirit, is there in every baptized soul.

The word "holiness" is derived from the Anglo-Saxon word "halig" or "hal," meaning whole and healthy. The English word "hale" (hale and hardy) comes from this root. Over the years it has acquired a religious significance coming to mean "one who is spiritually healthy, whole, well-integrated." A person who is heavenly minded is aware of God's presence in a way that is not self-conscious.

Consequently, there are many more holy people than we might imagine. Since all the baptized have the Holy Spirit in them, and since most Christians are aware of God's presence in them, they possess a kind of ontological holiness. If they are not yet saints they are at least saints in training.

Jesus is the perfect model of holiness. Compared to him we are all woefully inadequate.

The Little Flower dealt with this inferiority problem in a most creative way. She knew that compared to Jesus she was nothing and could do nothing, but she always had the good sense to pray with humility.

"Dear Lord, I will never be able to love my neighbor as you love her, but you Lord living in me can love her for me." She just delegated her inadequacies away.

The word "sacred" is less important than the word "holy." Sacred things derive their sanction from human institutions. Churches are sacred places, church vestments are sometimes called sacred, but never holy.

Only people are holy because they are filled with the Holy Spirit. The Scriptures are holy because they contain the word of God and produce the fruits of the Holy Spirit.

Mother Teresa named her community Missionaries of Charity. It captures perfectly the vocation of everyone who is called to be another Christ.

Holiness is everyone's vocation.

Third Order Franciscans Gather In Hickory

By KATHY SCHMUGGE

HICKORY — By his imitation of Christ, St. Francis, a humble man dressed in a worn woolen garment tied with rope, inspires new generations of Franciscans with a message for all Christians: "Hear these words of our Lord Jesus Christ, in a spirit of humility and love, putting (them) into practice with all gentleness, observing them perfectly."

Eight centuries after his death, St. Francis of Assisi continues to attract followers by his example of living the Gospel. Recently his influence was seen by participants of the Third Order Franciscans during the annual Regionalization Meeting Aug. 8-10 at the Catholic Conference Center. Sixty-seven Secular Franciscans representing 21 of the fraternities in the region came together recommitting themselves to St. Francis' rule of life — something he not only taught but lived.

Third Order Franciscans, a lay community of single or married men and women, are part of the "Franciscan family," a Christian family which adheres to St. Francis' example.

"We were introduced to the fraternity early in our marriage. We were impressed by the fact that St. Francis truly lived the Gospel with the motto, 'Gospel to life,'" said Bill Brockhoff, one of the region's local leaders. Arriving in North Carolina in 1954, Brockhoff was unable to connect with a fraternity until 1991, when the Fraternity of Brother Francis was founded at the Catholic Conference Center. He described the years without a fraternity like being in a desert and his new affiliation like a long-awaited oasis.

"At all the Franciscan gatherings, I have experienced the presence of the Holy Spirit. It is something which is hard to explain. You just have to experience it," said Ed Campbell, region minister.

This year, for the first time, Campbell invited a national formation team to present a workshop for the attendees during their annual meeting. Franciscan Father Richard Trezza from the Assumption Friary in Woodridge, N.J., and Secular Franciscans Therese and Dave Ream from Kirksville, Mo., composed the team. They lead several sessions designed to help fraternities with "formation," a continuing process where a fraternity member deepens his or her relationship with God and others.

Therese Ream shared events that occurred during a recent trip to Assisi with the group. During a Mass in Porziuncola, she was called to reflect on St. Francis' love for the Eucharist, which she urged others to do.

During a homily, Father Trezza challenged the fraternities to be like St. Francis and St. Clare. "Francis and Clare mimicked the Lord Jesus. In a real way they have shown us the Father. They stood, as each of us should today, in sharp contrast with the world, in all its preoccupation with things of the world," he said.

The fraternities also shared their activities and information regarding other members. One group proudly reported that a member of their fraternity has recently decided to become a Franciscan priest. "We gain strength by coming together for friendship and sharing with one another," Campbell said, adding that the fellowship has resulted in life-long friendships and even marriage.

"This meeting was a shot in the arm for me. I felt a rejuvenation of my commitment as a Franciscan," added Karen Dellinger of the St. Maximilian Kolbe Fraternity in Charlotte.

In the United States, there are approximately 20,264 professed Third Order Franciscans and 804 canonically assembled fraternities. Throughout the world, the number of professed members is about 435,000, according to statistics from the International Fraternity Council. The Brothers and Sisters of St. Francis Region Fraternity, which met in Hickory, represents fraternities from Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee. Campbell, also a member of the Channel of Peace Fraternity in Tennessee, works to unite all the individual or "local" fraternities which make up his region, serving as the bridge to the national fraternity. Each local fraternity has its own name and council which is made up of an elected minister, vice minister, treasurer, secretary, and the non-elected position, director of formation and spiritual assistant. Local ministers for fraternities within the Charlotte diocese are: Helen Turek, Arden area; Don Dellinger, Charlotte; Sharon Edwards, Franklin; Peake Dana, Hendersonville; Frank Massey, Greensboro; Bill Brockhoff — Hickory/Newton; and Frank O'Neil, Winston-Salem.

During a break, Vincent Malloy of the Sacred Heart Fraternity in Columbia, S.C., and Bill Brockhoff of the Fraternity of Brother Francis in the Foothills discover they have more in common than being Third Order Franciscans. Both also lived in Ohio for some time.

Annual Parish Stewardship Day Set for September

CHARLOTTE — The annual Parish Stewardship Day is scheduled for Sept. 12 or 13 at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory. The event is intended to be an inspiring and informative celebration of the planned, proportionate giving of time, talent and treasure in return for God's many gifts.

Local and national proponents of stewardship as a way of life are scheduled to speak at the event offered twice for participants' convenience. As elsewhere in the country, stewardship has become a priority for many in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Stewardship is not a 'program' — it is a way of life," says Barbara Rohrman, associate director of development for the Charlotte Diocese. "It is a way of responding to Jesus' call to discipleship."

Guest speakers will focus on stewardship through various elements of parish life.

Presenting the keynote talk on the connection between stewardship and the Eucharist is Msgr. James T. Telthorst, rector of St. Louis Cathedral in St. Louis, Mo. Msgr. Telthorst holds a bachelor's degree in philosophy from Cardinal Glennon College and a master's degree in liturgical studies from the University of Notre Dame. He serves as a part-time instructor at Aquinas Institute and Paul VI Institute.

Father George Kloster, pastor of St. Michael Church in Gastonia and a guiding force in stewardship efforts, will discuss the importance of promoting stewardship in the parish setting.

St. Michael Church has produced a video, "Like a Mustard Seed," highlighting the life of a steward.

Pat Signs, director of development for the Savannah Diocese, will speak on creating, nurturing and maintaining the parish stewardship committee. This session is deemed especially vital to those parishes interested in establishing a stewardship effort.

The issue of promoting stewardship among children and youth will be addressed by Rohrman.

The session includes round-table discussions providing opportunities for sharing parish stewardship experiences and getting new ideas on such topics as coordinating time and talent volunteers, parish tithing committees, and stewardship education for children, youth and adults.

The registration fee for the 1997 Parish

Stewardship Day is $15 per person and includes materials, lunch and refreshments. The deadline for registration is Sept. 4. To register or for more information, call Barbara Rohrman, (704) 331-1710.

"When stewardship is promoted in the parish," Rohrman says, "the resulting fruits often include an increase in prayer life, Scripture reading, Mass attendance, parish and community outreach, parish volunteers and offertory."

"When we understand our role as stewards of God's many gifts, we tend to use our gifts of time, talent and treasure for the greater glory of God."

Remember His Will In Yours.

Diocese Welcomes Four New Principals

Students at four Catholic schools in the Diocese of Charlotte were greeted by new principals when classes began for the 1997-98 year.

In Hendersonville, James Erdman took over as head of Immaculata School; Kathleen Miller is the new principal at Sacred Heart School in Salisbury; Georgette Schraeder is principal of St. Leo School in Winston-Salem. At St. Patrick School in Charlotte, Janice Ritter will lead the administration.

James Erdman

James Erdman is no stranger to Catholic education.

The Wisconsin native attended Catholic grade school and high school before heading off to the University of Wisconsin where he obtained a bachelor of science degree in education; Erdman later earned a master's degree from Western Carolina University in Cullowhee.

Erdman spent the past 22 years in elementary and special education. Most recently, he was a fourth grade teacher in the Asheville City Schools system.

"I made the change to a Catholic school because of the emphasis on Christian values and the family," he said.

At Immaculata, Erdman will oversee a pre-kindergarten through eighth grade program that serves 200 students. "Our goals include working on our middle school program and improving extracurricular activities," he added.

The Erdmans have two sons, Carl, 12, and Michael, 10. They are members of St. Eugene parish in Asheville.

Kathleen Miller

Kathleen Miller's journey to the Catholic schools system in the Diocese of Charlotte is proof that perseverance pays off.

The educator had been looking to further her career for "quite a while" when the principal's position opened up at Sacred Heart School in Salisbury.

"It was almost like it was meant to be. One day I picked up The Catholic Virginian, our diocesan newspaper, and there was an advertisement for Salisbury," she said. "Within a week, I had a new job."

Miller, who spent the past 18 years as a special education teacher in Virginia, attended Catholic schools as a youngster in San Antonio, Texas. A graduate of Old Dominion University, she earned a bachelor of arts degree in special education and a masters in education with emphasis on the learning disabled. She later obtained certification in administration/supervision.

The principal comes to the pre-kindergarten through eighth grade school with clear-cut goals for her 257 students.

"I believe in career education. We need to educate middle schoolers so when they get to high school they know what career they want to pursue and can take the appropriate courses," she said. "We must also teach students to be responsible for their actions and share their gifts and talents."

She and her husband have two sons, Jason, 17, and Jeremy, 16. The Millers are members of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury.

Georgette Schraeder

Georgette Schraeder is eager to tackle the challenges that come with leading a school.

"I will need to be even more creative (in this position)," said the new principal at St. Leo School in Winston-Salem. "There will be more people to love and care for and to help grow."

Schraeder, who is beginning her 20th year as an educator, most recently taught eighth grade at Our Lady of Grace School in Greensboro. She was also teacher representative on the diocesan school board and formation director for

Religious Formation Office Enhances Mission

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Mercy Sister Maureen Meehan expresses excitement when discussing the new school year. Not only does she look forward to young people across the diocese growing in knowledge and faith, but she is optimistic that a recently launched instruction program will assist teachers in their role to make Catholicism more alive in students' hearts and minds.

Religion teachers across the diocese met in mid-August for an "in-service day," the first of several developmental tools sponsored by the office of religious formation through its new Catholic Identity Faith Formation program.

"The program was developed as one response to last year's 'Report on Catholic Identity,' a study conducted by Father James Hawker (diocesan vicar for education)," says Sister Maureen, diocesan director of religious formation for schools.

"His studies found that there was a need for updating teachers in passing down the Catholic heritage to their students."

Father Hawker's report, conducted during the 1996-97 school year, stressed the importance of instructing students according to diocesan and national standards in light of the new Catechism of the Catholic Church. His findings led Sister Maureen to explore the levels of certification and preparation of teachers within all 17 of the diocese's elementary and high schools.

"I reviewed the school records from 1992 to the present, met with our school principals and attended faculty meetings at our schools," Sister Maureen says. "These events convinced me of the need for a formal certification program of religious instruction for all of our teachers, especially those teaching the religious curricula."

Early this year, Sister Maureen presented a plan to school principals including three levels of instruction: two introductory levels exploring catechetical methods and theological studies, and a more detailed level focusing on understanding and conveying the tenets of the faith.

In March, the office of religious formation revised diocesan standards for teachers' formation to more closely mirror the guidelines prescribed by the United States Catholic Conference Commission on Certification and Accreditation (USCC/CCA), the American bishops' official developmental agent for Catholic school teachers.

"These certification standards are intended to bring recognition and consistency to a professional church ministry that has steadily developed in the 30 years since the Second Vatican Council," says Sister Maureen.

She deems the program to be a collaborative one involving the efforts of the USCC/CCA, the National Conference of Catechetical Leadership, and a diocesan advisory committee composed of catechists, principals and faculty.

Teachers received a letter in April outlining the program. At the in-service day, conducted at six sites on Aug. 12-14 and Aug. 19, educators from 15 schools took the first step toward updated certification. Three sessions examining on the spirituality of the educator, Biblical studies and faith development provided opportunities for teachers to analyze methods of instruction through discussion, Scripture, media resources and visual aids.

Upcoming events include a principals' retreat in mid-September featuring guest speaker Dr. Elinor Ford of the National Catholic Education Association, an in-service day in October focusing on the sacraments, and sessions in October and November examining various elements of the church — its history, its catholicity, its spirituality.

Sister Maureen says the program, which will be a primary focus of the religious formation office during the next three years, is grounded in the belief that students and teachers are gifted through baptism to be active participants in the life of the church.

"The faith life of a child is an ongoing celebration of the life of Christ," she adds. "And as they grow older, they begin to question. That's fine, but we have to have the answers to give them."

"The greatest tool within the classroom is the teacher," she says. "Our educators have so many ways of helping students along in their journey of faith — through our sacramental life, our liturgies, our celebration of holy days. By better recognizing their Catholic identity, this becomes a formation process for our teachers, too."

the Secular Franciscans in Greensboro.

The Indiana native attended Catholic schools in Ft. Wayne and obtained a bachelor's degree in Biology Education from St. Mary-of-the-Woods College. She earned a master's degree in junior high/middle school education from Ball State University, and later obtained her administrative certification from UNC-Greensboro.

As for goals, the principal wants St. Leo's to continue to maintain its identity. "The school's history and tradition are important," she said.

St. Leo currently serves 285 students in its pre-kindergarten through eighth grade program, but Schraeder knows that could change. "Regionalization of schools (in the Triad) is a big issue," she added. "I want to help make sure (that whatever is decided upon), those plans are fulfilled."

Schraeder and her husband have three sons, Abraham, 16, Anthony, 14, and Al, 12. They are members of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro.

Janice Ritter

Janice Ritter knew she would always return to Catholic schools.

"I attended Catholic schools from kindergarten through graduate school," she said. "Since I had spent so many years in Catholic schools, I knew I would eventually go back."

The New York native obtained a bachelor's degree in fine arts and a master's of science in early childhood education from the College of New Rochelle. She also later earned her administrative certification from UNC-Charlotte.

Ritter, who is a 23-year veteran of education, moved to Charlotte with her family in 1988. She spent the past nine years at Sharon Elementary School, eight as a teacher and the final one as a teaching assistant principal.

At St. Patrick's, the principal will oversee a kindergarten through fifth grade program that serves 380 students. Ritter hopes to help the school move ahead into the next millennium. "I would like to keep the traditional values and move forward with the technology our children need for the future," she said.

In her short time at St. Patrick's, Ritter has noticed a difference in public versus Catholic education. "There is more of a family atmosphere at a smaller school like St. Patrick's where you can really get to know the children and parents," she noted.

The Ritters have three sons, G.P., 22; David, 18; and Keith, 14. They are members of St. Ann parish in Charlotte.

We are Partners in Learning

By MICHAEL SKUBE
Superintendent of Schools

Catholic schools are an investment in time, talent and effort by hundreds of teachers and staff with the support of pastors, parents and parishioners.

First and foremost, our schools are unique — they're Catholic. They're not private, nor are they public. Like those educational institutions, our schools are called to prepare students for the future. But, unlike those institutions, our schools are committed to shaping the future by helping students understand fully, accept freely and live faithfully the Gospel message found in the teachings of Jesus and the Catholic Church.

Catholic schools are based on a framework of values brought forth in the concept of message. Overall, that message is that students, parents and teachers form a partnership with the church and become "Partners in Learning."

Parents are the primary educators of their children. They can find assistance in fulfilling that responsibility in their partnership with the Catholic school. As educators of their children, parents have a right and should be involved in preparing and assisting in the implementation of school directions and activities.

The primary basis of Catholic schools is the religious formation of students. The role of the school is not only the moral education and formation of values of its students, but an obligation to further the development of the whole child. The role of the church and school is to offer norms and guidelines to assist the student's moral decision-making and behavior. Students must see school as an academic center of learning based on common values such as: self-discipline, compassion, responsibility, friendship, work ethic, courage, perseverance, honesty, loyalty, determination, generosity and stewardship.

The moral atmosphere of the classroom is composed of everything that happens within its walls. Teachers and staff establish a classroom community characterized by trust, care and openness. The classroom community supports growth and the development of moral interaction as it is called into use when students work, play and worship together. Students are to be helped to develop a sense of dignity, freedom and hopefulness. Teachers expect students to learn and to succeed.

Our principals, teachers and support staff look upon their work with students as ministry. They continually strive to better serve the students of today and tomorrow. Through the students, they touch the future — and eternity.

Gaining Perspective During The Teen Years

By AMY WELBORN

In the rocky journey toward adulthood, one of the most tempting detours is the one under the sign marked "But ..."

You can fill in the blank.

"I know I was rude, Mom, but you were rude, too. You started it. You kept nagging at me."

"I didn't understand the reading, but it was just too hard, anyway, and the teacher's supposed to explain things."

"I want to get all my work done, but I'm just too upset about my boyfriend."

It's the last category of excuses that really interests me.

As a teacher, I hear it on a weekly basis, along with the whispered plea, "Jenny's late to class because she's in the bathroom crying. Could I go make sure she's OK?"

One of my male students once reflected, in a puzzled tone of voice, "Why is it that every day there are sophomore girls crying in the hall?"

Who knows.

Adolescence is a rough time.

Someone said, "Your teen years are the best years of your life." I don't know who that person is, but I would be very frightened to meet him or her.

My own memories of my teen-age years are marked mostly by emotions of fear, anxiety, and deep confusion about who I was.

Most of the teens I know seem to feel the same way.

Every day is filled with ups and downs, triumphs and tragedies which are exaggerated in their effect because teens just don't have the life experience to understand that this, too, shall pass.

It's called perspective.

A 35-year-old who has been through a couple of broken hearts and several dating relationships has experienced the healing power of time and the sense of being able to look back and see how everything works out for the best, how we can bring positives out of negatives.

A 14-year-old can't see that.

And it shows.

In the tears, the distractibility, the temptation is to just stop everything in your life in order to wallow in emotion.

"I'm too upset. I can't come to class."

"My parents are going through hard times. I can't do any work at home."

Well, those situations are tough, but you're not in kindergarten anymore. The teacher can't take you aside, dry your tears and give you a lollipop to make it all better.

After all, when you're in the work world, are you going to be able to rush out of a meeting because you need to go to the bathroom and cry because you got stood up last night?

Is your boss going to accept a late report because your mind was on family problems?

Are you going to be able to be late to work every day because you have to work things out with a spouse or talk with a friend about a difficult situation?

No.

You'll have to buckle down, swallow hard and be professional.

It's not easy, because sometimes whatever pain you have seems to fill up so much space in your brain, there's no room for anything else.

But if you want to be a responsible adult, you have to try.

Life goes on. Excuses or not, life does go on.

Catholic Education Needed Today As In Jesus' Day

By GARY LONCKI

ERIE, Pa. (CNS) — Like the crowd depicted in the sixth chapter of Mark's Gospel, people today are like sheep without a shepherd in need of values offered by a Catholic education, Bishop Donald W. Trautman said Aug. 13.

The bishop — in a talk to pastors, principals and religious educators in the diocese — said today's crowd would include families without a father, the sick without a doctor, students without a teacher, young people without a role model and crowds without a leader.

According to the bishop, the Gospel says Jesus pitied the crowd, in which he sensed a hunger for inspiration and direction. Jesus responded to their needs by teaching them at great length, a ministry which continues today through Catholic education.

"The Catholic school and religious education program help students know Christ and make his message a way of life," said Bishop Trautman in an address at St. Mark Catholic Center in Erie.

The bishop helped kick off the annual Catholic Education Collection to be taken in parishes Sept. 20-21. The collection helps raise money for parish religious education programs, the diocesan Religious Education Endowment Fund and The Catholic University of America in Washington.

In his talk, the bishop said secular education was incomplete. "Knowledge without virtue is empty, even dangerous," he said. "Our culture needs Catholic schools and religious education programs, which are an extension of Christ, the teacher."

"We are involved in a quest for people's minds and hearts and souls," the bishop said. "To live and only superficially know Christ is a waste of a person's life."

The bishop said secular society has compromised today's family values. But, he said, Catholic schools and religious education programs can provide the values so needed by our culture.

"If we want our society, our faith, our families to survive, we must teach these Gospel values," he said.

Education, he said, is the church's most important ministry. "Save and strengthen our Catholic schools and religious education programs and you save and strengthen individuals," he said. "You save the individual and you save the family. You save the family and you save this country."

BMHS Theology Department Welcomes Two New Members

WINSTON-SALEM — Two members have joined the staff of the Bishop McGuinness High School theology department for the new school year. Loretta Bedner and Ruth Fleming join current theology faculty members Tony O'Meara and Rev. Mr. Tom O'Connell.

In addition to teaching, Bedner will serve as department chair, and Fleming will be the director of campus ministry.

Bedner holds a bachelor of arts degree in secondary education and a master's in theological studies. She taught at John Carroll High School in Birmingham, Ala., and last year served as a substitute teacher at BMHS.

At BMHS, Bedner is teaching juniors and seniors in world religions, church history and Christian lifestyles. Her goal is to make the courses relevant to the students. "I want to make a connection between their lives now and their faith in Jesus," she said.

As department chair, Bedner hopes to develop a clear identity of the theology department and maintain communication between department members.

Ruth Fleming comes to BMHS from Iowa, where she worked in youth ministry for eight years and taught in Catholic schools. "I really like talking with young people about my faith," Fleming said. She will be doing just that as she teaches freshmen and sophomores in the courses Christian Faith and Morality.

Fleming's background is in elementary education and she has a graduate degree in community leadership. As director of campus ministry, she hopes to encourage BMHS students to be leaders in their faith. She would like to see students involved with planning retreats, being active in their parishes and even training to be catechists.

"Their appointment reflects a consistently renewed focus on religious education at Bishop McGuinness High School," said George Repass, principal.

Miami Archdiocese Seeks Boat Cruise To Cuba For Papal Visit

By MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Archdiocese of Miami has asked the U.S. government for permission to send a cruise ship filled with pilgrims to visit Cuba when Pope John Paul II goes there in January.

An archdiocesan official said he believes government approval is likely, especially after a White House spokesman indicated Aug. 19 that travel restrictions to Cuba would likely be suspended for the papal visit.

The Miami Archdiocese submitted its request for a travel waiver July 9. It wants permission to take 1,250 pilgrims on a Jan. 23-26 trip to Cuba, with its centerpiece being the Jan. 25 papal Mass in Havana.

According to Peter Coats, a special assistant to Bishop-designate Thomas Wenski, head of Miami Catholic Charities, all of Florida's bishops would be on the ship. The Archdioceses of Boston and Newark, N.J., have also asked to be part of the trip.

"We are already deluged with reservations" despite the lack of formal approval for the trip, Coats told Catholic News Service in an Aug. 20 telephone interview from Miami.

Coats had to continually correct himself in substituting the words "pilgrim" and "pilgrimage" for "cruise" in referring to the trip.

"It's not a 'Love Boat.' We want to avoid any perception that this is a fun cruise. This is a spiritual pilgrimage," he said.

The trip's cost is still up in the air. Whether it will run into the hundreds or the thousands for the voyage depends not only on mundane matters like the size of the cabin chosen, but more expensive built-in costs like insurance from Lloyd's of London and how long it takes for the government to give its approval.

"We are expecting an answer shortly," Coats said. "We know what our deadlines are. They know what their deadlines are." The later they grant the waiver, he added, the more it will cost passengers.

"Once we have had official communication from the State Department ... for us to conduct this pilgrimage," Coats said, "we will then ... call a news conference on how to obtain passage on the pilgrimage."

He added that there are "no red lights anywhere, no red flags" that could derail approval.

In conducting Hurricane Lili relief efforts with Caritas Cuba, "we got a very good dry run" on how to deal with the government with waiver applications, Coats said.

In considering the "pilgrim ship" request, Coats said, "for the first time in 39 years, in one sense, the U.S. government is finding its way to establish criteria on how to do this."

Coats said he has worked with U.S. Catholic Conference and Catholic Relief Services officials on his request.

CRS' Cuba representative, Christopher Gilson, said that with the exception of two waivers granted to fly supplies directly to Cuba in Hurricane Lili relief efforts, CRS has had to route supplies through a third country ever since the Cuban military shot down two Cuban-American planes near Cuban airspace in February 1996.

Its most recent waiver request in April to send supplies directly to Cuba was turned down, Gilson told CNS. As a result, the cost of sending shipments has quadrupled.

Emergency supplies and perishable goods will still be flown to Cuba, he said, but all other supplies are likely to be sent to Canada for transport by ship.

White House spokesman Barry Toiv said the Clinton administration was also considering giving U.S. Catholic officials permission to ship supplies and equipment to Cuban Catholic leaders to help organize the papal visit.

As for pilgrimages to Cuba, "we'll consider their merit on a case-by-case basis," Toiv said.

Under current rules, U.S. citizens traveling to Cuba must obtain a government license to spend money there.

Belmont Abbey College Maintains Stable Enrollment

BELMONT — Preliminary enrollment figures for the fall semester indicate stable enrollment at Belmont Abbey College, a private, coeducational Catholic liberal arts institution in Belmont, N.C.

The class is approximately equal in size to fall 1996, which was a good year for Belmont Abbey. Approximately 215 new traditional-aged students have enrolled to date, bringing the Abbey's total enrollment to approximately 950.

"This is the size group we were looking for," said Denis Stokes, vice president for enrollment management. "We're on stable ground," he continued. "The size of the class is representative of and in keeping with the school's mission of providing excellence in education while fostering students' philosophical and ethical growth. We are taking our Catholic identity seriously in that we have a greater responsibility to young people."

Belmont Abbey College offers undergraduate and graduate degree and continuing education programs to traditional and non-traditional students.

Study Finds Belief In Afterlife On The Increase

CHICAGO (CNS) — Belief in life after death is growing in the United States, even among people for whom it is not a strong element of religious beliefs. In a paper released in early August at the American Sociological Association annual meeting in Toronto, Father Andrew Greeley said 81 percent of Americans believe in an afterlife, compared to 77 percent in the 1970s. The study of the views of 19,000 people between 1973 and 1994 showed significant changes in the number of Catholics and Jews who say they believe in life after death. For instance, in 1977, 74 percent of Catholics and 19 percent of Jews professed such a belief. By 1994, 81 percent of Catholics and 48 percent of Jews accepted the belief. An earlier study found that in 1910, just 65 percent of Catholics believed in an afterlife.

'Religion & Ethics Newsweekly' To Debut On PBS

WASHINGTON (CNS) — After more than a year of preparation, a weekly half-hour religious news program is set to debut on public television. Anchor and executive editor of "Religion & Ethics NewsWeekly" is Bob Abernethy, who reported on religion and other topics as NBC's Washington correspondent for much of the 1980s and '90s, except for a 1989-94 stint as Moscow correspondent. While "Religion & Ethics NewsWeekly" had been slated for airing as far back as June 1996, the process of starting a show was slow until the Lilly Endowment furnished a $5 million grant in January to fund 39 programs. The first show will be fed to PBS affiliates Sept. 5.

Pope Announces World Youth Day In Rome In 2000

PARIS (CNS) — While nearly a million exhausted but excited young people sweated under a midday Paris sun, Pope John Paul II invited them to start planning for their next international gathering, to be held in Rome in the summer of 2000. As is customary, the pope waited until the end of the Aug. 19-24 World Youth Day celebration to announce where he would next meet the world's young people. Announcing the appointment in Rome at the close of the Paris celebrations, the pope said: "In the course of the great jubilee of 2000 we will live together an experience of spiritual communion which certainly will make a mark on your lives."

Book Review

Chicken Soup for the Christian Soul (101 More Stories to Open the Heart and Rekindle the Spirit) by Jack Canfield, Mark Victor Hansen, Patty Aubery & Nancy Mitchell.

Since the original Chicken Soup for the Soul book was published in 1993, over 7,000 stories were submitted for the long-awaited release, Chicken Soup for the Christian Soul. For years the co-authors poured over the incoming stories with the objective of finding the select few that could deepen readers' Christian faith and expand their awareness of how to practice Christian values in their daily life. After careful collecting and editing, they distilled the stories down to the magic number 101, resulting in an inspirational feast for Christians of all denominations.

Included in Chicken Soup for the Christian Soul are stories from Corrie ten Boom, Charles Colson, Normal Vincent Peale, Dick Van Patten, Richard Lederer and Dick Van Dyke amidst submissions from lesser known yet equally important contributors. Stories are designed to open readers' hearts, enhance their sense of compassion, and inspire feelings of forgiveness. Most outstanding, perhaps, is how these stories will remind readers that they are never alone or without hope, no matter how challenging and painful their circumstances may be.

Jack Canfield and Mark Victor Hansen, coauthors of the #1 New York Times bestselling Chicken Soup for the Soul series, are professional speakers who have dedicated their lives to enhancing the personal and professional development of others. They are joined again by the coauthors of Chicken Soup for the Surviving Soul, Patty Aubery, Vice President of The Canfield Group, and Nancy Mitchell, director of publishing for The Canfield Group.

Chaplain Gains Insight From Conference

By JIMMY ROSTAR

Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE — Near the door of Chaplain Bill Matevie's office in Mecklenburg County Jail North hangs a poster lettered in black magic marker. Its message is simple, but one Matevie says is vital in a place that houses society's incarcerated.

The message: "Only God is in a position to look down on anyone."

It is a reminder that Matevie, prison ministry coordinator for the Charlotte Diocese and one of three chaplains at the Mecklenburg County Jail's two facilities, has assumed as something of a mission statement. And it is a theme that for him took on new life after attending the annual conference of the American Catholic Correctional Chaplains Association (ACCCA), held earlier this month in Orlando, Fla.

"Because of its subject matter and its being such an intense, information-filled conference, I really had my eyes opened to some different ways of looking at things," Matevie says. "What came out of that is we should continue today to lead as a church of inclusion and not exclusion."

The program focused on areas of primary concern in the minds of the 50 chaplains who attended. While those areas involve very different groups of people, all had ministerial outreach in common.

The Rev. Bob Gutleben, executive director of The Covenant Connection in Sebastopol, Calif., explored ministry to sex offenders through spirituality and accepted psychological treatments. The Covenant Connection was founded in 1979 as a ministry to the Sonoma County (Calif.) Jail. Its board of directors has included superior court judges, clergy, business leaders, police officers and therapists.

Sister Anne Dougherty offered a track on ministering to people with HIV/AIDS. The Franciscan Sister of Allegany, N.Y., has worked since 1985 with men, women and children infected with and affected by the virus and disease, and is the founder and director of Francis House, an AIDS care center in Tampa, Fla. She also facilitates workshops around the country on the theme of AIDS and spirituality.

Chaplain Bill Matevie

Included in the program was a tour of the Florida Department of Corrections' Central Florida Reception Center, the first state-supported hospice center for inmates dying of AIDS. Matevie noted the poignancy of that visit, adding that many of the inmates he ministers to are infected with either HIV/AIDS or Hepatitis B.

Throughout the five-day conference, which also featured an opportunity to discuss ministering to gays and lesbians, Matevie was reminded of how quick society is to label people. "What really hit me there is that when making decisions on complex issues, it's important to put a face on it," he said. "We can moralize all we want about any of these issues, but when it's our brother or sister or best friend who is involved, we begin to truly understand the compassion of Jesus Christ."

The conference stressed that the same is especially true in a prison setting, where a chaplain comes face to face with convicted murderers, robbers, sex offenders and countless other prisoners every day. "We're all challenged to remember that a person is not a crime any more than an invalid is a disease," Matevie adds. "We must stop putting labels on people. We can always choose not to condemn."

That choice, he feels, can reap tremendous yields for those involved on both sides of the cell bars. "I've found that when an inmate shares with a chaplain," he says, "this becomes not a time for judging, but a time for healing."

Palestinians Face Crisis Under Israeli Closure, Priest Says

BETHLEHEM, West Bank (CNS) — Bethlehem remained the only Palestinian city still under the closure imposed by Israel three weeks after two suicide bombers killed 14 people in a Jerusalem market. The city's Palestinian residents were enduring conditions nearing "crisis proportions" said Father Emil Salayta, general director of Jerusalem's Latinrite Patriarchate schools. The priest sent an Aug. 20 e-mail letter to a priest of the Arab-American Catholic community in California. "Food and supplies are not being allowed through the very area. The sick cannot move freely to reach doctors and hospitals. Last week a woman gave birth at checkpoint because soldiers would not let her go to a hospital."

Italian pilgrims are stopped by Israeli soldiers from entering Bethlehem as part of security measures following recent terrorism. Israeli government officials allowed them in a short time later.

Nuns 'Strongly Object' To U.S. Film About Mother Teresa

CALCUTTA, India (CNS) — The Missionaries of Charity say they "strongly object" to an "unauthorized" movie on their founder, Mother Teresa, by a U.S. entertainment company. The Missionaries of Charity superior general, Sister Nirmala Joshi, said the movie, "Mother Teresa: In the Name of God's Poor," "is not authorized by Mother Teresa and does not carry her endorsement nor that of the Missionaries of Charity." But a spokeswoman for Hallmark Entertainment, which produced the film, said that prior to filming, the script writer, Dominique Lapierre, had produced documents to Hallmark that he said were signed by Mother Teresa, indicating that she had read the script and approved it.

Armed Gang Kills Two In Attack On Kenyan Mission

MOMBASA, Kenya (CNS) — Two people were killed and dozens injured when armed men attacked a Catholic mission in Kenya. The group ransacked the Consolata Missionary Sisters compound in the village of Likoni, south of Mombasa, Kenya, Aug. 22. About 3,000 people had taken refuge there from several days of ethnic violence along the country's eastern coast. Officials reported that most of the refugees were women and children.

U.S. Joining Ottawa Process On Land Mines

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Clinton administration announced Aug. 18 that it will participate in the Ottawa process, a Canadian initiative seeking a binding treaty by this December banning anti-personnel land mines throughout the world. The White House announcement drew cautious praise from ban advocates. John Carr, U.S. Catholic Conference secretary for social development and world peace, welcomed U.S. engagement in the process but said that decision "must lead to full U.S. commitment to a comprehensive and early ban." The Clinton administration's current policy calls for some major exceptions to a total ban.

Covenant House Offers Education During School Delay

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Covenant House Washington has jumped into the city's education breach by extending a summer initiative into the first three weeks of the school year, when District of Columbia public schools will remain closed for court-ordered repairs. Even before the Catholic agency's weeklong "Jump Start for Success" began Aug. 18, Covenant House officials announced they would extend the enhancement program to cover the delay, Sept. 2-19. School officials announced Aug. 7 that schools would open, not on Sept. 2 as expected, but on Sept. 22, so repairs to the roofs of some school buildings could be completed.

Caribbean Churches Urge U.S. To Abandon Cuban Embargo

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad (CNS) — The Caribbean Conference of Churches has called on the U.S. government to lift its 35-year-old economic embargo on Cuba. The call to end the embargo was the main resolution passed at the conference's Sixth General Assembly in Havana in late July. Jesuit Father Malcolm Rodrigues of Guyana said in a telephone interview that the resolutions were in the hands of the conference's Continuation Committee. "The committee will meet in September to work on these resolutions to make them more 'concrete,'" said the priest, who was recently elected to the committee. He said there were no objections from delegates when resolutions were proposed by the main body or the Resolutions Committee.

Bishops Call For Financially Self-Sufficient South African Church

PRETORIA, South Africa (CNS) — The church in post-apartheid South Africa needs to become more self-sufficient and to help other countries in greater need, the Southern African Catholic Bishops' Conference has said. The conference also reported it was working with Rwandans to investigate ways the South African church could help with legal procedures for priests and religious implicated or accused in the civil war that started there in 1994.

Jews To Honor Nuns Who Protected Them During Holocaust

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — When Jewish survivors of the Nazi Holocaust gather in Warsaw in September, the occasion will have special poignancy. The Sept. 8 assembly, organized by former Warsaw Ghetto inmate Benjamin Aniolik, will be the first to bring together "Children of the Cloisters" — Jews saved by Catholic nuns during the Nazi Holocaust. The gathering highlights the role of the nuns who sheltered children during World War II. A 1962 survey con-

Lebanese Maronite Bishops Urge Government To Listen To People

JERUSALEM (CNS) — Instead of trying to forcefully stop attempts at "insubordination," the Lebanese government should listen to the people's complaints and respond accordingly, said Lebanon's Maronite bishops. The bishops made the statement at their monthly meeting in early August. "The voices raised here and there appealing for insubordination and withholding from paying charges and taxes threaten to undermine the state and dismantle the country," the bishops said in their statement. "Such a situation cannot be dealt with only by suppression and force, but by granting rightful claims ... in an attentive way, free from selfish interests and prejudice, assuring a balanced development in all the areas."

Lutherans Back Joint Declaration With Catholics On Key Doctrine

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — The churchwide assembly of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America declared Aug. 19 that Lutherans and Catholics share a common understanding of justification by faith, the central doctrinal issue over which they split nearly 500 years ago. The vote came near the end of one of the most ecumenically significant national meetings in ELCA history.

Cardinal Predicts Changes In Cuba After Papal Visit

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (CNS) — Pope John Paul II is expected to issue a strong call for the complete lifting of restrictions on religious practice in Cuba during his visit there in January, Cardinal John J. O'Connor of New York said in mid-August. The cardinal, during a series of wide-ranging interviews and news conference in Argentina, said he believes the U.S. government has taken a keen interest in the Jan. 21-25 papal visit, and that the trip could trigger "a new set of relations" between the United States and Cuba.

Parish Profile

St. Benedict the Moor

1625 East 12th St.
Winston-Salem, NC 27101
(910) 725-9200

Vicariate: Winston-Salem

Pastor: Jesuit Father Lawrence J. Hunt

Masses: Sun.: 9:30 a.m.

Number of parishioners: 287

Number of households: 128

WINSTON-SALEM — The parish of St. Benedict the Moor was established in 1940 to serve the spiritual needs of Winston-Salem Catholics. Now one of four Winston-Salem parishes, it has helped shape the Catholic landscape in the Winston-Salem vicariate.

Bishop Eugene McGuinness of Raleigh established St. Benedict the Moor parish in response to the needs of African-American Catholics living in the Winston-Salem area. Placing it under the direction of the Franciscan Fathers, the bishop welcomed Franciscan Father Ronald Scott as founding pastor.

About a dozen local African-American Catholics made up the original parish family. The first Masses were celebrated in the home of a lawyer and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hosea Price. Working closely with Father Scott, parishioners began searching for a site on which to build a church. Property for that church, along with a parish hall and rectory, was purchased in April of 1940 from a bishop of the AME Zion Church. The site is that of the present St. Benedict the Moor church building.

As construction proceeded, the congregation continued gathering for Masses at the Price home — and, in November of 1940, in a local funeral home. Bishop McGuinness dedicated the new church the following year.

Father Scott continued as pastor, and in August of 1943 he welcomed an associate pastor to assist in developing the parish. Parishioners found spiritual and social opportunities in a number of parish groups and organizations, including the Legion of Mary, Third Order of St. Francis, St. Monica's Guild and St. Benedict's Men's Club.

To enhance the educational aspect of the faith, the Sisters of St. Francis of Allegany, N.Y., arrived in Winston-Salem, and in early September of 1946 opened St. Anne Academy. Bishop Joseph Waters of Raleigh dedicated the academy, a convent and a residence for girls later that month.

In September of 1950, the Sisters of St. Francis helped found a parish grammar school with 116 students in its first year. In addition to educational and spiritual nourishment, the school also rendered championship basketball teams through the 1950s, '60s and '70s. The school continued operating until 1979.

St. Benedict parish assumed responsibility for its first mission, Our Lady of Fatima chapel in downtown Winston-Salem, in 1969. The following year, the Catholic community to the east in Kernersville became a mission and continued as such until 1973. Catholics to the north in King were also ministered to by St. Benedict the Moor clergy. That community, now known as Good Shepherd Church, remains a mission of St. Benedict, while Our Lady of Fatima chapel is a mission of Our Lady of Mercy Church in Winston-Salem. The Kernersville congregation was given parish status in 1973, when Holy Cross parish was founded.

St. Benedict the Moor parish observed its 50th anniversary in November of 1990 with a Mass presided over by Bishop John F. Donoghue. Among the concelebrants were Jesuit Father Lawrence Hunt, pastor; and Father Frank O'Rourke and Father Thomas Gaunt, former pastors.

Parish formation continues during the pastorate of Father Hunt, who has served at St. Benedict Church since July 1990. Parishioners continue to be involved in such organizations as St. Monica's Guild, the Men's Club, the altar servers group, the youth group, the religious education program, the choir and a variety of commissions.

The parish also places a priority on community involvement. Local groups and efforts such as the Crisis Control ministry, the Red Cross Donor program and the Samaritan Soup Kitchen have benefited from St. Benedict parishioner support. The church building is host to Lions Club, Narcotics Anonymous, and Community Watch meetings.

Ecumenically, St. Benedict parish is active in co-sponsoring a summer day camp with a Presbyterian and an Episcopal church, as well as a Bible School sponsored by six local churches.

As pastor of St. Benedict the Moor Church in Winston-Salem and Good Shepherd Church in King, Father Hunt serves in ministry to hundreds of Catholics in Forsyth and Stokes counties.
